I thought the Hundred Gods Temple’s gods would extract the source similar to the way on the 89th-floor stage like it’s natural. I thought that the god who was not interested in anything other than their position and strength would naturally rake in the source.

I was a bit taken back when I heard from Kirikiri that it was not true.

“There’s a simple reason. Let’s take an example, a planet that has been extracted from more than a certain extent of the source deteriorates at rapid speed. You’ve heard of it before, right?”

I have.

It was said that the land which had lost its source was ruined and could not be rebuilt. I never confirmed it directly, but indirectly, when I get through the stage related to the source, it could be expected.

“It’s true that the power to extract the source of a planet needs to be considered, but that alone is not enough to eliminate a planet’s future.”

But even if the future of a planet disappears, it wouldn’t affect the god. Then there was no reason for holding back.

“It would be much more efficient to establish religion on the land and acquire faith in the long run.”

Oh, so it was about efficiency. That, I could understand.

“What difference is there between extracting the source and gaining faith in religion?”

To my question, Kirikiri pondered for a moment and answered, “It depends on some circumstances, but assume that religion becomes prominent, and within 200 years, one can gather powers similar to extract all the sources of a planet.”

The efficiency difference was substantial. If a planet did not crumble apart, the god would gain power through faith stably for thousands of years or more.

“And so the gods may not be interested in extracting the source.”

“Exactly, the gods never extract the source or destroy a planet in their own territory.”

The last word caught my attention.

“And if it is outside their territory?”

“There are Temple rules to prevent it from happening.”

Without my knowing, laughter escaped my mouth. I just couldn't help it. This situation was hilarious.

Instead of extracting the source, they prioritized the religion, not for the faithful ones or a planet's future, but because they want to maintain a long-term benefit. The number of rules of the temple and the many events that arose from it resulted from agreements to preserve each other's territory.

It was according to the logic of gain and loss.

Although the scale was uncommon, it was no different from the way humans huddled in society. Instead, it looked uglier because it was on a larger scale.

Kirikiri frowned at my laugh. Her face looked upset.

“I still don't think the system of the temple is very wrong. With no temple, the gods would invade another realm all they like. If it happened, only a few civilizations would be left in the world now.”

I had no interest in the good thing about the temple and its system. It wasn't my problem.

“Then, what about the Hundred Gods Temple or the Pantheon?”

“You don’t have to worry about them. After all, it was intentional to have them in the temple in the first place.”

Initially, the temple’s system itself seems to have been designed to put a leash on others. All this time, I’d thought that the system had another reason and eventually became large-scale to restrict the gods.

But now that I heard about this, it seemed the system was originally designed for constraining the gods.

“The problem lies with the Rulers who don’t belong to the temple. They only enrich themselves. On the contrary, the restrictions inside the temple are getting worse. The effects slowly appear. That’s how Earth came into the play.”

“Earth?”

Suddenly, Earth was mentioned.

“Earth was Hundred Gods Temple’s joint zone. A buffer zone. When the rulers reached out to such a planet, we had no other way to go to summon humans to the Tutorial and train them,” Kirikiri continued, not giving me space to think.

“It is for the same reason that we longed for a great apostle and have high hopes for you. The Hundred Gods Temple’s gods are powerful, but they’re under a lot of restrictions.”

Kirikiri said with a serious face and pointed at me with her finger. “The temple’s regulations are increasing day by day, and the Rulers are increasing their power beyond our reach. We have to take action one day before the scales are out of control. Either wipe out the Ruler or remove the unnecessary pile of regulations.”

To wipe them out to reduce their influences, the god should take action, not the apostle. I heard the Rulers had been worshiped. If gods wanted to come forward, they’d be constrained.

That's why they concluded that constraints must be broken to take over the Ruler.

"Those rulers seem to be well versed in the inside of the temple."

Since they were out of reach of the gods, they did not obscurely intrude on their territory and gain worship. They must have been well aware of the gods' territory characteristics and the constraints imposed on them.

"I know very well."

Kirikiri's eyes sparkled. It was a look of hostility toward something. It was a rare sight of Kirikiri.

"Remember the 49th floor?"

"Mhm."

I remember it well because it was such an impressive stage.

"On the 49th floor, there was the Holy Land of Hope. It was a hidden holy place, of course, and a small one. Nevertheless, the origin monsters are everywhere."

Yeah, there was that place on the 49th floor.

Although the origin monsters couldn't enter into the Holy Land, they could occupy most of the continent. Maybe there was an extractor installed somewhere on the continent, and the source was extracted.

I asked Kirikiri how such monsters could appear on a planet with God's holy ground in there. But Kirikiri did not answer and just repeated one sentence. "You have to remember."

* * *

"I understand how much expectations you have for me."

“Iz dat sho?” asked Kirikiri, who was eating a cake.

Her expression was very different when she talked about the information with a serious face a while ago. Kirikiri was trying to bite off more than Hochi and Yong-Yong, who were eating cake together next to each other.

Although I was answering my own question, I also felt reluctant, so my eyes, mouth, and hands were entirely focused on the cake.

“As long as I refuse to be an apostle, I am as good as a ruler.”

Having the power and ability as good as a god could allow one to move regardless of the temple’s constraints.

“At the same time, have a purpose that is somewhat in line with the gods’ wishes.”

“Your choice. Do whatever you want,” Kirikiri said. She might have replied like that because she was distracted by the cake. But I knew Kirikiri was thinking that way.

I wanted the people in the Tutorial to be free. That was why I had thought of getting rid of the temple system.

But according to the information so far, there was one condition to be able to be free of the Tutorial. I had to get the consent from the gods of Hundred Gods Temple, the Tutorial owner.

And the price to get that consent is that I have to bring something. That’s the price I have to pay for. What will the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple ask in exchange for handing over the rights of the Tutorial to me?

Several things came to mind, but they were jumbled together.

“You’re going to be a mercenary when you get out of here.”

Chapter 294

Seoul (3)

“The worst,” Park Jong-sik muttered.

No one in the conference room refuted that remark. During the break, the conference room fell into silence.

“Let’s get things organized first.” Kim Min-hyuk, desperately attempting to brighten the mood, clapped his hands.

It was the first meeting since the situation had been revealed. Kim Min-hyuk knew that the situation was that serious, but he had to lead the meeting somehow and gather opinions.

“The first problem is that the Tutorial is closed. I don’t know what’s going on, but since last month, no one has been invited to complete the Tutorial, and no one from before has returned.”

No one was being called to the Tutorial. It was difficult to accurately count those summoned to the Tutorial since they disappeared on the spot in just a few moments. They received reports of missing relatives or neighbours, but it was only a rough count.

However, last month, there had been two reports of missing people due to a summoning by the Tutorial. And both of those cases proved to be simple disappearances.

No new Awakened came out, and no humans were forced to enter the Tutorial. At this point, a discussion was needed to solve the problem, excluding the Tutorial itself.

It was a severe problem, but the cause was undiscovered, and a resolution didn’t seem to be apparent.

“The second problem is that a G-class was detected near Pyongyang.” Unavoidable sighs erupted from every corner of the conference room.

After the cataclysm, they had only succeeded once, and since then, all attempts at G-class eradication had failed.

It was a colossal loss. It had already been years since the steady rise in the Awakened’s power allowed the city to defend itself from the monsters’ offense. But still, the G-class remained an inextricable and intangible existence.

“From what we’ve learnt, I don’t believe the existing G-class has moved into a nest.”

The G-class’s domain was spread throughout the world. That meant that signs of a G-class appearing in Pyongyang meant that it was a newly born G-class, which had never been seen before.

“That is the third problem. It’s a new one because I’m not sure if it’s going to act the same as the others.”

All of the existing G-class had one common feature. They set up their territory outside the country and didn’t leave it. But was this one the same as them? If it were someone ready to go outside of its area, the situation would spiral downhill.

“It’s a problem, even if it’s no different from the others,” Lee Jun-seok said while solitarily munching on shrimp snacks.

Kim Min-hyuk had no choice but to ask, “Why?”

“Its territory reaches Seoul.”

Kim Min-hyuk shut his mouth in response to Lee’s answer. He had nothing else to say. Neither Kim Min-hyuk nor the others in the conference room were able to speak for a while.

Only the sound of Lee Jun-seok grinding on shrimp snacks echoed quietly throughout the conference room.

“Are you alright?” Lee Sung-eun asked the team leader.

Park Min merely shrugged. Then, he put down the newspaper in his hand.

As expected, the government failed to give up on Seoul. Seoul was too essential to give up on, even though it was dangerous.

The same was true of the people. Seoul’s population had been steadily increasing since the cataclysm. Instead, more people started living in Seoul than before the cataclysm.

The reason was simple. Seoul was the safest place. The largest number of Awakened stayed there, and the most significant amount of military units surrounded Seoul. But this was before the G-class appeared.

After reports of the G-class in Pyongyang, people searched for countermeasures. Instantly, convenience store items went out of stock, and problems broke out.

Housing prices plummeted, and loans in local cities soared. A thought came to mind among those who were confused. Can’t we just get rid of the G-class?

It seemed like a less risky option than abandoning their homes and the largest city where the nation’s resources were concentrated.

It was the Awakened and the soldiers who launched the attack. They thought it was worth a try even if the success rate dropped. It was something the U.S. had already succeeded in more than a decade ago.

There were many skeptical thoughts. Talks about the differences in defense capabilities between the U.S. and South Korea and their international political positions broke out.

The U.S. had mobilized all of its naval and air forces to combat the G-class and gathered Awakened from all over the world. South Korea could not emulate them. Thus, it had been repeatedly said that the attacks were theoretically impossible.

However, talks of eradicating G-class did not subside. People's fears soon transformed into madness.

In sympathy for the panicking, the media talked about Korea's unprecedentedly powerful Awakened group. They assured that the group of Awakened gathered under Kim Min-hyuk's guild were like that of the U.S.

Citing South Korea's previous record of sending troops overseas, they said other countries would also support the awakening as if it were natural and logical. Overseas aid was reported as if it had been scheduled.

Finally, the fact that the G-class was a newborn was taken advantage of. They said that it would still be young and weak compared to the existing G-class. And people believed the loose-lipped media.

The demonstration took place at Gwanghwamun Square(Seoul), in front of the Guild and association building. They had been urging them to prepare for the G-class's attack.

Every day, whenever the association and the guild's silence continued, voices of criticism poured out, calling them cowards. The Awakened had become shameless for not fulfilling their duties.

The association and guild building began to smell like the fishy scent of raw eggs. The Awakened, who had a high social status and lived like celebrities, had their reputation quickly spiral into the abyss.

Their SNS' were spammed with abusive tests and had to be shut down. Kim Min-hyuk's guild members were bewildered when they heard people's voices telling them to pay the price if they lived well off their tax dollars.

They were not part of the government. Some of them had already given up their Korean nationality and never paid taxes. Most of them were freelancers from overseas, not from Korea. They had already left their country for better terms.

There was no way they'd sympathize with citizens' protests that forced patriotism, responsibility, and duty.

On the contrary, the opposition only increased. When the decision that it would be better just to leave Korea began to circulate quietly within the guild, the association moved first.

"The association will do its best to fight the G-class."

"We'll use all the available power."

That was how the situation changed.

"What's wrong with you?" Park Min asked relaxedly, lifting a cup of coffee to his lips.

Lee Sung-eun could not understand his composure.

"Isn't it just us?"

The association had begun preparations for the G-class attack. They had formally asked the Associations of Other Countries for assistance and issued a call-up order for the Awakened members.

Of course, the number of Awakened gathered was small. The foreign associations all asked whether guilds, not governments or associations, would participate.

This meant that the guild's Awakened was superior. It seemed like the association could force the guild's Awakened to participate in the current situation, but it was actually impossible.

The association didn't have the authority, nor the power. They could only ask them not to participate in the attack. And the guild had the option of resisting. Then, they could very well forget about the support from other countries' associations.

The association may have to go after them only with its strength. But maybe the association's power would only further weaken.

“Anxious?”

“Yes.”

Park Min smiled at the team leader and pointed to the middle of the map. The place that had been indicated was Pyongyang. Team leader Lee Sung-eun felt a sense of déjà vu.

“What if there’s no G-class here?”

Park Min’s words contradicted what had been said in the past.

“...yes?”

“Think. What if there’s not actually a G-class here, and people are all being fooled?”

“...yes?”

Lee Sung-eun repeated the same word, so Park Min continued to explain as if he were talking to himself.

“There’s no harm if the guild doesn’t participate. That alone will raise the position of the association in people’s eyes. We will have people’s support.”

Lee Sung-eun felt like it’d indeed be better if the guild didn’t participate at all.

“If they don’t participate, the guild’s reputation will be stuck in sh*t. They’re already halfway through, but they’ll probably relocate their base overseas.”

And then, the association, alone, would try to attack. Their reputation would rise, and there would be several defectors within the association. But let’s not talk about it.

All they had to do was bravely move to Pyongyang. It would push out the guilds in the country and raise the political standing of the association.

The Tutorials had already been shut down, and it was expected that the value of the remaining Awakened would soar soon.

“Great.”

It was the best situation. There was no better news.

* * *

“What are you going to do?”

“Well...”

Kim Min-hyuk had yet to make a decision. He was unsure what was right and didn’t want to send guild members to their deaths with his hasty judgment.

He thought the best way would just be to give up Seoul. But neither the citizens of Seoul nor the government would tolerate it.

“How are the guild members feeling?”

Park Jong-sik smiled on being asked this.

“They’re a mess. If you leave them alone, there’ll be a truck-load of people leaving right away.”

Was that so?

But it was hard to blame them. They weren’t precisely shameless and immoral people. They were well aware of responsibilities and duties, and also had an attachment to their hometown.

Perhaps when they first heard the news, some were determined to participate in the G-class’s attack. As people said, to risk their lives at times like this, they had lived a happy and wealthy life.

But would they try to stand up while enduring the public's sudden outburst of contempt and ridicule? He didn't think so.

Kim Min-hyuk trusted his guild members, but he was sure that no adult would be that generous.

"How is Japan?"

"It's about to collapse. The kids there were begging to join us, but Japan might lose the miniscule amount of support it has left if they did come here."

Japan was the country that could be said to be at the front lines. Every day, the battle to stop monsters crawling up from the Pacific Ocean, which had been entirely hoarded by underwater monsters, continued.

Japan would suffer indirect damage if it tried and failed to target Pyongyang, destroying Japan's Awakened.

"That's why the offer came from Japan."

"To the association?"

"No, to the government. They say we're always welcome to move to Japan. There's a lot of perks."

No, you've already pushed the contract in. It was both ridiculous and funny.

"Well, that's a good offer for us. What about China?"

"Refused to cooperate."

It was a little surprising. The G-class territory in Pyongyang would also invade China's territory, so Kim Min-hyuk had thought China would cooperate with the attack.

"The situation is terrible."

As he continued to think about it, he concluded that it wouldn't be enough to attack G-class with just the guild's power. Kim Min-hyuk wondered if he should really give up on Korea and go abroad. The guild and its members would lose their prestige, but it was better than risking their lives on unwarranted attacks.

"I wish this had happened after Lee Ho-jae had arrived," Park Jong-sik grumbled.

Kim Min-hyuk replied to Park Jong-sik, "Hey, that would have been a serious problem too."

"Hahaha, that's right."

The two laughed as if they found it funny for a moment.

Lee Ho-jae could have been an all-around key to solve all problems at once, but on the contrary, he would have become a bigger problem than the G-class.

As a member of the Order of Vigilance in the Tutorial, they laughed with Lee Ho-jae because they shared the memory of trying to avoid problems and making sure that he didn't get caught up in other issues.

Just then, the cell phone on the table vibrated. Text messages popped up on the cell phone's screen: 'Seoul Station's Portal Launching.'

Chapter 295

Tutorial 100th floor (1)

“Wuuu... wuuu...”

Tears dripped down Kirikiri’s chin, and I could see the sorrow on her face. Regardless of whether I cared or not, I felt troubled.

Wouldn’t anyone else feel the same? When a person you know cries right next to your ear, your mind is bound to be disturbed.

The reason why Kirikiri was crying is simple. It was for a cake, as usual. I bought her a cake as I’d always done, but this time she was annoyed by Yong-yong, Hochi, and even Seregia, who was rare to see.

Naturally, the amount of cake was too small for the four. Kirikiri played a trick, thinking about how Yong-yong and Hochi ate the cake every time. She was supposed to take her share of the cake in advance.

Unfortunately, Seregia took what was in her hands, an act that even Ho Chi and Yong-Yong wouldn’t stoop to. Thanks to that, Kirikiri came to me and started crying.

I didn’t need to figure out why she was crying next to me. Yong-yong approached Kirikiri. He looked restless, an expression of regret plastered on his face, probably due to him eating a little bit of the cake.

In the end, I bought another cake to settle the situation.

Kirikiri stopped crying and grinned. “Thank you!”

Surprised by Kirikiri’s instant change in attitude, Yong-yong’s eyes widened, and I placed him on my lap. Then I looked at Seregia, who was approaching Kirikiri.

“Seregia, it’s not good to eat what’s in other people’s hands.” Seregia glared at me fiercely for a moment and then disappeared.

I felt like I’d seen a ghost filled with resentment.

“Why glare like that at me?”

“Scary,” I mumbled to myself, but then I heard Kirikiri talking. Was she humming about her victory against Seregia?

“Amazing.”

It was weird. Why was Kirikiri calling her amazing? Though, I wasn’t surprised by that. I did feel that Seregia was amazing.

The act alone of showing up and disappearing in this area, which was practically Kirikiri’s territory, proved it.

“I think she’s hiding in such a way that we can’t notice.”

“Yes,” Kirikiri mumbled incoherently. She then took a big bite of the cake and continued, “It’s amazing. Very good.”

I nodded. Again, I was amazed, too. Even I wasn’t confident in copying Seregia’s tricks. Perhaps no god would be able to imitate them either.

Seregia’s appearance and disappearance were something that no one could reach even if they had enough power.

“The God of Slowness would love it.”

“God of Slowness? Doesn’t the God of Slowness value the proof of existence?”

Kirikiri shook her head. “The God of Slowness doesn’t judge directly. Everything is relative to him.”

The more I knew, the more complicated it got. What if the present me got to re-experience the 40th floor, where I had known nothing about the God of Slowness?

I might get a glimpse of something I never noticed back then.

“How was the 90th floor?” Kirikiri changed the subject.

“It wasn’t good.” I could answer with certainty. It wasn’t good.

“After the 90th floor are the stages that require you to demonstrate your ability and strength, so it will be fine.”

After the 90th floor, the stages needed us to prove ourselves, irrespective of the powers obtained from the Tutorial. They were stages that tested how much I’d grown, and how complete and confident I was.

It was already a meaningless test for me. Even if I excluded all the stats and skills gained from level-up and clear rewards, there would be little change to my total amount of power.

But the intentions of the stages were clear. The Tutorial gave the challengers a gun, but it didn’t want a challenger who just knew how to pull the trigger. It required them to have a minimum level of aim and to keep maintaining their gun.

That was why it checked my ability at the end of the stage: to check if I passed the minimum standards.

Not only the Hell difficulty, but the latter half of all stages were like this.

There was a challenger of Easy Difficulty, who climbed the floors only with the Order of Vigilance’s support and failed to pass the stages in the second half.

“But doesn’t this overlap with the 35th-floor stage?”

The 35th-floor of Hell Difficulty level was a stage where all the abilities gained in the Tutorial reset. It looked back at all the stages that the challenger had gone through.

“I told you back then. The 35th floor was not a stage to overcome. It was a stage to escape.”

Kirikiri lashed out at me.

“You were reckless then. You didn’t have to clear the stage in that risky manner; you just had to get through it.”

Before entering the 35th floor, Kirikiri advised me not to crash because it was dangerous. Of course, I did just the opposite.

“What could I do when the only other option left was to surrender? That word isn’t in my vocabulary.”

If I didn’t think it would work, I would have had no choice but to find another way. But it did work.

Kirikiri mentioned the stages I had passed before, starting from the 35th floor, where I was too reckless, didn’t listen to her advice, made a mistake, quickly cleared the stage, and did more than expected.

I retraced what I’d experienced and felt, as I progressed through the stages one by one. I looked back on the past, along with Kirikiri.

There was a reason why Kirikiri, who usually liked to talk only about the future, talked about my past.

[Lee Ho-jae, 99th floor]

The 99th floor. Now there was only one floor left to clear. It was time to leave the Tutorial.

* * *

[100th-floor stage will begin.]

Description: Get ready to wake up from your long dream.

I was in the dark. It was a strange unknown darkness. Not the kind that occurred without light, but a darkness that blocked my view; darkness that narrowed my perception.

A stale smell permeated my nose. I turned around and laid flat on my back to avoid the stench from the pillow.

Slowly, I raised my hand. I pulled it out of the rough quilt and felt my chin. It was prickly.

My mouth felt uncomfortable. It was probably because I only drank soju and slept the day before.

I rolled around a bit in my smelly bed, and only after the alarm started to sound, did I finally get up.

I went to the bathroom and washed my clothes roughly, not even using soap. I shaved quickly, took out my comfortable sportswear, and left home.

I waited for the villa's little elevator. The elevator door opened, and I could see the people inside.

A young lady held a baby. I got on the elevator and leaned against the metallic wall. The baby in the mother's arms looked at me with big, round eyes.

I flashed a smile.

There were so many sad laws in the world. One of them was even if I liked someone, the other person may not like me back.

I'd experienced it many times, but this law had applied to me once again. The baby burst into tears when he saw my smile, and I apologized to the mother.

The door of the elevator opened. I greeted them roughly and left as if I were running away.

I went to the restaurant in front of my house and ordered a dish of white rice.

It was a tasty dish at a reasonable price, but I got too used to it. I was so used to it that I almost got tired of it.

A lady, who made eye contact while sitting at the table next to me, asked if it was delicious.

Of course, I said it was delicious. It was delicious, although I was tired of it.

I paid the bill, left the restaurant, and went to the convenience store in the next building where the part-timer was dozing off.

I knocked on the counter to awaken the sleeping part-timer.

The part-timer stood up in shock, thinking I was a customer. He sighed in relief as soon as he saw my face.

“You don’t have a guest with you, right?”

“Yes, fortunately.”

Of course, for a part-timer, that was a good thing. As for me, the boss, I felt annoyed.

“Why aren’t the other part-timers here yet?”

“They’ll be late today. I got a text earlier.”

This guy had been working at my convenience store for more than half a year. I hired him and gave him extra pay, entrusting the management of other part-timers to him.

It was almost like I left all the troublesome work to him.

“Okay, I’m going.”

“Yes, Hyung. Take care.”

“Okay. Learn to rip off well.”

I heard a whimper from behind me. I ignored it and left the convenience store.

He didn’t know jack about ripping off.

After checking the convenience store, I went to the local park. I warmed up and ran slowly along the park road. After a while, I ran out of breath and couldn’t run anymore.

I flopped down on the park bench. It was still.

I could only hear the wind, the birds, and the rustling of fallen leaves on the floor. There was no one passing by the park, probably because rush hour had already passed.

In the middle of the park, surrounded by tall buildings and apartments, I sensed this familiar feeling.

This was the end, the end of my day. It was peaceful, quiet, and calm.

And it was boring as hell.

Now all I had to do was go back home, pick up the soju bottle, leave the TV on, and kill time.

What did the Tutorial want to show me? Did it want me to remain here, manifesting dreams of my peaceful past? Did it want me to remember my initial intention?

My initial intention was to escape from this peaceful hell so I could go wild and crazy again.

I didn't know what it wanted to show me. What would the other challengers feel here?

That was also unknown.

“Disappear.”

The scenery disappeared along with my mana. I was sitting in a small stone chamber, not a bench in the park.

“What happened?” asked Hochi.

“I saw my old self.”

“How was it?

I ignored Hochi's question.

No matter how much I wanted to tell him, it wasn't something good for him to know.

[Tutorial Hell Difficulty level, 100th floor cleared.]

[Checking for additional rewards.]

The clear message on the 100th floor was quite simple. I'd heard it many times already.

The additional reward was a purple crystal. It was singing that Kirikiri would need me.

[Please select one designated item before returning to Earth. You can only take one of the items you used in the Tutorial.]

Designated items allowed the challenger to take an item they had used in the Tutorial.

It was common to bring along the equipment that you had used until the end. Some others would take out elixirs or potions, but in my case, I didn't have to choose.

All the items in my possession were under the protection of my domain. I just had to take everything out.

"How do you feel?"

"How do you feel?" I asked Hochi back.

"How do you feel about going back to Earth?"

"Well, I'm sure you feel more than me, leaving the Tutorial like this."

It's true.

"How do you feel, then?"

"I think it all unraveled when I left the 61st floor. Right now... Well, I just don't think much of it."

I wanted to keep it that way.

Hochi grumbled, saying it was a bland reply and then took Yong-yong in his hands. It seemed that he was discussing things with Yong-yong before we reached Earth.

It was fun to talk to Yong-yong. It was his first time on Earth, and chatting about different experiences was exciting.

Watching the two of them, I felt another gaze on me. It'd been a long time since someone had watched me like this.

Kirikiri insisted on the abolishment of the problematic system.

But at the same time, she'd talked about civilizations that could have been safe thanks to the system, explaining its necessity. The gap between her opinions meant that there was one more problem that Kirikiri had not told me yet.

It was a problem that the current me couldn't solve or even touch.

"Hochi."

"What?" asked Hochi, who came up to my side.

"Are you ready?"

Neither Hochi nor Yong Yong Yong nodded.

Yong-yong stepped in between Hochi and me. I held Hochi's hand with my left hand and Yong-yong's hand with my right hand.

Hochi and Yong-yong seemed a little nervous, which I could understand.

No matter how powerful Yong-yong was, moving to a new world that he'd never seen before would cause anxiety.

That's what life was about.

Just like when I first came into the Tutorial, I was happy and scared.

"Now, let's go out."

Holding Yong-yong's small hand tightly, the three of us went into the portal together.

And with that, I cleared the Tutorial.

Chapter 296

Seoul (4)

The news that the Seoul Station's portal had begun to function was not only heard by the guild but also by the association and the government. All of them were focused on the Seoul Station's portal, so information was readily available.

Despite being caught off-guard by unexpected factors, the guild sent their members to meet those who'd return from the Tutorial.

The government had prepared a contract for the returnees and dispatched investigators to Seoul Station to find out what happened in the Tutorial.

The association was agonizing.

“Why did this happen now...”

Park Min rubbed his hands over his face. He wished it had come out a month later, or rather a month earlier.

What bad timing. It didn't matter who came out of Seoul Station's Portal.

Park Min thought that there were three possibilities for what would come out of the portal: first, was the returnees who had normally cleared the 100th floor of the Tutorial.

That wasn't very good.

One of the reasons the media and the public were encouraging Pyongyang's attack was that no more Awakened had been produced. The idea was that the G-class in Pyongyang should be hit when it's weak.

If the number of Awakened were to start increasing again, giving up Seoul may be encouraged instead of planning an attack.

Besides, the media will be focused on a new topic. “A newly returned Awakened had appeared”. Just talking about problems within the Tutorial would be a big fish.

It was not good for the public’s attention to be diverted from Pyongyang. The second thing that could appear from the Seoul Station’s portal was monsters, making it like the other gates.

They knew that the guild had won the right to manage the Seoul Station’s portal from the government, and were warned of this possibility.

However, Park Min did not think that the chances of this occurring were high.

Of course, it would be wise to do so in this crazy world, but Park Min nevertheless believed that the second possibility would never happen.

The third possibility was Lee Ho-Jae. Not long ago, news of Lee Yeon-hee leaving the 60th floor made the guild restless.

The guild was closely related to the Order of Vigilance in the Tutorial. Kim Min-hyuk, the guild’s master, was the deputy head of the Order of Vigilance. The Awakened who had cleared hard difficulty had all been members of the Order of Vigilance.

And Lee Ho-jae was the one who formed such an organisation (referring to the Order of Vigilance).

Park Min was also a challenger who’d entered the Tutorial in the early days, so he was well aware of Lee Ho-jae’s presence.

At first glance, it was Lee Ho-jae’s power that kept the Order of Vigilance stable, which was so bizarre that it was doubtful whether it’d last. The driving force behind managing all the challengers in the Tutorial was his power.

Lee Ho-jae's strong powers and the fear everyone held of him were good. If there was one challenger who had to be asked to return grandly to the Tutorial that had come to a standstill, and if one of the challengers Park Min knew was to be picked as the returnee, he would pick Lee Ho-jae without hesitation.

The problem was that this was the worst situation ever. Everything would become a mess if Lee Ho-jae came out.

“What should I do?”

Park Min was annoyed by the team leader's question. The one who needed to give directions was only asking questions. He knew that his recent silence had caused her to lose a lot of confidence, but this shouldn't happen.

Lee Sung-eun should rely on herself. They didn't have that kind of relationship. They had decided to deal with that matter later and settle the issue at hand right now.

“Send guides, provide training, and offer contracts, just like we did to the usual returnees.”

When the returnees arrived, it was the association's job to explain how the Earth changed and to help them adapt.

In the case of contracts, they were carried out by both the government and the association. The Awakened who rejected both the government and the association would have the status of a free contractor.

Usually, they belonged to the government of another country or Kim Min-hyuk's guild.

“Tell the government to withdraw from the Seoul Station's vicinity, and to start controlling the area.”

The government also had a group of Awakened, but it was way smaller than the guild's and association's.

Most of the Awakened in the government were for the management of Awakened and police, for work, and not for combat.

When danger struck Seoul, the association would typically be in charge of suppressing the situation. It was quite well known that the guild had warned that the Seoul Station portal could be dangerous.

Even if Park Min didn't consider the possibility, he couldn't completely exclude it. It was not to prepare for one minor possibility but to leave no room for mistakes.

"I'll dispatch six teams," Lee Sung-eun replied.

The association could afford it. There were no recent emergencies in Seoul or other areas, and all of its troops were gathered at the headquarters in Seoul because of the attack on Pyongyang.

"No, don't do that."

"What? But..."

"Team 3, Team 2, Team 6, Team 7. Let's put Team 1 on standby."

Lee Sung-eun complained about the smaller number of people, since that could become a problem later. Park Min was frustrated. It was pitiful for him to have such an idiot as his close associate.

"So we're going to send Team 2? Don't get upset later."

It was said that Team 2 was one step below Team 1. Chances of them being criticised were high. The criticism that the association would deal with half-heartedly could be avoided.

"Tell Team 2 to come up, and get Team 6 and Team 7 out right away. Oh, and the reason is, team leader, you have a nephew on Team 6, right?"

"...Yes, I do."

Lee Sung-eun's nephew was not an Awakened. Not all members of the association were made up of Awakened.

Unless it was overflowing with Awakened resources like the guild, most of the organization's members were non-awakened.

Of course, even though he was an Awakened, being a member of the association was a great help in society: from income to preferential treatment to social standing.

Thanks to that, some of the non-Awakened members of the association often asked for favors. Such was the case with the team leader's nephew.

The position of the head of the association was enough to put some of her relatives into the association.

Park Min also knew but he pretended to be unaware. In some cases, he stayed silent and hired them. But in times like this, he had to use them without hesitation.

"There's one thing that the team leader's nephew should know. 21 years old. He's young, so of course he knows social media well, right?"

Team leader Lee Sung-eun was forced to answer with a gentle nod. Park Min had even mentioned her nephew's age accurately.

Park Min ordered the team leader Lee Sung-eun to relay what her nephew had to do and scrolled through contacts on his cell phone.

He called the number located at the top of the category of 'Media'.

* * *

"How do you feel?" asked Hochi with a tense look.

"I told you, it's nothing much."

How did I feel about coming back to Earth? I couldn't really feel anything. Some things I thought were worse, some were better.

“What’s good, what’s bad?”

“It’s good that we got teleported indoors. I heard that usually they teleported to the middle of the square, but if it was noisy from the start, it would have been annoying.”

“And what’s bad?”

“The air is more polluted than I thought.”

It didn’t have the environment of the 60th floor that I worked hard to create. It wasn’t even the size of the 61st floor of the Great Volcano or Snow Mountain.

The air I breathed in when I came back to Earth was really bad. I couldn’t help but wonder how I used to live in such a place.

“It’s cramped.”

“It’s cramped.”

The old woman and old man said in unison. They were resting in a small space, but they were peeking outside as if they wanted to see this new world.

Their giant figures weren’t fit for this place, so they had to crouch to keep the ceiling of the building from collapsing.

“If it’s cramped, you can just make yourself shrink.”

“I’m already small.”

“Reduce more.”

The old man shrank his body while grumbling. He shrank a little, checked his body, and then repeated it again.

I think he wanted to reduce it as little as possible. On the contrary, the old lady shrank coolly.

“Hmm! I feel young!”

“Too short, Grandma,” I advised her, now that she was about the same height as Yong-yong.

“Isn’t it alright?”

“No, it’s not okay. The old man would be treated like a criminal, so you’d better make your body a little taller.”

After a brief argument, I adjusted her height to that of an average adult’s. She looked very unhappy, but she didn’t know much about Earth, so she quietly followed my opinion.

While doing that, Hochi wandered around the interior of the building and found a large wardrobe.

“Can I wear this?”

“You can.”

I didn’t know who it belonged to, but I guessed that he could wear it.

“Change your clothes. Don’t wear that weird outfit.”

“Why, isn’t it fine?”

Hochi’s outfit now looked like he was going out on an adventure. It resembled the characters from a medieval fantasy novel.

“It’s not fine. Change.”

“Can I wear one, too?” Seregia, who had been quiet, asked.

“Sure.”

It kept bothering me that I still didn’t know who the owner of the closet was, but for now, I told them it was fine.

“Daddy, what about me? Can I change too?”

“Well, if there’s anything that fits you, then yes.”

Yong-yong had a lot of clothes and a good fashion sense, so I didn’t think he needed it. Still, he seemed to be interested in new clothes made by others.

Finally, I told the old lady to pick out her clothes. While we were examining the clothes inside the wardrobe, the door opened from behind.

Someone came in through the open door. It was a man who had been hanging around the building for a while. A face that I couldn’t recognise. There was a weak scent of Korean food on his body. He was not an ordinary person.

But he wasn’t strong either.

“Who are you?”

“Hey, I’m Cheol-min.”

It was the first name I heard.

* * *

The man who’d opened the door and came in was an Awakened named Lee Cheol-min.

I had been a member of the Order of Vigilance before, but honestly, I didn’t remember seeing him anywhere.

Not that my memory had gotten poor, I just don’t think I cared about him even if I did ever meet him, given that I didn’t remember. Hochi, who shared the same memory as me which served as evidence, also failed to recognize Lee Cheol-min.

“Kim Min-hyuk is gonna come soon?”

“Yes.”

This felt strange. Like I just got out of prison, and I heard that my friend was coming to meet me.

Lee Cheol-min said, “Kim Min-hyuk will be here soon, and by then, I will explain anything that you’re curious about.”

Lee Cheol-min began to tell us things.

“This is the Seoul Station’s Portal? I don’t think I’ve ever heard of it.”

“Yes, it was recently built. Since there were many people who were confused after they returned, we built it so that they had a place to prepare their minds.”

That’s nice. I liked this, no matter whose idea it was.

“Haha, cute.”

Yong-yong patted Lee Cheol-min on the side and giggled. His innocent smile made it seem like he really did think that Lee Cheol-min was cute.

Once again, I was worried about Yong-yong’s aesthetic sense. Lee Cheol-min looked at Yong-yong, who was approaching him without hesitation and turned his eyes towards me.

“Is this Yong-yong?”

“Oh, you know him?”

“Of course. I participated in his naming contest before.”

He was closer to me than I’d thought.

“The name I gave back then was Nafplion.”

It was even one of the elected names.

“Oh, that’s my name!”

“That name was perfect,” Yong-yong and Hochi said one after the other.

I felt that they were a better fit than I’d initially thought. At that moment, the door opened again. This time, it was an acquaintance.

He was none other than Kim Min-hyuk.

Chapter 297

Seoul (5)

“Damn it,” Kim Min-hyuk muttered in the car.

The driver in the front seat shrugged his shoulders as if he were helpless. It wasn’t his fault. Traffic jammed the road, so they were stuck on the street, wasting their time.

A traffic jam occurred at an inconvenient time. The streets typically weren’t this busy, but today was an exception.

“This is for Seoul Station, right?”

“Uh... Uhm... Yeah, I think so.”

The driver confirmed Kim Min-hyuk’s suspicions. Kim Min-hyuk’s cell phone buzzed with text messages. It was challenging enough to deal with the situation here, let alone reply to everyone else’s texts.

The flood of text messages made it clear the Seoul Station portal had opened to the public. And somehow, people were convinced that there was a new challenger, so they flocked around Seoul Station.

Ignoring the dozens of incoming messages, he opened a single text. The text was from Lee Cheol-min, an S-class Awakened who was waiting at Seoul Station.

It was a message to confirm Lee Ho-jae’s appearance at Seoul Station. As he read the text, Kim Min-hyuk felt like his world grew dark. As if it hadn’t already been tough enough.

Lee Ho-jae’s appearance was a big problem, but thankfully, Kim Min-hyuk had already prepared for it a long time ago.

However, the busy roads were unexpected. It was scary.

Lee Cheol-min was an S-class Awakened. Even within the guild, it was hard to find someone more powerful. But there was Lee Joon-suk—one of the most talented people in the world.

Kim Min-hyuk sent a text saying, “Stop being such a coward and hurry home.”

Subsequently, he scolded the driver off. Kim Min-hyuk knew it wasn’t the driver’s fault, but he couldn’t stand the wait.

After a while, a text message came from Lee Chul-min. It said, “When on earth will you arrive?”

“I can’t do this,” Kim Min-hyuk muttered when he saw Lee Chul-min’s text message.

Kim Min-hyuk was impatient. If anything were to piss Lee Ho-Jae off, not only would Seoul Station be obliterated, but the entire city would reduce to atoms.

He felt like his life-span would be cut in half if he sat in the car and waited for the jam to clear. Kim Min-hyuk opened the car door on an impulse.

He peeked outside the door for a while before stepping out of the car. After telling the driver that he would go first, Kim Min-hyuk started running on the road.

* * *

Kim Min-hyuk finally managed to reach the building in front of Seoul Station. He couldn’t be any happier that he was an Awakened.

One thing he wasn’t happy about was the number of people gathered near Seoul Station. Watching from afar, Kim Min-hyuk felt his heart pounding.

He considered the probability of people entering the building.

Fortunately, guild members stood guard at the entrance.

“Keep the people out of the way, and if the reporters come in, kick them out. We’re not having a press conference today. Push people as far away as possible. Even if you have to use force.”

“It’s not easy. These people are civilians. It’s a little...”

“It doesn’t matter.”

A child who knew nothing should be kept as far away from knives and fires as possible, even if they hated the restriction. It was what was right for the child.

After issuing the order, Kim Min-hyuk entered the building and heard voices from the dressing room.

As he stood in front of the door, Kim Min-hyuk could see what Lee Cheol-min meant. He shuddered, and his body spasmed, rejecting the thought of entering.

Kim Min-hyuk had a similar experience to this before. There was a famous stage in Normal difficulty at the 7th-floor stage.

It was a stage whose information was slowly released and passed along, but it was a different challenge in the early days when there was no information at all.

Kim Min-hyuk had been the first ranker to attempt the stage. There was a monster on the seventh floor he didn’t know anything about: a hippo-like creature with a giant lion’s head.

It wasn’t until after people learned that the monster invoked the opponent’s fear with a mental attack that Kim Min-hyuk came to know its fighting power was nothing exceptional. But it had been a terrible incident when he first met it.

It was a feeling akin to that time. Kim Min-hyuk took a deep breath and placed his hand on the door handle. On an impulse similar to when he opened the car door a little while ago, he twisted the doorknob.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

“Oh, you’re here?”

He came earlier than I thought. I thought he would take a while because of the people outside.

“Cute!”

Even before Kim Min-hyuk could answer my greeting, Yong-yong ran towards Kim Min-hyuk. He patted Kim Min-hyuk’s body.

That’s nice, my pretty son. But you can’t just say that everyone is cute. That’s too much.

Kim Min-hyuk smiled and stooped down to Yong-yong, who quickly clung to him. Yong-yong held on to him as if he meant to hug him.

Kim Min-hyuk hugged Yong-yong back, even though he looked embarrassed. His reaction was quite different from that of Lee Cheol-min.

I didn’t know if it was because he was bolder or more insensitive. Squeezed in a corner, Lee Cheol-min had kept his distance from Yong-yong since he first came in.

He shifted, picking up fallen clothes or touching the fluorescent switch on the wall.

Of course, it didn’t go unnoticed. Amid disappointment, a brave man appeared, and Yong-yong hugged him quietly.

He brightly smiled as if he was satisfied with the fact. Kim Min-hyuk approached me with Yong-yong in his arms, looking less nervous than before. “You came out. That’s amazing, Ho-jae.”

“Yeah, I came out. I’m not a fake.”

I felt sympathetic towards his attempt of making conversation. I decided to introduce the others to Kim Min-hyuk. Kim Min-hyuk once heard about them through a message in the Tutorial, but it was his first time seeing them in person, so I needed to introduce them.

“This is Hochi.”

“I remember that this guy has taken up a lot of your time. You’re going to lose a lot more in the future, so I apologise in advance for that.”

When I asked him to say hello, Hochi spoke nonsense, so I hit him. I decided to skip Hochi and introduce the rest.

“Hey, Old Man, Grandma. They’re from the 61st floor...”

I tried to introduce them, but they continued to pick clothes from the closet.

They were uninterested and turned their backs on me, not listening at all. Somehow, it felt embarrassing.

I skipped the two and saw Seregia. Seregia lay on the floor like a worm, and fortunately, her eyes were open, staring at us.

“Seregia? Why don’t you get up and say hello?”

She did not get up, but her eyes glanced at us while she lay on the floor. I knew it, yet I asked, just in case...

Damn it.

* * *

It took Old Man and Grandma quite a while to choose their clothes. I didn’t know they were interested in fashion. It was unexpected.

“Shall we get out?”

I think we had prepared enough. It was almost time for Yong-yong to sleep.

Kim Min-hyuk left the room with Lee Cheol-min, saying, “I will go out first and clean up the rush before you go out.”

He didn’t say exactly when to come out. Did we have to wait for about two or three more minutes before going out?

Yong-yong somehow looked anxious. I hugged Yong-yong. “What’s wrong, Yong-yong?”

He did not answer. I whispered to a mumbling Yong-yong, “Is it because of the man who just left?”

Yong-yong looked at me for a moment and gave a small nod. Was he nervous? I thought he might be.

“Does he look cute?”

“...Yes. What does Daddy think?” Yong-yong asked me.

This may be the reason for the anxiety. Yong-yong and I had different attitudes toward other humans.

“Dad thinks the same.”

After hearing my answer, Yong-yong finally let go of his anxiety. I hugged him tightly and patted him on the back. Nevermind whatever power and ability he had, Yong-yong was still young.

The fact that they’re different from their parents was a great fear for children.

It would’ve been a sight for Yong-yong to see me talking to a human being, who seemed cute and funny to him, at an equal level.

I understood. Anyone would be scared to see their parents clinging to a tree and communicating with the cicadas seriously.

If you're just a child, you'll be more scared, and even worried if you were doing wrong for your parents.

Unlike me who was born and raised as a human being, Yong-yong was born a dragon and quickly formed a different class.

Hochi and I lived alone, so we lacked communication experience with others. It was worth him being scared to see me talking to Kim Min-hyuk.

“Hey.”

“What?”

When I was ready to go out, I spoke to Hochi, who was lifting Seregia.

“You... your powers are leaking.”

“Huh? No? This is...”

“It's dangerous enough.”

Lee Cheol-min and Kim Min-hyuk were Awakened, so they just ended up feeling uneasy. If it was someone normal, they might have felt drowsy.

“Really...? It's very weak.”

Hochi shared my memories, but only in the Tutorial. There was no experience of me facing humans or being human, so he couldn't get the hang of it.

In fact, by our standards, it would be similar for any being, not just humans. It just hit me that we'd spent a long time locked up.

“Yes, weak. Let's go out now to meet those weak humans.”

By now, Kim Min-hyuk must have prepared the necessities. We left the dressing room and exited the building together towards a weak and cute world.

* * *

“This is the worst.” Kim Min-hyuk had no choice but to mutter this.

A large crowd of too many people gathered. He wondered if everyone in Seoul had gathered.

The people gathered under the stairs obscured the floor. People approached the building right in front of them.

Guild members were trying to stop the rush, but even that didn’t faze them. As guild members said, they were civilians without power, and there was a limit to pushing them away by force.

They forced them to step down with threats, but it became meaningless when the number of people exceeded 10,000. People gained strength in numbers.

Even though guild members shouted, “Stay back,” people courageously pushed closer. Perhaps because of the recent anti-guild sentiment, people threw harsh words at the guild members, trying to anger them.

Now, he was worried that the guild members would use their strength. The number of guild members blocking the building was smaller than before.

He saw some of the guild members far away. There seemed to be a quarrel, but they were too distant for Kim Min-hyuk to accurately discern the situation.

There were no members of the association and no police officers who should have arrived by now.

“Hey, you done?”

Kim Min-hyuk looked back, his heart contracting painfully. Lee Ho-jae and his party were coming out. If he knew this would happen, he'd have told him to come out later.

No, he would've made an escape route for the people to sneak out. Regrets filled Kim Min-hyuk's head. And now, he felt like he'd f*cked up.

"What's wrong with the air? It's even worse out here."

Kim Min-hyuk was speechless on seeing Lee Ho-jae frowning. People became noisier as they saw him walk out. He could hear cheers and applause but shouts more than anything else.

They wanted to get closer to Ho-jae, to see better. The noise also contained many questions.

They were reporters. The questions, mixed in with the loud noises, were inaudible. However, Lee Ho-jae heard them.

"I'm so sorry."

"Do you know about the G-class that showed up in Pyongyang?"

"What do you think was the driving force behind Hell difficulty?"

"What food do you want to eat the most now?"

"Did you know that your real sister, Lee Myung-sook, died three years ago? If you do, what do you think about that? How do you feel?"

"A word to the people..."

"It's so noisy."

Ttuk. The square, which had been clamoring loudly, fell silent.

Those who had been shouting and running forward stood still and shut their mouths.

There was no noticeable power, but people remained silent as if it were only natural. Only the distant sound of honking cars echoed. Silence enveloped the square.

Kim Min-hyuk hadn't asked anyone to do that, but all those gathered quietly closed their mouths.

Standing in front of the building, Lee Ho-jae breathed out quietly. The sound let out through the slow exhalation was like abdominal breathing.

It was akin to a whistle that a zookeeper made to calm down a wild animal. While everyone had stopped, there was one person who desperately tried to move.

It was Kim Min-hyuk. Lee Ho-jae released the binding on him and asked, "Why?"

Kim Min-hyuk said, trying to calm his trembling body, "...Hey, don't-"

"Why? I even waited on purpose."

It had always been this way.

Lee Ho-jae, whom Kim Min-hyuk knew, always chose to steer away the problems he didn't want to touch.

"People..."

Kim Min-hyuk managed to open his mouth, but he couldn't think of anything to persuade Lee Ho-jae.

Glancing at Kim Min-hyuk, Lee Ho-jae mumbled, "You know what? The main character doesn't need to hide his strength."

Chapter 298

Seoul (6)

“...The number of victims from the downtown explosion over Seoul continued to rise around 4 p.m.”

“The exact figures have yet to be determined, and at least 7,000 people have been injured. No deaths have been reported yet.”

“The walls and the interiors of the buildings near Seoul Station have been reduced to dust, resulting in enormous property damage.”

The news displayed the view of a crowded hospital. There were a lot of people in the hospital.

“Why? Tell me, why?”

I asked Kim Min-hyuk, who was looking at me, blankly.

“Hey, that’s all insurance crooks. I’m glad I didn’t hurt people. It’s a little scratch, at best.”

It was true. I had set off an explosion that didn’t let people get hurt. Would I have made such a stupid mistake like that?

“Really? You set off an explosion, and you didn’t hurt people?” Kim Min-hyuk asked again. He seemed like he didn’t believe me.

“Uh... Yes, really.” I was upset at that moment, but I was not bothered enough to where I made an explosion to kill people. I just pushed the dirty air away. Honestly, I was annoyed and angry, but I just let it go.

It was our first day, after all.

“Oi, what are you doing?” asked Hochi, sitting on the sofa reading comic books.

What am I doing?

“Is it because it’s your hometown?” Old Man asked. [1]

It’s not like that.

It’s just that I thought it’d be more annoying if I saw blood on our first day. I wanted things to go smoothly, peacefully, and naturally.

“Well, such mercy will incite the people to look up to you,” Grandma said. [2]

That’s not it either.

Humans on Earth felt threatened and terrified by the explosion that happened earlier and would not think I was merciful.

Grandma and Old Man existed as different beings, and they said so because they ruled over humans.

Kim Min-hyuk looked confused. Unfortunately, no one in this room shared such a mindset.

“Yeah, well, people aren’t dead...”

In the end, Kim Min-hyuk went with that. Just then, the news on the screen changed. The screen turned gray.

Emergency patients were rushed to hospital corridors. Doctors and nurses shouted at each other. Some carried patients away, screaming at the people nearby to the hospital corridor to move aside.

The patient’s condition on the screen couldn’t be identified, but it was easy to guess that he was in critical condition, thanks to the bandages wrapped all over his body and the visible bloodstains.

Kim Min-hyuk stared at me.

“...You said no one was hurt.”

“Except for them.”

I couldn't just let them go. They said such ridiculous things about me. Just because they were a reporter didn't mean that they could say anything.

Kim Min-hyuk called someone and ordered them to find out about the critical patients. Then, as if he had given up, he muttered, “Well, a few casualties is fine.”

“But are you sure you'll be okay? It would have been easier if you had moved on quietly. That's why I'd been working so hard to keep this silent.”

Kim Min-hyuk used his work as an excuse to express his concern, implying that it might become more of a nuisance. But I didn't think so.

“What can they do? Do you think they're gonna put me in jail for vandalism? If so, how?”

It was impossible. After a little more time and a few more blows, people would understand on their own: I'm entirely different from them, just as Old Man and Grandma were different from humans.

* * *

The situation changed according to Lee Ho-jae's expectations. What happened at Seoul Station attracted many people's attention.

It was an incident in which a single Awakened attacked some people, which has happened several times before. Previously, an Awakened who couldn't control their strength caused a disturbance.

People considered this to be a riot of such Awakened. Those who heard the news through the media were angry.

This incident could have been a trigger for those who already held terrible feelings for the Awakened. Park Min felt the same.

He had expected this to happen. Park Min met Lee Ho-jae in the Tutorial and had a close relationship with the Order of Vigilance.

Due to Lee Ho-jae's personality, he knew that he would try to finish it up right away if anything was bothering him. Of course, he didn't think he would just explode like that.

It was actually good. Park Min was excited to hear the gossip in the office. As soon as he heard what happened at Seoul Station, he cheered inside.

When he got to know about the portal's news at Seoul Station, he made a good move. He prepared to dispatch members of the Association at once.

Lee Ho-jae could not be arrested or killed. It was impossible with the association's power. In the end, they had to compromise.

But he was able to gain the upper hand by using his job. Park Min was confident that he could continue to maintain and widen the gap based on that advantage.

People would now pay more attention to the Awakened's mental health. They'd find a way to control the Awakened, turning their treatment from celebrities to powerful ticking time-bombs that may explode at any moment.

The method would be through the Association. Park Min himself would see it through. In his head, he made plans to increase the influence of the association.

It was good stress. Once again, all arrangements had been made to take a big step.

Up in front was the data screen of news that calmed Park Min, who was working hard to turn things around. After a while, the horrors of Seoul Station appeared.

A building near Seoul Station was burned to a crisp. Seeing that, Park Min began to question if it was CG in a movie.

The building's condition was bizarre.

It wasn't because of the terrible destruction, but the fact that it was still standing there.

If that was possible, the architects who designed the building were God-gifted geniuses, or there was something wrong with the laws of physics.

Seoul had many buildings in that condition.

The trees were all burned down, and the road was a mess as if there had been an earthquake.

"...Didn't you say there are only a few dead people?"

There was an explosion like that, but people were alive and taken to the hospital? Impossible. How could it be that there were a lot of people, but only half were injured, and very few died?

"Mr. Park, Team 1 is ready. Shall we begin?" Lee Sung-eun, who opened the door, asked.

"No!" Park Min shouted, alarmed.

"Wait, just wait."

Just in time, the news flashed on the screen. It contained a video of an explosion at Seoul Station from afar.

The video, which began with the words 'Video uploaded online,' contained a panoramic view of Seoul.

After a while, there was a scene of an explosion. Like a lightning bolt, a flash of light appeared and disappeared just as fast.

“...Tell them not to start. It’s cancelled.” After answering, Lee Sung-eun hurriedly closed the door and left the room.

Park Min, who became alone again, muttered while watching the same video replay on the news.

“What the hell was that?”

* * *

“Is the accommodation all right?”

I nodded. The accommodation that Kim Min-hyuk had prepared was a mansion in the suburbs of Seoul.

The air was not good enough, and in many ways, there were a lot of things we lacked. But there were advantages. Kim Min-hyuk prepared various things for our stay.

What stood out the most were the novels and comic books for Hochi. He seemed to have moved an entire bookstore, remembering our conversations about Hochi’s hobbies.

There were lots of snacks and food, and several entertainment facilities were available. There were many odd things to explore, so Yong-yong was very happy.

As soon as Hochi came, he sat on the sofa and started reading. Seregia sat next to him, forgetting about her snack.

Perhaps because they were similar in birth, they were similar in behavior as well. Yong-yong was playing alone in his room, collecting oddities.

Old Man and Grandma were whispering something in the corner of the living room. Those two got along well on their own if left alone, so there was no need to worry.

Anyway, I was satisfied as my party liked the accommodation facilities.

“So, speaking of what I said earlier.”

“What, the G-class?”

On our way to the hotel, Kim Min-hyuk talked about the G-class monsters. There was a problem.

I wasn't paying much attention to the G-class monsters.

Unlike other monsters, the identity of a G-class, which did not stay in one place, was assumed to be the source extractor. Kirikiri had confirmed my speculation.

It could be called a problem, but it was not an urgent one.

“A G-class appeared in Pyongyang.”

“In Pyongyang?”

As far as I remember, there was no G-class in Pyongyang.

“It was recently born,” Kim Min-hyuk added.

The G-class monster, which had appeared unexpectedly, had reached the southern part of Gyeonggi-do, which was why it was being seriously discussed.

“Joon-suk is on guard nearby.”

It was strange. It was not surprising that there was a new G-class since the monsters on Earth were well spread, but why Pyongyang and not Seoul?

I had heard a variety of information about how the dungeon with the extractor operated from Hochi, who'd worked very hard on the 89th floor.

It was too inefficient to build a dungeon in a crowded place. Rather, it was better to settle down at the mountainside. In fact, I heard that most of the G-class on Earth exist in remote areas where few people live.

“Are you sure?”

But in Pyongyang, there was no such dungeon, according to what I knew.

“Yeah. The information was confirmed, Joon-suk had also checked it several times.”

I looked up at Kim Min-hyuk’s words. First of all, I could sense Lee Joon-suk wandering around Pyongyang.

What was wrong with that guy? I ignored Lee Joon-suk, who was much weaker than I’d thought, and continued my search.

There was definitely something weird there.

“You know... there’s probably a Ruler there.”

“Ruler? What?”

“There is one, huh?”

I’ll have to do something.

I thought so, but Yong-yong appeared in a split moment.

“I’ll come!”

“You will?”

He ignored Kim Min-hyuk, who was surprised by Yong-yong’s sudden appearance. Yong-yong nodded as if he was confident.

“Well... You have to be careful.”

“I’ll make sure to be!”

That was reassuring.

“Yes, don’t kill him in one go.”

“Yes!”

I patted Yong-yong’s head as he answered energetically.

“Just in case, go with Seregia. Seregia?”

Seregia, who was sitting on the sofa staring at her chocolate pie, turned and glared at me. She was giving me a look that said, “What’s wrong with you?”

However, I wanted to make sure that Yong-yong was fully prepared since this was the first time I’d let go of him on Earth.

When I didn’t retract my words, Seregia popped the chocolate pie from her hand into her mouth with a look of discontent and turned into a sword.

Seregia-turned-sword rolled down the sofa and dropped to the floor. The sound of metal resounded as the blade hit the marble floor.

If he wanted her to go along, he would have to carry her because she refused to move. It was a very powerful yet lazy will.

I sighed at the sight, and called out Grandma who was talking to Old Man in the corner.

“Grandma, can you go with Yong-yong? Just in case.”

“Huh? Do you need me?” Grandma asked back.

Why are they all so lazy?

“It’s Yong-yong’s first outing, so I’d like you to go with him.”

Yong-yong pouted, as if he was dissatisfied with being treated as a child. This time, Grandma readily accepted.

“I’m coming too!” Old Man shouted out as loudly as ever.

“Yeah, no you aren’t. If you see something you don’t like, you’ll probably smash everything and make a mess.”

I could feel Kim Min-hyuk staring from the side. It was as if I could hear his innermost thoughts saying, “And you don’t?”

I ignored it. Instead, I decided to ask him a favor.

“What do you want?”

“There are a few people I need to find.”

“Who are they? Are they regular people?”

They were Awakeneds. I took a note out of my arms.

One, two, three... seven.

There were a lot of names. I handed the note to Kim Min-hyuk. In fact, I clearly remembered each name. But just in case I forgot one, I wrote them down.

“Jung Won-sik? Who are these people?”

“Oh, they’re the guys I promised to visit as soon as I cleared the Tutorial.”

Notes From Imagine:

[1]: Old man is the Fire Person from the 61st floor. Incase you forgot

[2]: Grandma is the Ice Lady from the 61st floor. Incase you forgot

Chapter 299

Seoul (7)

Jung Won-sik was an Awakened who'd cleared the Tutorial, but he didn't think of himself as an Awakened.

Born and raised in a well-off family, he had no intention of risking his life to fight against the monsters. It was the same when the Tutorial invited him. Naturally, he chose the Easy difficulty level.

It had already been a few years since the Tutorial began, and the Easy Difficulty level's attack had improved significantly.

Jung Won-sik targeted the Tutorial's floors without much difficulty. In addition, he was promised a monetary reward outside and got support and advice from top challengers.

It wasn't dangerous to enter the Easy Difficulty level, especially with perfect attack equipment that was used even by the Hard difficulty level challengers.

Although the Tutorial wasn't that social at the time, people still met.

Easy difficulty had many challengers, similar to Normal difficulty level, so I would often meet people in the waiting room.

For those people, Jung Won-sik was the object of envy.

His safety was unconditionally secured on the stage, where all sorts of dangers lurked, and after he cleared the stage, he sliced steak and ate it while others nibbled on jerky in the waiting room.

Naturally, people flocked around him. People wanted to target stages with him.

Even if it was a stage where solo play was required, people used Jung Won-sik's attack to target it.

In such a life, Jung Won-sik was as pleased as anyone could be.

Jung Won-sik, born with a golden spoon, was used to winning people's favor easily. He liked hogging the spotlight.

Along with the special situation made by the Tutorial's existence, Jung Won-sik felt as if he had become a hero in a fairy tale.

After finishing the Tutorial, Jung Won-sik's life became even better. He came out on Earth and didn't live as an Awakened.

He continued living a wealthy life as he had before entering the Tutorial. There was only one difference.

Jung Won-sik had a powerful and young body compared to ordinary people. In a world where accidents sometimes occurred due to monsters, he had a great advantage.

Above all, he had a sense of superiority, believing he was different from others. He was satisfied with his powerful individuality.

Usually, by making use of such abilities, people received attention. He drew envy from the world and enjoyed it: money, power, popularity, and high social status.

Everybody thought he was untouchable, and he enjoyed himself.

Jung Won-sik was very satisfied with his life, but he was also worried. Traces of past anxiety and fear lingered in his mind.

He made an unforgettable mistake when he just began the Tutorial.

[Jung Won-sik, 33rd floor: Even so, aren't you a loser? There's no chance of you clearing the Hell difficulty level anyway. Why do you all like him so much?]

It was just a childish comment. Someone else was getting attention, and Jung Won-sik was jealous that the person was considered powerful by everyone.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: I'll remember your name. I don't know how many years it'll take, but once I'm out, I'll find you.]

Jung Won-sik didn't think much when he had first seen the message. There were too many violent people whom he had met before.

The problem was the flood of messages after that.

[Jung Gi-joon, 51st floor: Get your hands off the message window right now and step back. One finger of yours will disappear after each passing moment.]

[Goo Dae-ho, 53rd floor: LOL]

[Lee Won-il, 17th floor: You're in Easy Difficulty, right? It hasn't been long since you arrived, has it?]

The people who were chatting with Jun Won-sik sent him personal messages. The content implied that Jung Won-sik had f*cked up.

He was worried because he thought he made a big mistake at that moment.

[Lee Joon-suk, 90th floor: Phew...]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: No, don't bother touching someone who's getting better.]

[Lee Chul-min, 98th floor: I came here because I heard there was a person here who wanted to kill himself in the worst way possible.]

Jung Won-sik lost contact with all the Hard difficulty challengers he knew, but he saw Lee Ho-jae as a mere challenger.

After looking back at the old writings in the community, he was sure that Lee Ho-jae, the challenger, was a real nutcase.

Immediately, Jung Won-sik clung to Park Jung-ah, the head of the Order of Vigilance. He begged her to let him know how to relieve his anger somehow and asked her to make them reconcile.

He was brushed off.

He then contacted Kim Min-hyuk, the deputy head, but the only thing that came back was that he couldn't help him. They also asked him not to contact them as much as possible because they did not want to be involved.

After all other attempts failed, there was only one way left for Jung Won-sik.

He soothed himself. He tried to forget his mistake, reassuring himself that it would be impossible for Ho-jae to clear Hell difficulty.

Unfortunately, his mistake was not forgotten.

Lee Ho-jae proved his presence by always stinging Jung Won-sik like a thorn set firmly in his heart.

While eating, he lost his appetite, and sometimes he couldn't sleep a wink even though he was lying down in bed.

While he was having fun, he thought of Lee Ho-jae and his mood became worse.

Days passed and even years, and it had slowly reduced.

Just when he thought his memory was fading. "He came out... He really came out..."

When Lee Ho-jae appeared at Seoul Station, Jung Won-sik held his face and groaned quietly.

While he was thinking about how to get through this, Seoul Station exploded. Jung Won-sik looked at the television for a moment, feeling puzzled, then took out his cell phone and dialed.

“Secretary Kim, please find me a ship to China.”

He was ready to go abroad. It'd be great if that monster didn't remember him, but if he did, Jung Won-sik had to hide. If he was not allowed to hide, he would use his status as an Awakened to move to another country.

He packed up his things while making plans. Night approached, and he was about to go to bed, anticipating his journey that would take place the next day.

At that moment, a split appeared in the air.

The face he had seen on TV a little while ago walked out of thin air, a sight that he couldn't believe. The man coming out had a broad smile on his face.

“I told you I was coming, you b*stard.”

* * *

“Stand up straight,” I said to the shivering b*stards.

Why can't they even stand on their hands?

“Don't shake, keep your legs straight.”

Damn it. I was supposed to beat them up.

I couldn't even touch them because I was afraid they'd die if I hit them.

“Wasn't it seven? Why are there only four now?” Hochi asked from the side.

“Three are dead.”

It's a pity. As an Awakened, there were cases of death in battle. Why'd you have to die? Y'all should have stayed alive until I came out.

While scolding the four, Kim Min-hyuk, who had been to the guild in Seoul, returned.

Kim Min-hyuk looked at me, then at the four people standing on their hands. He asked in a puzzled voice, "What is this?"

"They're the ones you gave me the addresses of earlier."

"...You already caught them?"

Of course. I could get their location in 5 seconds by searching the Internet. What a good world this was.

Kim Min-hyuk shook his head, turned away from the four, and headed for the kitchen. He seemed to be retrieving the snacks in advance.

"Ughh..."

While we were talking, one made a strange noise and fell down. Huh, you can't bear a half-hour handstand?

"Are you an Awakened?"

It was not a matter of will. They couldn't resist my order to do a handstand. So if they really collapsed, it meant their arms didn't have any strength left and couldn't support their body.

"Let me see, you... Seventh, Jung Won-sik?"

"Yes, that's right. Actually, I tried to contact you several times, but..."

When Jung Won-sik was physically unable to maintain his handstand position, he began to talk, as if he had escaped the punishment of doing a handstand. He seemed to have asked for a lot of help here and there.

Kim Min-hyuk's name was also mentioned. Kim Min-hyuk's shoulders flinched as he did something in the kitchen.

But he should contact me if he wanted to make up, why bother Kim Min-hyuk? I didn't get it.

Contrary to what he was saying, I grinned broadly. I made them sit back.

"Okay. Everybody's reflecting, right?"

Four people nodded eagerly.

I spoke in a calm voice like a kindergarten teacher would to a child. "Then from now on, don't blabber without thinking. What you say without thinking can hurt others. I was hurt, but I let it go. I'm a merciful person you see."

I heard Hochi say, "Don't spout such nonsense," but I ignored him.

"Now, since I'm done with self-reflection and punishment, I should let you go back home, right?"

Maybe because I was speaking with a smile, there was a glimmer of hope in the eyes of the four.

Ah. I think I can understand why the God of Hope goes around talking at moments like these.

"Then, time to go back home."

I clapped my hands. The shadows of the four rose and devoured their hosts.

The four men screamed as they were swallowed up by the shadow, but soon got overpowered and sank under the shadow.

"...Are you sure you sent them home?"

“That’s right. They’ll arrive in about a month.”

Though for them, it’d be as long as three years.

I let out a chuckle. “Did you like it?”

“Uhuh. Good. I’m happy. I’m extremely happy. It’s thrilling! It’s the best! Hah!”

A ten-year-old burden had been lifted off, and I threw myself on the sofa with joy.

“Hah. I loved it.”

The pleasure I received from taking revenge on those b*stards was much larger than returning to Earth.

It was refreshing. I’d been waiting for this moment for so long. I waited for this day, imagining it over and over again. I wanted to bully them myself, but they were too weak for that.

If you die easily, to whom will I show my love?

So I let them experience the same thing as me at the time.

Let them hang in there for three years without any information, no promise of when it would end.

If you come out of your right mind, I’ll admit my fault. See you in a month.

The revenge wasn’t over yet.

“Crazy man.”

That’s too harsh, haha.

Hochi commented while looking at the pages of the comic book he was reading. “You’re a hundred times worse than the villains out here.”

“I know. I feel the same.”

I acknowledged it. I don’t know what kind of villains there were, but I was a bad guy.

“Why bother the weak? Poor things.”

“Hey, what does weakness matter? It has nothing to do with being strong and weak. They pissed a person off, so they’re paying for it. I’m fair to everyone.”

Hochi shook his head, clicking his tongue. “No wonder you’re a lunatic that’s been targeted by the gods.”

* * *

“Huh?”

“What’s wrong?”

I was in a happy mood, sitting face to face with Hochi on the sofa, when a strange situation occurred in part of Pyongyang.

One sign of life had disappeared.

“Nothing. I think Yong-yong overdid it.”

“What do you mean?” asked Kim Min-hyuk, who had been quiet.

I sent Grandma just in case anything happened, but it’s too bad.

“I think the G-class in Pyongyang is dead.”

Chapter 300

Seoul (8)

“The G-class is dead?” Kim Min-hyuk was puzzled.

“Is it normal for it to die like that?”

No, it wasn’t. If it died, it died. It couldn’t be helped.

“Joon-suk said that the G-class would be hard to handle even if you came out.”

“Lee Joon-suk?”

“Yes.”

Well... I’ll ask him myself later.

“You said the G-class in Pyongyang was a Ruler, right? What the hell is a Ruler?” Kim Min-hyuk curiously asked again.

“Well... How should I explain this?”

“You can explain it any way you want. I’ll try to understand.”

Kim Min-hyuk was intelligent when it came to matters like this.

“First of all, there are some ways to get more than a certain level of power at once.” I decided to tell him the fundamentals first. “There are two ways to do this: using a source or using faith.”

“What’s a source?”

Damn, this guy doesn’t even know the essentials. I’ll just explain the source later.

“I think it’s a bit too complicated for you right now. I’ll explain that later. Anyway, there are ways to raise your power through source and faith.” Firstly, from the source. “There’s a way where you have to devour the source and overcome your desires.”

In most cases, the person had to have a certain level of power before devouring the source. If the Spirit King, who coveted the source’s power, devoured the source, he would be able to control it with his power without any problems.

Or the person would have to overcome their desires as I did.

“The second way is where the person will absorb the source but will get devoured by their desire. They’ll become a monster, and after eating countless lives, they can escape the hold of some desires.”

These people were called Rulers. At least, that was what they called themselves.

“So, the G-class in Pyongyang was a monster that swallowed one or two planets?”

It was probable. Of course, there might be slight variations; it may have eaten less or a bit more.

Kim Min-hyuk asked me, wanting to know more about the Ruler’s power or ability, but I was unable to answer with much.

I’d never met a Ruler. Kirikiri had made it clear that the centipede-like Ruler I saw in the Tutorial was a fake, a failure.

Also, there were cases where a Ruler could use his power and ability to become a god. This ability was challenging to express in one or two words.

“Then, what is faith?”

“It’s the same as the faith one has in religion.”

I explained about faith. Kim Min-hyuk quickly understood the concept of the sects, which appeared in the late 50th floor.

“Then, can anyone be a god?”

“No.”

I would know. One would only gain the power of faith if they reached the minimum standard. Even if ordinary humans gained the power of faith, how could they wield it?

First of all, they needed to know how to wield their powers. Kim Min-hyuk continued to ask, very keen about learning how faith compared to the source, gaining power, and what kind of power was created by faith.

Were there many kinds of faith?

“I don’t know if it’s accurate, but there are two main types of faith.”

“Two kinds?”

“Uhuh. One is the faith we normally get from others. The other is what one receives from themselves.”

One of the differences between faith and source was that the power received depends on who the being was. No matter who was being empowered, the source’s power wouldn’t change much, but faith was different.

The more faith sent by higher classes, the stronger the power. It even depended on the relationship between gods. In a way, it was natural.

A faithful believer and a believer who rarely prayed, couldn’t offer the same amount of faith.

There was no way that a superhuman, like an ordinary human, would have the same faith as a god. The God of Slowness had mentioned that there was a god that respected them. And I remember the God of Slowness telling me this fact with great pride.

How much power of faith did those who'd become gods have? It may have started with such a question.

Seregia was the one who'd first talked about faith in myself.

It was a hypothesis that Seregia had put forth when I was wondering about the power I had, even though there were no sects on the 60th floor. She believed faith in oneself could also be faith.

She said it was only one person's faith, but it wasn't directed towards anyone else. Hence, it could be a great power. And she proved her hypothesis by making me achieve my powers.

"So... what kind of power do you have?"

"Both of them. I devoured a source once, but it was taken away."

I had once got a source from the 59th floor, but I didn't retain it after clearing the floor. Of course, the power would be restored someday.

It wasn't that strong, and with my current power, it wouldn't matter much, but I couldn't just let it go.

"Are you... a... God?"

"Yep, I'm practically a God."

* * *

The Association's vehicle stood out.

Even though it was the Association's vehicle, one in charge of monster raids in the city, it was military-ready, designed to make it easy for other vehicles to recognize and move out of the way.

Lee Sung-eun, the team leader, opened the car door with her coat draped over one hand. The weather was as chilly as ever.

Inside the vehicle was the Association's combat team. Fortunately, everyone seemed to have come except for her.

Standing beside the door, she said, “I’m sorry I’m late. Shall we leave right away?”

“Let’s wait for a little. Our youngest hasn’t come yet.”

Team leader Lee Sung-eun nodded. It wasn’t a tight deadline, and she couldn’t complain about waiting for others because she herself was late.

The warm air released from the heater made her frozen hands itch. While thinking about living a warm life, Lee Sung-eun, the team leader, found something strange.

It could be called a belated discovery. The atmosphere in the car was awful. It didn’t seem like there had been a quarrel between the team members.

It was more like they were going to a funeral home.

Oh Sang-jin, who headed the association’s three-person team, had his head down and his hands covering his face, his body still.

Team leader Lee Sung-eun was shocked to see he was crying. The other team members were also acting strangely.

Some team members held their heads against the window, others sighed, and some fiddled with their cell phones with serious faces.

She was confused. One of the team members sitting next to her said, “Please understand. Our team leader used to be in the Order of Vigilance.”

Lee Sung-eun, the team leader, wondered what the matter was and what had happened

She was going to ask what was wrong, but just in time, a team member opened the car door and came in. The team member took something out of the envelope and handed it out to them.

Lee Sung-eun also accepted.

“I’ll take one Cheongsimhwan too.”

(T/N: Cheongsimhwan is a pill one takes to calm their hearts.)

Team leader Lee Sung-eun laughed inside. It seemed ridiculous to see Oh Sang-jin, the team leader, standing up and taking a Cheongsimhwan.

Of course, they all thought about Lee Ho-jae, and it was reasonable to be nervous, considering that he was an Awakened, the strongest one.

But why were Awakened, ones who were in the combat team, scared to this extent?

The visit was not even about arresting or punishing Lee Ho-jae.

It was just to inform him of what happened at Seoul Station and its damage and ask him to be careful. It was a visit that would start with a conversation and end with a conversation.

She explained it clearly to the team members.

“So that’s the only way out, huh?” team leader Oh Sang-jin, who forgot about his Cheongsimhwan, muttered with a frown.

He asked Lee Sung-eun, “Team Leader Lee, why were we suddenly thrown into this mess?”

“What are you talking about? Thrown in?” she asked when he asked about why the team leader had thrown them into this.

What was he trying to imply?

“Oh, hell, if you don’t know,” said the team member who was sitting in the driver’s seat.

“I’m moving back to the highway. There’s a section that’s being restored ahead,” Oh Sang-jin said, throwing the Cheongsimhwan wrappers he had in his hands into the driver’s seat.

“Don’t go.”

“Why? There’s a lot of traffic.”

“Yes, go to the place where there’s traffic. Let’s reach as late as we can.”

Looking at Oh Sang-jin, the team leader who was usually confident, waver, Lee Sung-eun felt reluctant.

The association’s vehicle left the association’s parking lot filled with anxiety

* * *

In the morning, Yong-yong and his party came home.

When asked why she had returned so late, Grandma replied that it took time to soothe Yong-yong, who had begun to cry.

I could understand.

Yong-yong’s eyes opened slowly. I didn’t know why he had cried so much. Maybe it was because he didn’t keep his promise to me.

Yong-yong tried to explain to me what happened. He seemed to be choking on tears, but he tried to keep talking till the end. I hugged his small figure.

“That’s why I hit...”

“Did you play?”

“Uhuhhh, yes...”

Yong-yong, who was withholding his tears and trying to explain, eventually buried his face in my chest and began to cry. I hugged him tightly and patted him on the back.

“What happened to him?”

Seregia sat on the sofa, acting innocent. Naturally, my eyes turned to Grandma, but she shrugged her shoulders.

“It was too weak for me to act.”

Then there was nothing they could have done. I knew this would happen. I couldn’t even blame Yong-yong for not being able to hit humans for fear of killing them.

Of course, he was good at controlling his strength, but he couldn’t help not being able to sense how weak his opponent was.

“...Dad.”

“Yes, Yong-yong?”

“Can’t you save it?” Yong-yong questioned, pointing to the body of the monster lying on the floor.

It was a mess. Blood and impurities were all over its rough skin. Blood still leaked out, wetting the living room’s floor.

Perhaps, because it’d been so long since he’d seen such a thing, Kim Min-hyuk hardened his face and hurriedly left, under the excuse of going to the market.

“Why this again?”

Now that it was in this situation, it was easier to just absorb it.

Yong-yong didn’t answer and buried his head back in my chest. This was a total disaster.

While thinking, I reached out to the monster’s body.

“Return.”

With a bright light, the body began to move. The previously flat body swelled, and the blood on the floor floated into it.

The broken bones and ruptured muscles returned to their original place. The restored monster looked like a human with paws and wings.

“Argh! Save me!” the monster screamed as soon as it was revived.

Ah, it’s talking.

When the monster saw Yong-yong in my arms, it fell on its legs. The old lady, who was standing behind, stopped it from rushing back.

“Cute,” Yong-yong said quietly, watching the monster that kept screaming and trying to escape.

Oh my god. Yong-yong, that thing is not cute.

It resembled a normal adult woman with paws and wings. It was bizarre rather than cute. The giant centipede monster we saw last time looked more spectacular.

“Daddy, can i keep it?”

I thought about it for a while. The reason I revived it was to soothe the depressed Yong-yong and experiment with it later.

But if I gave that to Yong-yong as a gift, I couldn’t use it. I pondered on it for a while, then finally decided. “You have to raise it well.”

Yong-yong grinned cutely.

There were still tears trailing down his cheeks, but it was nice to see him smiling brightly.

“You shouldn’t let it run away or die. You have to take good care of it.

You can't harass it just because it's weak."

The monster, completely overpowered by grandmother, looked at Yong-yong and me, scared.

I resumed talking. I was already worried about Yong-yong's attitude toward humans. I was going to try to change that.

In the past, raising pets may have helped children develop emotions and social abilities.

I hoped that this would help Yong-yong.

"Oh you can't let it go wild either. You need to educate it properly."

Yong-yong nodded energetically. I knew it wouldn't be easy, but I decided to leave it to him for now.

I placed Yong-yong down on the floor, looked at Yong-yong running over to the monster, and turned to Lee Joon-suk, standing awkwardly in the corner.

"Long time no see."

"Ah, yes... Hyung, long time no see."

Lee Joon-suk stood nervously at the side of the door.

"What are you doing there? Come here, I have a lot of questions for you."

Chapter 301

Seoul (9)

Lee Jun-seok felt that at this moment, the person who was most embarrassed on Earth could not be anyone else but him.

A G-class had appeared in Pyongyang. Lee Joon-seok stayed near it to watch over it. He was the only one who could detect the G-class' moves, escape from it, and quickly inform Seoul of the news. So, Lee Joon-suk roamed near Pyongyang for several days.

He learned that Lee Ho-jae had exited the Tutorial.

The Tutorial had also halted. It was said to be one of the minor problems that occurred when Lee Ho-jae came out.

To Lee Joon-seok, no matter what Lee Ho-jae did, it wasn't weird. Even though he heard that Lee Ho-jae came out, Lee Jun-seok did not leave Pyongyang.

Lee Ho-jae was Lee Ho-jae, and the G-class was a G-class. And many people still lived near Pyongyang.

It was safe to say that most North Koreans lived in Kaesong's vicinity, which was close to the border.

In the case Lee Joon-seok wasn't present and the G-class started to move south, many people would be wiped out instantly.

Lee Joon-seok was just waiting for Lee Ho-jae to be sent here because of Kim Min-hyuk.

After hearing the news of Lee Ho-jae's appearance, Lee Joon-suk began to consider attacking the G-class.

How could he get rid of it?

The other day, he sincerely told Kim Min-hyuk that it would be hard for Lee Ho-jae to catch the G-class even if he came out. Of course, Lee Joon-seok thought that Lee Ho-jae could kill the G-class.

It would be possible if he focused only on killing the G-class. The problem was the damage that would occur in the process of killing it.

Considering the power that the G-class might have, if one made full-fledged efforts to catch it, it would create a mess, not only in Pyongyang and Seoul, but also in China.

What good would it be if all of them died to save the city's people in contact with the G-class' area in Pyongyang?

That was why Lee Jun-seok insisted on giving up Seoul more than anyone else. Just giving up part of Seoul, Gyeonggi Province, and Gangwon Province would exclude them from the G-class' area.

The G-class was famous for never going out of its area.

But Lee Ho-jae came out.

With Lee Ho-jae's personality, he wouldn't just give up on Pyongyang's G-class. He'd try to fight, somehow.

The collateral damage that took place had to be reduced as much as possible.

Lee Ho-jae probably didn't care about the damage, so Lee Joon-suk thought he had to find a way.

While flying over Pyongyang repeatedly, something flew and clung to his back. Lee Jun-seok shook his body, but what was stuck to his back refused to fall off.

"Cute!" exclaimed the being on his back.

He felt a sudden uneasiness at this surprise attack but was also curious about the young voice.

“Yong-yong, you shouldn’t do that.”

He heard another voice. It was a woman’s voice that brought a sense of coldness with it. As soon as Lee Joon-suk listened to the sound, his body cringed.

“Okay!” the young voice sounded, and whatever was stuck to his back detached.

Then he flew past Lee Joon-suk, towards Pyongyang. Lee Joon-suk’s breath hitched, and he chased after them.

Soon, he saw a body that seemed to have been squeezed out of something in the heart of Pyongyang, a crying child beside it, and a woman soothing the child.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

“Joon-seok buddy, did you say that I wouldn’t be able to catch the G-class?”

“Oh, Hyung, that’s... that’s... yeah, I did. I’m sorry! Forgive me!” Lee Joon-suk replied, squeezing his eyes shut.

When I saw him, I decided to let him go. Since he told the truth, I’d spare him this time.

Before coming in, he didn’t panic much when he saw Kim Min-hyuk and my group, maybe because he’d already experienced so much in Pyongyang.

Anyway, Lee Joon-seok did not make a fuss by saying, “What do you mean?” or “I never said that.”

It was good that he accepted it quickly.

“Joon-seok.”

“Yes, Hyung.”

I scratched my chin, looking at him, who still had an anxious look on his face.

How should I frame this? I don't know.

I decided to bluntly ask, “Why are you so weak?”

Immediately, I saw Lee Joon-suk's face shrivel up. Well, what could I do? It was the truth.

“What's your level?”

“201.”

201 was high enough. It was higher than what I had before I got stuck on the 60th floor. But it was still too weak.

“How did you level up?”

“Level up? What do you mean?”

“What level were you at before you reached level 201?”

Lee Jun-seok rolled his eyes and answered, “Of course I was at 200.”

Oh, my God. From Level 200 to Level 201?

“Then before 200?”

“That's... that was 199, of course.”

I sighed, shaking my head. In my case, my level had been stagnant before level 100.

Then, I forgot about it, but sometimes I found that my level had gone up by 50.

Kirikiri explained that the system updated my level only after taking some time to check on my current level. However, in Lee Joon-suk's case, it seemed that it updated every time he levelled up by one.

I didn't know if I should call that stupid or great.

Level 201 would have been hard to reach, but he raised his level by repeatedly challenging the Hard Difficulty Level's 91st floor.

It was a very laborious task.

Lee Jun-seok stared at me with a puzzled look on his face, asking if something was wrong.

If you were going to do this, I wish you had asked me for advice earlier.

He had never asked me anything because he was too competitive. Thinking of his hardships, which could have gone as far as dying without even crossing level 201, I felt very sorry for him.

"Joon-suk, make some time soon."

"Yes? Okay, I will."

When I trained Hochi later, I'd let him roll around a bit with me. I knew that Lee Joon-suk was quite high-leveled.

Hochi would have an excellent teacher to observe and learn from.

[Who did you say was gonna train me?] asked Hochi, lying on the sofa reading comic books.

I ignored him. I don't think I should let that guy be alone. He needed to have more self-confidence in this cruel world.

Kim Min-hyuk opened the door and called Lee Joon-suk as he did so. I thought he had something to say.

After telling him to go, I turned my attention to Yong-yong and the mantis-like monster.

Yong-yong was elated. He especially liked the Mantis Ruler and kept touching it here and there and staring at it.

The Ruler was struggling, looking as if it was going to die.

“Yong-yong.”

“Yes.”

“Since Yong-yong is going to raise it from now on, you should also build a house for it, right?”

Yong-yong nodded his head, his eyes sparkling at my question. “I’ll make one!” he said and ran up to his room on the second floor.

I watched his back for a moment and turned to the mantis.

“Hey, come closer.”

“Karak-Kararak!” The mantis let out beast-like noises.

“Use human language, or I’ll tear your wings off.”

“Yes.”

I had a lot of questions about this guy. First things first. “Why are you half human and half mantis? Were you originally human?”

“No, it’s not like that. I just imitate the people who live here,” it answered clearly.

It's a greenling, huh.

"Then why do you roam around with those front legs and wings?"

"This is... my identity..."

"Don't talk nonsense and switch to a human arm. I don't want to see it."

"Yes."

The front legs changed into human arms. That alone was much better to see.

Why would it take the form of a human woman and have the front legs of a mantis?

"Can I leave the wings like this...?"

"Whatever." The wings didn't matter. "I'm going to ask you a few questions from now on. Your future depends on how sincerely you answer them."

"Will you... will you let me go?"

"Of course I will. Help me, and I will save your life. I told you before. I'm going to keep you as my son's pet."

A look of despair, as if its world had collapsed, flashed on its face

I felt that, somehow, if Yong-yong kept it as a pet, it would definitely die.

* * *

I coaxed the mantis into saying that if it told me useful information, I would just let it go. Of course, that was a lie.

Filled with a desire for freedom, it began to talk excitedly.

“Ah, so, you’re the one who went nuts in America a few years ago?”

“Yes.”

There were so many weird things about the G-class that had appeared in the U.S.

It had appeared in the waters of the city area, and there weren’t any traces of monster or human bodies left after the eradication.

Only that the U.S had announced that they had succeeded in the task.

The U.S might have actually compromised with the monster, or secretly brought out nuclear missiles, and the Awakened were actually killed by the atomic effects, and not the monster.

Or there wasn’t any G-class monster there in the first place. Such theories were also heard in the Tutorial.

However, listening to the mantis, the situation at the time was entirely right. It said that it came to its senses when it was on the eastern coast of the U.S.

It was in the middle of the sea, with numerous fleets and Awakened men around it. I remembered the centipede-like monster I had seen on the 80th floor.

The monster had achieved ‘completion’ on the spot after eating the mana thrown by Yong-yong and Hochi.

This one had also devoured a lot, and it seemed to have reached ‘completion’ during the battle, as a result of eating the Awakened and the U.S. Navy.

“Then?”

“I came back. I was just reborn, so I felt dizzy when this all happened.”

Supposedly, the mantis, which had been near the eastern coast of the U.S, had been living among humans.

It had lived a rather hectic life.

“You didn’t think to go find the other Rulers?”

“Ugh... Ugh... Don’t say that. Why would I go find them? To get eaten?”

Ah, right. The mantis was a newborn Ruler. There were many who wanted more power.

“The gods can’t come here, and the Rulers can’t either. So I was stuck on this planet. I tried to live quietly.”

And if possible, you’d build up your strength little by little, right?

I understood. For it, the Earth must have been a perfectly safe haven.

“How do you know about gods or Rulers?”

“I remember the time when I was a monster.”

It said that it had memories of the days when it was a monster. When I asked about the other Rulers that pushed themselves into this planet;

“It’s akin to dropping soldiers all over the enemy camp in a mobile game, just that there are few monsters like me. All contributed in creating chaos. Even before monsters became Rulers, it was hard for them to be killed with the power of the Earthlings.”

This was helpful. We could figure out how the Rulers managed and spread out their troops, and where their meeting place was.

The mantis’s value had increased in my eyes.

“Ah, that’s right. I used that thing too. The gate-generating item I got last time,” Hochi, who was listening from the side, added in. Hochi had been happily targeting the 89th floor, which was meant for the management of the dungeon as a servant to a Ruler.

The mantis, which suddenly grew still, widened its eyes at Hochi's words.

"...oho, are you a Ruler too?"

Hochi ignored the mantis's words. I had a more important question than that. "Do you have a cell phone?"

It had just talked about mobile games.

"Of course. How could I live among humans without a cell phone?"

"Well... Give it to me."

The mantis was worried about its cellphone, but after I threatened it a bit, it meekly handed it over to me.

"...Password." It unlocked the cell phone and handed it back to me again. As soon as I got the cell phone, I went to the phone book.

There were many names listed in it.

[Kim Jeong-dam]

[Jang Taeggi]

[Hwang Jeong-cheol]

Maybe because it had been in Pyongyang, there were many Korean names. English names and Chinese names were also present.

Among them, I found a familiar name.

[Park Min]

I'd seen this name before. I was retracing my memory to recollect whose name it was, when the doorbell rang.

Ding-Dong!

The people who had been wandering around the place for a while seemed to have finally hit the doorbell. They hadn't come in and had just walked around, so I thought they were sent to monitor my movements.

But that wasn't so.

Kim Min-hyuk, who was talking to Lee Joon-suk in the kitchen, approached the intercom. He grabbed the receiver, spoke for a moment, and then pressed a button to open the gate.

"Who is it?"

"Uh, it's those kids from the Association's side. I think they came here because of the Seoul Station incident."

Chapter 302

Seoul (10)

“Is this the name of the Association’s President?”

“Yes!”

The mantis didn’t stop its explanation, even when people from the Association had arrived.

Instead, it explained more desperately, since it thought that the time allotted for speaking would be reduced. It talked about how it met him and what talks and deals they had made.

“Well...”

It didn’t come as a surprise that the mantis wasn’t attached to humans. From all the information I received from Kirikiri, and from the stages, I confirmed, multiple times, that this was normal.

If there was a good chance of success, all humans would be willing to do business with Rulers. For the sake of their own safety, humans would even sell their families and countries. There was no way that the mantis wouldn’t do the same.

Furthermore, they were intelligent beings and didn’t feel bound by human society or rules. They felt threatened here on Earth, where only humans existed.

It was more or less natural. Anyway, the mantis’s value increased once more in my mind. This bug was pretty smart, eloquent, and well-versed. It was a considerably good pet for Yong-yong.

Regardless of whether I was listening or not, the mantis continued gossiping beside me.

Soon, the people of the Association arrived in the living room. The mantis stared at them as if telling them to go away.

Its mouth was still at work, whispering nonsense. I sent a blow to its head for scaring the people needlessly.

“Ow.”

“I’ll listen to you later, so don’t worry and wait.”

* * *

There were five people from the Association: team leader Oh Sang-jin, four members under him, and Lee Sung-eun.

They looked at the woman kneeling on the floor of the living room with doubtful eyes, but no one explained what she was doing.

(T/N: It’s the mantis, but in human form. In case you didn’t realise xD)

The two team leaders came forward as representatives to introduce themselves.

Lee Ho-jae asked Kim Min-hyuk, who was also listening to the introduction, “Hey, who’s Park Min? Is he the Park Min I know?”

Lee Ho-jae’s question confused Kim Min-hyuk. This man never had any interest in anyone.

Does he not remember the name of the first challenger who cleared the Tutorial?

Park Min was a challenger who had been supported by the entire Order of Vigilance. In fact even Lee Ho-jae had once given Park Min potions and equipment.

Park Min was a famous challenger, not only because of the support he had. He cleared the Tutorial and became even more famous.

There was no one in Korea who didn't know his name except for the man sitting on the couch.

Why in the world is he asking who Park Min is?

People from the Association had come to say hello.

When Kim Min-hyuk turned his head to the side, his eyes fell on the people from the Association. He tried his best to mask his embarrassment.

Kim Min-hyuk quickly talked about Park Min because he could understand how they felt.

He was the first Korean challenger to clear the Tutorial, and now he was the president of the Korean Awakened Association.

“Oh, right. That was him.”

Lee Ho-jae looked at the mantis. Seeing that, Kim Min-hyuk decided to come forward and introduce the people of the Association. He introduced team leader Lee Sung-eun and Oh Sang-jin again.

Lee Ho-jae raised a question that arose in his mind after hearing the team leader's introduction Oh Sang-jin. “You were in the Order of Vigilance?”

Oh Sang-jin was a former member, so he was so nervous before and looked so scared at this moment.

He was from the Order of Vigilance.

“But why aren't you with the others? Why go to the Association?” Lee Ho-jae asked casually.

Kim Min-hyuk began to feel the same sting of pain from a little while ago. Within the Tutorial, the Order of Vigilance had a special position.

In its early days, the Order of Vigilance had almost the same influence as the national government. There were many reasons why people did not protest much against them.

First was because of Lee Ho-jae's strength. The second was because the Order of Vigilance tried to keep the order somehow. The third was because they tried to help people rather than hurt them.

The last reason was that there was no way to protest against them. No one would gain anything by rebelling.

The Tutorial was a place where people could not gather except for special circumstances, such as tournaments. For the people there, the society wasn't the entire Tutorial, but the waiting room in which they all were sent before clearing a floor.

Unless any individual was forced to do something irrational, there was no need to rebel against the Order of Vigilance. It was unrelated to any individual.

It was the Order of Vigilance members who were unhappy with the Order of Vigilance's dominance. They argued they could do more with their influence and power. And some tried to place themselves as the leader of the Order of the Vigilance, even though it was impossible to do so.

Splitting and independence attempts took place in the Order many times. There was once a time when such a situation lasted a while. However, under the influence of this independent group, people's discontent followed.

Compared to the Order of Vigilance, which provided goods almost free of charge and didn't interfere unless someone committed a crime, the new independent groups forced people to pay, interfered with one thing or another, and abused their power.

Naturally, a decision had to be made on the day of Great Harmony.

The independent groups soon admitted defeat. They remembered the independent group's members who were beaten like dogs on the day of Great Harmony.

Even before Lee Ho-jae entered the meeting, they had surrendered and reached an agreement with the leaders of the Order of Vigilance.

Team leader Oh Sang-jin belonged to such a group. For that reason, he did not return to the Order of Vigilance, and even after coming to Earth, he stayed in Korea, away from those who were part of the Order of Vigilance.

After surrendering, team leader Oh Sang-jin once spent time with Lee Ho-jae in a small tent.

Of course, the atmosphere had been far from harmonious. He was punished and experimented with until the end of the day of Great Harmony.

At that time, Lee Ho-jae was just getting a clue about the mana circuit on the sixth floor.

Naturally, the subject of the experiment was human anatomy. The experiment had not been carried out by cutting open Oh's body.

Lee Ho-jae made an incision on his body and wanted to visually check the reactions of the surrounding muscles and nerves when mana flowed.

Oh Sang-jin's only role was to check Lee Ho-jae's back's reactions and inform Lee Ho-jae. Of course, there was no physical pain for Oh Sang-jin, but mentally, he had a painful time.

Even Kim Min-hyuk did not know about this. And Lee Ho-jae himself did not remember it. Team Leader Lee Sung-eun, who came with him, did not know either. The same went for the members of his team.

It was a traumatic moment of the past that only team leader Oh Sang-jin remembered. Thanks to that, when team leader Oh Sang-jin sat on the couch facing Lee Ho-jae, he shivered without making eye contact.

Sometimes the team members whispered and tapped on his shoulder, asking if he was okay, but Oh Sang-jin was frozen from shock, and couldn't respond.

Regardless, team leader Lee Sung-eun firmly did what she had to do. She talked about what happened at Seoul Station and listed the aggregated damage.

There had been numerous casualties and property losses. After getting a stern warning, the listening party said it would never happen in the future.

Finally, she made it clear that this was only the Association's decision. If the government tried to punish Lee Ho-jae, the Association would ignore the principle that the Awakened would defend him and would no longer be involved.

Considering how many times they had heard about the incident at Seoul Station through the news and heard from team leader Oh Sang-jin in the car about how crazy Lee Ho-jae was, it was a reckless move.

However, Lee Sung-eun thought she should still deliver what she had to say. And there was also a difference in Lee Sung-eun and Oh Sang-jin's perceptions.

Team Leader Lee Sung-eun saw the burned Seoul Station but also knew there had been no actual deaths. All who had been taken to the intensive care unit survived in the end.

Lee Sung-eun thought that Lee Ho-jae was a reckless person, but he was not a crazy person who killed people. Team leader Oh Sang-jin thought Lee Ho-jae was the world's craziest person.

That was the difference.

"Hmm..."

So when Lee Ho-jae held his chin in one hand and hummed under his breath, their actions were different.

Lee Sung-eun calmly waited for Lee Ho-jae's answer while Oh Sang-jin quickly got off the couch and knelt on the floor.

"I have nothing to do with the Association! I resigned already!"

It was an instant reply.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

“I have nothing to do with the Association. P-please, save me...”

Why are you asking me to save your life?

Oh, he probably has a story for this. The stories of those who came from the Association were not significant.

It would have been just another boring story. I felt that we should end our conversation here.

“Team Leader Oh Sang-jin, what are you doing?!”

“First of all, you need to go back home.” I jumped up from the couch and sent the screaming man home.

The Association members sprang up in surprise, but I gestured to them to sit down again. But they didn’t sit back, so I forced them to sit down.

“Hey, what did you do?” asked Kim Min-hyuk from the side.

What do you mean?

“I told you. I sent him back home.”

“...You knew where his house was?”

I didn’t know. But he did.

Following the reverberation of his powers, I found the location of the man I just sent back.

He was in an ordinary house in Seoul. I wondered if he had reached safely, but when I heard him faintly talking to someone in his home, I guessed that he had been sent to his house.

“I did a good job, don’t worry.”

I looked at the people from the Association, who were now one less in number.

To be honest, he should have said anything but that he had nothing to do with the Association. That was just nonsense.

(Note: In case you don’t understand Hojae meant; He meant Oh- Sangjin should not have said he that he had nothing to do with the association as he obviously did)

“I have a favor to ask.”

“I will do my best,” one of the men said in a quivering voice.

Of course, I knew he was scared, but somehow I felt embarrassed. People were watching us, and it was a bit weird to be treated like this in public.

“Well, I’ll be grateful, anyway. You don’t have to do it.”

It felt like a burden, and I hated it.

“All you have to do is deliver a message. To your Association’s President.”

The man who had joined hands with a G-class had to be dealt with. Of course, the G-class was kneeling next to the couch.

I had to double-check the facts it had said from the Association’s President.

“First of all, I’ve already dealt with Pyongyang’s G-class.”

Next to me, Kim Min-hyuk whispered, “Don’t you think it would be better to let them know about it later?”

But I ignored him. It didn’t matter much.

“And tell the President that if he wants to see its face, he’ll have to come here.”

Saying that Pyongyang’s G-class had been dealt with would instill the idea that their deal may have been revealed.

“Lastly, if he dares to run away, tell him I’ll catch him.”

Chapter 303

Seoul (11)

After the talk, the Association members were sent out.

“Is it fine to do it like this?”

“Nothing can be undone.”

I’d said everything I wanted to, and I sent them out because I had nothing more to say.

“No, I was talking about Park Min.”

That didn’t matter either. There was no need to talk about it anymore. I was going to be the one to judge and punish.

It wasn’t urgent, so I let him come and find me himself. Park Min had only two options: find a new way to deal with the mantis or come here in fear.

The former would be good if he could figure out something new, and the latter, he’d just have to deal with it.

“What about the government? You made that mess in the middle of the city yesterday,” asked Hochi.

When Hochi, who usually had no interest in such things, asked this question, I was a little surprised.

“From the novel I’m reading, I got to know that the government would usually explode at times like this.”

“What kind of novel is that?”

Hochi replied that this happened in almost every novel like a cliché.

Kim Min-hyuk explained, “Maybe they won’t act right away. Arresting the Awakened who committed a crime usually requires cooperation from the Association.”

This meant that the government’s count of Awakened was low.

Their army was inadequate to subdue the rebellious Awakened in the heart of the city.

Come to think of it, the fact that the Association said it wouldn’t intervene between the government and me meant that it could ignore the government’s request.

The man I sent home earlier was brave.

He had a good story to present to others. He could say anything he wanted without worrying about me getting angry since the government didn’t bind him.

“The judiciary will discuss punishment. But it’s impossible for the decision to be enforced. There’s no way the police can move alone. Maybe they will come up with a reasonable compromise.”

Instead of just letting me go for the Seoul Station incident, they would ask me a few things like trying to get me into pro-government groups.

Kim Min-hyuk explained some of his theories. They were plausible.

“It’s gonna take a while for them to get moving, regardless.”

“Right. They have to gather opinions internally and reach an agreement. You’ll have to pay attention to the media and the public to check on the situation.”

Then there was nothing bothersome left now. That was a relief.

“It’s been years since the Awakened had the power in their hands, and the government is used to compromising one way or another, so they won't come up with an absurd proposal. They have brains, and they know what an angry Awakened can do. Of course, even if they come up with a reasonable offer, you..."

"I don't care."

Kim Min-hyuk mumbled, "Yes, that's where the problem will arise."

It wouldn't be a big problem.

"The first thing you'll have to worry about is the public."

Kim Min-hyuk had explained the Korean citizens' situation. Protests and public criticism of the Awakened had intensified.

"Thanks to me, it's going to be a little quiet."

"...Isn't it just getting worse?"

"Of course. You can be mad at a dog who's supposed to be guarding the house for not doing what it was supposed to do. But if the dog grows out of control and doesn't recognize people, you'll be scared before getting angry."

Kim Min-hyuk nodded with an impressed look.

"Even though you said dog metaphorically, it suits you."

This b*stard.

"But we still have to do something. You can't just turn your back on the people." Kim Min-hyuk said firmly.

As he said, we must solve the problems of the public. Leaving them as they are would be a loss in one way or another.

What should we do? I wondered if there was some creative idea, but as always, nothing came to mind.

It would be better to go along with the most common way—the most frequently used method on the 61st floor.

“Announce it to the people. I’ll cure them of any disease. Just 30 people a month on a first-come, first-serve basis. Oh, even if they’re dead, I can still save them.”

First-come, first-serve, regardless of the severity of the disease.

“...Is this possible? Did you bring any Elixirs?”

Of course, I had some. But it wasn’t meant to be used here. Even without Elixirs, I could cure human diseases. I am a god after all

Kim Min-hyuk, who had been thinking over my proposal for a while, asked in an anxious tone, “What if there’s backlash?”

Kim Min-hyuk talked about many plausible cases. If I continued being good, I knew what would happen.

People may blame me for not treating more people even though I had the ability. Besides, there may be those in power who want to ignore the first-come-first-serve order. There was no room for trouble.

I heard Kim Min-hyuk’s explanation, but I didn’t think it would be a big problem.

Volunteers who helped others out of goodwill were often treated as servants.

Humans are those who have become social through relationships, and a service done from goodwill could always reverse this relationship, making the receiver arrogant.

But that was the story of the powerless. Unfortunately, people couldn’t ask me for anything.

I’d already proven my strength by clearing Hell difficulty level and burning Seoul Station. And I would continue to show more.

People would know. Naturally, I didn't need to prove my power. Of course, there would be many desperate people. Some may beg for mercy and some may be enraged for their relatives who were about to die.

But as long as I gave priority to solidifying my relationship with them rather than giving credit to their desperation, there wouldn't be any change in our relationship.

Instead, their desperation was my power.

"Their resentment could be big enough to cover everything."

Kim Min-hyuk kept trying to make me understand the consequences of the deprivation and anger of those who couldn't make it to the first come, first serve.

I didn't ignore it because I didn't understand it. Of course, the resentment would be enormous.

It wasn't bad to be the center of the gossip. Helping isn't something that goes unnoticed.

If the topic heated up, it would naturally lead to mudslinging. Each side would argue and criticize the other's opinions.

It would be enough for me to stay out of the mud. Of course, the question of why I won't save everyone even though I could would still remain.

I had a reasonable answer for that.

'You do not have faith in me.'

That was a fantastic answer.

With that answer, I could classify me and every other human being differently, and bind all humans.

I could pass on the fault to people.

There would be many who criticize me. The more desperate they are, the more they regard me as their only hope, and the more they sanctify me and protect me.

The explosion at Seoul Station would also turn into a symbolic event that meant something, and not just my whim.

An ignorant man fills his ignorance with his imagination, and soon, he assumes it to be the truth.

“What should I do with this? Huu...”

Kim Min-hyuk eventually gave up persuading me. Instead, he seemed to be brainstorming how to deal with this matter.

“In the second month, you’ll be healing the 31st person first, right?”

“No.”

Of course not.

“In the second month, we’ll ask for thirty people again. On a first-come-first-serve basis.”

“...then the 31st person from the first month?”

A bummer for them.

The waiting list cannot be extended to the following month. If the waiting list got too long, people would stop struggling for salvation and dismiss it as someone else’s business.

The feelings that would appear wouldn’t be desperation, but jealousy and loathing. Every month, everyone should be able to participate and have expectations.

“...No matter how much I think about it, that’s crazy. Wouldn’t it be better to do a raffle instead of first come, first serve? It'll be a real mess if we do it like that. Whether it be online or offline."

It would be a mess, yes.

"The selection itself will be difficult. Hundreds, thousands of people are coming in in a second, so how can we decide the order? If there's anything else we can do..."

"Let's draw."

Let's just go do a lottery. I'd have to sort out the order of people every month myself. That would be annoying.

"This should be enough."

At this rate, faith would naturally grow when left alone.

My power and symbolism were enough, and the method of transfer would be the miraculous act of healing.

I would be left alone but would also get faith.

When faith and a connection with believers get established, a religion would be built by giving rewards and care to some believers, as long as I show my presence and powers a few times.

It wasn't difficult. It was only a matter of time, after all. If you spend a lot of effort, it will settle down quickly, and if you spend less, it will only take a little longer.

Religion was what humans built after all.

All the gods had to do was prepare a story that would be the foundation of their religion.

It was amazingly easy to ignore the problem of time, although I had felt it several times on the 61st floor.

And of course, there's no god who was pressed for time. That's why even those monsters became gods and ran wild.

After talking to Kim Min-hyuk, I saw the mantis quietly kneeling beside me.

Perhaps because of me telling it to be quiet when the association had arrived, it remained silent even after the people left.

Would this mantis become a god on Earth if it had a bit more time?

Perhaps it was because of this that it had decided to live among humans and get used to life on Earth.

"Mantis."

"Yes! Shall I tell you how I met with the president of the Association?" the mantis asked me as if I had waited to hear this.

"Why did you have mantis forearms and wings?"

It had a human figure, even if it was mimicking Earthlings. Why had it been half-human and half-mantis again?

"Were you originally a mantis?"

"No, I liked mantises."

"In what way?"

What's good about mantises?

"Daddy! It's ready!"

As we were talking, Yong-yong was coming down the stairs from the second floor. I glanced to see if he had prepared the mantis' house.

"I saw it in the grass, and the female mantis..."

Yong-yong, who was approaching, quickly hit the mantis on the back of its head.

* * *

I had already dug up all the information about Rulers from the mantis. Then I handed the mantis over to Yong-yong.

Yong-yong had prepared a small bug box from back when he did his elementary school vacation homework.

It had strings that let him hang it around his neck. When Yong-yong opened the box, it sucked up the mantis like a squeezed plastic bottle would suck air.

It was a box with all kinds of protective effects on the walls, making the mantis' body smaller by spatial distortion and forced transformation.

It was handy.

Smaller than a miniature piece, the mantis slammed the walls and shouted from the inside of the box.

“You told me I’d be let free! I gave you all the information! It was valuable information!”

It shouted, but it only sounded like a mosquito buzzing, either because its body became smaller or because the box dampened the noise.

Still, I decided to answer.

“Oh, sorry, I lied.”

The information given by the mantis was useful. To be honest, it was more useful than I had expected.

But I didn’t want to let it go. Yong-yong would be sad.

The mantis jumped and shouted with a shocked look, “How could a god lie like this?!”

“Oh, but I can.”

My divinity had little to do with honesty. If necessary, I was willing to get beat up or even humiliated.

Chapter 304

Seoul (12)

“A god must not lie!” the mantis shouted.

How did it know about the gods? It was a monster until recently.

I asked.

“I heard what the Ruler said!”

I see. I got it.

“Why can’t gods lie?”

“Every moment of life after ascending to the throne is proof of one’s divinity.”

It was natural, huh? If one didn’t do that in the first place, they wouldn’t even gain divinity. Oh, was this an exception for a monster-turned-Ruler?

“You shouldn’t go against your words because every action and word has its own will. You shouldn’t say anything that goes against yourself, especially lies. It was said that divinity accumulates slowly, and if you made a mistake, the divinity could even collapse. It’s different from the days when there was no cost for this.”

When he narrated the story, I realised I knew it well.

It was a true story. What the mantis had said was a long explanation about a god’s faith in himself. It was common for a person to betray their values or conscience for petty gains.

It was typical of humans. Humans always cheated and put on masks. It wasn't a bad thing, though. If they acted within limits, it was all fine.

But it was not the same for gods. A slip of the tongue that humans could just let go of was fatal to a god.

If the act completely contradicted one's own divinity, it was even more fatal. For example, the God of Duels cannot engage in cowardice for no reason. It was simply unacceptable for him.

Such behavior was intolerable, and if he did so, some of the divinity he had built up so far would vanish.

Because of a god's characteristics, being able to become a god was considered a matter of great prestige.

A god's behavior and treatment were predictable.

If one goes beyond knowing divinity and gets hold of the concept of being a god, their knowledge will know no bounds.

I wondered which Ruler the mantis knew. I assumed it to be a young god who had just gained divinity. A new god made sure to defend one's divinity and make it increase.

The gods who obsessively tried to stick to the meaning of divinity were relatively low-level gods. They seemed to constrain their own behavior to how they interpreted divinity.

The higher gods did not—like the God of Hope.

During a conversation with me, the God of Hope said that he was hope. Even among the gods, there was a difference in their attitude toward divinity.

Perhaps that proved the difference in the cost.

(T/N: Cost referring to cost of losing divinity, might be less or more depending on their indifference.)

“By all means, a god shouldn’t tell lies! It’s true! You’ll get in trouble if you ignore it! You must keep your promise!”

“Yes, but not me.”

My divinity had nothing to do with honesty.

It didn’t matter if I changed my words and actions for my benefit. After all, as long as I had faith in whatever I did, it wouldn’t matter if I lied.

On the contrary, deceiving the enemy was beneficial in gaining the light of divinity, not a loss.

I tapped on the wall of the box. Like a goldfish in a fishbowl, the mantis fell in shock.

“For your information, making fun of others like this doesn’t matter to me.”

Instead, it was a win. I chuckled at the sight of the fallen mantis.

“Ahhhh! Too cruel!”

The mantis remained in its fallen position, shaking its legs, screaming in anger and frustration.

What do you mean, too cruel? I just had fun.

* * *

Yong-yong prepared a lot for the mantis.

He had briefly returned to his room after putting the mantis in the box. Then, he came down with a bunch of junk.

I think those were the items that Kim Min-hyuk had brought to where we lived, but Yong-yong must have remodeled them.

“This is a water bottle and a rice bowl. A rocking chair, bed, and desk.”

It looked like the furniture in our flat had been shrunk for this purpose. The box now looked like a miniature dollhouse.

Yong-yong created a habitable environment inside the box. Sadly, the box did not have a plumbing system.

“And here’s the bathroom.”

All the furniture was modern, except for the bathroom where you couldn’t even flush. He only had the sand to put in a small teacup.

Was it good to act like a cat and cover bad things up with sand?

“...How shameful,” the mantis sat down and muttered.

Yong-yong was surprised. He apologized and promised to make a proper toilet.

I had no choice but to say sarcastically, “What’s shameful? What’s shameful is guy who doesn’t even sh*t?”

This guy was not a human being. Although it looked like a human being, it was a monster whose physiological processes could be ignored.

It was also questionable whether there were any physiological processes occurring in him in the first place.

“Cheap! If you’re gonna be cheap, I can be cheap too!” the evil mantis spoke in vain.

I looked into the box for a moment and got up from my seat. “Now, shall we start?”

“Can’t we just stay a little longer?” Kim Min-hyuk stopped me when I was about to go.

We sent the visitors back, and I had heard enough information from the mantis.

The mantis in the box was a Ruler to some extent.

It was time to start again.

“Please...”

“Why?”

“Move a bit more slowly. Please give me some time to rest.”

When I saw Kim Min-hyuk’s haggard appearance, I wanted to ask if he had something to do, but I kept my mouth shut.

Why was he so tired in just a day? Was there so much to clean up?

“You’re going to catch another G-class in a day? We have to get permission from the authorities before we go. Then there’s raid procedures, evacuation orders...”

His explanation continued.

“It’s alright. You don’t have to do that.”

I didn’t need it.

Kim Min-hyuk replied with a sigh, “As a result, I’ll have more work to do. I’m not telling you not to go. I’m telling you to slow down. Hey, go eat lunch.”

Kim Min-hyuk tried to stop me, but I ignored him.

Why would I need lunch?

“I’ll eat lunch.” Seregia poked Kim Min-hyuk’s side with her finger.

I thought she had been in Grandma's hand in the form of a sword.
When had she reverted to a human?

"You're not coming?"

Seregia nodded. I could feel her willingness to go on strike if I tried to take her away. I decided to leave Seregia. If I needed Seregia, I could just summon her.

"Then, just give Seregia lunch. I'll be right back."

"You returning late is not a problem. I'd rather you take your time..."
Kim Min-hyuk said bitterly, tearing his hair out.

Oh, come to think of it, there were some things I wanted to ask Kim Min-hyuk before he left.

"What is it?"

"Please secure a gate nearby. I've got something to do with the remodeled gate."

"...Huh?"

Kim Min-hyuk looked at the ceiling with a desperate look on his face.

I'm sorry, but I have one more favor to ask.

"And I don't know exactly where, but there are some guys who sell my name on the Gangwon-do."

"...Ah, them?"

"You know?"

Kim Min-hyuk seemed to know who I was talking about, which was unexpected.

"There are some sellers in the countryside who sell Awakened names.

Of course, I've heard of those who sell your name."

"Please call them here, too."

"By when?"

"As soon as possible."

Kim Min-hyuk had mixed expressions on his face, but he nodded.

On the surface, he was showing that he didn't want to, but I knew he would do as I asked.

"Ah, we should also announce the capture of the Pyongyang G-class. It bothers me when the tough guys try to take the praise first."

Revenge was easy, but it was annoying to change people's perceptions.

"I've already taken care of that. There was a piece of breaking news earlier. It'll come out when you turn on the news, do you want to check it out?"

"No," I answered Kim Min-hyuk and looked at my party.

Grandma and Old Man were in the subspace. I wouldn't have to take the two.

Of course, Yong-yong would follow me.

"Hochi."

"Yeah?"

"Come with us."

Hochi turned his head for a moment and then turned back to the novel he held in his hand.

For some reason, the actions of Seregia, who was sitting at the table waiting for lunch, and Hochi, who was silently protesting, seemed to overlap.

Was it just me, or were the two getting closer?

“Hey, you should go.”

“Why?”

“You know dungeons well.”

Unlike the mantis in the box, the G-class that I was going to visit was a proper one, which meant that there was a high probability that it was in a dungeon, making use of the Earth’s source.

And Hochi knew this type of dungeon well.

He practically cleared the 89th floor himself, where dungeons were the central theme.

Although Yong-yong helped, he only liked to decorate the dungeon and collect subordinates. He had little interest in managing the dungeon.

“If that’s the case, I’ll go. Ha.”

Hochi flipped his novel over and stood up with a haughty smile.

He seemed inwardly pleased.

I watched the scene and thought perhaps there was a good reason why Hochi was always unwilling to do anything.

I had always demanded that he should become stronger faster. I’d been driving him up the wall.

“Why are you so slow?”

Even if Hochi showed a growth rate above mine at that time, I would not have been satisfied and would have wanted him to do even better.

I was also on the edge of a cliff.

But the memories of my immoral acts would remain with Hochi.

That's why I wondered if Hochi wasn't excited about learning something new.

Come to think of it, Hochi didn't know what he was good at compared to Yong-yong or me. [1]

Of course, there must be something that Hochi was good at. Maybe he was good at more things than me.

But I didn't know what it was, and I hadn't even thought to look into it.

"What? What's wrong?"

"Nothing."

As expected, parenting was difficult. I decided to think about this problem later. It had randomly come to my mind, but it was not something to be taken lightly.

"Can't you let me go?!" the mantis in the box raised its hand and asked.

"No."

"Please!"

You can't ask me to do that.

I grabbed the box and shook it up and down.

"Urghhhh."

Inside, the mantis flew, hitting the walls, ceiling, and floor. While I was teasing it, Yong-yong grabbed onto the box.

Then he looked at me with a grim look on his face. “You can’t just bully it because it’s weak.”

Uh...

That was what I had said to Yong-yong earlier, allowing him to raise the mantis. I had nothing left to say, so I apologized to Yong-yong.

I apologized to the mantis, too.

Note/s

[1]: Yong-Yong’s specialty being the cause and effect thing back at the tournament (still quite not sure whether he manipulated cause and effect or time), not sure what Hojae’s is maybe the whole having faith in yourself thing?

Chapter 305

Antarctica (1)

It was a cool place. Antarctica, where white floors stretched till the horizon, was refreshing to look at.

The bright blue sky above was beautiful. Compared to Seoul, the view here was pretty good. The clean air was also a plus. The temperature was low, so I regretted not bringing Grandma.

She would have liked it if she came. I debated whether I should summon her here.

“It’s around here. Hyung, I could feel its power from here. It was so strong I didn’t approach,” Lee Joon-suk said.

Kim Min-hyuk sent Lee Joon-suk with me, saying he didn’t need him.

Honestly, Lee Joon-suk was just a burden, but I brought him here because he said he had been to Antarctica a few times.

The G-classes lived in desolate and remote places.

Among them, the most famous habitat of the G-class was none other than Antarctica.

Kim Min-hyuk recommended this place because there was no need to issue an evacuation order since there weren’t any people.

Perhaps, because Lee Joon-suk said it was nearby, monsters flocked around us. Of course, the G-class wasn’t among them.

To be more exact, they were mobs.

“It’s a good idea to spread monsters like that around the dungeon. The disadvantage is that the dungeon's location will be exposed, but that doesn't matter if it was already known anyways. First of all, they'll act as a guard against intruders, then every time those monsters die you are notified at the center of the dungeon, so you can prepare to fight against the intruder in advance," Hochi remarked.

I hadn't even asked. This guy sure was excited.

Yong-yong, who was next to him, praised Hochi, saying, "Uncle, that's great!"

My son was so kind. Hochi grinned as if he was pleased with the praise. He wanted to smile coolly, but the corners of his mouth twitched excitedly.

Hochi continued to explain, "It set up a barrier. It's expensive, but it's a good bargain."

Hochi's behaviour was funny, but I decided not to laugh and earnestly listen.

It wasn't that I needed to know information, but I didn't want to cut off Hochi, who was passionately explaining it.

"It's not a barrier that prevents us from realising that the dungeon is here, but one that instills fear and anxiety in us, so that we won't come any closer."

Upon hearing Hochi's words, Lee Joon-suk spoke up, "So what you're saying is that we aren't just dealing with the monster, but also with the dungeon?"

Hochi nodded in confirmation. I was surprised that Lee Joon-suk knew about the dungeon. So, I asked him.

"I've been in dungeons in the Hard level a few times. It was a dungeon-target stage, but I thought it was just a game configuration type stage, so I just let it go..."

Interesting.

In Hard difficulty, there was a stage targeting dungeons. It had a simple, clear goal of overthrowing and attacking.

However, in Hell difficulty, there was a stage where we had to run the dungeon ourselves. Of course, it may mean that I should experience the opposite side to overthrow it easily.

Through running the dungeon, the Hell Difficulty challenger would learn how to get through the dungeon and why the Rulers wanted it.

Indeed, there was a wide gap between Hell and other difficulty levels. They provided a different direction for the challenger to grow.

Anyway, that wasn't a matter to be concerned about, right now.

Lee Joon-suk had also cleared the stage where the Dungeon appeared, so it seems that there would be no more halting.

I'm glad I brought him here.

"Then, shall we go in?"

"Yes?"

Ignoring Lee Jun-seok's question, I waved my hand in the air to break the spatial barrier.

The empty barrier distorted like broken glass, and soon, the hidden space appeared. The entrance to the dungeon began to appear.

"What the hell is this..." Lee Joon-suk murmured.

What do you mean? It's a barrier.

While watching Lee Jun-seok's confused appearance, one question came to mind.

Why does he know so little?

“Why didn’t you become an apostle?”

If he became an apostle, he could have known something.

“You told me not to become one.”

What a simple man.

There may be other reasons, but right now, this was the most satisfying answer.

“Good job.”

While Lee Joon-suk answered my question, the space distortion finished. The entrance to the dungeon was completely exposed.

“Well, that was not a very good choice.”

“Why?” I asked Hochi.

“This type of entrance is not recommended. It’s less durable and won’t scare the intruder. But that doesn’t mean that it would make the intruder careless either.”

The entrance to the dungeon was reminiscent of an ancient Greek temple.

It seemed to be marble, and the polished walls and intricate decorations showed its careful construction.

However, it was not an entrance that would draw ridicule or carelessness from its opponent.

The overly beautiful appearance would make intruders nervous.

“It made a palace.”

The dungeon that Hochi knew had a constant stream of enemies, but there were no intruders in this Antarctic dungeon.

Sometimes a guy like Lee Joon-suk would appear, wandering around the valley, beating back a nearby monster. But that was it.

So it didn't care much about the intruders.

"Hmm."

I didn't like it. I couldn't believe I was stuck with finding Rulers, gates, and monsters around the world, causing confusion and preparing to suck up the energy of my home planet.

My stomach felt upset for no reason.

"Let's go in."

"Can you leave me here?!" asked the mantis in the box around Yong-yong's neck.

"No."

"I'll stay at the house from earlier! I won't run away and will stay still!"

"No."

The mantis sat down, eyes filled with tears.

Yong-yong saw that and apologized to it. "Don't worry. If anything happens, I'll protect you."

I was pleased to see Yong-yong speaking kindly, but on the other hand, I was also anxious.

I was worried because my son was too kind.

* * *

After entering the dungeon, Hochi's explanations got worse.

It was roughly like this.

“That light is a little more expensive than other lights, but it’s possible to switch it on and off from the dungeon center. Most importantly, intruders can’t pull it out and use it as a substitute for a torch.”

“...Yes.”

And when a trap popped out:

“It’s an explosive trap. Once it explodes, it’ll stop working to reassure the opponent. And then it starts working again when someone else approaches it. Usually, it’s used in case a guide disassembles all the traps. The person standing behind the guide is relatively careless.”

When a monster popped out:

“It’s a giant clipper, and it’s best as a gatekeeper in narrow areas. It’s not good to keep it with other monsters in the room. It has its own value.”

Of course, those explanations by Hochi were meaningless.

Whatever lights were on, whatever traps there were, whatever monsters stormed in, it didn’t matter to us.

“By the way, the monsters are brave.”

If it were an ordinary monster, it would have turned around and run away as soon as it saw us.

But the monsters here were all running towards us, asking for death.

“Monster management is also an important part of Dungeon management. But I think this dungeon uses items that keep monsters’ morale and aggression high. The price is so high that it’s too much of a loss compared to boosting monsters yourself, but they’ll have no choice but to use it when such a strong enemy attempts to raid.”

“...Yes, I can see that”.

I answered in that way.

Hochi didn't even react much.

He was so excited that he didn't seem to care about my answer. Yong-yong also no longer praised Hochi's explanations.

As I walked along, listening to boring facts, I felt a little sleepy. I sped up my pace.

It wasn't to hear a little less of Hochi's explanation.

As I walked ahead, a door appeared.

“Dungeons usually consist of two forms of passages and rooms. The room beyond these doors is usually a trap room, a battle room, a reward room, etc. The compensation room is a little unusual, but the intruders...”

Bang!

I opened the door roughly.

It wasn't because I wanted Hochi to shut up.

There was a monster waiting for us in the room. It was a monster with a rather unusual appearance. It was a wolfdog with a human body.

“Oh. This monster is intelligent. It knows how to talk and is usually hired to be incharge of dungeons.”

“Welcome.” As Hochi talked, the wolfdog greeted us.”The Lord is waiting for you. I'll show you around. This way,” the wolfdog muttered, beginning to take the lead.

After looking at its back for a while, I decided to just follow it. There seemed to be no need to decline just to avoid trouble.

“Who’s the Lord?”

“Dungeon Lord. I’m talking about the Dungeon’s operator.”

Hochi solved my doubt.

Lord.

Kirikiri said that the monsters born from the source, after gaining sanity, are called Completers or Rulers.

That seemed to be the origin of this word.

I wondered if the Ruler was waiting for us at the end of the road that the wolfdog was guiding us through.

It guided us along the hidden paths of the dungeon. The structure was quite complicated.

Hochi continued to explain the composition, but I didn’t want to store any more meaningless information in my head.

I walked, blankly repeating, “Yes, yes, I see, good.”

Soon after, our party arrived at the most splendid entrance. The wolfdog opened the door and stepped aside.

“Welcome. It’s nice to meet you.” A man greeted us, just like the wolfdog had a few moments ago.

It wasn’t a Ruler.

How very disappointing.

“I knew you’d come at any time, but to think you’d arrive so soon! I didn’t even think about it. So, I was a little late in greeting you because of the late preparation. Nice to meet you, my name is Thomas Feltchuk. You’re all...”

“You’re not an Awakened,” I said, cutting off the man’s introduction.

“Yes, that’s right. I wasn’t invited to the Tutorial.”

“But you’re good at Korean.”

“That’s because you don’t only have to empower monsters and traps from the points you get from the dungeon extractor. You can also strengthen yourself. I bought language skills.”

No wonder.

He was not an Awakened, but I felt that he was too strong for a human.

“I don’t know what the reinforcements are, but it seems to have done a lot for you.”

I could tell.

A good Awakened would find it hard to touch the fingertips of Tomato... Timothy or whatever his name was.

It’ll be worth a try if he matched Lee Joon-suk, who was standing next to me.

Thomas smiled awkwardly and politely pointed to the table, perhaps because I didn’t say anything else.

The table was served with a scrumptious feast. It was not meant for a few people to eat, but for dozens of people, like a buffet.

“You came from far away, did you eat?”

I looked around the room: tableware, furniture, and its interior.

According to Hochi, all of this was purchased from the energy extracted from the source extractor.

Kirikiri had explained that Dungeon's agent sends some of the source energy extracted to the Dungeon's real owner, the Ruler, and manages the Dungeon with the remaining energy.

Now that I see it, the amount of energy it had left seemed to be more than I thought.

I finished thinking and approached Thomas.

Thomas had a confused look on his face, but he didn't back away.

A relaxed smile lingered on his lips.

I didn't like it. I brought up my hand.

Thomas raised his, thinking I wanted to shake hands, but my hand ignored his and kept going up.

I grabbed Thomas by the back of his head and smashed his head on the table.

Bang!

Whatever it was made of, the table cracked and made a sound close to that of wood breaking.

As the table split, the food and alcohol that was on top of it fell down to the floor. Without letting go of Thomas, I stepped back a few metres.

Fortunately, Thomas did not die. My strength control was becoming more adept.

At this rate, when the seven people whom I had sent to void, returned a month later, I could grind them for a longer time.

I lifted Thomas up to my eye level.

"Hey."

“Phoo-hek.”

Rather than answering, Thomas spat out blood and broken teeth.

He looked as if he hadn't come to his senses yet.

“Hey, can't you hear me? Are your eardrums busted?”

“Suddenly, suddenly... Why...”

I think I was a little too rough.

It was a relief he was alive.

“Who allowed you to do business here?” [1]

“...What?”

Note/s:

[1]: who let him setup the extractor and use the energy for his own means

Chapter 306

Antarctica (2)

“Hochi, go check the extractor. Let’s see what he has done.”

At that moment, a man opened the second side door to the right and went into the room precisely at the center of the dungeon, near the dungeon’s extractor.

Thomas could neither stop nor hold back the man trying to reach the center, which never allowed outsiders inside.

The extractor was the dungeon’s everything.

It was not only responsible for the play log, but the dungeon’s management and status of monsters spread around the globe.

Giving up the extractor was tantamount to giving up the whole dungeon.

“Why are you crying? Do you think it’s unfair?”

It was unfair and unjust. Thomas couldn’t accept the current situation.

Thomas Feltchuk was a German-born scientist.

He had a Ph.D. in astronomy and was a scientist who’d devoted himself to pseudoscience.

Most of the followers of pseudoscience pretended to be scientific and use logical theories. Still, it was quite unusual considering that they had never received professional training in the field.

Thomas Feltchuk was somewhat of a prodigy in the field. It could be called a mere boast.

His theories were not that absurd, and even a renowned astronomy doctor supported his idea.

It was what raised the validity of pseudoscience. But on the other hand, it also pointed out loopholes in pseudoscience's flawed logic.

It wasn't a smooth religious life.

When Thomas first started with pseudoscience, and his name appeared in the magazines, academic seniors who had never seen him before criticized him.

What surprised Thomas, though, was that his colleagues, who once sided with him, did the same.

It felt wrong when his colleagues, who usually treated him like he was invisible, gave interviews and voiced their condemnation of Thomas's pseudoscience.

Of course, that was just Thomas's personal views. Soon, Thomas's career was like rotten food thrown out by the roadside.

Somehow, people in the Academy sent texts such as "I'm disappointed" after obtaining his number.

But Thomas was happy every day.

When he went to a meeting, he liked seeing people look at him with respect. He liked to make speeches as if he were in a high position.

It felt good to be treated like that—to be noticed. People listened to his every word as if they were God's words, acting thrilled and anxious.

The criticism from the Academy and his colleagues was also bearable.

At first, it hurt his mentality, but he got used to it over time.

Thomas even enjoyed the blame soon.

Every time he was criticized, Thomas felt like a villain from a famous comic book. He was the centre of attention and interest.

When he first accepted the pseudoscience group's proposal to pay off his debts, he had a lot of regrets, but when he looked back, it was the right decision.

One day, when he was spending his time like that, a cataclysm occurred. Monsters appeared from all over and began to run wild.

Naturally, everything stopped. There was no longer anyone to criticise Thomas.

They were all about to die, so they couldn't afford to be interested in criticism.

In a world where existing values collapsed, Thomas was just an older man without acquaintances or friends.

He blamed the world for changing, and the people who left.

At that time, he heard God's voice in his ear. Frankly speaking, he was surprised.

He had committed himself to pseudoscience, but he didn't believe God existed beyond the universe and watched over him.

God was pleased with Thomas, who confessed his faults, begged for forgiveness, and suggested Thomas become a prophet of God—like Noah, who saved people and animals that believed in him from a great flood and punished humans stained with sins.

Thomas could not resist the proposal to become the prophet of God and lead the few who would remain on Earth.

It would have been the same for him, even if it hadn't been God's suggestion. So he became the owner of the dungeon in Antarctica.

Operating the dungeon was like a game.

Thomas controlled a dungeon with a hologram that emerged at its center and messed around with it here and there. It made him feel like he was playing a game.

Thanks to that, Thomas was able to shake off his guilt quickly.

Rather than agonizing over how many people would be hurt and killed by his own choices, he pondered how effectively he could harm the city.

The more damage he did, the more the people died, the more joyful Thomas became.

There were Awakened people who had cleared the Tutorial, but they were not a threat to Thomas. They could only prevent small monsters.

Over time, the amount of energy collected at the dungeon core gradually increased.

After giving all the energy needed to give to God and to run the dungeon, excess energy remained. From then on, Thomas began to invest energy in himself.

His aging body quickly became young and healthy. His recovered youth made him feel great joy just by taking a walk in the dungeon.

As Thomas became healthier, his greed grew. A few years later, he could break glaciers with a few swings of his fists and could fly in the sky.

Among the numerous monsters in Dungeon, none were stronger than Thomas himself.

Thomas set up portals and began to wander from place to place in the Antarctic dungeon. He would be waiting at the site where the attack was scheduled, just to watch the raid and the soldiers and Awakened, who fled in confusion over a low-level monster's appearance.

He began to feel omnipotent after seeing their fierce struggles. He knew the secret behind the world that no one knew. He controlled the monsters wrecking the world.

Even the Awakened couldn't be compared.

Thomas was like a god. It wasn't precisely wrong, since he was God's agent.

He felt confident when he confirmed the Awakened identity that had wiped out a group of monsters near the Dungeon.

He was well aware of who they were. Lee Ho-jae and his party were the Awakened of Korea's Hell Difficulty.

Thomas thought about bringing them in.

It was also fun to look down on humans with overwhelming superiority, but the excessive gap in their strengths made him bored.

He wished that he had a suitable subordinate and companion. He wanted someone to talk about topics he couldn't share with others.

So he prepared dinner and faced the group of Awakened.

And as if all of his past was a lie, Thomas, who'd been flying in the sky, fell to the ground.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

"About 42 billion points."

"That's all?"

I didn't know how many points were usually used in the dungeon, so I couldn't tell if this was good.

"The target for the 89th-floor stage was 100 million points. If we collected all the planet's source on the 89th floor, it'd be about 100 billion points.”

The total points from sources of the planet was about 100 billion? Forty-two billion was already missing from here.

“You’ve sucked up a lot. Hey, hey.”

I slapped him on the cheek and poked his eyes to see if he had regained consciousness. I was getting used to controlling my power.

“Hey, how could you not run away, huh?”

It was incredible. I thought this guy would disappear as soon as we got into the dungeon. I wondered if he was keeping himself hidden until the end, but he even guided us.

It wasn’t a trap.

“Did you think I’d be equally happy if the guy who was controlling the monsters on Earth told me he was happy to see me now? I don’t understand.”

Thomas opened his eyes but couldn’t answer me. He didn’t even seem to understand me.

Had my plan of strength controlling failed?

I looked at Hochi. “What do you think? Can you make do?”

“Of course, though, there is some security.”

“And?”

“I’ve had it all cracked,” Hochi said with a grin. He was not only motivated but also competent, perhaps because it was his favorite field.

It was strange.

“Then we won’t need this one.”

After pulling off Thomas’s neck from his body, I got up from my seat.

Over the past decade, he’d been such a brute. I couldn’t believe he’d hurt tens of millions, perhaps even hundreds of millions of people.

“There are a few more dungeons like this?”

“Yep. Leaving aside Pyongyang and Antarctica,” Lee Joon-suk told me.

Maybe because it was hard to understand the situation, Lee Joon-suk had been struggling for a while and had gone around the dungeon with Hochi to adjust.

He hadn’t experienced it directly in Hard difficulty, but he quickly adapted because he had been through something similar.

“With four more dungeons like this, the Earth’s source would be almost exhausted.”

“I don’t know. This dungeon could have been exceptionally mined.”

Still, there wouldn’t be much left. I understood why the gods were reluctant to extract the source of planets. The consumption rate was too fast.

The dungeon had mined half of the planet’s source for just over a decade.

I didn’t know exactly how much power the source of that would be, but Kirikiri had replied that it was incomparable to the power drawn through faith for a long time. In just a decade, they were trying to kill the source that had produced faith stably for thousands of years, no, tens of thousands of years.

From the gods’ perspective, I wondered if the source’s extraction would be seen as illegal fishing that would destroy the ecosystem itself by wiping out even a small fry with a thick net.

They couldn't do this crazy act in their territory, so naturally, they would hide in other people's territory and do it like a Chinese fishing boat.

I'd heard that planets with extracted sources would decline rapidly, and that new civilizations would not be born easily.

But what happened to a half-extracted planet?

I didn't know. I asked Hochi, but he was clueless as well. I could once again feel that there was still a lot of information I didn't know.

"Stop the extractor first. Let's think about it later."

"Okay." Hochi turned back to the room with the extractor.

Hochi, who had been walking one step at a time, suddenly halted.

"Stop."

I heard a voice from behind me that made Hochi stop. And behind me was Thomas's body, who was decapitated.

A headless Thomas stood up from his seat.

I could recognize it with a glance. He was a Ruler and, at the same time, a god.

He was a Ruler who couldn't even compare to the Mantis inside Yong-yong's box.

We'd finally met. Before dealing with the Ruler, I looked at my party. Hochi was shaking his feet as if he was confused by the fact that he'd stopped for a while.

Lee Joon-suk... was kneeling down and vomiting blood.

Why was he so weak? Yong-yong ran towards Lee Joon-suk in surprise. He could treat Lee Joon-suk on his own.

Turning away from my party, I looked at the Ruler, who was covering Thomas' body.

“Who's trying to shut down my dungeon?”

When Thomas died, I said I'd stop the extractor, and at that time, the Ruler popped out. Or was the Ruler just taking time to get here?

I was curious and had a lot of questions. So, I talked with a bright smile just like Thomas, whose head had been separated from his neck.

“Now that the boss is finally here, it's time to talk.”

Chapter 307

Antarctica (3)

“The boss is finally here.”

A man came out to talk about the damage dealt.

The Ruler looked dull, perhaps because he was in Thomas’ decapitated body. But his mobility and momentum proved that the Ruler’s power didn’t come from the skeleton.

“Eck-hek-hek.”

Thanks to him, Lee Joon-suk was constantly coughing behind me.

Lee Jun-seok, who was spitting blood, seemed to have calmed down a bit with Yong-Yong’s help. Now, he choked out dry coughs instead of blood.

I was annoyed.

When the Ruler saw Lee Joon-suk fall, he clicked his tongue and muttered, “That little friend of yours is too weak.”

I felt the same. Yong-yong took action after taking care of Lee Joon-suk for a while, placing him in the box where the mantis was trapped.

Since Yong-yong designed it himself, it would be safe. However, trapping Lee Joon-suk in a narrow space with the mantis would be hazardous.

The mantis had fallen to pet status in just one day, but it was still a human-eating monster.

Lee Joon-suk must be a coveted prey, so it wouldn’t be good to leave him there for a long time no matter how transparent the box was.

Yong-yong looked down at the box as if he could read my concerns. “You shouldn’t fight because your house suddenly got cramped. I’ll get him out of there in a second.”

The mantis did not attack Lee Joon-suk. It was too afraid to do that. Rather, the mantis held onto Lee Joon-suk and tried to hide behind him.

It was still in plain view, though.

The Ruler looked at the box and then at Yong-yong and questioned, “That kid. Is he a dragon? I think I’m pretty close.”

“That’s right. Pretty, isn’t he?”

I didn’t receive any objections. The Ruler looked at me for a moment, then turned to Yong-yong again.

To be exact, he looked at the box hung around Yong-yong’s neck—at the wriggling mantis in the box.

“I wish I had eaten that idiot in silence. I don’t know why it ran away, but it got what it deserved,” the Ruler said with a grin.

It seemed that he was the one who had known the mantis before. This was good news. Later, I could compare the information we heard from the mantis with that of this guy.

I thought we’d go into battle as soon as the Ruler showed up, but he was unexpectedly calm. Was he not interested in the dungeon?

Let’s take it like that for now.

“Why didn’t you try to find it again? It was easy to find.”

“It’s easy to find, but there’s no way for me to get out of the dungeon. If I went out of the dungeon, I would have to give up because the Hundred Gods' Temple would have an excuse to come after me."

I knew it. But inside the dungeon, it could show up like this, like the Pantheon's Gods who came to the 61st floor.

It was interesting. I needed to find out about the Temples' rules soon. Without knowing the details, I could only speculate on what was allowed for them.

"I was thinking of raising this guy and catching the mantis later," the Ruler said, pointing to Thomas' body.

He intended to grow Thomas and bring the mantis to the dungeon.

"I'm afraid he's dead."

"Why didn't you save him then?"

"No point." The Ruler shook his head.

"I chose this one because he was simple. He had no thoughts and was primitive. Normal amounts of hedonism and selfishness. He was easy to use, but I can't use him anymore."

"Why?"

"Because he felt afraid."

"Fear is quite a common emotion."

It was so primitive that it was hard to find anything to compare.

"That's the fear that exists behind. But the fear in front is a little different."

I didn't quite understand, and I wasn't interested. I wanted to say something, but nothing came to mind.

It wasn't good if I didn't say anything. When collecting information by eliciting the words of the other party, it acted as a significant weakness.

“Don’t you know?”

“Huh?”

“If you’ve been through a world created by the gods, shouldn’t you know the difference between being chased by fear and being blocked by fear?”

I wasn’t interested. I was curious about something else.

“You must know about me.”

“Of course. I heard a new god had appeared in the Tutorial. I expected to meet you someday because this is your home planet. And...”

“And?”

“The disgrace of the Hundred Gods’ Temple is the most talked-about thing in recent years, so it can’t be unknown.”

That was why he was so calm. If he knew what had happened between the gods and me on the 61st floor, he might have expected me to come to the Dungeon and make a big fuss.

“Did you expect me to come?”

What is this Ruler thinking?

Before I came, this dungeon was utterly defenseless against me. Was he just going to throw away the dungeon because he’d already extracted enough energy? Maybe he wanted a proper compromise?

It appeared that the Ruler was trying to talk calmly.

“Yes, shall we talk about it? Now that we’re sharing the same zone, we’ll have to clean up each other’s territory,” the Ruler said and waved his hands toward the floor.

The food lying on the floor and the smashed table vanished, and instead, a small table and two chairs appeared.

Summoning. The Ruler brought furniture prepared in another dimension.

The ability seemed great because of the shift between dimensions, but it was akin to using a space attributed to individuals, similar to an inventory.

The Ruler said while sitting in a chair, “God of Horror.”

I had no choice but to sit in the chair and ask back, “What?”

“Horror, that’s my title.”

The Ruler even gave his name. At this point, I was utterly confused.

Why do these guys believe and approach me in a friendly manner?

“Your name?”

“Why would I let you know that?” I questioned him.

The Ruler smiled despite my sudden change of attitude, and replied, “You’re also a newborn. There’s a lot you don’t know yet.”

I didn’t think it was necessary. Either way, he began to explain.

“Gods are not meant to be hidden. Just knowing and recognizing you is huge. What’s more, if your opponent is a god, that’s even better. Some of the new gods even go to the gods they know to promote their identities.”

Oh, come on.

He was explaining obvious stuff as if it were the truth of life. He spoke like an old man.

I never asked you anything, did I?

He seemed to think his opponents were ignorant: an attitude of condescension and self-flattery. It wasn't an attitude I liked.

In any case, the Ruler highlighted himself as a senior god and hinted that he could give useful advice.

He thought we were going to compromise through talking.

"Now, tell me your name."

I'm sorry, but I don't mean to give you my name.

I wasn't interested in the sad benefits of informing him. Above all, I didn't intend to reveal my identity and let him analyze me.

Lastly, "It'd be good if I'm the only one who knows my name."

The Ruler laughed aloud. "You're young, after all. Whatever. Sooner or later, even if you don't want to, you'll find me and let me know."

He's getting on my nerves.

"Let's talk, then. First of all, it's about each other's territory. I need to know what you're doing. If you're not interested in this planet, I can introduce you to another."

"No, there's something we need to talk about before that."

"What should we talk about first?"

Why did this guy start without the most important thing?

"Put out everything you've eaten from Earth so far."

Of course, I didn't intend to return it. It was better to start from here.

"...what?" The Ruler had a ridiculous look on his face. "For what reason? You stupid little God, you still seem to be bound by the ideas of a mortal. You don't have ownership because it's your home planet. There is only one factor in the world of gods that determines everything."

"It's power."

I didn't want to listen to him, who only stated the obvious. I let a shadow rise from under his feet and tied him to it.

"It's a spectacle! It's a spectacle! No matter how young of a god you are, why be this ignorant and reckless?!"

Even after being completely enveloped by the shadow, the Ruler continued to shout.

It was a fresh reaction.

"This corpse is just a body I'm temporarily using. The use of an incarnated body is the basic means a god uses to govern many dimensions. Even if you kill this body, I won't be affected. It's just one useless hand and foot missing."

The incarnated body was no different from the gods using apostles.

However, unlike clones, an incarnated body was also a part of the god. It was safe to say it was like an alter ego.

The Hundred Gods' Temple and the Pantheon gods, who were unable to enter the realm of other gods, chose to increase their sphere of action using apostles.

The Ruler was misunderstanding two things. I was not ignorant of incarnations, and I was confident.

Few people had more knowledge of incarnations and cloning than I did. I was even on par with the few gods associated with it.

“You will regret it! How dare you be so rude?! To create a new... on...”

His words cut off for obvious reasons. Little by little, his shadow was devouring his body.

“Let me ask one question to our knowledgeable senior god.”

The perfectionist had a ‘dark’ face. I wasn’t talking about his skin color. The skin had been dull from the start since it was a corpse.

But his loss of focus and trembling lips, apart from the skin color, made the expression ‘dark’.

The mantis said he remembered when the source ate him and made him a monster.

If the Ruler was also the same, he must be feeling it: the same feeling as when the source’s power consumed him.

“If the incarnation in front of me is eaten, will your body be safe?”

An apostle, or incarnation, is part of a god and yet separate at the same time.

If they wanted to say the incarnations weren’t them, they could cut off the link, but on the contrary, they could also accidentally link themselves to the incarnation just by mentioning it.

If the connection between the incarnation and the body remained, it was a piece of cake to take advantage of the link.

In my opinion, showing their incarnation to others was tantamount to establishing one’s weakness.

The god of horror had talked about limbs, but I’d rather take out the heart and let it wander separately.

The shadow, once tied to the incarnation, began to be gradually pushed out. I think he'd finally made up his mind.

Instead of being held in vain by the incarnated body, the God of Horror chose to use his main body.

“Yong-Yong.”

As soon as I called Yong-yong, I sensed him taking the others across the space.

The God of Horror immediately took on his form. As he roared, the world fell apart.

The dungeon instantly disappeared. We were no longer in the dungeon, and the Antarctic was melting.

The place where I stood would sooner or later melt completely and sink under the sea. The Old Man would enjoy watching this scenery, but Grandma probably wouldn't.

In the aftermath of the explosion, snow flew around and blocked the view. The thick steam created by melted snow and ice also played a part.

Standing in the Antarctic's glacial zone, the image of the great God of Horror loomed over the white fog.

At last, a Ruler with a god's title had appeared on Earth.

[You stupid thing! You will have to pay for your audacity!]

From up there, I could sense a significant loss of power. The battle of divine beings was relatively primitive.

There was no such thing as an abstract and ideological struggle that I'd imagined as a human being.

The gods, unable to interfere with each other's existence, ironically used old and basic combat methods.

The most definitive answer, and one I favor quite a lot, was to crush and kill the opponent with overwhelming strength.

“Zit pop.”

Chapter 308

Antarctica (4)

I was excited. I'd prepared for a battle against a god for a long time. You could even say that I yearned for it.

To achieve my goal, I had to fight against the gods. Even if I could peacefully persuade the Temple's gods, I still needed the power to do so.

The battle between the gods was, after all, a physical battle.

And in my opinion, nothing I had compared to Zit pop in terms of pure physical force...

It was a technique I'd developed by chance while training on the 30th floor.

Since then, I'd been using it whenever I needed it. It was a handy and useful technique, which never lacked power.

But it had very apparent drawbacks. Zit Pop was an explosion.

It was very suitable for sweeping away massive numbers of enemies, but it was inappropriate to use against a single opponent. The power was not concentrated on a single point, and the explosion's radius was too broad.

The light and heat that burst forward burned not only the enemy but everything around as well.

I couldn't use it unless I intended to blow up a planet. To use it effectively, I needed to reduce the range of the explosion. But it wasn't easy.

The most obvious solution was to limit the range and set up a barrier to prevent the explosion from leaking out; however, if the explosion could not escape the barrier then it is highly likely that it would not break the enemy's defenses either.

The only solution I came up with after much consideration was to reduce the Zit Pop's affected area.

Instead of using it as a bomb, I used it as a bullet with overwhelming heat.

I distorted the space surrounding the firing trajectory to prevent heat from escaping, minimising the surrounding area's damage.

Of course, that wasn't all.

Since then, I focused on increasing the launching speed by increasing the momentum and further boosting the energy required for Zit Pop itself.

There were numerous trials and errors, but I was able to produce satisfactory results. So, I was pretty sure I'd achieve victory by firing a series of Zit Pops at the Ruler.

"Zit Pop! Zit Pop! Zit Pop! Zit Pop!" [1]

It became a technique that no longer banged or exploded, but its name was still Zit Pop.

(T/N: This line is with reference to the original name, Sibam Kwang {Kwang = Bang}, basically, a play of words, since it was used for explosion. For more info, you can visit the site namu.wiki/w/시밤광 And no, I am not changing the name even though I really want to.)

The solidified line collided with the Ruler's attack, which was approaching me.

Bang!

Oh, it exploded. Zit Pop penetrated the attack and went further, even beyond the body of the Ruler.

Part of the Ruler's body fell off and crashed to the ground, making a sound of water rushing outwards.

[Can't be... This can't be...]

The improved Zit Pop had a small area of damage, but each time it was used, it caused fatal damage to the Ruler.

As a result, the Ruler, who was in the form of a giant, was in a mess. He began panting less than a minute after the battle had begun.

[Now that it's come to this... This planet.....]

The Ruler prepared for the final attack by reciting lines that often came up in comics for little kids, where someone struggled to protect the Earth from the opponent who wanted to blow up the Earth.

It was a laughable attempt.

“Seregia.”

I summoned Seregia, and she appeared in the sky.

Seregia, in the form of a giant sword, appeared above the Ruler's head and fell.

Bang!

She drilled through the Ruler's defense, pierced his body, and hit the ground. The impact caused the water to gush out. The water that touched my body was lukewarm. No, it seemed a bit hot—hot enough to burn an average person.

The glacial zone, due to Seregia's fall, had completely shattered. There was no point in trying anything more.

The glacial zone had melted, and the seawater was bubbling, maybe because the water was boiling.

If an environmental group concerned about global warming saw it, they would be enraged.

In the distance, a tsunami was forming, starting to roll outwards. The damage to neighboring countries was likely to be enormous.

First of all, I used my powers to prevent the aftermath. I came close to the Ruler, who had been pierced by Seregia.

The Ruler attempted to tell me something, but when his mouth moved, no words came out.

It was natural. Seregia's blade was, in itself, her presence and her will.

[Save me.]

He couldn't say anything, so he conveyed his words through his will. It would have been a significant blow to say such a thing with his will, but he seemed quite desperate.

[I was stupid. I will respect your decision. I will leave Earth,] he blurted. His words held a frantic urgency.

He was very obsessed with life.

[If you spare my life, I will pay for it. I promise on my name. Please don't kill me.]

I grinned at the remark. He was saying strange things.

"Why would I kill you?"

[Thank you, thank you very much. I will repay you.]

The Ruler continually expressed his gratitude. Of course, he would continue to live on. He would continue to live on because he'd become a part of me.

“Get up.”

The Ruler’s shadow reflected in the water began to creep up his body.

[What... are you doing? What is this? Wait! Wait! Give me a chance! Please!]

The Ruler sank under the shadow as if he were in a swamp. He attempted to get out, but Seregia had already overpowered him, and thus, the shadow quickly seized the limbs of the Ruler. [2]

[Please, please! Please!]

It was useless to pray. In less than a few seconds, his vast body had disappeared entirely.

The cries of the Ruler now rang within me.

[Please!]

It’d take some time to digest this. I wasn’t sure how long it would take since it was my first time absorbing this kind of entity.

Either way, I felt proud. Not only did I feel full, but I also felt a rare sense of victory.

Though I had chased the gods from the 61st floor and captured the apostles, it had been too bland.

Even though the Ruler was not as strong as I expected, I could quench my thirst after waiting a long time.

“Are you that happy?” Seregia, who returned to her human form, asked. Somehow, her gaze was one as if she were looking at a pervert.

I think there’s a misunderstanding.

I didn’t make any more excuses. It was time to clean up now that we had dealt with the Ruler.

First of all, I decided to pass on some responsibilities to Seregia.

“Seregia.”

“Yes.”

“How could you fall like that? You destroyed Antarctica.”

She ignored my words. I sighed and looked around.

The white glacial zone extending beyond the horizon had shattered, and underneath, the blue sea was visible.

The seawater bubbled in intervals. There was a massive wave in the distance.

I erected a wall to keep the waves from escaping, but it wouldn't completely block everything. There would be significant damage to neighbouring countries.

Maybe it'd affect the entire planet.

I looked up at the sky. I'd been sensing a gaze for a while now.

The earth was a common area of the gods from the Hundred Gods Temple.

Usually they wouldn't have been able to see our battle within the dungeon because it was within the Ruler's realm. But since the dungeon was smashed by the Ruler in the very beginning, the gods could watch the fight unobstructed by barriers.

I thought about whether it would be wise to show more of my power here. Of course, it wasn't a wise idea.

It would not be good for the people of Earth. I wasn't good enough to bear the risks for those I've never met, not even for my status.

Even if this caused a giant tsunami and significant damage, it did not cause my reputation any problems.

It would rather be helpful even. Since ancient times, natural disasters symbolized events that humans could not resist.

Those who suffered would resent and fear the tsunami, but they would also worship the gods that caused it.

I kept thinking about it. If we left like this, Kim Min-hyuk would die of overwork or stress.

The Kim Min-hyuk I knew was a guy who would care even if I told him not to. It seemed like his life's biggest goal was to make sure that an absolute majority of people do not live unhappy lives.

Of course, I didn't care what kind of life goal Kim Min-hyuk had and how he lived. It was just that I had received too much from him to ignore his wishes.

I sorted out my thoughts.

Yeah, let's do it that way.

“Return.”

After a brief look at Antarctica, which began to return to its previous form, I moved to the place where Yong-yong was waiting with Seregia, who had returned to the form of a sword.

From this, the Hundred Gods Temple would have found that I could engage in time manipulation, as well as cause and effect manipulation.

It wasn't a prudent judgment to show my abilities at this point.

Well, I'll let this time pass, I'll do it for Kim Min-Hyuk.

“Huh? You’re already back?”

I nodded. Kim Min-hyuk opened his laptop and furiously typed. Was he sending an email?

“I made an appointment with the guys who used to sell names in Gangwon-do. He said he would come to Seoul this weekend. There are no portals around here, so I think we need to secure one in Seoul. I’ll talk to the Association. Park Min is supposed to come here later, so I think we can talk about it then. You’re still going to treat people with that raffle.”

You’ve been working hard.

As I thought, it was worth it.

“Did you just look at it? Good job, there’s no need to hurry up with a G-class attack. Let’s get some rest for a few days, talk to your party, and then go again. Start with the lunch we didn’t have earlier,” Kim Min-hyuk said to me while looking around, asking why my party hadn’t come with me.

“I already did it.”

“Huh?”

“I defeated the G-class.”

To be exact, it was attacking the dungeon and fighting the Ruler.

I thought it would be better to tell Kim Min-hyuk and the others that I’d eradicated the G-class. It was easier to understand.

“I’ve defeated the G-class already...”

I took Lee Joon-suk out of my pocket and handed it to Kim Min-hyuk, who looked baffled.

Since he was smaller than the doll’s size, I picked him up with my hand and handed him over. Kim Min-hyuk was so surprised that he almost dropped Lee Joon-suk.

“I’m here to leave him. He passed out in the middle. I’m sure Yong-yong treated him well, but I thought I’d better leave him here.”

The mantis was in bad shape, but it would try to escape if we left it here. I just decided to keep it in Yong-yong’s box.

“Uh... that...”

Kim Min-hyuk rolled his eyes before asking urgently, “You’re leaving me behind? Hey, where are you going now?”

“Russia.”

“Why Russia?”

There was a G-class there. Unfortunately, the Hundred God Temple witnessed the death of the Ruler in Antarctica.

The information was bound to be leaked to other Rulers. It was highly likely that the Ruler whom I met in Antarctica knew what happened on the 61st floor of the Tutorial.

They had to be dealt with before the Rulers who had dungeons on the Earth notice and flee.

We needed to collect the energy left in the dungeon and find out if there was any information.

There were so many things to do, but I’d get nothing if the Ruler withdrew the dungeon itself.

I had to move quickly.

“I’m going to Russia to find another G-class. I’ll take care of everything by the end of the day. Then, I’ll come back.”

“...Kill me, just kill me already.”

Notes from Imagine:

[1]: I imagine hojae with both of his hands as finger guns rapid firing Zit Pops.

[2]: I wonder how strong Seregia is to be able to defeat a ruler on her own (and completely dominate it at that). Though it was mentioned by Ho-Jae if Seregia's ability to seemingly disappear was at a higher level than his (If i remember correctly).

Chapter 309

Seoul (13)

Unfortunately, we never encountered a Ruler in the Antarctic dungeon. Had the ruler run away, or was it just too stupid?

Nothing significant happened.

Two more agents of the Ruler, called Dungeon Road, were caught, but agents were seen in the other dungeons. There was even a dungeon that withdrew its monsters and other things.

It was comforting to know that I could recover all the extractors.

If I knew it would end up like this, I would have wiped them all out the day I returned to Earth. Of course, doing so may not have changed the results by much, but I still would have liked to have done it.

“I’m home.”

“I’m sure he came back earlier. When did he leave again?” Kim Min-hyuk hurriedly hung up his phone when we entered. He had a miserable look on his face.

Either way, we all dispersed as soon as we returned to the accommodations.

Hochi went up to the living room couch, Seregia to the kitchen, and Yong-yong to the second-floor room with the mantis.

“Africa.” The last dungeon I visited was in Rwenzori, Africa. Unfortunately, it didn’t produce anything worthwhile, but Hochi loved experiencing the scenery.

“Oh, for your information, I’ve cleared everything.”

“What?”

“G-class. None of them are on Earth anymore. Isn’t that good?”

“Good work... Huh?”

Kim Min-hyuk put down his cell phone on the table and blankly looked ahead. The vibrations continued, checking to see if he was still on call. There was a loud noise as the vibrating cell phone hit the table.

Kim Min-hyuk reached out and hung up the phone. Then, without a moment’s delay, another call came in.

No matter how many times he hung up, the calls kept coming in.

Kim Min-hyuk, who had been pondering for a while now, decided to turn off his phone altogether.

“Something wrong?”

“No,” Kim Min-hyuk answered, seemingly having given up. “I don’t know anymore. Let’s just get it done tomorrow. The important thing right now is that the G-class Monsters are gone. If there’s anything wrong with the article, we’ll just correct it late,” Kim Min-hyuk replied.

“Did you do any damage?”

“None. Just a bit in Antarctica.”

Although I tried to cover up the situation, damage to neighbouring countries was unavoidable. However, I minimized the effects. There was no damage elsewhere.

There couldn’t be anything because I took care of things properly this time.

“That’s enough. I don’t care about the little things. If we look closely, what's left is property rights issues and unauthorized entry. It's a violation of international raid regulations."

Kim Min-hyuk thought about it for a while before saying, "I don't know. It's what you did, so take care of it yourself."

That's a lot of work for me.

Even though Kim Min-hyuk ordered me to do it, he would still be the one to take care of it in the end

"Joon-suk?"

"Sleeping upstairs. I just laid him down because I heard there's nothing wrong with his health. Is he okay? Or should I send him to the hospital now?"

"He'll be alright."

Yong-yong examined him, so of course, there would be no problem. Yong-yong was as good as me in this. Unlike me, however, Yong-yong was better because he would take more care of the other person. I decided to take care of Joon-suk when he came to his senses later.

There was a bit of a mystery. Lee Joon-suk, who stayed on the 90th floor for years, was very competitive.

He desired strength—maybe to come after me. Either way, he was ambitious back then. However, Lee Joon-suk, who I met again on Earth, showed little enthusiasm.

Even when he ran into me, he didn't show much interest. Of course, I was glad to see him after a long time, but I wanted to check his strength. However, he couldn't prove his strength.

He did not regret his lack of power. It didn't seem like he had a new desire for challenge, so I wondered if this was the Lee Joon-suk I knew. He was one of the few I talked to when I was trapped on the 60th floor.

I thought of solving his problems to repay the gratitude from that time. If I could motivate him again, Lee Joon-suk would be a useful guy. Such talent was hard to find.

I couldn't believe he worked on a floor for nearly ten years on his own volition.

I couldn't do such a stupid thing. It was foolish, but I had to find a way to make him grow.

My experience made me quite adept at helping others grow. The only case that failed was Hochi's.

All the other guys who went through my hands were doing their part.

"Park Min was supposed to come later. Now the Association is going crazy."

"The Association? Why?"

"Why not? It's because someone wiped out the G-class in Pyongyang."

I shrugged. If I came after the association's head now, the association's work would be poured on Kim Min-hyuk.

Let's fix that later.

"The gate you wanted, is it urgent?"

"Yes, no."

"...Is it urgent or not?"

"Not really, but I want you to take care of it quickly."

While watching Kim Min-hyuk's angry face, I briefly organized my thoughts.

Was there anything else I had to do? I couldn't think of anything.

“I will also go to my room and rest.”

Kim Min-hyuk sprang to his feet. “Yes! Go and lie down! Get out of here! And please don’t get up until tomorrow!”

That’s too much.

Some people thought I was causing trouble even though it was all for the good of humans.

“Yes, it would have been good if you had handled it over a week. Finishing it one day is too much.”

How unfair.

* * *

It was quiet when I entered the room, and I laid down on the bed. I could feel cozy while lying on thorns, but it was still comfortable to lie in bed.

Was it a habit?

I opened the subspace and took out the purple crystal, an item I got after clearing the 100th floor of the Tutorial.

It was one of the reasons why Kirikiri said that I needed to clear it. As I looked at the purple crystal for a moment, a message appeared in front of my eyes.

[Summoning Stone]

It was a simple item. The compensation for clearing the Tutorial varied depending on the level of difficulty.

But the name of the rewards were all the same: a summoning stone.

After clearing the Easy difficulty level, the summoner can call up one of the Tutorial potions.

After clearing the Normal difficulty level, one can summon one item they purchased in the store window.

After clearing the Hard difficulty level, one can summon one item received as an additional reward during Hard difficulty.

I wondered what it would be like in the case of Hell Difficulty, but this was it.

[Summon Stone]

Description: A reward for the challenger who has endured all the trials of the Tutorial. You can bring back a relationship you made in the Tutorial.

It was an interesting item. I could summon someone who was not an item. After clearing the 100th floor, I put it off.

First of all, I needed to solve the problems on Earth. But now it was time to think about the summoning stone.

Who should I summon? Multiple faces and names came to mind.

There were plenty of people who I wanted to meet and talk with again. Just thinking about it made my heart throb. Although they were short relationships, they were profound.

The first person that came to mind was Idy.

When I had a lot of concerns about my identity, she gave me direction, and we were together for the longest time.

For the first time, I found someone to rely on. But I promised Idy that I wouldn't do it. Summoning her now would break my promise to her.

Also, I couldn't be sure it was my 'Idy' who would be summoned from this summon stone.

I thought about friends who would be happy to see me again, like

Myong-myong and Cheonsa-Cheonsabaeg. [1]

However, I decided against using the stone to fulfill a momentary longing. If I achieved my goal, we could meet again later. They would even have memories of meeting me. That was how one more option was crossed out.

The next thing I thought of was Godmother. I met her on the 19th floor while training to become an apostle for the God of Devotion.

But on the 61st floor, I met her again, in the guise of the God of Sacrifice.

If the Godmother from back then was the clone of the God of Sacrifice, she was worth summoning and nurturing. Since she seemed to be a faithful believer in the God of Devotion, it wouldn't be easy to persuade her, but I thought I could do something about it.

Or I could just dissect her.

It was a really attractive option, but I decided to move on.

Kirikiri had said I needed this summon stone, but she probably didn't say it with Grandmother in mind.

Lee Hyung-jin came to mind next. I couldn't help but think about it. Lee Hyung-jin was probably not who or what Kirikiri had in mind.

It was an old regret of mine and an unsolved question. What the hell happened on that 17th floor? I'd thought about it for a long time.

In my opinion, Lee Hyung-jin could quickly clear the 17th floor. It just required the ability to beat the illusion.

The illusion wasn't aware of the items Lee Hyung-Jin had, and there were many things the me from back then didn't know.

(T/N: Me from back then refers to his 17th-floor illusion self.)

I gave him a few tips, but I wasn't very involved. The concern at the time was not that he could not pass through the 17th floor, but that he could find out the information on the 61st floor and no longer climb up.

However, he died shortly after entering the 17th floor. I couldn't easily digest the fact.

In the end, it raised my expectations of the 17th-floor's illusion ever since.

It was not because of my memories of the 17th floor, but its power to kill Lee Hyung-jin.

So before Lee Yeon-hee challenged the 17th floor, I checked everything in a paranoid manner and made her enter with overwhelming power. Of course, Lee Yeon-hee faced a major crisis on the 17th floor, but she was careless. It was not because of her lack of power.

Lee Hyung-jin was different from Lee Yeon-hee. It was not about their bodies, magic, or techniques.

Qualitatively, the two were different challengers. Lee Hyung-jin was an early challenger. He was a challenger from when information was scarce.

He was informed of the stage but not given careful advice. What I gave Lee Hyung-jin was just a list of what happened on the stage.

Even that information was limited to what I went through, and was told by my standards. It was something that could never be considered perfect.

I didn't put much effort in developing him. Lee Hyung-jin's ability to grow was entirely his own.

However, even with the lack of information, Lee Hyung-jin survived to the end and climbed the floors with quick movements and a determination to survive.

Of course, Lee Yeon-hee was also a great challenger, and she had excellent stats from the start since she was a former national archer.

However, in terms of mental abilities such as mental strength and concentration, Lee Hyung-jin would not be far behind me.

On the contrary, many aspects of him were better than me. His only downfall was his fear of pain and death.

Comparing Lee Yeon-hee and Lee Hyung-jin confirmed that the scale leaned toward Lee Hyung-jin.

“Should I save Hyung-jin?”

It was questionable whether I could revive the challenger and summon him. But whether it was possible or not, it was worth a try.

The idea still lingered that the dead one might not be the one to come out through the summons.

Nevertheless, I had no choice but to worry. That was how much regret I had.

I couldn't decide quickly, so I'd been putting it off until now, but it was still not easy.

After a long time of lying on the bed, I could give up my lingering regret for a moment. There must be a good reason why Kirikiri had repeatedly stressed that this was absolutely necessary.

And given the effect of this summon stone, it was easy to notice what Kirikiri wanted from me.

[Do you want to use the summon stone?]

“Yes.”

At my answer, the purple crystal began to shine brightly.

I didn't say anything else, but the summon began, as if it could read my thoughts, bringing forth the one in my mind. Smoke rose on the floor. It was a conventional form of summoning.

Out of all the people who I could've called, I summoned the Hell difficulty manager, Kirikiri.

It was Kirikiri.

“Hi!”

Through the smoke, fluffy rabbit ears popped up and greeted me.

Chapter 310

Seoul (14)

“Appear!” Kirikiri cheerfully explained.

What do you mean by ‘appear’?

I looked at Kirikiri, who had just appeared in the room, turn to her side as I lay in bed. Perhaps because of my unsurprised demeanor, Kirikiri pouted her lips. Then, she pushed my body away and laid on the side of the bed.

“Inconvenient.”

“Get up if you’re uncomfortable,” she said and made me move.

Kirikiri was not a stranger, but she wouldn’t be happy if I was doing anything else while she was explaining. At the very least, I had to feign attention in front of her.

Because I got up from my bed, Kirikiri brought a chair from the corner of the room, put it in front of the bed, sat down, and smiled at me.

It was unexpected. I thought she’d continue laying on the bed or sit on the floor. Kirikiri, who was sitting on a chair felt strange, out of place even.

Was the reason she rolled around on the ground, not because she didn’t have any manners but because she was on the fields?

Once again, it was unexpected. At that moment, I heard footsteps from outside the room.

In a few seconds, Yong-yong opened the door and ran in.

He clung to Kirikiri.

“Hi!”

“Hello!”

Are you gonna do that again?

It took a long while for Yong-yong and Kirikiri to finish twirling with their hands crossed and expressing their happiness before we could start conversing.

* * *

“You’re not surprised at all. Heng.”

“There’s nothing for me to be surprised about,” I said to Kirikiri, who had Yong-yong in her lap.

In the first place, I was the one who thought Kirikiri should be summoned, so why would it be surprising?

“How’s the Tutorial?”

“A total mess, haha.”

I didn’t think she should have laughed and talked so carelessly.

That being said, the situation was bound to be a mess. From the challengers’ point of view, the Tutorial was suddenly brought to a halt and locked up.

“It was too dangerous to keep the challengers in the waiting room. They’re planning to move all of them to a nearby residential area.”

That would be better. The longer people were trapped together, the more stable they would be. Above all, the waiting room on the Korean server was quite a good place to live.

When Kim Min-hyuk was there, the first goal of the Order of Vigilance was not to clear the Tutorial but to create a better environment. Of course, it was a few years ago, but the foundation they built at that time was not going anywhere.

The Order of Vigilance, who played the role of a manager, was still there, so it would run well.

“Do other servers have problems?”

“Yes, I don’t think the Day of Great Harmony can solve them.

The Day of Great Harmony gathered challengers and forced them to solve their own problems. Due to the nature of the Tutorial, there were certain problems that could only be solved when challengers met and discussed together. However, if the party causing the problem became a majority, the Day of Great Harmony would no longer be meaningful.

“We’re discussing whether to put apostles in.”

“Apostles?”

There have been several occasions of apostles entering the Tutorial—all of which were on the Hell difficulty level’s stage.

“You remember the Dragon we met on the 50th floor? Maybe it’ll be let in.”

“Oh, that coward dragon.”

I remembered the dragon from the second half of the Tutorial. The dragon said it belonged to the Hundred Gods Temple and was not an apostle of any god. I could trust that it would do well on its own.

I remember the first impression it made was terrible. He was weak and terrified, but the dragon faithfully did its job. The dragon chose stages that were of great help to me. I gained a lot back then, but the experience became more useful after being trapped on the 60th floor.

If I had passed the 50th floor meaninglessly, I might not have made it to where I am now.

“Give me Yong-yong.”

“Yes.”

Yong-yong dozed off while sitting on Kirikiri’s knee. I thought that it may be because it was time to sleep.

Because of last night, he must be exhausted. He couldn’t sleep because he went to catch the mantis and sobbed the entire time. I took Yong-yong from Kirikiri and hugged him tightly.

“Ehem ehem,” Kirikiri awkwardly coughed.

Having deliberately cleared her throat, Kirikiri spoke in a feigned serious voice. “According to your performance on Earth, the Hundred Gods Temple has decided to hand you the planet’s jurisdiction. The Earth is no longer under the Hundred Gods Temple’s joint jurisdiction, and all the gods have decided to give up their rights to the Earth.”

That was what I had heard from Kirikiri before coming out of the Tutorial. The Hundred Gods Temple wasn’t very interested in the Earth, so they could give me the rights to Earth. But I didn’t think they would hand it over to me for nothing.

Of course, I didn’t mean to refuse it.

“If you accept the transfer of jurisdiction, it will be dealt with immediately.”

“Of course, I accept.”

It was almost free. As soon as I said I would accept it, the eyes of the gods quickly disappeared.

Now the unpleasant glances were gone. Even though they were gods from the Hundred Gods Temple, they couldn’t directly watch me, but they could see how the Earth was moving and trace my movements.

The eyes of many gods, who were already fixed on the Earth, had made me feel very uncomfortable.

“I think there’s still one god watching the Earth.”

It was a familiar gaze. The God of Light. He was still looking at the earth, exuding off an aura of regret.

“Earth is no longer a zone of the Hundred Gods Temple, so it’s free for other gods to watch.”

“But now it’s my zone. I’d like them to stop looking into other people’s territory without permission.”

“The God of Light is always rude.”

After a while, the last remaining god’s gaze on Earth, the God of Light, disappeared. He left behind a few words before his presence disappeared entirely.

[Disappointed...]

[I’m so, so... disappointed.]

I knew what the God of Light had expected because it was obvious. He thought something would explode as soon as I got to Earth, but it was unexpectedly quiet, so I guess it was disappointing.

“Can’t you just hand over the Tutorial like this?”

“Of course not,” replied Kirikiri with a mischievous smile. “The Tutorial is extremely important. There are many reasons for that, but the biggest one is that you proved the Tutorial is handy. Above all, the need to foster apostles and provide means of self-defense on planets remains important.”

She shrugged her shoulders. “And in the case of Earth, it was easy to hand over the planet because not all of them were interested.”

It seemed like the Earth was almost like a nuisance. I asked about that.

“Earth is not a good planet to nurture faith in. When the Hundred Gods Temple first got interested, indigenous religions were already firmly established. Above all, the planet was highly developed and excessively polluted. No one was willing to take the loss and make it their territory, so it remained a common zone until the end.”

That’s true.

Faith didn’t require a high level of science. The existing religions on the planet were also slowly losing their effects as science and knowledge developed rapidly. In the meantime, it wouldn’t have been profitable to build a new religion and seek faith.

Even if one tried to show up in person and make changes, there would have been restrictions as it was a common area of the Hundred Gods Temple.

I thought that this wasn’t much different from a while ago.

“Of course, it had a large population, a long history of civilization, a diverse source, so it would have been a great place to extract the source from. Enough to risk invading the common zone of the Hundred Gods Temple.”

“Yes, I understand. It’s worth it.”

It was worth handing it over to me in just two days. I nodded absentmindedly.

Kirikiri said while nodding her head just like me, “Yes, yes, even more worth it, since it’s now a planet that’s on it’s last legs.”

“...Huh?”

* * *

The planet’s source depended on the history and the civilization of the people living on it.

It was an unverified fact, but I was told that a planet whose source has been completely extracted would take a path towards decline.

I find it sufficient to compare the source to innate talent in martial arts. For the source to be present on a planet, it was more or less like a genius who was born with greater power than others...

When I asked Kirikiri about it, she said it was okay to think like that. When I checked the amount of source extracted from the dungeon we had visited today, I had already started thinking about this.

Too much of the source was already taken. Hochi said the total amount of source removed from the 89th-floor planet added up to about 100 billion points.

However, from the dungeons on Earth that we had checked, four times that number had already been taken.

“It was already a sick planet. But it has seriously deteriorated over the past few years.”

The monsters’ invasion destroyed the environment. Wild beasts, which were targeted by dungeons, went extinct, and the surrounding area was left contaminated by the destruction of power plants. The situation was even more grave because not only did nature suffer, but humans suffered significant damage as well.

The monsters caused severe economic damage, and the problem regarding the reduction of the population was still unresolved.

The aftereffects cut off international travel, leading to the supply of fuel and food decreasing. Of course, humans cannot tolerate the lack of something. As usual, the population took this as a threat to their survival, and started campaigns to get their hands on resources.

They cut down trees from all over the country to make up for the lack of fuel, and all plants and animals were hunted down, regardless of their species, to solve food shortages.

The situation significantly improved after the Awakened's numbers increased, which slowed the monsters' offense. But humans were still unable to recover from all the damage from the cataclysm.

"How much longer can they hold out?"

"From my personal estimation, about 500 years?" Kirikiri mused.

Five hundred years was too short even if it may seem like a long time for humans. It meant that there would only be a few generations left until the end of the Earth.

The destruction of the earth was a reasonably familiar problem for humans. Before introducing the Tutorial, many scholars assumed that the planet would fall in about 500 years.

How many novels and movies were there in the Apocalypse World View set on Earth 100 or 200 years later?

It could be destroyed in about 500 years. The prospect would come and go from people's minds.

There were worsening environmental and resource problems, the growing threat of nuclear war, and unexpected monsters.

If they couldn't help it, they may give up. Anyway, 500 years from now was not their problem. But I was different.

"Ah, I still have to think about the destruction of the earth."

I didn't like doing these kinds of things. But I was the only one who could think about this problem right now.

"What are your recommendations?"

"The Great Leaf. It could provide a place for humans to stay. Of course, you'll need to pay the price."

It was an option for now.

Let's just keep in mind that there is a means of last-minute evacuation.

* * *

After the story of Earth, the topic shifted back to the Tutorial. After a long explanation, Kirikiri rose from her chair.

I thought she was going back, but Kirikiri just stood up and stared at me.

“You want something else from me?”

“Yes!” Kirikiri answered, stamping her feet.

Only then did I understand. “You want a cake?”

“Yes!”

I left Yong-yong in bed and went down to the living room on the first floor with Kirikiri. Only Hochi was in the living room.

“Where is Kim Min-hyuk?”

“He’s gone.”

That’s how Hochi greeted Kirikiri. Kirikiri rushed towards the snack bar of the living room’s table, uninterested in anything else.

Seregia had finished many snacks, but there was still something left, perhaps thanks to Kim Min-hyuk’s continuous food supply.

I sat on the sofa and tried to turn on the TV by using the remote control. But the TV didn’t turn on.

“Kim Min-hyuk pulled out the cord earlier, should I put it back in?”

“No, thanks.”

There was nothing to see even if we plugged in the cord that had been pulled out.

Now I'll just have to worry about the Tutorial again. Today was almost over, and Yong-yong was asleep. I wanted to move again from tomorrow onwards.

"Hm, it womp bwe eashy." said Kirikiri, munching on a chocolate pie.

"What?"

"It's going to be hard to care about the Tutorial. You have to care about Earth, too."

There was nothing to care about.

Now, it was my territory.

I drove out the Rulers and their men.

"The earth is no longer under the protection of the Hundred Gods Temple. That means you have to replace their role by yourself. It's not going to be easy."

* * *

At the Korean Awakened Association.

Park Min hit his face on the desk in his office. He couldn't find an answer.

When Lee Ho-jae returned to Seoul, he had never thought that things would go this way. However, Lee Ho-jae's move was shocking.

He destroyed Seoul Station, showed his powers, and disappeared with Kim Min-hyuk.

Of course, people knew he was staying at a mansion near Seoul, but it was not made known to the press.

He immediately killed Pyongyang's G-class that night.

It was such a vain ending compared to Park Min's grand plan to keep the G-class in Pyongyang and increase profits.

Before he could get out of the shock, Ho-jae began to deal with the other G-classes one by one.

Before lunch, information came in that they had killed the Antarctic's G-class.

Thomas Feltchuk.

There was a G-class located in Antarctica, and he was someone who served under the G-class. He was also the first to introduce the G-class, which had moved to Pyongyang. He thought that the strength Thomas had wouldn't be inferior to Lee Jun-seok.

Instead, he thought that Thomas would give him a good blow. The death of Antarctica's G-class meant that he was dead.

It was hard to believe.

Kim Min-hyuk informed us that he had dealt with another G class in Russia while wondering if this was a true story.

There was a rumor that all G-classes had been killed before evening.

In countries near the G-class area, there were loads of rumors swirling around, saying that the G-class location was ruined and that monsters wandering around the neighborhood had been killed instantly.

The photos in Park Min's hands were proving that such information was not just a rumor.

It was a picture sent by the American Association. Several photos showed Antarctica's condition.

It looked like there had been a powerful explosion from the miserable sight of the ice lands. Next was a picture of it slowly returning to its original state.

These pictures were real, not fabricated.

“He’s like a real god.”

The plan must be revised completely. Somehow, he had to stick to Lee Ho-jae now. He will make a new order.

It was not impossible for Ho-jae to actively cooperate with the president of the Association.

But...

“He said that? Kim Min-hyuk, head of the guild?”

“Yes.”

What happened this morning was a problem.

Lee Ho-jae moved Lee Sung-eun and the others to their homes.

When Park Min heard that, he thought Lee Ho-jae must have known Lee Sung-eun’s home address.

Kim Min-hyuk was next to Lee Ho-jae.

It was possible.

However, Oh Sang-jin, who returned late, said, “Guild leader Kim Min-hyuk seemed to have no idea about that.”

That was the problem.

If Lee Ho-jae can read the other person’s thoughts or find out information, it’s no use running away later.

He could find out that Park Min had used Pyongyang's G class and even tell what he had planned while contacting the other G-class.

Reading other people's thoughts was a god's power, but he had blown up Antarctica. There was nothing more strange than seeing the pictures of it being restored.

Most of all, reading other people's thoughts was something he had experienced several times while meeting with the Tutorial Manager.

If Lee Ho-jae's ability was similar to that, there really seemed to be no way to survive.

He had to make an appointment to visit Lee Ho-jae right away.

What was he supposed to say when he got there?

Even if he prepared a well-organized lie, how could he deceive someone who could read his mind?

How else could he persuade a man crazy enough to burn Seoul Station?

'Do you need help?'

An unfamiliar voice rang in Park Min's head, who was tearing his hair out.

The voice was so hushed, he didn't even notice it at first.

'Do you need help?'

"...What in the world?"

"Yes?"

"Nothing, go out."

Park Min hurriedly sent team leader Oh Sang-jin out of the office.

He asked back to the being questioning him in a quivering voice, "... Who are you?"

The voice answered slowly, 'Your hope.'

Chapter 311

Seoul (15)

Eventful was the best word to describe this year.

Although spring wasn't over, many events have already occurred that caused people to tremble in anxiety and fear.

First, the Tutorial stopped as soon as this year began.

But I didn't know if the word 'stopped', which the media used, was appropriate.

Although challengers had stopped returning to Earth, there may be something we didn't know about going on inside the Tutorial.

The number of people entering the Tutorial had decreased. As a result, martial arts academies and Tutorial preparation courses were suffering.

Recently, those who dreamed of the Tutorial, and treated it as a chance to reverse their lives, felt deprived of the opportunity they were supposed to be given.

No one knew when the Tutorial would resume. Maybe it would never.

However, every day was frustrating for those who gave up their studies and livelihoods to enter academies or were training their physical fitness for the slim chance of becoming a Tutorial challenger.

The more severe problem was that there were no returnees from the Tutorial and a decrease in new Awakened.

Since the cataclysm, humanity had steadily restored power.

Last year, the South Korean government announced that all of the nation's systems had been restored to normal, and the accident rate caused by the appearance of gates and attack of monsters stabilized.

Still, monsters remained throughout the country, but the safety of large cities like Seoul, Gyeonggi Province, and metropolitan cities had been secured. Protection around railroads and highways linking the cities improved.

Studies showed that the population's quality of life was improving rapidly every month, and netizens often said that things were becoming better.

Of course, this significant recovery was because of the decrease in the number of monsters.

There was no denying the countless bloody campaigns led by soldiers and the Awakened to protect the people. The fact that such Awakened would no longer come from the Tutorial led to serious concerns.

What would they do if monsters started to appear again? The supply of Awakened has stopped entirely, which increases the value of the Awakened that already exist.

The second problem was the emergence of the G-class monster in Pyongyang. It was ultimately subjugated, but it stirred chaos throughout the country.

The airports and ports filled with people rushing to go abroad, and the highway heading to Busan wasn't very different from a parking lot.

Questions about stopping evacuations and pushing ahead with subjugation had been raised. In the process, intense criticism was poured on the guild, which had been silent.

Experts speculated that this incident may lead to the worst outcome, especially when taking into account the rise in Awakened's value.

People feared the Korean Awakened who had returned to Korea may go abroad again.

It turned out that there was an intense backlash on the Korean people within the guild since most of its members were overseas citizens.

The third problem that had rattled Korea this year was the emergence of the Awakened Lee Ho-jae. As soon as he appeared, he exploded the square in front of Seoul Station, where many people had gathered. But little had been discussed about that incident.

Because after that day, that happened.

People were anxious instead of angry because the explosion revealed a power beyond imagination but produced no deaths. And early that day, the guild announced that Lee Ho-jae, the Awakened, had alone defeated Pyongyang's G-class.

It was too unrealistic to accept.

People were confused about how the G-class could be dealt with so easily and quickly, and whether it was right to subjugate it like this.

They got more news without even confirming whether the Pyongyang G-class was dead.

Early in the morning, G-classes were slaughtered every two or three hours, and eventually, all G-classes whose locations were known were destroyed before evening.

The government of each country was moving quickly, contrary to the reactions of those who were still confused even after a week.

Sankei News reported that Japan had already offered the largest-ever contract.

In the midst of this the Korean government announced that it will award an honorary medal to him, which raised concerns about the government's impractical actions and the need to retain Lee Ho-jae.

-wakdbe [1]

They're not going to give him the Medal of Honor to be patriotic, are they? I hope not, really.

-skrkdmd

If I were him, I would go abroad.

The damage to monsters in Korea was not serious anyway, so it wasn't hard to handle them. In Southeast Asia, the Awakened were almost treated like kings.

-alnrldlkwnd

I expect him to go to the United States or China.

-rmsep dlwjdehaus

Isn't it that overwhelmingly strong for the Awakened? Not long ago, the other Awakened said that it was impossible to attack Pyongyang.

-vmdisd

I didn't think it would matter if they just released all the Awakened and signed only one person, Lee Ho-jae.

-xozmffj

In the first place, there were only a few who contracted with the Korean government.

-dcjjj

If he signed a contract, what would happen if he exploded again?

-ahfmrpTek

But was it true that the G-class was defeated?

Wasn't he just trying to f*ck with the government? It was almost impossible to check because the G-class didn't move much.

-xozmffj

The same events played out in other countries such as Russia and Brazil.

-rrrrnrnr

In other countries, they called him God's warriors and the hope of humanity.

Why do Koreans not believe it?

-rmsepcn

But why did he blow up Seoul Station?

* * *

"Yes, why did he make it explode?"

Kim Min-hyuk, who was reading the article's comments, murmured.

There was an easy way to become famous: be treated as a hero by the people.

He clicked his tongue. It was just a pity.

"What."

"No, nothing."

When Kim Min-hyuk did not answer, Lee Ho-jae also turned his head as if he was not interested.

The two were now at the Sangam World Cup Stadium.

In the middle of the vast football stadium was a gate that had lost its light and appeared translucent. It was a closed gate, from which no monsters appeared.

“What do you say? Is this good enough?”

“Yes, it’s alright.”

It wasn’t alright. Although damaged, the World Cup stadium itself remained.

The location was good. One cannot even see anything amiss if they just put a lid on it. The Association had come up with the best they could when Lee Ho-jae asked for it.

“The president of the Association is carrying out the procedures of his father’s death?”

“Oh, he was fighting cancer. Maybe we should postpone our appointment until after the funeral.”

“Okay, then. We don’t have to meet him.”

As delays continued to stall the appointment, Park Min confided in Kim Min-hyuk about his relationship with the Mantis in advance.

When Park Min first met the mantis, he noticed that the mantis was relatively weak for a G-class. He confessed that he tried to increase his influence and widen the Association by meeting with Pyongyang’s G-class and succeeding in conquering it.

It was too much for the Association’s Awakened alone, but he thought it would be possible if it included the Guild’s Awakened, Lee Joon-suk, and Lee Ho-jae, who was expected to arrive soon.

His confession matched well with the testimony of the mantis.

“No, his efforts weren’t bad. Just that his ambition was a little bigger than his skills, so it’s hard to say anything. More than anything else, it’s like pulling someone out of mourning. Let’s leave him alone.”

Lee Ho-jae gave high marks that Park Min did not attach himself to the Ruler, but instead dug a trap to hunt the mantis. Of course, his purpose was personal gain, but it was the same for everyone.

He was going to see if he had told the truth or had any more information to hide, but he felt it was too much work to question the person in charge.

“For now, I’ll have to decorate it.” Lee Ho-jae said while looking around the empty soccer field.

Then, structures and furniture began to appear in the air. A ceiling appeared around the gate, and a wall was erected. A building appeared in the middle of the soccer field at once.

“Like a god...”

“Because I am a god,” Lee Ho-jae replied to Kim Min-hyuk, who looked dazed.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

The reason why a gate was needed was simple: to create a path to the Tutorial. To be more precise, make a way to the 60th floor of the Tutorial.

The gate wasn’t necessary, but it was better than nothing.

“It may take some time.”

“How long?” asked Kim Min-hyuk.

To be honest, I couldn’t guarantee it either.

“At best it could be a month, but it could also be never.”

I had to connect my area on the 60th floor of the Tutorial with this place, but the problem was that I couldn't be sure how long it would take to locate it.

I expected it to resolve within a few months, but it was hard to be sure.

"That's too long. Is it something you have to do right now?" asked Kim Min-hyuk.

Of course, it was something that I had to do right away. It was very urgent.

For me, my area on the 61st floor was more important than the Earth or the people on the Earth.

Without the Old Man and Grandma, there was no one to take care of the place.

I wanted to have it connected to here as soon as possible. There wouldn't be any problems right now, but I felt weirdly uncomfortable.

It was similar to how I felt when I didn't close the front door of my house, and didn't turn off the stove.

It also included specific measures to get ownership of the Tutorial from Kirikiri.

I wanted to make a connection with the Hundred Gods Temple before I dealt with them directly.

"If there's any problem, then..."

"Tell Hochi. He'll take care of it."

While I was busy, I decided to fix and hand over the earth's dungeons in return for Kim Min-hyuk's favor.

As Hochi liked dungeons, I thought he would do Kim Min-hyuk's favor well.

“Hmm...”

Kim Min-hyuk seemed somewhat dubious.

Was he nervous?

That fellow was always so worried that it was hard to tell.

* * *

“Of course, just call me.”

At Hochi's confident answer, Kim Min-hyuk was somewhat relieved.

Hochi shut the novel he was reading aloud.

“You don't have to help me right now. If there's a problem later on, then...”

“No, I just happened to finish reading all the novels here.”

Kim Min-hyuk thought about the number of novels and comic books he had in here. It wasn't enough to finish reading in just a week.

Of course, it was a little different for Hochi who didn't sleep and read all week.

“Should I get you some more books?”

Kim Min-hyuk thought that he'd read almost all the novels already in the bookstore, but he was willing to find him new novels if Hochi wanted it.

“Nah, I've read enough, so I'll do something else.”

Kim Min-hyuk felt uneasy again.

What do you mean something else?

“I’m going out.”

“...where?”

“To buy something delicious.”

Kim Min-hyuk felt his heart pound.

Hochi shouldn’t be in front of people now. It’d be crazy.

“...Can’t I just buy it for you?”

Hochi shook his head firmly.

“I wanted to go to the restaurant and try it myself. I want a drink! Yong-yong, you’re coming too, right?”

Then Yong-yong, who was sitting on Hochi’s lap, nodded and stood up. Kim Min-hyuk’s anxiety spiked.

“Seregia, let’s go. I’ll buy you something delicious.”

Seregia, who had been sitting quietly on the sofa, jumped up from her seat as if it were natural.

Kim Min-hyuk grew beyond anxious and desperate at that sight.

[1] The text was really written like that. As for why we do not yet know.

Chapter 312

Seoul (16)

Fortunately, Kim Min-hyuk was able to persuade Hochi. He didn't dissuade or stop him from going outside. He just prevented him from taking the wrong way, saying he would bring him to a delicious restaurant he knew.

However, Kim Min-hyuk felt he had overcome one big crisis.

If Hochi had gone outside and walked down the street, gazing and searching around for different kinds of restaurants... It would have gotten crazy to the point where Kim Min-hyuk didn't even want to imagine the situation that would take place after that.

Kim Min-hyuk took Hochi, Seregia, and Yong-yong to a nearby Korean restaurant.

He had been there quite a few times before. They had seats in individual rooms, so they wouldn't have to encounter other customers.

They weren't concerned about spreading rumors because of the thorough training the employees there received.

Fortunately, it was not mealtime, so they never ran into anyone else in the restaurant. However, they had no choice but to interact with the staff who guided the group to the room.

And so, they chatted a little bit.

"Isn't that him?"

"I think you're right."

"Hey, he's the guild leader. I've been to the guild before. I'm sure it's that guy.”

“How interesting. People like that live in their own world.”

Of course, Kim Min-hyuk had to eat to live. The others didn’t have to.

Kim Min-hyuk was also an Awakened, so he could hear the staff’s murmurs from the room’s corner. The others must have heard it, but they went into the assigned room without a care.

Kim Min-hyuk came out separately and asked the manager not to spread rumors on SNS. The manager assured him that it would not happen, but Kim Min-hyuk was dubious.

After talking to the manager, Kim Min-hyuk entered the room late, and Hochi was already ordering food.

“From here to here, please,” Hochi said, dragging his finger from the menu’s first to last page.

The puzzled waitress looked at Kim Min-hyuk instead of Hochi.

Kim Min-hyuk asked Hochi on behalf of the employee’s innermost thoughts. “...Are you planning on eating everything?”

“Of course.”

Hochi was sure. Kim Min-hyuk was about to ask the employees to bring everything, but then he remembered some course menus on the menu.

Even if they ate all day, they couldn’t possibly finish.

Hochi said with a smile as the waitress went out, “Ha! I wanted to give it a try.”

Kim Min-hyuk murmured inwardly, “I knew it.”

So instead of ordering the whole menu, he just let them order to their tastes.

“Good job,” Seregia praised Hochi.

Her posture was upright.

Seregia, who enjoyed sprawling across the sofa, seemed annoyed by how she had to sit upright.

“But at this rate...”

Kim Min-hyuk thought it was a relief that nothing had gone astray. Accidents could have happened many times, just coming this far.

Fortunately, so far, everyone had been calm, not creating any major accidents, either because of their desire for delicious food or because of the excitement of coming outside.

Come to think of it, Yong-yong was exceptionally quiet.

“Uncle.”

“Yes, Yong-yong?”

Just in time, Yong-yong called out to Hochi. Kim Min-hyuk was most worried about Yong-yong.

Children often made a fuss in restaurants.

If Yong-yong brought out the mantis, it wouldn’t end up simply as a disturbance, but something far worse.

“Can’t we have the mantis with us?” Yong-yong said, pointing to the mantis trapped in the box.

Hochi readily gave consent.

“Yes, you can. Let’s eat together.”

‘No!’ Kim Min-hyuk wanted to shout out aloud.

Sitting side by side with a G-class monster? Kim Min-hyuk wouldn’t be able to bury it no matter how much he paid onlookers and reporters.

But before Kim Min-hyuk could even open his mouth to persuade them, Yong-yong had already taken the mantis out.

Kim Min-hyuk couldn’t bring himself to tell the child to put it back.

* * *

The food came out, and the meal was more peaceful than Kim Min-hyuk thought it would be. It was especially impressive to see the mantis eating with manners.

“You eat human food well,” Hochi commented.

“I usually eat everything nicely,” the mantis answered.

The fact that it was eating with etiquette was a big blessing. It’d be even better if humans weren’t part of its diet.

Anyway, they were all enjoying the food, and Hochi had fun eating.

Seregia and the mantis really ate well.

Whenever Yong-yong became interested in the employee serving the food, Kim Min-hyuk’s whole body froze, succumbing to a terror, but it never turned into a big problem.

Of course, Kim Min-hyuk was not able to eat properly because of his nervousness and anxiety.

He was nervously chewing on his food when the door opened again.

He thought there might be a new dish that a waitress was bringing in, but instead, an old man entered.

The old man introduced himself as the store's owner and thrust a pen and paper at Hochi.

"I'm sorry, but may I ask for your autograph? I've been a fan since you were a professional gamer."

Hochi picked up the pen and paper and thought for a moment. He didn't say that he wasn't Ho-jae.

He was not Ho-jae, but his clone, but it was more troublesome to explain that he was a completely different being.

It would just make them more confused by explaining.

'Ah, how am I supposed to sign?'

Hochi didn't even know how to sign autographs. He grabbed the pen.

Hochi was somewhat excited.

Suddenly, someone took the pen away from Hochi, who had been thrilled and was debating how to sign it.

"What are you doing?"

It was Lee Ho-jae. He snatched the pen away, signed the page, and returned it to the owner.

"When did you come?" Hochi asked with a hoarse voice.

"Just now. This man asked me to sign."

Then the owner talked to Ho-jae for a while. He really felt like a true fan.

"Of course. I went there during the finals. At that time..."

When they heard that, they could tell the owner was a real fan.

The two briefly talked about the past.

The owner looked really stoked. He apologized for interrupting the meal, and left at the right time.

“What a surprise,” Kim Min-hyuk commented.

When Lee Ho-jae appeared and took away the pen, Kim Min-hyuk could feel his heart pounding once again.

He was worried that he might beat the owner up, but he had acted more rational than Kim Min-hyuk had expected.

“Why on earth did you think of this as a surprise?” Lee Ho-jae questioned as if it felt unfair.

Hochi, Seregia, and even Yong-yong looked surprised.

Yong-yong even looked a bit dazed.

Lee Ho-jae stroked Yong-yong’s head and told Kim Min-hyuk next to him. “You asked me to work, but then why are you working?”

Then he reached out and picked up a braised short ribs and disappeared again.

It was a sudden exit, just like his unexpected entrance.

It had been a short visit, but Lee Ho-jae’s appearance had made a big impact on the table.

He disappeared with a handful of braised short ribs.

Hochi and Seregia’s eyes were glued on the braised short ribs bowl.

Cheng!

The two chopsticks clashed in the air.

“You’ll yield this to me, won’t you? I haven’t tried any of it yet.”

“No.”

While watching the two of them swinging their chopsticks in a silly fight, Kim Min-hyuk called in an employee to order another braised short ribs.

He thought to himself, “...I can’t do this. If he leaves them alone with me, I’ll die of stress first.”

Lee Ho-jae had told Kim Min-hyuk to ask Hochi to do whatever he wanted. But Kim Min-hyuk had no intention of doing so.

It would have been good if they had just stayed calm in the flat, but Hochi and the rest didn’t want to do that.

If they were going to behave like this, he should have never let them out. He was sure there would be trouble somewhere.

Or maybe Kim Min-hyuk himself would explode under stress.

Kim Min-hyuk decided it was better to let Ho-jae get to work.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

I was back at the Sangam World Cup Stadium. It was strange to meet a fan of my professional-gamer self after such a long time.

When I was a professional gamer, I didn’t pay much attention to my fans. The most important thing to me was the game and my victory.

Now that I thought about it, it was not much different from the relationship between a god and their believers. However, the relationship differed in terms of faith, power, performance, and support.

It didn't seem like a bad idea to get together with my old fans. Some fans were so enthusiastic that I still remembered them, but the man I met at the restaurant was not a fan I remembered. He was probably one of the countless fans who came to the stadium.

Actually, at first, I assumed he was saying he was nothing more than that. When the man with thinning hair said he was my fan, I thought he just wanted to be friends with me. But after listening to what he said, I learned he genuinely was my fan from when I was a professional gamer.

He had said he was 36 years old—just a little old-fashioned and younger than me.

I could tell that I was quite old for a human. Considering all the time distortions I had experienced on the 60th floor, how old was I now?

I didn't know. It may have only been a dozen years or might have been thousands. However long it was, it was long enough to make it difficult to calculate.

Whenever I was engrossed in doing something, I ignored the time. It was an old habit of mine.

It'd completely escape my mind, and wouldn't realize until later.

My mental health or proficiency had not been affected by the passage of time, and my habits remained unchanged. The tendency to forget about time had become more pronounced since I turned into a god. Perhaps you could say it was a side effect of gaining godhood.

Changing habits was not easy.

“Quest Window.”

A hologram, akin to a system window, floated before my eyes. The Quest window contained the talks of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple. And there was only one thing they wanted from me.

[God of Duel-Return of Powers]

[God of Light-Zit Pop! Blow it up!]

[God of Death-Thanatode Purification] [1]

Some gods offered simple conditions like the God of Duel. Some asked for something like the God of Death. And some even asked for something as absurd as the God of Light.

What was I supposed to do for the God of Light?

Should I go to a planet with no one there and make it explode? Or maybe I should show him the incineration of a sub-dimensional space?

[God of Order-?]

[God of Adventure-?]

Some gods had question marks behind their names. These gods haven't specified what they wanted yet.

It was tricky. I had to wait to ask for something while the gods could freely ask me to do whatever they wanted. If I didn't obey, they would make it so that I wouldn't get what I wanted.

If that had been the only way, I'd be happy not to do anything overall. But this quest window was made by Kirikiri.

I didn't want to take it. I didn't like it very much, and above all, I was unwilling to do these tasks and didn't desire anything from the gods.

In the end, I still accepted it.

"I still don't like it."

Suddenly, Kirikiri's face hovered over the quest window. She looked a little disappointed.

"Heng, I made it. The system didn't make it."

“That’s why I took it.”

If Kirikiri had not made it, I would’ve never accepted it. Another reason for receiving the quest window was that it made communication with Kirikiri easier.

“Can I enter?” Kirikiri asked.

I nodded. Kirikiri disappeared from the quest window, and after a while, she popped out of the air.

“Tada! I’m here!”

“What are you so happy about?”

Kirikiri looked around.

“Is this a temple?”

“Mn.”

I was going to use this place as a temple. It was still plain in many ways, but I could leave that to Yong-yong. I knew he would decorate it enough to lead us to a world filled with grandeur and beauty.

“Heng, how’s the quest?”

“I’ll start when I connect to the 60th floor. I think I can do the quests one by one.”

I had to fulfill the requests of the gods one by one. Just in case, I had to make sure their conditions didn’t become twisted.

There was no such risk right now, so I was going to solve the simple ones first. The first thing to deal with was the God of Duel.

In the God of Duel’s case, there was nothing to worry about. He simply wanted his power returned. That was all.

There has been no talk of the price of using the power so far or if the power could be revoked, or offering a new power. I only had to give it back.

Until now, the God of Duel did not seem interested in how weak the power would be, and what changes I'd made. This simplistic way of thinking alone showed how harmless the God of Duel was.

The God of Duel was a god who did not become the enemy of anyone unless they created a situation in which he had to fight. And with my nature, the God of Duel could not threaten me even if I became his enemy.

"You're not trying to fight, are you?" Kirikiri asked with a slightly worried look.

"No. Do you think I'm a gangster who'll challenge anyone to a fight? "

"...Heng."

What was with that pause? I feel like she does think that way.

Bitter. An acrid taste lingered in my mouth.

I asked the question I had prepared. "I have a question."

"What is it?" Kirikiri was still very lively.

"What does the God of Adventure want from me?"

"Heng-heng, I don't know."

I looked seriously at Kirikiri, who spoke in a mischievous tone.
"Kirikiri."

At my pressing voice, Kirikiri puffed out her cheeks. Then she began to engage in a serious conversation. "I'm worried about you."

"What?"

There's nothing to worry about. I don't think I'm going to be in huge danger again.

Even so, I was confident of getting through.

"You're taking one step—one step towards your goal. I expected everyone to give up on the way, but you came all the way here. I don't think you'll give up, change your mind, or break before you reach your goal."

The question grew bigger in my mind.

Then why?

"I'm worried about what will happen after you achieve your goal."

I sat in silence for a moment to think of the meaning behind her statement.

"Everything has an end. You, who always moves forward, will have to stop someday. Not because of a wall you cannot surpass, but because you will inevitably reach the finish line."

"So, what do you want from me?" I unconsciously answered in a slightly high-pitched voice.

"Heng-heng, don't be so angry," Kirikiri laughed playfully.

As always.

"You've always acted according to what you think is right. Naturally, you'll get the consent of the God of Adventure." Kirikiri, who left with those last words, disappeared back into the air.

The temple, which had been a little noisy for a while, was desolate again. My quiet sigh echoed in the temple. As expected, it was tricky.

Chapter 313

Japan (1)

“Ah, I’m so drunk.”

Don’t joke like that. Kim Min-hyuk managed to swallow the words that bubbled up to his throat.

Hochi was emptying his glass of soju and then stumbled drunkenly and slurred his words. Of course, this situation wasn’t real.

Even the average Awakened couldn’t easily get drunk, so Hochi couldn’t have gotten drunk after just a few glasses of soju.

Kim Min-hyuk endured Hochi’s behaviour with a patient heart, pretending nothing was wrong.

“Hey! Anyone can get drunk if they drink! Why are you looking at me like that?”

Of course, a person can get drunk while drinking. They may also behave differently than usual. However, he thought it wasn’t right of Hochi to pretend to be drunk even though he wasn’t.

Whatever Kim Min-hyuk thought, Hochi kept emptying his glass. He lowered his head and sighed loudly.

Hochi looked drunk as hell, and his acting was exceptional.

“Hey... I have a problem,” Hochi said.

Hochi was pretending to be drunk because he wanted to talk about this problem.

From what he read in the books, characters often talked aboutt their troubles while drunk and revealed rather embarrassing stories in the open. Most importantly, there was no worry about being ashamed of them.

His train of thought was a side effect of learning about the world only through writing.

Kim Min-hyuk thought about ignoring Hochi's words for a while, but he finally decided to answer back.

"What problem do you have?"

"Career Problem."

That was a grave concern. Unlike Kim Min-hyuk, who was dispirited, Hochi was extremely serious.

"What should I do in the future?"

Kim Min-hyuk had nothing to say. He didn't know much about Hochi.

He was proud to know quite a bit about Lee Ho-jae, but the only thing he knew about Hochi was that he was Lee Jo-jae's clone, liked to eat, read novels, and was occasionally childish.

So Kim Min-hyuk gave him the best answer he could think of. "Would it be possible to live doing what you want to do?"

Hochi became more serious upon hearing those words.

* * *

Kim Min-hyuk eventually decided to give Hochi a job.

That was also a silent indication that he would rather throw a bomb at others rather than suffer from a stress-induced attack.

And after hearing Hochi's troubles, there was one thing he was sure of. Kim Min-hyuk couldn't leave Hochi, who was agonizing over his future, alone at home. Even if Kim Min-hyuk tried to stop him, he was sure that Hochi would go out and try different things.

Kim Min-hyuk quickly looked for work for Hochi. He resolved the issues with the government, which he had considered most seriously.

Instead of letting Hochi do some work for the government, Kim Min-hyuk quickly got the government to agree to cover up the Seoul Station incident neatly.

A few days later...

Hochi, Seregia, and Yong-yong boarded a plane departing for Japan.

“Can’t we just fly straight there?” Seregia asked. She laid on her back with her pulled back to its limit. She was talking with her head turned to the side.

Hochi thought it was a little strange for her to ask that while she was having more fun eating in-flight meals earlier than anyone else.

“We can’t. We’re going with the Korean government.”

After finishing talking, Hochi glanced at Lee Joon-suk. Lee Joon-suk nodded as if he was right.

Flying without permission came under the jurisdiction of one law or another.

However, the biggest problem would be if the Japanese side perceived the unauthorized entry of Hochi and his party as a serious threat.

In that case, the situation would become very dangerous. For Japan, at least.

Lee Joon-suk was extremely anxious.

He had no idea why Kim Min-hyuk was sending them to Japan with him.

In fact, he had just gotten his hands on a bomb.

All the more so because Lee Joon-suk had seen Yong-yong cry in front of the corpse of a bloody mantis in Pyongyang.

No one knew who was going to die by mistake this time.

He had hoped Hochi would clamp down Yong-yong's behavior a little more, but Hochi didn't seem to have any intention of doing so.

Compared to Lee Joon-suk, who was in deep thoughts, Hochi was busy looking out the window.

He couldn't get enough of the scenery outside the window.

It was beautiful.

He wondered why the others were not interested.

The cool open blue sea made his heart cool just by looking at it.

Maybe it was because Hochi was born and raised on the 60th floor.

Yong-yong was too, but Hochi's position was slightly different.

When Hochi was born, the 60th floor was a place that had collapsed because of Lee Ho-jae's whims and he had to rebuild it from time to time.

It had always been dark, chaotic.

It was Hochi's daily routine to spend time in the rubble of some collapsed buildings.

Ever since Hochi was declared useless, he had always been stuck in the rubble.

At that time, Lee Ho-jae didn't even want to think of Hochi.

He may have wanted to treat it as if it had never happened.

Remains of buildings piled up in a corner because he was too lazy to rebuild after destroying them.

With that, Hochi thought his situation was no different.

Maybe that's why he was used to being trapped in a narrow place.

And when his eyes fell on the expansive view in front of him, he felt a strange emotion surging in him.

* * *

“Wow!”

He let out a gasp.

Was the airport supposed to be this noisy?

Hochi thought to himself.

A camera flash went off from the front.

It was distracting.

Seregia quickly disappeared.

The reporters and the crowd who witnessed it became more surprised, and shouts and whispers rang out.

Lee Joon-suk was looking at Hochi and Yong-yong with anxious eyes.

Of course, it was a welcome from Japan, but usually, Awakened people did not like the situation.

“Hello!”

Fortunately, it seemed that Yong-yong liked it.

Lee Joon-suk's heart was about to jump out of his throat.

At the moment, he was very nervous because he thought Yong-yong was going to do something else other than greeting.

His only consolation was that Hochi was holding Yong-yong.

Initially, he had to give a brief interview, but Lee Joon-suk tried to get them out of the airport as soon as possible.

With his subpar Japanese, he urged the bodyguards to move ahead. He claimed to be a guard and sent the party through the crowd.

Sometimes whenever Yong-yong gave a high five to someone's hand, a bead of sweat rolled down Lee Joon-suk's face.

Only after getting in the waiting limousine did Lee Joon-suk breathe with ease.

Although he had superhuman lung capacity, the lack of breathing from psychological pressure was inevitable.

"But is the airport always like this? You used to come to Korea very quietly," asked Hochi.

Of course, he always came quietly to Korea.

Kim Min-hyuk had never tried to expose his entrance to the public.

This trip was a huge sensation in Korea, too.

Hochi's dispatch to Japan was reported as breaking news.

The government tried to arrange a press conference, including them.

They even scheduled a visit to the Blue House and a meeting and planned to broadcast the entire departure process live, but all of it fell through because of Kim Min-hyuk's fierce opposition.

In the end, the government had to be satisfied with putting the words "government supervision" in front of the party's departure to Japan.

"Because Min-hyuk isn't in Japan."

Hochi was quickly convinced.

There were a few more reasons.

Kim Min-hyuk had made sure that the Japanese government understood his intentions, but the Japanese government ignored it.

It wasn't a correct decision for this situation, but the Japanese government was in a hurry.

While the world was slowly stabilizing, Japan was still one of the countries classified as the front line.

It was difficult for them, considering that most of the people on the front lines were originally from third-rate countries or remote areas with few people.

In the meantime, the influx of Awakened was decreasing, and the Awakened people responsible for the Japanese front were starting to leave Japan one by one.

Even awakened Japanese have begun to stick to the goal of individual advancement rather than joining in melting the crisis.

The people thought it would be better to go abroad before it was too late.

The sun was setting.

It was so dark that he couldn't see it beyond the horizon.

That was the world's judgment on Japan, and the truth was.

“It’s my first time out of the country.”

Hochi mumbled.

Not really.

The South Pole was also a foreign place.

Anyway, this was the first time that Hochi had ever been abroad in his perception.

“I’ve been to Japan.” said the mantis, who was sitting quietly in the box.

“Oh, yeah?” Hochi asked in wonder.

And Lee Joon-suk felt gloomy inside.

He didn’t care about that.

The tiny collection box was hanging on Yong-yong’s neck.

The wart that looked like a winged female human being in that box.

This was going to become a huge mess in its own way.

‘I don’t care anymore. It’s going to work somehow.’

After thinking for a while, Lee Joon-suk finally gave up.

The mantis talked about its experiences when it came to Japan.

“The eastern coast of Japan is a disaster. Awakened people from different countries and groups form a military camp, and monsters pop up once in a while from the coast. It’s almost like a mobile game.”

A G-class monster referring to mobile games.

It was the end of life.

“Sometimes monsters come out in large numbers, or stronger ones come out. Humans call them ‘waves’.”

“Oh.”

Hochi was very interested.

The wave in eastern Japan was a very grave threat that had been mentioned a few years ago as ‘The reason for the end of East Asia’.

“Then I got mixed up with the Awakened. It’s so crazy when there’s a wave. Well, there wasn’t much talking or anything. We just ate all that we can see.”

The mantis recalled the days with a sigh...

Lee Joon-suk had no choice but to feel disgusted at the mantis talking in a nostalgic tone.

Among those who died in Japan were Lee Joon-suk’s former colleagues.

“You can’t eat anyone now.”

“Did you get caught?”

Yong-yong and Hochi said to the mantis.

Unfortunately, no one among them felt the same way as Lee Joon-suk.

* * *

“I’m sure.”

Park Min answered to the voice that asked again.

The voice asked Park Min as if it was dissatisfied.

‘Your voice sounds weak. What’s the matter?’

At the question, Park Min started to feel angry.

No matter how hard he tried to conceal his feelings, the god tried to bring out his hidden feelings.

Park Min asked back like a beast growling in a low tone.

“...what do you mean?”

God was amused to hear the voice.

‘Now it sounds better. That’s not weak, but I do sense hatred.’

Park Min didn’t say anything more.

Instead, a crackling sound came out of his mouth quietly.

‘Why can’t you be a little more grateful? I think I saved your life.’

The voice wasn’t serious, asking for a severe change of attitude.

Instead, it was a playful, teasing way of speaking.

The voice was right.

If Park Min had met Lee Ho-jae as scheduled, his head would have been pulled out at once.

Lee Ho-jae had no intention of hunting G-class in Park Min’s mind, and he could probably see that Park Min wanted to take advantage of the confusion that G-class would bring.

The result would have been the same, even if any excuse had been prepared.

The god spoke to Park Min, who was struggling in the office.

Let's make a deal.

The deal was simple.

Let's cooperate to drive out our common enemy named Lee Ho-jae.

First, the god made Park Min and Lee Ho-jae not meet, and Park Min decided to let them know Lee Ho-jae and his party's ways.

The god kept his word.

By murdering Park Min's father, who was lying in bed.

It was Park Min himself who wanted to avoid Lee Ho-jae.

However, he did not want to make such an extreme escape by his father's death.

'Are you sure you have the right information?'

He wanted to yell at him to get out of his head at once, with a hate-filled voice.

But he couldn't scream like that, since he would just be driving a knife inside his own chest.

He could not give the god's assistance up now.

The result was obvious if the god refused to help.

He would either hide somewhere and live as a fugitive for the rest of his life, or he'll die because of Lee Ho-jae.

He could have died at once by the hands of the God of Hope.

It wasn't because he was wasting his life.

Nor was it because of his ambition.

What had already been lost was too great.

To make it meaningless, Park Min had to win in the end.

There was no turning back, no breaking-off, no way out.

“...yes, only the three of them are going to Japan. Lee Ho-jae is still in Seoul. And he was said to out-of-town for a while because he had some work to do.”

Chapter 314

Japan (2)

As per usual, after Kim Min-hyuk arrived, he said, “How come you seem to be resting every time I visit?”

It was a statement I used to hear in middle school. How come you’re always playing games?

“I just came out, so I’m resting.” It was the same excuse I used in middle school. But it was true.

“No, really. Four times a day? Why do I only ever see you resting?”

Well, when I worked, I sped up the time. I just wanted to rest when it was time to rest.

Considering the time manipulation, it was highly likely that Kim Min-hyuk would see me resting when he visited.

I couldn’t explain it in detail, so I just shrugged and turned my eyes to the quest window.

“That’s the quest window, isn’t it? I see you looking at it often,” asked Kim Min-hyuk.

I had no choice but to keep looking into the quest window. It continuously renewed conditions. Maybe postponing the quests was the wrong decision.

“Amazing. Solving the Hundred Gods Temple’s quests and taking ownership of the Tutorial in return.”

“What’s amazing about it?”

“The fact that you do business with the gods.”

That was not a lot to be amazed at. However, becoming an apostle and getting power in the first place was probably a big deal for him.

Oh, had Kim Min-hyuk ever gotten a power skill? Probably not. He was from Normal difficulty level after all, so that was understandable.

[God of Death: Destroy the Ruler's Base in Thanatode and eliminate the Ruler]

It had changed again. Initially, the quest proposed by the God of Death was the purification of Thanatode.

Why was it changing?

Had the gods started to give out more difficult quests because of the power I showed in Antarctica?

That could have been the reason.

But I felt the quests were getting more and more violent. It wasn't just the quests given by the God of Death, but most of the quests given by other gods were becoming violent as well.

The quests to check, purify, search, and retrieve slowly turned into pursuits to destroy, eradicate, and murder.

There were factions in the Hundred Gods Temple: gods who defended the Rulers and the gods who didn't.

Kirikiri said the Hundred Gods Temple was bound to spread to the Rulers, and that there was a god who interacted with the Rulers.

There were two factions: gods who intruded into other gods' realm and blocked the Rulers who were extracting their source, and the gods doing business with the Rulers.

On the other hand, there were some gods who were similar to Kirikiri and were not happy with the Rulers' work. They showed more of a neutrality or a wait-and-see attitude.

The complex relationships each god had, even outside of factions, were also intertwined.

The place where gods with violent relationships gathered was the Hundred Gods Temple. This system of gods helped to prevent them from causing problems.

But in this system there is a way to ignore the regulations: giving me quests.

This was going to be a mess. No matter how much I thought about it, I still felt the same. It was bound to be a mess.

First of all, I tried to understand the relationships between the gods by looking at the quest window.

I couldn't figure out which faction was making the quest and with what intentions, but I had to know which side had more power.

There could be a situation where I had to side with one of them after all. I read the quest window carefully and looked at Kim Min-hyuk again. Kim Min-hyuk had taken out his cell phone and was looking at something.

"What is it?"

"I'm having a meeting with the Japanese Prime Minister."

I glanced at Kim Minhyuk's cell phone. Hochi, Yong-yong, Lee Joon-suk, and people who appeared to be Japanese government employees, sat side by side on chairs.

I'd seen this scene a lot on the news: politicians pretending to be in a heated debate for the camera.

Wait, where is Seregia? I couldn't see her.

Yong-yong, who remained calm, was whispering in Hochi's ear. I couldn't hear the words over the cell phone.

"What is he talking about?"

"Yong-yong says he's sleepy."

Then Hochi and Yong-yong disappeared from the cell phone screen. Empty chairs remained in their absence. The Japanese Prime Minister and Lee Joon-suk seemed to be confused.

"Bwahahaha!" I couldn't help but laugh. It was quite hilarious to see the elderly Japanese Prime Minister and Lee Joon-suk look around, confused.

Secondly, I couldn't help but laugh at the sight of bodyguards rushing in and surrounding the Prime Minister.

"...You are having fun? I'm dying here."

Yeah, it's fun. It was strange that it wasn't funny for him.

"...Eventually, an accident took place."

"What's wrong with it? I think Yong-yong went back to the hotel for a while because he was sleepy."

It was wrong to try to turn them into political figures in the first place.

"I don't know... I just don't know," Kim Min-hyuk mumbled with his face scrunched up. He watched his phone for a while before heading back to the temple.

I'll take care of it.

* * *

When Hochi and Yong-yong met Lee Joon-suk again, Lee Joon-suk was in tears.

Lee Joon-suk said in a voice filled with resentment and sorrow, "You can't just go away like that."

"Hi!" Regardless, Yong-yong excitedly greeted Lee Joon-suk. While Lee Joon-suk was thinking about accepting his greeting or not, Yong-yong approached and patted him on the back.

"Haha, so cute."

The human figure, who was upset with Yong-yong, looked cute to him. It was amusing to see a small Yong-yong struggle to hit Lee Joon-suk's back because he was so short in comparison.

Unfortunately, whenever Yong-yong's palm touched his back, Lee Joon-suk's backbone jolted in pain. Eventually, Lee Joon-suk had to bury the strong complaints he had held in his mind all day long.

Instead, he timidly said, "People's attitudes will be different from yesterday."

"Why?"

"...You went away like that yesterday, so of course..."

Of course, Hochi didn't understand. Lee Joon-suk had to break it down and explain.

"It's considered impolite to leave for personal reasons suddenly. Even if you have important personal reasons, it's not at all a good idea to disappear without informing someone."

"Ahhh, I get it."

"So these are table manners," Hochi mumbled to himself.

It had a subtle difference, but he understood anyway.

"...And more than anything, yesterday's meeting was really important. It was being broadcasted live all over Japan. It was not a private meeting, but a meeting with the Prime Minister representing Japan. The Japanese people may think we ignored them because we abruptly left.”

Public opinion.

Of course, Hochi was well aware of public opinion’s importance, but he couldn’t relate to it.

So Hochi had no choice but to face people without any complaints.

The Japanese, who he faced again following yesterday, had more hostility than Hochi had expected.

* * *

The travel to the east coast scheduled for tomorrow had been postponed. The entire schedule seemed to have been changed, or more accurately, cancelled. Inside the vehicle heading for the eastern coast, Hochi was delighted.

“Sweet!” Hochi exclaimed and gave a high-five to Yong-yong.

Lee Joon-suk... looked very serious, but even he had decided to turn a blind eye to this situation. He had no choice but to be glad that all the troublesome meetings were canceled.

They had faced people who had come to dislike them, but they were just a little bothered, not offended. Instead, they felt sorry for the Japanese. Lee Joon-suk didn’t express his bad sentiments about Hochi and the rest.

It was the right expression to say that he couldn’t. Hochi’s party would be a big help to Japan, which was in crisis.

He just swallowed back his words and lost the admiration that had risen in him yesterday. He felt slight contempt and annoyance as well as a strong sense of shame, humiliation and jealousy.

To Hochi, this was all a surprise. Surprisingly enough, he felt sorry for them...

Lee Joon-suk's sense of belonging to the country was well known to Hochi. But he didn't know it had been strong enough to hurt his own feelings. It was almost as if he thought of the nation as his family or more.

"I can't be an Awakened."

"What?" asked Lee Joon-suk.

Before coming to Japan, Kim Min-hyuk had made a suggestion to Hochi, who was worried about his career.

"If you're worried about what you're going to do, why don't you try being an Awakened?"

It was a good thing to save people, a source of envy, make a lot of money, and it's a job that Hochi could do well.

There were many advantages.

Hochi also seriously thought about it. Most of all, Hochi was deeply impressed by the fact that he was told he could do it well. But now that he saw it, it was a little hard.

What kind of a human hero would he be if he couldn't empathize with humans? For Hochi, their praise and support would also be meaningless, alongside their criticism as well.

Suddenly, Yong-yong raised his head. The next moment, Hochi sensed it, too.

"This is the east, right?" Hochi questioned, pointing to the direction of the car's progress.

Lee Joon-suk nodded.

"Yes. Is something wrong?"

“Oh, was the... wave due today?”

“No, the wave doesn’t start on a set day. It only occurs at a certain interval, and the opening date is uncertain,” Lee Joon-suk explained quickly.

“What about the wave cycle?”

“It usually occurs for a period of two to three months.”

Hochi’s expression changed. He looked dubious. Hochi thought for a while and said to Lee Joon-suk, “If it showed up every two or three months, the Earth would have been destroyed.”

“...What?”

“Mantis, is that how it’s supposed to be?” Hochi asked the mantis in Yong-yong’s box.

However, the mantis hid in the closet that Yong-yong had put in the box.

“Maybe not.”

Hochi grabbed Lee Joon-suk’s hand.

“We’re going to teleport.”

“Yes.”

Lee Joon-suk had experienced enough teleportation in the Tutorial. He didn’t have to do anything. The next moment, they were all moved to the shore.

Unlike the sunny and bright part of the city, this place was dark with black clouds covering the sky. Screams and shouts came from all over the place.

Modern artillery were firing continuously, and Awakened men were struggling to maintain the front somehow.

Monsters were crawling out of the coast endlessly. Lee Joon-suk used his skills as soon as he figured out the situation.

With the sound of falling thunder, a powerful lightning bolt was thrown toward the sea.

The Awakened and monsters couldn't use their power on the blocked front, so they attacked the distant sea.

The effect was sufficient. The bodies of monsters trying to climb ashore from the Pacific Ocean floated up to the surface one after another.

“Oh, he's strong?” Hochi mentioned in surprise.

Honestly, it was amazing. Lee Joon-suk was more powerful than he had thought. Thanks to this, the endless attacks by monsters on the coast were soon cut off.

Now the problem was monsters sticking to the front. Of course, the ones at the rear had been blown away, so the monsters on the front lines would be cleared up soon.

The less damage-dealers, the better.

“Soul Summon.” At this time, Hochi used a Power Skill. A little ghost, the size of a pinky, appeared beside Hochi.

‘Kuwaah!’ The ghost roared with an exaggerated yell, raising its short arm.

Of course, it wasn't scary. It was like the roar of a kitten.

“Long time no see.”

‘Kuaaaaah!’ The ghost responded to Hochi's greeting with another roar, and it flew to the front at Hochi's instructions.

As it flew away, the ghost split into parts. From one to two, two to four. In just a few minutes, it divided into thousands.

When they arrived at the front, the ghosts had spread all over the water. The split ghosts entered into the monsters' bodies one by one.

The monsters moving on the shore soon began to stop moving completely and started to gather in one place.

Humans open-fired at the monsters gathering at one point, ignoring even the front-liners, and then smoothly bombarded the monsters.

“All clean...” Hochi murmured satisfactorily.

Now it was time to deal with the monsters that remained in the sea.

“Telekinesis.” Hochi once again used his power skill. The water in the ocean slowly began to soar into the sky.

Soon the water rose as high as the buildings in the coastal city and completely revealed the underwater scene. Under the water, the gates on the bed were visible to the naked eye.

It looked like a barnacle. The gate was hidden under the sea and would've been difficult to extinguish by using physical prowess.

There were even some gates on the coast as well as on the far inland sea. It would be best just to stop it.

“Mana oppression. Mana seals.” Hochi directly interfered with the gate and closed the entrance of the space.

He had used it many times in the dungeons, so opening and closing the gate was a piece of cake. He cleared away all the gates and placed the seawater down again. He had dealt with gates that were quite far away, so the wave wouldn't happen again.

All the Dungeon Roads that led to the chaos in the first place were gone.

The shore was filled with silence. All the screaming monsters were dead, and the men who were supposed to shout victory were speechless, staring blankly at Hochi and the party.

The scene where the sea water rose overhead was an unimaginable show of power.

“There’s one more thing left.”

“I’ll do it this time!”

Yong-yong stepped out in high spirits. Hochi, of course, said yes. All of a sudden, the monsters’ bodies grew red.

The bodies of the destroyed and burning monsters began to move slowly. A huge magic circle was carved on the bodies that kept pulsating.

An unknown darkness crawled over the magic circle. The surrounding air had become heavy. The dark sky turned red.

All human eyes were fixed on the dark. Nothing could be pinpointed, but they couldn’t take their eyes off it.

Hochi wondered as he watched the darkness from the magic circle. If such a thing had appeared on Earth many times, the earth would have been destroyed.

Perhaps with just a single appearance, it seemed capable of exterminating all humans. Now that it had appeared, he was just glad they were here. On the other hand, he thought that this might have happened because they came here.

[Memories of the Dead. A host of vengeance. A parasite of life.]

The darkness, which appeared to mutter words that didn’t make sense, looked straight at Hochi and the party, ignoring all the humans around it.

Yong-yong spoke, facing the darkness, “Go in.”

The darkness seeped into the magic circle.

Chapter 315

Japan (3)

The darkness that appeared from the magic circle returned to it as if it were natural. It was a vain exit compared to the spectacular appearance.

“What was that?” Hochi asked, bewildered.

Humans, affected by the darkness that had just appeared, stood frozen.

Instead of answering Hochi’s question, Yong-yong focused on untying the box he had on his neck. He handed it to Hochi.

“Why me?”

“Take care of it, Uncle.”

“Yes, well, that’s not difficult.”

Hochi felt somewhat dubious. Yong-yong acted as if he was ignoring his question. Of course, Yong-yong wouldn’t have done that usually, so Hochi thought he was distracted.

Hochi didn’t see the mantis in the box Yong-yong gave him. Hochi peered inside, wondering if he could spot it, but he couldn’t find it anywhere. He shook the box lightly.

The door of the mini closet burst open, and the mantis rolled out.

“AH!”

“...Why were you hiding there?”

The mantis turned to Hochi, shouting, "I was scared!" It didn't feel ashamed in admitting that.

The mantis, who had explained his behavior, crawled back into the closet.^[1] Hochi shook his head and hung the bag around his neck.

"I'll be right back, Uncle."

"Oh, okay. But where are you going?"

For now, he was going to allow Yong-yong to go wherever he went, but he didn't know where Yong-yong wanted to visit. Yong-yong didn't answer Hochi's question again.

Instead, Yong-yong flew toward the magic circle that had just summoned the darkness. As Yong-yong approached, the magic circle flashed and disappeared along with Yong-yong.

"...Where did he go all of a sudden?" Bewildered, Lee Joon-suk asked about Yong-yong with a more perplexing expression than Hochi.

"I think he went after the darkness using the magic circle that was just summoned."

"Will it be all right?"

Hochi was confused, but he was sure it'd be okay because Yong-yong was a dragon.

If Lee Ho-jae had disappeared that way, Hochi would have been worried—worried for the unfortunate people who would encounter Lee Ho-jae. And Hochi wouldn't know what kind of accident Lee Ho-jae would have caused and when he would return.

But if it was Yong-yong, Hochi wasn't worried.

"We're done dealing with the wave, so it'll be okay if Yong-yong goes out for a while..."

“Gwuaah!” At that moment, a huge monster rose from the sea and roared.

Their surroundings began to change rapidly.

When the darkness appeared, the sky changed, and the air became heavy. A forest appeared where the coast had once stood.

But now, a forest appeared where the coast was. The middle of the ocean where the monster was seen became a lake.

No, it wouldn’t be accurate to say their surroundings were changing. To be precise, somebody summoned Hochi, Lee Joon-suk, and the other Awakened people from Japan’s eastern coast to a different place.

“Well!”

They were in the fictitious world that the monster had created. That monster, located in the lake’s center, had tentacles flying in all directions; it was a monster Hochi knew well.

The 40th floor of the Tutorial Hell Difficulty Level was a monster that seemed impossible to deal with without the help of a Hundred Gods Temple’s apostle.

This monster seemed like a carbon copy of the beast from the Tutorial.

Yong-yong’s absence didn’t matter. The mere fact that it brought Hochi into the world of its mind meant that it was different from the copy on the 40th floor.

“It’s kind of weird.” Hochi couldn’t believe this happened as soon as Yong-yong went somewhere. It was also strange that Yong-yong was not aware of that monster. Of course, Hochi himself didn’t notice until the monster summoned him to this world, but Yong-yong’s case was different.

Hochi, who had been pondering for a while, decided to call for the strongest reinforcements to cope with the existing problem.

“Seregia.” Unfortunately, there was no reply.

“Seregia? Seregia! Oh, crap.” There was no response.

Hochi scratched his head and said, “Hey, I think we’re screwed,” to Lee Jun-seok, who was looking at him desperately.

* * *

[POV: Lee Ho-Jae]

[Please.]

[Please.]

I was so sick of this. It was not easy to ignore the countless pleas.

[Please.]

It had been quite a while since I had absorbed the God of Evil. His ability and strength were insignificant, but fortunately, he knew a lot of useful information.

I was pleased, but there was one fatal side effect.

[Please.]

The pleas of the God of Evil rang in my heart. It was quite annoying.

Recently, it has become more frequent. It seemed that his absorption was almost over.

The God of Evil knew his remaining presence would soon disappear, and hence, he had been pleading even more desperately than before.

Someone came into the temple; it wasn’t an intruder. He came in too defenselessly to be an intruder. No barriers were invoked.

The time flow inside and outside the temple was completely different due to time acceleration.

Only three beings could come in here at will without touching the barrier: Yong-Yong, who could make a hole in the time axis I created, and Hochi and Seregia, who were not affected by the time axis at all.

“Seregia.”

“I’m bored.”

Seregia, can you please make an effort to at least attempt to be interested or perhaps pretend? This is the only thing I ask of you.

I prayed earnestly for it but didn’t say it out loud. I knew Seregia would simply ignore me.

“Other gods have intervened on this planet.”

I know.

Three on the Japanese side and one in Korea. Among them, the one in Korea was the God of Hope. They had been quite busy for a few days.

“Don’t I have to deal with it?”

“It’s alright.”

The gods’ intentions were apparent. It was like they were keeping a watch on Hochi or Yong-yong while I was building a passageway between the 60th floor and Earth.

That was all. It would be ambiguous to target me directly.

There were too few things on Earth that could bind me to the earth in the first place. My whole family was dead, and Kim Min-hyuk had the Old Man and Grandma.

Lee Joon-suk was sent with Hochi and Yong-yong.

“Why are the gods suddenly coming out like this?”

“Are you annoyed?” I asked Seregia.

She snorted expressionlessly.

“The gods behind this are, of course, not from the Hundred Gods Temple or the Pantheon. If they were, they wouldn’t be able to move like this.”

And the gods not affiliated with the temples, were usually from the Rulers’ side.

This was important.

“Let’s put ourselves in their shoes. Suddenly, a new god came out of the Tutorial they had made to keep the Rulers in check. And that god decided to do one favor each in return for the Tutorial. Of course, they’ll think that the god is going to attack them.”

It was true that opinions were divided within the temples, and there were signs that it would be a mess.

The mainstream opinion of the Hundred Gods Temple was “Anti-Rulers.”

Otherwise, the gods wouldn’t have made the Tutorial and try to nurture apostles.

“But one of those Rulers, the God of Evil, approached me to compromise, and it worked in vain.”

“Did you get any useful information?”

“I did.” I gained information about the relationship between the Ruler and gods, the gods’ ability and power, and their territory’s location.

The last one was the most important.

If I knew the Rulers' planets and dimensions' exact location, I could always go there and try to attack. My base of support, the 60th and 61st floors, ironically, were protected by the Tutorial.

Attacks were impossible on me, but the Rulers must defend themselves without knowing when and where I would appear. In the end, the Rulers had no choice but to take out the option of striking first.

A strike against Yong-yong and Hochi, not my floors.

"You must have known there would be an attack then."

"Of course."

Seregia stared at me for a moment.

I uttered the title that I hadn't used for forever. "Soldier."

"Oh my Lord, Warrior. I feel like it's been hundreds of years since I heard that."

It may have been more than that. Unlike me, who had a strange feeling, Seregia was quite serious.

"Warrior, that's a dangerous way of thinking."

I felt a little sorry because of Seregia's harsh way of speaking. She was still worried about me.

"It's alright. It's not what you think."

"Can I hear the explanation?"

"This is a trap for Yong-yong to lure his enemies... It's not what you think. It's to drive dumb pigs who don't recognize tigers into the cage of the tiger."

Unfortunately, this easy and convenient method was only possible when the pigs didn't recognize tigers.

I couldn't use it twice, so I needed to get out of the way so that the pigs could run more excitedly. Until the pigs enter the cage, they won't recognize the tiger.

"So, we just have to wait and see what Yong-yong will catch."

"I see. So you both know the plan?"

"Of course."

I explained the plan to both Yong-yong and Hochi. I explained to them in a message to go on a trip to deceive the God of Hope, who was hiding in Seoul's corner. Both would have understood.

At least... I knew Yong-yong would have. Hochi also usually acted like he didn't listen to me, but he listened to me closely.

On that day, he looked at me like a barking dog and started reading again, but that was just how he usually was.

* * *

[POV: Lee Hochi]

It has been strange since a while ago. Is this what Ho-jae was rambling about before?

It was strange to see a mighty monster wave as a coincidence. Powerful beings were also appearing one after another.

He couldn't think of this happening when Hochi and his party came to Japan by accident. On the contrary, when Hochi and his party came to Japan, this had happened.

After finishing organizing his thoughts, Hochi decided to explain the monster to Lee Joon-suk.

"It's the monster that appeared on the 40th floor of Hell Difficulty."

“...Isn’t it easy to defeat then?”

“On the 40th floor, two more Hundred Gods Temple’s apostles followed, plus the apostles of the God of Nature as well.”

Considering that, the power of that monster was not as strong as the 40th floor.

Lee Ho-jae, who had been clearing the stages between the 30th and 40th floors, could not even think of killing the monster alone.

When that monster first appeared, he ran away first.

“Ho-jae ran away...?”

“Of course.”

Lee Ho-jae didn’t care about his pride or how people viewed him; he only cared about winning. He would retreat or even lie and beg as if it were second nature, as long as he comes out on top.

Hochi went on to explain.

“It’s the kind of monster who drags the opponent into its world without the opponent noticing. In that world, the opponent undergoes the fear effect.”

There were many monstrous animals and plants in the forest. Some of them were so strong that the victims didn’t want to go in, but were still chased by them.

The one who was strong enough to survive the entire day would meet with the Spirit king. That monster looked twice as strong as the copy that had appeared in the Tutorial.

“...Is there any way? Weakness or anything?”

“I don’t know its weakness, but I have a master plan for victory.”

“What is it?”

“To hold out until Yong-yong returns,” Hochi said with a grin.

It was actually a perfect plan. Hochi was confident enough to avoid it and buy time. Upon hearing the plan, Lee Joon-suk staggered, rather than being relieved.

“Are you alright?”

“Yes... No, suddenly...”

Lee Joon-suk’s eyelids twitched. His breathing was so ragged that his chest hurt, and an uncomfortable feeling suffocating him.

Hochi had to hurry from the side to see if his arms and legs were shaking.

It was because of the monster’s mental attack. When faced with unbearable fear, the human body pushed itself to death to escape from the fear.

Lee Joon-suk and the other Awakened, who had been summoned along with the two, were facing the same predicament.

Most of them had already lost their sanity and passed out. In the meantime, some would occasionally have seizures or start screaming.

Hochi looked at them with pity for a moment and used his skill.

“Wings of Talaria.”

This rare fraud skill, presented by the God of Adventure to Lee Ho-jae, gave tremendous amounts of buffs to himself and his companions.

In addition, Lee Ho-jae’s had made some modifications to it that made it become a near-perfect all-rounder skill.

“Are you feeling better?”

“Yes...” Lee Joon-suk answered breathlessly.

The fallen Awakened also stopped screaming and having seizures as if the burden had been relieved a bit.

“Hyung... if there’s nothing else you can do but stall, can I try my hand?”

“You?” Hochi asked back in a worried voice.

“Yes, thanks to you, I don’t think I have any problems moving around.”

He was quite confident compared to before when he had been struggling. The plan was simple. Lee Joon-suk would attack the monster, and Hochi would assist.

“I’d like to ask you a question, can you protect people so that I can attack as much as I want?”

“Of course.”

“Because my ability extends in all directions, people can get hurt. So...”

“Oh, I can help with it.”

Hochi was confident that even the other Awakened’s hairs wouldn’t be hurt no matter what Lee Joon-suk did.

And even if Lee Joon-suk failed, Hochi actively supported Lee Joon-suk’s plan because he could wait for Yong-yong as initially planned.

“Don’t mind about the people; just focus on that monster. It won’t be easy. The monster’s body is so strong that it’ll be hard to cut through.”

“I can cut through,” replied Lee Joon-suk.

The excited voice made him feel surprised beyond expectations.

“I’m good at slicing.”

Chapter 316

Japan (4)

“Can I come out?”

While I was looking at the question window for any changes, Kirikiri’s face appeared on the hologram.

I allowed her.

“Tada-an!” Kirikiri popped out as usual. I had become used to it since she kept appearing in the same manner.

“What are you doing?”

“I need to ask you something.”

I could predict her question. More likely than not, her question was about the chaos happening in Japan.

“Why is Yong-yong so strong?”

Kirikiri’s question was a little unexpected. She seemed to be more curious about Yong-yong rather than the mess in Japan.

Why was Yong-yong so strong?

What kind of question was that? Yong-yong was always strong.

From the moment he was born, I nurtured him: from his diet to his living environment and language, I taught him everything myself.

Fortunately, unlike Hochi, Yong-yong had a burning desire to rise or win. I enjoyed teaching him, and he had exceptional talent. I was unsure if the talent was due to his characteristics as a dragon or whether Yong-yong himself was a prodigy. But if not either of those, then it was thanks to my superior teachings.

It was challenging to figure out if he was strong because I raised him as my son or strong because I taught him. At the age of two, his powers were on par with Hochi's, and soon, Yong-yong even surpassed him.

The 61st floor followers were hard to compare to Yong-yong, and the Old Man and Grandma were far superior.

By the age of five or six, as I made the 60th floor independent of the Tutorial, I made him a room independent of my area. Considering that Yong-yong's room was not just a 'room,' but a massive space the size of a dimension, it was hard to guess how fast he'd continue to grow.

Of course, Yong-yong's growth was completely different due to how the time flowed in that dimension. But even considering that, it was surprisingly fast.

"Yong-yong was always strong."

"Uh... is he stronger than you?"

What is she talking about?

I flicked Kirikiri's forehead.

"Ahhh!" Kirikiri rolled on the floor, holding her forehead.

"What a crybaby."

"I'm not a crybaby. It hurts!"

I had hit her intending to inflict pain, but I hadn't expected her to get this hurt. The area on her forehead had turned red, which came as a surprise.

It was interesting.

How many more hits can I get in until she notices?

“Heng, Ho-jae hit me,” Kirikiri mumbled with tears in her eyes.

Rather than being sorry at the sight of her, I got annoyed.

“Don’t call me that.”

(T/N: She pronounced his name like: Hou-woo jae-aeee)

“Heng, my heart.”

At this moment, I seriously thought about hitting her again. Unfortunately, I decided to save it for next time.

It would be complicated if Kirikiri found out that I was hitting her not as a joke but as an experiment.

I changed the subject. “But why are you suddenly asking about Yong-yong?”

“Why, all of a sudden? That’s because Yong-yong is beating up three Rulers over there.” Kirikiri told me that Yong-yong was not just fighting, but that he was unilaterally crushing the Rulers.

Fortunately, Yong-yong seemed to be doing well. I was relieved. I wanted to do well on my own, but my anxieties had been holding me back.

“They look stronger compared to the Ruler Ho-jae fought in Antarctica. Are you sure Yong-yong isn’t stronger?”

Now was the chance. I flicked Kirikiri’s defenseless forehead.

“Agh!”

I felt a righteous feeling. She let out another cry.

“Wuuu... Ho-jae keeps hitting me.”

“You deserved it,” Seregia, who happened to be inside the temple, said.

Kirikiri, who was making a sad face, shouted at Seregia, “Seregia is always so mean!”

Seregia shrugged and took a chocolate pie out of her pocket. I wondered where she had come from, and it seemed like she went to the flat and brought snacks.

Seregia tore the wrapping paper of the chocolate pie and gave it to Kirikiri.

And...

“Do you want one?”

Her speech became informal. It was a significant change of attitude. Far from being offended, Kirikiri reached out her hand excitedly.

“Give it to me!”

“No.”

Seregia took a bite of the chocolate pie in her hand, passed Kirikiri, and sat down in the corner. Kirikiri sat on the floor blankly and looked at Seregia, whose mouth moved to chew.

Kirkiri shouted again, “You’re so mean!”

* * *

Thanks to Seregia, who had diverted Kirkiri’s attention, I could complete the experiment without any doubt, but I decided to stop the experiment there. It was dangerous in many ways to keep pushing Kirikiri.

Instead, I decided to ask Kirikiri one question.

“Yes, yes, what is it?”

Perhaps thanks to taking away a snack from Seregia and giving it to Kirikiri, Kirikiri’s face was in full bloom. It was good because she was very simple.

“There’s a god who needs information.”

“Some rookies cannot be told much information.”

“God of Remorse.”

Kirikiri replied, “The God of Remorse can only be given a limited amount of information.”

Information restrictions were said to be at stake.

“What kind of information restriction is that?”

I was no longer a challenger of the Tutorial, but I still had to restrict myself in giving away information? I didn’t need such information restrictions.

“It’s the same information restriction you had on the 60th floor.”

Damn it.

Again, restricting information through triggers was not a system for the Awakened of the Tutorial.

“What was the trigger?”

“Remorse.”

I didn’t want to think about it.

Kirikiri looked at me, clicking her tongue, and said, “It’s because of the source from the 35th floor, right?”

Right.

On the 35th floor, the God of Remorse presented me with a source, and as a result, I was disadvantaged in the Hundred Gods Temple.

The source was not very helpful to me at the time, but it helped me quickly get used to the power of source and faith.

It was used to hide information from Lee Yeon-hee on the 60th floor.

“I recommend you not to care. The God of Remorse must have given you the source for some strange reason you didn’t expect.”

“I wonder what that strange reason was.”

“I don’t know much about that.”

I felt uncomfortable. If you get help for no reason from others, you would feel uncomfortable, especially if it included sacrifice.

I was also anxious.

“As I explained before, the God of Remorse is someone who always regrets. He’s the god who always makes mistakes. Maybe one of the many regrets was what gave you the source.”

I could have just thought that and let it pass.

It was a stroke of luck. I thought so.

The problem was the status of the God of Remorse.

I heard that he always caused trouble and made mistakes, which made me think that he was nothing more than a stupid god. However, he had gained divinity, and he had maintained his status. Above all, the God of Remorse was related to time.

When some gods tried to break through the 60th floor through force, the God of Remorse made it the furthest.

I couldn't just let it go.

"I'm sorry, but there's nothing else I can tell you. Perhaps it would be faster to meet the God of Remorse and ask him in person."

* * *

Once again, the light flashed. Flashes spread out in all directions. Hochi, who had seen it from afar, clicked his tongue.

"This guy... what a madman." Hochi couldn't help but swear.

Lee Joon-suk's ability was a power that he couldn't try to control. He was just a tad bit away from being a real nutcase.

Hochi had made a prediction when Lee Joon-suk asked to protect people or ask for help. Lee Joon-suk's ability seemed to be specialized in wide-area attacks. Hochi's guess was not wrong.

Lee Joon-suk's attacks were all wide-area attacks. But there was a problem; the attack affected not only allies but also Lee Joon-suk himself.

"That crazy guy."

Hochi used his power on Lee Joon-suk, who was far away, while repeatedly swearing.

"Life sharing."

Now, it was challenging to assist Lee Joon-suk with simple healing skills. Lee Joon-suk was using his abilities recklessly as if he were going to die here.

"How much had he stacked up?"

Frustration

That is the state Lee Joon-suk was in.

Once he began to use his abilities, Lee Joon-suk was completely blinded.

Hochi was able to fully predict what Lee Joon-suk would have done to get that ability.

Of course, he grew up in the Tutorial where he could be healed. However, it was impossible to grow to this level and get out with a normal mindset.

It was possible only when he was as crazy as Lee Ho-jae. That meant he had to reach a level of stupidity that shouldn't be acceptable. So Hochi could understand.

After a rough experience, he got this kind of power, but he couldn't even use it properly.

He was so frustrated. However, if he used it carelessly, the surrounding area and people would be burned to ashes, and Lee Joon-suk himself would also be in danger.

Once used, everything around him would fly away, so no one could help him.

-Gwaaah...!

The giant tentacle monster was still breathing. The water in the lake had evaporated, and ashes were the only thing that remained in place of the surrounding forest. All the monsters and the plants that had popped out of the forest were gone. But the monster was still holding out, swinging his tentacles at Lee Joon-suk.

The monster looked almost pathetic. Hochi felt sorry seeing Lee Joon-suk barely escape the tentacles. Frankly speaking, Hochi was rooting for the monster.

He wanted Lee Joon-suk to get beaten and knocked out by the monster. The monster was strong, so they could have waited until Yong-yong came, but Lee Joon-suk was attacking the monster without rest.

Every time Lee Joon-suk attacked, Hochi had to protect him, and it became a bother.

-Yaaargh!

Then, the monster's body split wide open. It seemed like blood was going to shoot up, but it didn't.

Lee Joon-suk flew away quickly to the monster's open wound.

"Hey! Lee Joon-suk, this is good! Finish it quickly!" Hochi changed his position as soon as the monster was fatally wounded and cheered for Lee Joon-suk.

Lee Joon-suk dug deep into the monster's body through the monster's open wound and then used his blinding power again.

"...Wow, he genuinely is a madman."

This time, the blazing light did not spread out in all directions. It stayed entirely in the monster's body, ending the monster.

The problem was that Lee Joon-suk himself was on the monster's body.

Hochi quickly teleported Lee Joon-suk to him. Lee Joon-suk had such a questionable appearance that Hochi didn't know if he was looking at a human or charcoal soot.

"Oh, he's alive..."

"...Thank you, Hyung."

Meanwhile, Lee Joon-suk expressed his gratitude. Hochi took out a bottle of potion from the subspace and fed it to Lee Joon-suk.

He was tired of using his abilities.

Lee Joon-suk again thanked him and asked Hochi, “Where is this potion from?”

Hochi answered as if it were nothing.

“Ho-jae had piled up many of these in his subspace, so don’t mind it.”

“Yes...? Potions are only there in the Tutorial.”

“Oh, that. Ho-jae can use the subspace regardless of the Tutorial.”

Lee Joon-suk looked like he didn’t understand. Lee Joon-suk, who had been confused for a while, asked Hochi again. “...Is my item in that space, too? I gave Ho-jae Hyung all my items when I left.”

“It probably is. Maybe if you look it up.”

“Really? If you have that item... all I need is that item!”

Lee Joon-suk repeatedly said that he could use his abilities without risk using this item, looking a little distracted.

‘I would have given you it earlier. I didn’t know.’

Why didn’t Ho-jae give it to him before?

He looked so excited, and he was going crazy.

When Hochi was thinking so, the space widened, and one person walked out. It was Lee Ho-jae.

Hochi looked back at Lee Ho-jae and asked why he hadn’t given Lee Joon-suk the item in advance.

“I forgot.”

So confident. That was a good excuse.

“Huh? That’s a necklace I’ve never seen before.” Hochi commented when he saw something hanging around Lee Ho-jae’s neck.

Lee Ho-jae just shrugged.

“I think I’ve seen it somewhere.”

A round ball-shaped ornament at the end of the necklace. It was something that persisted in Hochi’s memory.

“What the hell did you do?”

Lee Ho-jae said, looking around the destroyed area.

“You still can’t control your abilities? That’s too bad.”

Then he gave Lee Joon-suk a slap. Lee Joon-suk, who had just been excited, bowed his head with an apologetic look as if he had committed a crime.

“You’ve been in the Tutorial for years, and you—”

“Hey.” Hochi cut off Lee Ho-jae.

“What?”

Hochi thought again for a bit when he saw Lee Ho-jae looking at him.

But this time, he was sure.

“You aren’t Ho-Jae... who are you?”

Chapter 317

Japan (5)

“Who are you?” Hochi asked Lee Ho-jae again, who refused to answer.

“What nonsense are you spouting? What do you mean by who I am?” Lee Ho-jae replied in an irritated tone.

It was a perfect match: the pissed off tone and the expression. Its occurrences had decreased a lot recently, but in the past, Hochi had often seen it. No, it was always something he saw.

But Hochi was sure. “You, you’re fake.”

The way he talked, moved, and even his power and aura felt remarkably similar. At first, even Hochi hadn’t even noticed something strange.

“...When did you realise?” the fake Lee Ho-jae asked.

“Poor performance.”

Truthfully, his acting skills were excellent. Instead, there was a lack of investigation from the fake’s side into Ho-jae’s character. Lee Ho-jae doesn’t like to interfere. If you didn’t thoroughly research Lee Ho-jae, his character would be hard to pull off.

In the past, when he gave advice, Hochi couldn’t act appropriately with him and spoke irritably. Ho-jae did the same. In some cases, they would inadvertently insult each other. Yes, in the past, it was like that.

Ever since he had apologized to Hochi for his past wrongdoings, Lee Ho-jae had changed himself. Lee Ho-jae, Hochi knew now, praised moderately and moved on, and did not point out meaningless details to hurt other people's feelings.

He, who had ascended to a god, did not change easily. It would take so much effort and sacrifice to change even the smallest habit. The inner change caused by becoming a god was significant.

That's why Hochi was sure that Lee Ho-jae's appearance was not just a random thing. This Ho-jae was someone else.

"Acting skills... you talk nonsense."

The atmosphere had drastically changed when Hochi discovered the con artist. He became hostile and intimidating.

A high-pressure power came up gently.

Hochi tried to grasp as much information as possible by looking at the rapidly changing aura of the fake.

"Ah..."

"What?"

"I remember where I saw that necklace."

Hochi clearly remembered now. When he had last met Lee Hyung-jin in the competition, he tried to give a ball-shaped item to Lee Ho-jae.

Though he hurriedly stopped his words in the middle. The item looked just like that necklace.

"You're the fake from the 17th floor, aren't you?"

He had the same items as Lee Hyung-jin, who died. Just like Lee Ho-jae, they were people with the same aura and past attitude.

It was not difficult to guess how the phantom from the 17th floor knew Hochi.

Hochi wondered why he thought of pretending to be Lee Ho-jae in front of himself.

He noted something.

Hochi noticed the scent of a god on the fake.

The God of Hope.

Lee Ho-jae had said that the God of Hope was trying to take a peep at Earth. If this were a trick of the God of Hope, he would have given that fake information in advance.

“...The fake is not me, but you,” the fake said animalistically. The fake’s eyes, which had been feigning indifference until just now, were now full of life.

“It’s true that you’re the one who was designed to clear the 60th floor. It’s a waste of time, fake. Look at you now. How is your position different from a pet dog?”

He habitually tried to get to the enemy’s nerves, but his attitude was the same as Ho-jae.

The fake didn’t merely mimic Ho-jae’s appearance. He was the Ho-jae from the time of the 17th floor of the tutorial.

Hochi laughed at the fake. Lee Ho-jae was an insurmountable wall for Hochi.

It could be called his original, but in almost all respects, he was superior to Hochi.

However, there was only one thing in which Hochi was ahead of Lee Ho-jae. His manner of speech.

“Hey, isn’t it kind of funny that mass-produced fakes popped up one by one every time one went on a floor?”

“...”

“The fakes didn’t even exactly act the same. Were you made in China? Not a replica, but a crude fake. An inferior edition, you are not an imitation.”

The fake gritted his teeth. The muscles in his face shifted from the force of his grinding. His bloodshot face was so red that the veins were almost visible in his eyes.

Hochi chuckled at the sight. The most effective thing he did was provoking and annoying others. It was entertaining to tease.

“...Uhh, Hyung, w-why don’t you stop?” Joon-suk, who had been quiet next to him, whispered in his ear.

The fake’s hatred had reached its peak. He stared at Hochi like a beast ready to rush at any moment. but Hochi didn’t give in. In the first place, Hochi had too much experience to be scared of threats.

“I have to say this. Gentlemen! Ladies! The fake here got mad at me for making fun of him because he’s a fake! Oh, my God, no conscience at all. Same as the real thing but without conscience. Lucky you, man. You got a step closer to the real world today, didn’t you? If you get to the day when you can perfectly imitate the real thing...”

“Go to hell, you bastard!”

The fake eventually leaped at Hochi, shouting a curse.

Hochi immediately responded as he had been waiting.

[Battleground]

[Specifying the opponent]

[Mana oppression]

[Holy Block]

[Soul exploitation]

[Wings of Talaria]

[Time Warp]

[Bright Light]

“Go to hell, you crooked bastard!” Hochi, who used various powers at the same time, also rushed to face the fake.

Usually, Hochi was reluctant and passive, but this time he was different.

The appearance of the 17th floor Ho-jae was very unpleasant for Hochi, and the words that he uttered were also deeply offensive.

Hochi had no intention of waiting until Yong-yong or Lee Ho-jae came to help as usual.

At least this time, he was thinking of finishing the scumbag with his own hands.

* * *

It was too much. Apart from his mindset, the world was divided based on what was possible and what was impossible.

‘You’ll regret it one day. When you have to fight.’

Lee Ho-jae had said so on various occasions.

Hochi had ignored the words every time and was now paying the price for his negligence.

“Blink!”

Hochi used a series of Blink to escape the fake’s attack. The fake tried to chase Hochi using the opposite, but there was one decisive difference.

“Ha! You inferior bastard, there’s a limit on the number of Blinks you can do, right? I don’t have one!” Despite being unilaterally pursued, Hochi did not stop his provocations. The fake flew at Hochi, screaming once again.

Hochi said, “Hey! Listen to me!” to Lee Joon-suk, who was idly watching the scene.

“What?”

“I’ll put you in a subspace, and until I get you out there, don’t even think about escaping. Just stay there, or it’ll explode!”

Then, he moved Lee Jun-seok into a subspace. In the meantime, the fake had attacked Hochi.

“Shadow!”

The sword wielded by the fake extinguished the illusion. Immediately the black shadow flew at Hochi, who had been standing there.

“Space contraction!”

Once again, he used the skill. The space distorted.

The previous distance of several meters between Hochi and the fake momentarily stretched to more than tens of thousands of kilometers.

At a moment’s leisure, Hochi thought, ‘Why is he so strong?’

It’s the fake from the 17th floor.

‘I don’t think I could win even if I had trained without being lazy.’

There was a difference in basic combat capability. A gap that was hard to reverse even with a superior number of skills.

As soon as he first attempted a close-up match, Hochi was immediately shown up by the fake.

If Lee Joon-suk hadn't rushed in between and caught the attention of the fake, he might have died on the spot.

Soon after, Hochi changed his plan again.

Back to his first master plan: turn to the defensive until Yong-yong arrived.

“Sied’s Shield!”

He used the power of a god whose name he couldn't remember to block the fake's sword. That sword was the biggest problem.

He kept his vast amount of power in the form of a blade without a shred of disarray. If he hit the correct spot, it'd deal a fatal wound.

So all his attacks had to be avoided or prevented using power. Moreover, the fake's moves, which seemed to find a way to break up each attack, made Hochi tired.

Sied's shield was able to defend sufficiently enough for a region itself but was relatively weak against a one-point attack.

That fake saw Sied's Shield only twice and figured it out. Although he was a fake, it seemed like he was still Lee Ho-Jae.

Bang!

When stabbed with the sword, the sound of a blast came, and the transparent shield made of power burst.

When he had first used the Sied's Shield, he lasted five minutes.

In the second use, it was destroyed by only six stabs.

In the third use, it was destroyed by three stabs.

It was unclear how many attacks would be needed this time to get it destroyed.

The fake shouted, preparing for another round of stabbing.

“How long are you going to keep running!”

“Until Yong-yong comes!” Hochi shouted proudly.

The fake said, “Dumb bastard! You think this is Earth? This space is the sanctuary of the God of Hope. Not anyone can do whatever they want to...” and laughed at Hochi as if it was not worth it.

As he was explaining this, Hochi heard the sound of glass cracking in the air.

Then, the space opened, and Yong-yong appeared.

“Uncle!”

“Yong-yong!” Hochi called out to Yong-yong emotionally

And...

“Ha! You’re dead now! You, you don’t know how strong our Yong-yong is, you fake!” Hochi immediately retorted at the fake.

It was a bit weird to be Yong-yong’s uncle and present him to the enemy.

Anyway, Yong-yong was reliable!

The fake, who was constantly chasing Hochi, stopped moving and stared at Yong-yong.

Yong-yong stared at the fake instead of attacking immediately.

“Uncle, who is that?” Yong-yong asked in a low voice. It was a serious voice, unlike his usually lively one.

“...Uh? This...”

Hochi stuttered for some reason and explained to Yong-yong quietly.

He was believed to be the fake Ho-jae made on the 17th floor of the tutorial.

“I’m not sure.”

“Then I’ll have to try to kill him and find out,” Yong-yong said firmly.

Hochi, stunned by Yong-yong’s harsh words, was unable to say anything. At that moment, the fake took off his necklace and grabbed it in his hand.

And he called out to god.

“...My Liege.”

[My apostle, things are all messed up now.]

It was the sign of the God of Hope. It was shaped like a small bug, but its presence was huge enough to fill the world that had turned into ashes.

Hochi could feel nausea creep up on him despite his power.

“That’s the cause of that fake’s power,” Yong-yong said, looking at the god of hope who had appeared in front of the fake.

Then he called Hochi again. “Uncle.”

“...Yes, Yong-yong.”

“Stay a little longer. I’ll hold off that god first.”

The words stung the God of Hope.

The God of Hope looked at Yong-yong and said roughly, [This little dragon is too confident. You're going to hold me off? Do you think a god is a joke, who has time to deal with insects? Let me show you what a true God is.]

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

Finally, the mouse was caught in the trap. By the way, how dare that bastard crawl into other people's land and shamelessly flaunt his power?

"I'll show you what a true god is."

What an idiot.

"Seregia, signal when you're ready."

Of course, we finished the preparations, but I asked just in case.

Seregia immediately signaled.

'Mayday, mayday.'

"Seregia, that's the rescue signal," I told Seregia, but she stubbornly repeated the same signal.

'Mayday, mayday.'

I'll tell Hochi later not to teach Seregia anything weird.

"If you're ready, then let's start."

Chapter 318

Japan (6)

I couldn't believe the story Lee Hyung-jin told me. I had always thought about it. I had already died in my room, and everything I saw, heard, and experienced could have just been a dream. So, I vowed not to be too confused if I realized everything was fake one day.

However, I couldn't accept what Lee Hyung-jin said. Lee Hyung-jin tried to explain as much as he could, but the meaning was clear. I was just a fake made for the stage, and the real Lee Ho-jae was already up on the 60th floor. I wondered if this was the theme of the 17th floor.

Kirikiri said the 17th floor would end easily and quickly. But for a story that was improvised to clear my mind, it was too much of a coincidence.

Lee Hyung-jin tried to persuade me to go up with him.

Of course, I refused. I had no other choice if what he said was false. He could only get out of the 17th floor and up to the 18th if he killed me.

But if what he said was true. If it is true...

There was a brief pause.

In the end, my knife, which tried to cut Lee Hyung-jin's neck, lodged itself in his heart.

Looking at Lee Hyung-jin, whose blood spread all over the place, I agonized over whether to relieve his pain by twisting a knife in his chest or feed him a potion.

Then, I heard a voice.

[Listen to me.]

Surprisingly, a voice came from Lee Hyung-jin's necklace. My confused mind calmed down at once. I came to think of just two things: to grab that necklace or not to grab it.

[I'll answer your question.]

[All your questions.]

I thought about it for more time. Eventually, I grabbed the necklace.

And that's where MY story began.

* * *

[Hisano Okabuchi.]

She was having an incredible day.

Ever since she was invited to the Tutorial and became an Awakened, she had never seen anything so unrealistic happen.

She was an S-level Awakened with the ability of detection.

Although she did not fight directly on the front, she was doing her part at the Operations Headquarters a little further from the front.

She took part in all the waves, and every time she took part, she faithfully played her role. Everyone in the Operations Headquarters trusted and relied on her. But now, she was betraying everyone's expectations.

"I don't know."

"...really?"

Stop doubting me already.

Hisano wanted to spit out a string of curse.

Why do you think you know everything?

People's blind faith was unsettling. A massive black sphere floated on the east coast.

It was bigger than a city, swallowing up all the Awakened who were blocking the wave on the shore. They couldn't scratch it, even with the ability of the Awakened.

Relying on Hisano's power, Chen Ching could not find any information.

"...maybe it's because they're from Korea."

Hisano guessed as much.

Awakened people from Korea were beyond common sense. They manipulated monsters with strange powers. They lifted the sea up and destroyed the gates beneath it.

But Hisano didn't want to suspect those who came to help them and blame them without evidence. But it occurred to her that if it weren't for them, there wouldn't be such an unheard-of phenomenon.

Then she heard an unknown voice.

The voice called her name.

'Hisano.'

At the moment, she thought it was a hallucination, but she crossed out the idea soon after.

The voice felt like the power she had.

"...are you the God of Balance?"

Watching Hisano mutter, her colleagues at the Operations Headquarters looked at her strangely.

Hisano put a calm look on her face and ignored them.

‘Yes, I have something to tell you.’

“What’s going on?”

The God of Balance had a deep connection with Hisano. The god had already given Hisano powers. On stages, the God of Balance paid attention to Hisano and showed a positive response.

The god offered her a position as an apostle, and she thought she would be an apostle after she met every requirement.

On the 79th floor of Hard Difficulty, she met the god in person and talked.

But on the 79th floor, the God of Balance told Hisano, You’re not good enough to be my apostle.

And the God of Balance cut his ties with Hisano.

After clearing the Tutorial and returning to Earth, Hisano naturally forgot the God of Balance. So this situation, where the God of Balance reached out to her first, was even more surprising.

‘First of all, I apologize, Hisano. I had a desire that I couldn’t bear to let go of.’

Naturally, Hisano couldn’t understand what the God of Balance was saying.

So she decided to ask questions right away.

“Is it fine for you to talk to me like this?” The question included another one, “Why didn’t you say anything to me before?”

The God of Balance replied, ‘There are no regulations on the planet now. Of course, he will not take too kindly to it, but I intend to give him a reasonable reward and apology.’

“I don’t know what that means...”

‘There’s no more time to explain! You have to run away from there right now.’

Hisano still couldn’t understand the god’s words, but she could understand the urgency and danger in his words.

She ordered her colleagues to prepare for withdrawal immediately.

“What’s going on all of a sudden?”

Hisano wondered if she could tell her colleagues that a god said there was danger here. She decided that it was better to lie.

“That black hemisphere is about to explode.”

The God of Balance urged her to leave quickly, even by herself, saying she should get out of there. But she remained at headquarters until the end to help with the withdrawal.

And not long after, the danger warned by the God of Balance was visible. On the enormous black hemisphere, a colossal sword floated.

It was an unbelievable sight even though she could not see it properly with her eyes.

‘At least, run away now.’

“I think it’s already too late. Can you explain to me what that is?”

‘...two gods will soon clash there. The two gods that will be at the top of the world.’

At the God of Balance’s explanation, the Great Sword floating like a mirage in the sky began to fall.

* * *

“Damn it. It’s not a game of tag,” Hochi grumbled.

He thought he’d be able to win since Yong-yong appeared. But soon after, the God of Hope popped out from nowhere.

Hochi was unsure if it was because of the God of Hope, but Yong-yong couldn’t help Hochi at all.

It was a relief that the God of Hope could not interfere with the fake Ho-jae and Hochi.

“Sied’s shield!” Hochi used his power again to block the fake’s attack.

The most significant advantage of this power was that it did not consume much power after it was activated once. After deciding to hold out, Hochi saved his strength as much as possible.

Of course, he wasn’t only defending himself. While the fake prepared to attack again to break through the barrier, Hochi exclaimed, “Go, Lee Joon-suk!” thunderously.

Then he summoned Lee Joon-suk, who was in the subspace, near the fake. As soon as he was summoned, he used his ability in all directions without asking or questioning.

The fake was startled but immediately swung a knife at Lee Joon-suk.

“Come back!”

With Hochi’s words, Lee Joon-suk was moved back into space.

The fake’s sword split the air in vain again.

“Hahaha, this is fun.”

Lee Joon-suk, who acted as a dummy target every time he was summoned would never have willingly agreed to this.

Hochi was having a lot of fun in this situation.

“You bastard! How long are you going to be playing around!” The fake seemed not to have liked it very much.

He flew towards Hochi. Hochi started running away again, avoiding him.

[Mayday, Mayday.]

A sudden voice stopped Hochi from moving, momentarily.

The same was true of Yong-yong and the God of Hope, who fought over there with the fake.

Kwaang!

With a roar, the sky broke, and a massive sword penetrated the space. The sight of it made Hochi relieved.

“Seregia! Why did you come so late... Aah!”

“Welcome me first, not Seregia, you little bastard.”

A man appeared, hitting Hochi on the back of his head, who was delighted to see Seregia in the form of a blade in the sky.

It was Lee Ho-jae.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

That’s me, huh?

Interesting. It wasn't just someone who looked like me. It was really me. It wasn't a clone.

It was quite interesting to see that I grew in a different direction from where I was now. Hochi and Yong-yong came to me.

"Daddy!"

I hugged Yong-yong, who ran to me.

"Great work. Did you get hurt anywhere?"

"It's torn."

When I followed Yong-yong's finger, I saw that his clothes were badly torn. There were no scars, which was a relief.

"You've done a good job, too. I didn't know you would be this good. You did great. See, you say you don't usually do well, but I knew you would."

That was what I told Hochi. In fact, I thought Hochi would come back to Seoul. But seeing him stick with Yong-yong until the end made me grateful and a little sorry at the same time.

"Huh? Um... mn... Yeah."

Hochi looked a bit dazed. I wondered if I was too stingy with compliments. I made up my mind to praise today for a long time into the future.

"What about Lee Joon-suk?"

"I put him in the subspace."

What a relief.

I thought he was dead. Looking around, I could tell that Lee Joon-suk put in a lot of effort. The marks alone show that he was a man with good destructive power. The problem was that he was an idiot who didn't know how to handle his own power.

If he just filled in his shortcomings, he could do more than just pay for his meals.

“...My Liege.”

[Yes, turn around and go as planned. Don't worry too much. I will always be with you.]

The fake and the God of Hope talked to each other. I wondered at the sight.

“The God of Hope, what's wrong with the way you're talking?” He was using a weird way of speaking.

As soon as I questioned, the God of Hope spoke to me.

[The way you speak is different depending on how you're imprinted on the believer. It's quite basic information. Though, I forget, you're new to this.]

It was a voice that was sent only to me personally.

It was a relatively light, mean voice worthy of the appearance of a flying bug.

Interesting.

‘No matter how fake it is, it wouldn't have been easy to convince me.’

[Hahaha, do you think so?] The God of Hope laughed and explained, [I can't compare you from back then to you now. You were very sensitive and fragile then. Like a newborn baby. Do you know how easily the act of listening and empathizing shook that stupid thing?]

Did I?

That's true. That would have been the case at the time of the 17th floor.

The next floor on the 17th floor was the 18th floor.

I could easily recall how much I was shaken at the time. It was a time when there were not even clear goals.

In addition, the necklace that the fake is wearing. It had the God of Hope.

I didn't know when Hyung-jin was holding it before, but that was very... It came off as a bad thing.

It would have been more beneficial to crush the necklace rather than to keep it around.

[I should have recruited you, not this fake.]

The first time I met the God of Hope was on the 49th floor.

I didn't even think to rely on the gods then.

It would have been impossible for the God of Hope to bring me in.

[No, no, not the 49th floor, but the 60th floor. Do you know how much fun I had watching you flounder in despair back then?

[Hoping someone would save you, wishing that someone would come to help you. It was so funny how you wished for it. I had a chance to recruit you, but I had decided to put it off... But eventually, you grew enough to cut off the connection. You grew to overcome your depression.

[It was the most enjoyable part of my day to see you hurt and cut yourself every day and night.

[Do you know how sad it had been for me when you decided to stop?]

I decided one thing after hearing the God of Hope giggle annoyingly.

“It’s confirmed. You’re dead to me.”

Chapter 319

Japan (7)

I saw the 17th-floor fake standing beside the God of Hope. How long had he been preparing for this? It was hard to guess.

To be honest, it was quite hard to believe the fake was modeled after me. The way he spoke, which seemed to truly revere the God of Hope, made my mouth sting just by listening. The words alone proved that the fake was completely different from me. The only thing I shared with that fake was the memories from before the 17th floor.

Even compared to Hochi, the fake was utterly out of sync. Nevertheless, that fake was equating itself to me. At the same time, he was devastated by the fact that he was a fake. His hostility, jealousy, and inferiority complex was overtly obvious and made me feel sympathetic rather than annoyed or angry.

He was a possession of the God of Hope. The God of Hope must have endlessly whispered, telling him he was fake and that he could make him real. As a result, he couldn't look back on himself and only looked at me.

His delusions exaggerated the presence of something far away and hid the most important thing right in front of him. They served to immensely increase his despair and made the dwindling hope inside of him even more beautiful and precious. It was such a twisted way of gaining hope.

“Seregia.”

When I called for Seregia, she appeared in the form of a sword of moderate length in my hand.

The God of Hope saw the giant sword hanging from the sky and the longsword in my hand and said, [Amazing.]

Seregia's capabilities were amazing. If necessary, she could exist in any number of forms.

[I can't believe you broke my area like a window. How absurd. Didn't you say you wouldn't use overly powerful weapons?]

Oh, that.

I hadn't handled weapons that were more powerful than necessary in the Tutorial. In the case of Ahbooboo, although we might fight together, I rarely wielded him myself.

I shrugged my shoulders. "That's because it's a hindrance to growth. With where I am now, why wouldn't I use a powerful weapon if I had one?"

If you don't use a powerful weapon for no reason, that'd be stupid. It was natural to use what was available.

[Not a struggle, surely.]

"No."

[You don't want your divinity to get affected as a result, do you?]

Indeed, divinity got affected as a result, but such a factor was only taken into account by idiots like the God of Slowness and the God of Devotion.

[Hahaha, do you know what a big difference that is?]

The God of Hope somehow looked pleased. Was it such a big deal that getting my title as a god was not a struggle? On the contrary, I might have been in trouble if it was a struggle.

[Can I ask you a few questions first?]

I nodded. I had something to ask the God of Hope anyways.

[Why did you ignore our offer?] asked the God of Hope.

Proposal. I don't think I'd ever heard of a proposal like this.

[Isn't the God of Evil still talking to you?]

The God of Hope referred to the God of Evil.

He certainly was. Even now, the God of Evil was eagerly communicating with me.

[Please...]

I ignored his pleas as I had been for the past few days.

I answered the God of Hope, "I didn't ignore it. I refused it."

[Then, can I hear the reason for the refusal? If you tell us which part you didn't like, we're always ready to make a better offer.]

Ah, so fun.

A better offer.

I saw the fake from the 17th floor next to the God of Hope. For how long have they been playing tricks to get that fake guy?

Now, however, he had no intention of antagonizing and talked as if I were unilaterally arguing.

"Well, fine. I'll tell you what I want."

There was a good reason to antagonize the God of Hope and the Rulers. It wasn't because of my 17th-floor self—I didn't even know the fake existed until just now—nor was it due to the Rulers eating Earth's source.

The beings who attacked the Earth directly, of course, need to be crushed. But it was not enough to antagonize both the connected Rulers and the gods.

There was a more practical reason than that. It was because of old questions. The gods of the Pantheon were all bound by restrictions. Under these numerous restrictions, the radius of a god's conduct was greatly limited. But some gods felt that the restriction was a little loose.

I used to think that the constraints were different depending on the situation. I'd been through it many times, so I realized that was not true either.

When I asked Kirikiri, she always fell for it. Over time, I found that certain gods were relatively free from restrictions.

This was the case on the 49th floor, where the God of Hope first appeared. Kirikiri had stressed several times that I should remember the 49th floor.

The most significant feature of the 49th floor was not the appearance of the God of Hope. The first notable thing was that the God of Hope arbitrarily ended the stage. The second was setting the world view of the 49th-floor stage.

The introduction of the 49th-floor stage contained this phrase:

Countless kingdoms and denominations have fallen, and only the Holy Land of the God of Hope, which had been hidden, remains.

I couldn't understand it at the time.

No matter what, all sorts of restrictions bound Pantheon gods.

It was to the point where they could only demonstrate their ability as gods within their own territory.

Though, ironically you needed to keep your holy land's locations a secret. The moment it was revealed, the system placed restrictions on it, making it quite dangerous to use your powers in your Holy Land as it ran the risk of revealing its location.

It was strange that even though it was a world where many gods coexisted, they could not intervene until the centre was blown away.

And the only thing in the world that kept the Holy Land alive was, unfortunately, the God of Hope.

There were a handful of survivors who had to cling to hope more than anyone else.

By taking advantage of the fact that the God of Hope was relatively free from connections and systems with the Rulers, I thought he was reducing the other gods' power and molding the world in the direction he wanted.

I told the God of Hope my doubts and hypotheses one by one. The God of Hope listened quietly to me, but I knew that he was not so comfortable.

“An answer to your question. And if my answer is correct, you have to tell me how to avoid some of the system's constraints. Finally, to trust your information, I'll use an information lock.”

[You madman... you think I'll take that offer?]

Of course I didn't think so. After all, I didn't mean to suggest it in the first place.

I was just saying, “Tell me what you want.”

“Yong-yong, take care of your uncle.”

“Yes!” Yong-yong, who had been quiet, answered energetically.

I grinned at his answer.

[Think about it again. Our proposal is not a bad one...]

To take advantage of the God of Hope again, I moved right in front.

“You think I care about the proposal? I told you earlier. You’re dead.”

[Y...!]

I swung my sword at the God of Hope, who quickly rose to fight.

* * *

Kwaaa!

The shock wave caused a massive dust storm. The God of Hope narrowly avoided the aftermath of the attack.

I was about to continue the attack immediately, but someone got in the way. The fake who was beside the God of Hope swung a sword at me.

I didn’t bother to avoid or stop the sword.

“Intangible.”

I cut through the sword, headed toward my heart. As soon as the sword passed, he repositioned his body.

I somehow grabbed the fake’s face with one hand and slammed it on the floor. The shock considerably shook the ground.

Why was he (I) so good at everything? I was going to catch him later and study him. I hope he didn’t die instantly.

As soon as I had handled the fake, I chased the God of Hope again. The God of Hope threw countless energy spheres my way, as he ran away.

Eight in total. The difference was that only two of the eight were real.

It wasn’t hard to detect. The problem was that the real and the fake kept changing.

When I sensed that the bottom energy sphere was fake, the other sphere would become real. There was no constant observable pattern, and it was changing randomly according to my perception.

It was indeed an attack from the God of Hope. Every single energy sphere was powerful. Usually, I'd have to identify the real and the fake somehow to minimize the damage.

It was a fresh attack. But in the face of my power, which was able to cope with anything and everything, it wasn't much.

I struck back at all eight spheres. The spheres exploded, producing massive amounts of light and heat.

It was an explosion comparable to that of a supernova. If it happened on the surface of the earth, not on the surface of this world, it would have been a power that would simply destroy the earth.

Immediately after the explosion, the God of Hope attempted another attack.

A sharp metal arrow. It was as small as a regular arrow, but the power it held was not. The God of Hope compressed enough power into the arrow to inflict a fatal wound on a god, even if the arrow simply grazed by.

It was a weapon that could greatly affect a battle between the deities, which would eventually degenerate into a physical fight.

I was able to strike the arrow without difficulty because there'd be no damage in doing so.

I had no problems in blocking and avoiding the arrow.

Because survival was carved into my very being, I was able to deal with it reflexively, whether the arrow flew at the speed of sound or of light.

I flew again to the God of Hope.

The God of Hope was faster than I had anticipated. He was fast to a startling degree.

[Come! My warriors!] the fleeing god of hope shouted in a dignified voice.

Then he opened up the space, and countless beings poured out of it. Every one of them was at or above the level of a native god that appeared in the Tutorial.

Many of the divine spirits seemed to be far below the God of Evil from Antarctica, but it still was an unrealistic sight.

Every single being that poured out like a swarm of ants was either a ruler or a new species.

Wide-area attacks against unspecified individuals were very inefficient.

Lee Joon-suk, who couldn't even control his power, couldn't use his abilities properly due to the damage around him.

However, it wasn't hopeless. This moment had its own advantages and disadvantages.

I dug into the middle of the crowd called by the God of Hope.

No one responded to my speed. As the enemies looked for me, who had disappeared for a moment, I prepared for the explosion with ease.

“Zit Pop.”

A Zit Pop that exploded without any control.

A colossal blade that could have reached the horizon completely shattered the barrier, and soon, a powerful explosion broke out.

I heard no noise because I purposely blocked my hearing.

No matter how strong I was, I didn't want to listen to the terrible sound that followed the explosion.

It was for a brief moment, but the light and heat seemed like it would never fade. It would burn endlessly.

However, the atmosphere where the air was simmering seemed to be distorted by the light.

The lake's water had disappeared without a trace, and a vast crater was carved from the start of the horizon to the end.

Red flames torched the surface. If it weren't for the artificially created world, the planet would have started to collapse earlier.

The gods summoned by the God of Hope could not even be found.

The God of Hope was not free from the aftermath. He was running away, screaming like a bug on fire.

I laughed at the God of Hope. The overwhelming heat, which would make purgatory flames seem lukewarm in comparison, would not be a pleasant experience.

"You keep running away."

Resisting was futile.

You can avoid one attack, maybe you can even avoid two or three, but you can't avoid it all. You won't get away from me in the end.

What can you do in the face of true, overwhelming power?

Anyone who faced me, someone who could withstand everything no matter what conditions, constraints, and disadvantages there were, could only hope to escape from me.

"You said you had to experience despair to see hope," I said, crushing the shield that the God of Hope desperately unfolded.

I disagreed with that remark. There was no hope in the face of real despair... In the face of me.

It wasn't hope that I felt from him, but meaningless self-hypnosis.

"Do you see hope in front of you now?"

[I do.]

[It becomes even more powerful in the face of despair. Like the only starlight shining in the polluted night sky, hope burns beautifully,] the God of Hope answered firmly.

And called someone.

[Come to me.]

[My great warrior, My only hope, prove that hope exists in the face of even the darkest despair in the world. Prove that you are real.]

What appeared at the God of Hope's summoning was the fake on the 17th floor I forgot about.

The fake showed up in front of me just like before.

He was emitting a completely different level of power and aura.

Chapter 320

Japan (8)

[Did you expect this?] Seregia asked me.

Did I expect this? Of course, I didn't.

This exceeded my expectations. This was something I hadn't even considered to be possible.

First, I had to admit that I'd misjudged the God of Hope. When judging a god, the most important thing to look at is their power.

The God of Sky must reign over all beings, as his title suggested.

Some gods love everything as long as they pop, glow, and sparkle, like the God of Light.

I thought the God of Hope belonged to the former group. I only regarded him as a god who pushed people into despair and accepted their longing for hope. So I hadn't expected this.

Until just now, the situation was one-sided.

This world of hope created by the god of hope to break the trap had become a prison that prevented the God of Hope from getting out.

The difference in combat power was overwhelming.

Apart from the total amount of power I had, the God of Hope lagged far behind me in terms of power to fight back. The beings summoned by the God of Hope were useless.

No matter how many beings gathered, they were like dust in front of a god. Likewise, ambiguous gods that did not reach any level posed no threat to me. My victory seemed almost inevitable.

On the contrary, from the standpoint of the God of Hope, there was a strong possibility of defeat.

Such a hopeless situation made the God of Hope foster a strong desire for hope.

The more desperate the situation was, the stronger the enemy, the more desperate and eager one would get.

You could even call it faith. His power significantly increased. Finally, the God of Hope gave his power entirely to his apostle.

I misjudged that, too. I didn't care much about that fake. I thought it was a failure made by the God of Hope or a faulty replica made by the tower.

"You made plenty of preparations to defeat me."

I was satisfied with the fake, even though it was inferior to me.

I'll take it with me later and do experiments.

But that fake, modeled after me from the 17th floor, carried the enormous power handed over by the God of Hope. He couldn't handle the strength. But, his body didn't explode, nor did he lose his strength.

It was an abnormal appearance. The power at the edge of the sword held by that fake was one that condensed the amplified divine power of hope at one stroke.

Even the sun would be blown away if it burst. If it wanted to cut and stab, no god would survive. It wasn't a power that mortals who couldn't ascend to godhood could even grasp even more so wield.

No, even a god would probably not be able to handle it.

The fake must have been prepared for this moment.

[Your idea wasn't that unique,] said Seregia.

I had prepared Seregia for the battle against the gods.

Since it was a battle between the gods, it eventually would return to basic fighting. So, I thought that wielding a highly-concentrated power to the limit would be the most powerful fighting method.

I had prepared for this, just like the God of Hope.

The difference was, I raised my weapon, Seregia, against them, while the God of Hope used his power as a weapon and gave it to the fake.

A giggle sounded in my ear. It was like a flying bug buzzing near the ear while one was sleeping on a hot summer night.

[We set a trap for each other, but my preparations were more thorough, right?] asked the God of Hope.

I felt so disgusted. But I had to admit it. I'd been preparing for a long time to confront a god.

But I hadn't expected that any god would have foreseen the confrontation with me and prepared for it this much considering their innately arrogant nature.

[Do you know what the biggest nature of hope is?]

Was he trying to teach the theory of hope now?

The God of Hope spoke with excitement like he thought he had completely reversed the situation.

[It's the last thing that's left. I can tell you now, you who have always tried to turn away hope, and have been ashamed of yourself for longing for hope; hope softens the will, but the power that ignoring hope brings is more powerful than anything else.]

As soon as the God of Hope stopped babbling, the fake swung his sword into the air like lightning. The power that seemed unrealistic to me shot up, and it made a hole in the world.

The God of Hope escaped through the hole. It was ridiculous.

Was that just a simple physical attack? This was the mental world developed by the God of Hope himself.

It was covered with Seregia's barrier. However, just a blow to the condensed energy created a hole.

The God of Hope was crazy. He said so much, and all he did was fly away in the end.

[Yong-yong.] I called Yong-yong.

[Yes. Can I help you?] Yong-yong was still cheerful.

A smile appeared on my face when Yong-yong said he would help me. Thanks to this, my irritation faded a little.

I just missed one chance.

It would be enough to catch him later and make him pay for his share.

[No, it's okay. Daddy will take care of it.]

[Alright.]

[Take your uncle out and wait for me, instead. If this space explodes and you think it's going to cause damage outside, can you move the space away?]

[What about Daddy?]

[Daddy will get out of here in the nick of time.]

The sword wielded by the fake shook the barrier. If we fought seriously, the world itself would collapse, and the aftermath might be worse.

The aftermath would be way different from that in Antarctica. Just a little leak of power would destroy Earth. It was not a desirable result.

[Okay!] Yong-yong, who replied energetically, took Hochi out.

I did send them out, but when Yong-yong and Hochi disappeared, I felt a little empty.

The fake was still staring at me. The disappearance of my family seemed not to affect him. Even the fact that the God of Hope had left him seemed unimportant to him.

He was different from me.

If I had been in that guy's situation, I would have put a knife in the back of the God of Hope as soon as I gained strength.

There was a big difference, not only in strength and ability but also in internal aspects. Like Hochi, he shared the same memories of the past as me, but he was different than me.

The fake was still staring at me with his powers, in preparation to clash.

Admirable.

Even in the midst of this, the image of me focusing on my opponent. The power that the fake was carrying was not controllable.

A moment's disruption alone would cause the fake to explode, get swallowed up, and die. Even if he fought me with all his strength, he would die.

Still, that madman remained entirely focused, apparently having no choice but to kill me. His head was almost devoid of all thought except or the instinct to kill. He was not worthy enough to be a god.

I didn't think there was anyone better to use as a weapon and tool.
The Hundred Gods Temple was not crazy about me during that time.

[Sad,] Seregia said.

Did she not like me praising my opponent as a weapon?

"Of course, not as good as Seregia."

[Correct.]

She laughed at my reply, which seemed to be satisfactory.

The fake must have responded to the laughter and opened his mouth.

"I am real."

Who said that?

That's ridiculous.

I asked him.

"Hey, don't you realise? The God of Hope just left you."

"God of Hope had created a moment for me. I've been waiting for this moment."

I suppose so.

He was different from me in many ways, but the essentials were not different.

He's more like me than Hochi.

"Have you ever thought of finding any other goals besides this?"

"....."

The fake moved his lips soundlessly. He hadn't thought about it as I had.

"Then, have you looked for anything other than your goals?"

"What...?"

I had found mine.

Yong-yong and Hochi were waiting for me outside. There was also Grandma and Old Man from the 61st floor.

There was Kim Min-hyuk, who was working hard in Seoul, and Park Jung-ah, who remained in the Tutorial.

And there's Seregja.

[Correct,] Seregja said again with a pleased voice.

On the contrary, the fake had a blank face. For a moment, I recalled the memories that he and I would share.

"How do you think Jung-ah would feel about this?"

"...Jung-ah?"

"You know... Park Jung-ah."

The fake had a confused look.

"Who is that?"

So, there was a lost memory. The fake on the 17th floor should have the same memory as mine. Perhaps some memories had been erased or distorted by the God of Hope.

"I don't need anything else. In the end... I have to become real. Otherwise, my life is meaningless. I will become real."

There was madness in his eyes while he murmured the same words over and over again.

I could understand.

Idy, Old Man, and Grandma had the same worries. I had seen it all because I had the same problem.

“I will be real!” the fake raised all the power given to him at once.

He aimed for a one-shot. It was the right decision. Because of the gap between me and the fake, even a little bit of time added would become my victory.

As there was no difference in the total amount of power he had compared to mine now, it was the right decision to throw all his power at once.

But that was if it was possible. That fake couldn't handle the aftermath.

With all his might, the fake would die when our powers collide.

Win or lose.

Only then could I understand a little more of the fake saying that he would be real.

The god of slowness had commented to me at that time.

A moth that ran into the fire to attempt to become fire. It was an astonishingly perfect remark for who I was at the time.

Not even aware of how bright he was, the moth began to rush at me with all its might.

“I have to be real!”

He was shining so brightly, but he looked so pathetic. I could sympathize with that feeling because I remembered myself from the past.

“Yes, I will be the fire for you.”

I rushed to face the fake.

* * *

“What happened?” asked Hochi.

As the situation turned worse, Yong-yong took Hochi with him and escaped from the world.

Lee Ho-jae also seemed unable to afford to pay attention to them, and in Hochi’s case, he ran away without any problems because he knew well that he would be a burden even if he were there.

In the end, however, he was also confident that Lee Ho-jae would come back after cleaning up the situation.

So until just a moment ago, he was taking Lee Joon-suk out of the subspace and looking at the outer view of the world.

From the outside, the world was covered with a black hemisphere. As he was looking around in wonder, the black hemisphere began to twist around. It resembled a tin can that had been melted under high heat and morphed.

Yong-yong saw it and started to use his power. Hochi was so serious that he stayed quiet beside him.

After a while, the black hemisphere gradually shrank in shape, and soon, it completely disappeared.

“The power inside was so strong that I sent the whole space away after I got out.”

“What about Ho-jae?”

Yong-yong was silent for a moment.

Hochi didn't want to, but he had no choice but to prod Yong-yong.

"Yong-yong."

Yong-yong looked perplexed.

His eyes, which looked as though they were about to burst into tears, made Hochi more worried.

"I thought Dad would get out in time..."

"And?"

"I don't think he got out..."

Chapter 321

Japan (9)

“I don’t think Daddy made it out.”

The sentence was like a statement.

Since Hochi trusted Yong-yong more than anyone else, he quickly accepted what he was saying. But as much as he believed it, he also wanted to deny it.

“...Yong-yong, would you like to recheck it?”

Yong-yong, who heard Hochi’s words, shook his head.

Hochi had watched plenty of cliché dramas. A popular cliché was the character’s incurable disease. Every time the doctor revealed the patient’s limited time in the world, the people around him would always faint.

Hochi had thought about it before. When the same situation happened to him, would he be that shocked and sad?

He had always wondered about it because no one in Hochi’s family had died of a disease.

Even if it wasn’t a disease, he didn’t think anyone would pass away.

Lee Ho-jae used to say dangerous things about turning the Hundred Gods Temple upside down whenever he went outside.

Nevertheless, Hochi was not worried about Lee Ho-jae.

To Hochi, Lee Ho-jae was an absolute existence.

Hochi believed that no matter what happened, Lee Ho-jae would get through it on his own.

It wasn't much different from the vague fantasies a child had of his parents.

Hochi had never felt anxious about his family dying or disappearing. To him, that fear was something that would only appear in novels or dramas.

That was why Hochi couldn't accept Yong-yong's words.

Hochi's chest tightened painfully as he waited, with bated breath, for Yong-yong's next words.

"The world went away to another place, not where it was supposed to end up in."

"Can we go find it?"

Since Lee Ho-jae couldn't get out of the world on time, he likely couldn't have afforded to move. Or, the enemy might have held onto Lee Ho-jae's trousers at the end.

Anyway, it was a different result than what Lee Ho-jae and Yong-yong had expected.

Hochi had no choice but to suspect that Lee Ho-jae was defeated by the enemy and forced to go to the place the enemy wanted.

"I can't trace it..."

"Why?" Hochi asked in a high-pitched voice, unknowingly.

"I don't know where it flew. I can't trace it at all..." Yong-yong explained, his eyes wet with anxiety.

Hochi eventually collapsed, feeling his legs give away.

Three days had passed since Lee Ho-jae disappeared.

Hochi was still hovering near the shore, waiting for Lee Ho-jae to return.

Yong-yong fell asleep for several days trying to find Lee Ho-jae's new coordinates.

"Why don't we go back to Korea?" asked Lee Joon-suk.

Hochi shook his head. He had already been to the flat in Korea once.

Hochi was going to wait here until Lee Ho-jae came back.

Lee Joon-suk swallowed back what he was going to say and sat down next to Hochi.

"It's alright."

"Yes?"

"It's alright," Hochi muttered as he fiddled with a few rocks lying near the shore.

He had met the Old man and Grandma in Seoul. When they heard about the situation, they laughed like crazy. The two said Lee Ho-jae would return on his own without any problems.

Instead, they grumbled, saying they were disappointed with Lee Ho-jae, who disappeared without contacting them.

Hochi was angry at the two who weren't worried at all, but when Yong-yong stopped him, he couldn't say anything more.

Yong-yong was stunned by Lee Ho-jae's sudden disappearance and blamed himself for not being able to trace him, but he didn't think that Lee Ho-jae would be in grave danger.

In the end, Hochi was the only one who was worried that Lee Ho-jae might be in danger.

“I didn’t say anything, though,” Lee Joon-suk said.

Hochi ignored the comment. He was upset that no one but himself was worried about Lee Ho-jae, after all.

Maybe it was because he was the weakest and not familiar with Lee Ho-jae’s power. Hochi couldn’t help but speculate that he was making a fuss for nothing.

But what can I do if I’m worried?

Maybe he should do what Joon-suk said: go back to the flat and rest.

But when he had tried to rest on the sofa, Hochi didn’t feel as though he were resting because he was so confused.

Even when he tried to read a novel, he couldn’t relax and enjoy it. Whenever he ate, no food tasted good.

It was most comfortable, just waiting here.

“Excuse me!” someone spoke up, knocking on the glass wall.

It was a Japanese woman.

“She’s here again.”

“Did you set the barrier up?”

“Yes.”

If he hadn’t put up the barrier, she would have come close and bothered him with this and that.

It was better to block access in this way because even if one person was blown away, others wouldn’t be affected.

Three days ago, the wave on Japan's eastern coast ended.

The gods must've had a lot of questions about the black hemisphere and the humans who appeared at the end of the wave.

The victims were controlled by the Japanese government and the Awakened Society, but reporters were camped out a little further out.

The Japanese government thanked Hochi's party and wondered whether they would be able to recruit him to Japan at the same time.

They tried to invite his party to Tokyo several times, but Hochi's party did not wander wander astray from the shore.

Hochi did not even know what they had in mind. But whatever it was, Hochi was far from interested.

"Hyung, have you thought about it?" asked Lee Joon-suk.

Hochi didn't know what Lee Joon-suk was asking about, so he had to ask back, "What?"

"What are you going to do later? You said you'd think about it in Japan."

Of course, Lee Joon-suk knew that he didn't have a chance. He just wanted the somber Hochi to think about something else.

Hochi scratched his head. There were several options. Kim Min-hyuk had recommended becoming an Awakened officially. But after experiencing Japan, he didn't think he'd fit in.

First of all, Hochi himself was not interested in humans and, instead, was rather annoyed with them.

Saving and helping someone might be a good thing, but that was it. Above all, this experience had eliminated Hochi's desire to live a life of danger.

Lee Ho-jae once asked if he should do a job related to books. Hochi didn't seem to like that either.

Of course, he liked to read books, but he didn't want to go beyond his hobby and make it his job.

Novels were a kind of escape for Hochi.

For Hochi, born and raised in the desolate 60th-floor world, stories in novels gave him an indirect experience of the new world.

They meant nothing more than that.

“How about... a dungeon?”

“Dungeon?”

Lee Ho-jae had also once said, “Why don't you take charge of dungeons?”

Hochi came to Japan because of the condition that they hand over the dungeons that Ho-jae had collected from the Rulers.

But that was also...

“I don't know.”

In fact, he was thinking about what to do before he came to Japan.

However, after coming to Japan and going through many things, Hochii had no time to think about such things. And now that he was waiting for Lee Ho-jae, he wondered if that was important.

“Are you going to continue being an Awakened?”

“I have to continue! Now that I've got my item back from Ho-jae...!”

“After receiving?”

“Yes, yes. Of course, I still had enough power before, but being able to use my abilities freely is another matter.”

Lee Joon-suk started talking about himself.

Seeing him speak with his eyes glowing, Hochi may have wanted him to tell this story before.

“When I first came out on Earth, I felt so empty. After all, I had a power I couldn’t use, but why on earth was I so obsessed with it? Nearly ten years. I was just an average Awakened person with the ability I had. But now that’s changed, I can regain what I had lost!”

He’s excited, very excited, Hochi thought to himself.

“I’m sure there’s a lot more to do on Earth, but I’m going to follow Ho-jae hyung. If you look, there are places where he would need my powers. Oh, and Ho-jae hyung said he’d train me separately.”

Looking at Lee Joon-suk speaking enthusiastically, Hochi clicked his tongue softly.

This guy was another monster, too.

Why was he trying to find Hell on his own?

He looked fine on the outside.

Hochi bowed his head while listening to Lee Joon-suk’s story for a long time.

Inside the box around his neck, the mantis sitting on the miniature sofa looked at Lee Joon-suk and Hochi’s face, interested.

“Is there anything you want to do in the future?”

“I want to eat more.”

“What?”

“...What else?” the mantis rolled its eyes and replied.

He didn't have to ask what it wanted to eat.

It wanted to eat everything alive. It would be better if he had stronger powers.

“Is there anything else you want besides eating?”

“Well, not really.”

Lee Ho-jae had once explained his hypothesis about the Rulers.

It was a hypothesis. Rather than a monster eating to fulfill his desires somewhat and finding his past sanity, Rulers could just find sanity and power from an old, long-lasting desire.

Hochi thought the hypothesis might be right.

“You don't want anything but to eat?”

“Yes!”

“...so if you eat well, you're not going to complain about being locked up like this, are you?”

“Yes! Master puts rice in here every day.”

Its words were slightly contradictory.

“Master?”

“Yong-yong!”

Hochi thought about releasing the mantis from the box and putting this greedy, stupid monster in the sea. He stopped after thinking about it.

It was obvious that Yong-yong would be sad.

Instead, with his chin resting in his hands, Hochi thought, ‘Why are there only idiots around me?’

“The sunset is so beautiful,” Lee Joon-seok mumbled as he turned west.

The mantis answered, hearing those words, “It’s almost dinner time.”

“Yes, it’s pretty. It would have been better if the sun was setting on the side of the ocean,” said Hochi, ignoring the mantis’s words.

The third day of waiting for Lee Ho-jae was drawing to an end.

* * *

[Lee Ho-jae]

The raging flames had finally been brought under control. I didn’t control the flow well, but the dying fake eventually lost consciousness.

I gathered all the stray energy that had been flowing around with my hands.

When the flames blazing around me wrapped around my hands, the surrounding landscape began to appear.

The planet that had been the background of the world was no longer recognizable.

The flames had destroyed the planet in a short time, but what was gathered in my hands was calm more than anything else.

No matter how powerful and destructive the power was, a power without a will could not hurt a god no matter what.

The fake, who wielded this divine power, had lost consciousness.

It wasn't difficult to draw the power that was out of control into my own, either.

The God of Hope drove his power into the fake and made him attack me, but the limit was clear. If the God of Hope had been here, he wouldn't have been consumed by the power.

It was the limit of those who failed to rise to the rank of a god.

[What do you want to do with him?] Seregia questioned about the unconscious fake.

I pondered for a moment.

“Let him be.”

Let him burn up by the remaining heat.

Once eaten up by power, he may have been destroyed in a multitude of ways, and I didn't want to experiment with that.

I just wanted to let him do what he wanted. If he survives, so be it. [1]

I felt Yong-yong shut down the space itself.

He seemed to be trying to send it away.

Well...

[You're not going out?]

“Yes, I'm not going out.”

It was not enough to go out right now. I called out to the God of Evil, who was still begging inside me.

“God of Evil.”

[Please...]

[Please listen to my request. Please let me go...]

Even now, he was continuing his pleas, on a subject that was long lost.

“Yes, I will accept your request.”

[...really?]

[Then the God of Hope... He came on behalf of our representative... to liberate me.]

‘Our’ representative.

It felt weird to hear that the God of Hope, a Hundred Gods Temple member, and the God of Evil, who was not a member of anything, used the word “our.”

(T/N: It's kinda hard to translate this without changing the whole sentence. I hope y'all got what it means. Basically, the god of evil is using 'we'/'our' before the word 'representative' but I cannot write 'we representative'...so, yeah. The line before it as well, the god of evil uses 'we'.)

“Yes, but there’s a problem. The God of Hope is a little busy.”

[It can't be... that can't be true... the God of Hope will not abandon me.....]

Ignoring the bewildered God of Evil, I asked what I wanted to ask.

“So, I’m going to have to visit him myself. You know where the God of Hope’s temple is, don’t you? The coordinates.”

[I know...]

That was easy.

Now, I could easily fool him.

It had been worthwhile to digest the God of Evil.

The God of Evil, who had, at first, refused to give information, now began to regurgitate everything he knew.

[Are you going to invade?]

Of course, I was thinking of invading.

By swallowing the God of Evil, I had intended to find out the location and information about the God of Hope and his hideout.

I was in a hurry to find out about the God of Hope. If I gave them time, they would attack again. I wanted to finish him as soon as possible.

[My power is almost exhausted. Why don't you connect the earth with the 60th floor and put it off after you get more power?]

"It's alright. The God of Hope isn't that powerful."

The God of Hope had given all his power to the fake and ran away.

I didn't know how much he'd recovered, but it wouldn't be that much.

"And I have this power."

The power that was still in my hands.

The God of Hope poured out his power, amplified it several times, and handed it over to a fake.

The fake had left a lot of power without even using it up.

I didn't know how big the temple of the God of Hope was or how many beings would be in there.

But the remaining power I had would be enough.

Chapter 322

God of Hope (1)

“Is he dead?”

[No, his body is not completely burnt yet,] replied Seregia as she looked at the burning fake

.

Although completely unconscious, the fake stayed alive.

[We can't remain here any longer, so just let him be,] said Seregia.

I refused. “That's too cold.”

[The right thing to say depends on who the speaker is, so, sometimes, it can just be a dog barking.]

You just mean to say I'm talking shit, right?

That wasn't my personality.

[I'm just saying what I've heard before.]

Seregia shut her mouth.

I scratched my head. My hair didn't burn despite the intense heat, but it felt like the moisture in it was utterly dried up.

I knew why Seregia urged me to kill the fake quickly. Her strength was exhausted by the battle just now. Depleted energy and helplessness made humans feel languid, but Seregia viewed it differently as a weapon.

In the midst of this, she was impatient and anxious to break into the Holy Land of the God of Hope.

It would be painful to wait for that fake body to burn away.

“But let’s wait a little longer.”

Seregia did not answer.

I watched the fake slowly be consumed by the heat. I didn’t know whether I should call it a clone or an incomplete version of myself.

I thought incomplete suited it better.

That fake was still breathing, but it was already dead. It had been like that before he met me. The only time that he was truly alive was when he clashed with me. The fake would have thought so, too.

At last, all of the fake’s defenses had run out.

The body genuinely began to burn.

The fake, who had maintained his human form for a surprisingly long time, quickly became a lump of black charcoal soot.

I didn’t know if the fake would agree with me. But it seemed that even the fake liked his ending.

This alone made me quite confident that he was me from the past, dependent on self-destructive excitement and pleasure.

He was well aware that if he fought as he was, he would die soon. However, he put itself in a dangerous situation. Back then, I did not take the time to settle down and kept on advancing. I quickly climbed the floor as if I had gone mad, but I felt sad whenever the Tutorial’s remaining layers were reduced one by one.

It was not a long-term goal to live and clear the tutorial and return to Earth.

I'd only followed the sense of accomplishment that I felt by breaking through the thrill and growth walls that I felt as I broke past every moment of danger.

Even though I knew there was a high possibility of me dying, I kept going.

Instead, I hoped for more.

I hoped every moment of my life would be filled with heat, with excitement, and was ready to die when the flames of danger were shining brightly.

[You're overly involved.]

So what if I was overly involved? He was just like me in the past.

I couldn't help the fake. But at the very least, I wanted to watch its end.

[Very weak-minded. No matter how much you have in common, it's never good to have feelings for the enemy.]

"That's true."

Acknowledged. It was a weak and foolish decision.

But..."It's not always good to be strong."

I didn't know what Seregia would think about protecting herself as a weapon. I thought she might do the same.

[Do you sympathise with him?]

Well...

Maybe it's remorse for my past self who became a monster.

Suddenly, I thought of the 20th floor. I remembered the two tribes I had met there: Chimera and Idy.

The 20th floor was the stage where I began to change most dramatically among all the stages in the tutorial.

Since then, I had started to run towards a new goal. I was still running, but I felt a lot had already changed when I thought about that time.

Maybe more would continue to change.

It may change from running somewhere to a goal completely different from the previous one. I was preoccupied with one goal and tried not to think deliberately about it afterwards. Now, I wondered if it was time to think about it again.

I whispered as I looked at where the fake had disappeared, now completely turned into ash.

May you have the peaceful ending you had wished for.

“I’ll take revenge for you.”

[Did that fake wish for the fall of the God of Hope?]

Well, probably not.

“Why does that matter? I said I’d do it.”

[That’s true.]

Seregia was also positive.

“Let’s go, then.”

The Holy Land of the God of Hope had already been found, and the fake had already been burnt.

It was easy to find because the God of Evil told me the detailed coordinates.

* * *

Part of the space cracked, and a circular hole formed in it. Beyond the hole, I could see the Holy Land of the God of Hope. Before rushing in, I looked at the Holy Land.

It was uniquely shaped like a colossal sandglass made of glass walls. Ordinary people inhabited the upper compartment of the hourglass.

Small rooms, reminiscent of a vast hive, were packed tightly in the compartments above the hourglass.

One person lived in each room. The number of people living in the rooms seemed quite large.

At the lowest estimate, it was about 10 million rooms. From a distance, each room resembled sand in an hourglass.

In the lower compartment of the hourglass... there was nothing.

I was looking into the structure when suddenly the inside of the hourglass began to shake. In the small rooms, people halted their actions and began praying. It was a desperate and sincere prayer that I could feel, even when I knew nothing about it.

Soon, the vibrations of the hourglass stopped. Then the room at the bottom of the upper compartment fell into the lower compartment. It was akin to sand falling down an hourglass.

Humans, of course, were not sand. The impact shattered the room that fell to the lower compartment. The man in it, of course, died. The rest of the people in the upper compartment continued their prayers, terrified by the shock.

A moment later, mechanical equipment emerged from the bottom of the compartment below and removed the body from the fallen room. I wondered what kind of crazy situation this was.

Hochi used to look at the 60th floor and ask if it was okay to decorate it like that.

I wondered what he would say when he saw this Holy Land. I turned my sight to the ceiling of the hourglass. There was another world on the ceiling.

Unlike the hourglass's interior, it had a clear, glowing sky with a lush, green garden just below it.

That place was well decorated, like a beautiful paradise. In the middle of it was a temple built of pure white stone. It was quite a marvel from a human's point of view. The place was truly worth being called a temple.

The imbalance between the floors was strange, but I was quite satisfied. I was very, very pleased. The Holy Land of the God of Hope was a beautiful place worth burning.

Perhaps because I looked into the Holy Land, someone noticed me and asked, [Who is it?]

It was not the God of Hope. It seemed to be a guard of the Holy Land.

[What's going on?]

[Someone is trying to break into the land without permission.]

[I don't know who it is.]

[The God of Hope said nothing.]

[Can you tell from where they're trying to invade?]

[I don't know. But beyond space, there's a tremendous amount of energy. However, I cannot foresee the amount of power the intruders hold.]

[Strong.]

Shocked conversations broke out. There must be a lot of guards.

How fun.

[Stop! Stop spying and come forth! This is the Holy Land of the God of Hope!]

I came to the right place.

I chuckled and thanked the God of Evil.

[If the God of Hope does not allow it, no more can come in. First, reveal who you are!]

Reveal who I am?

Hmm, how should I introduce myself?

[Who are you?]

Only after a moment's consideration did I come up with the right answer.

I told the God of Hope's guard, who asked who I was.

“Your despair.”

At the same time, I fired at the front.

The spatial barrier was in layers, but the power I sent ripped it apart as though it were paper. Black smoke flowed into the Holy Land, and the extreme temperature differences distorted the air.

I cut through the storms created by the hot air flow and entered the Holy Land.

[An unexpected appearance of a villain. I'm glad you're like this, Warrior,] said Seregia.

As she said, I must be the antagonist in this situation.

I heard the voice of the God of Hope. Several guards had appeared after I entered and had been trying to attack.

[Die, intruder!]

“You, too. Die.”

* * *

Ah.

It felt good to burn this place. It was worth burning when there was so much greenery, pretty birds flying around, beautiful buildings.

I didn't want to burn places that were already in ruins.

The level of the guard was excellent. They weren't divine beings, but they had as much power as a god.

Considering the apostles' characteristics, the God of Hope's apostles were the ones who could show more ability than the others.

Thanks to this, I had a taste of their power whenever I burnt them alive, one by one. It was very satisfying.

Ahhhh!

Help me!

The temple has fallen!

Oh, God!

People's screams came from afar. There were also people in the Holy Land above the hourglass.

Basically, they were ordinary people who didn't feel much different from those who were trapped in an hourglass.

The number of believers must have been quite high in the Holy Land, given the screams heard.

My satisfaction grew even more.

[Damn it...]

It was the God of Hope.

As soon as I heard the somber voice, I felt extremely pleased.

Hahahaha.

[I thought you both would die together...]

That's exceptionally optimistic of you to think so.

It's a hundred years too early to think that! You pathetic fly!

[Stop! Cease-fire! I call a cease-fire!] the God of Hope shouted in an urgent voice.

It seems that he had not recovered yet.

"Why do I have to do that? It's over if I catch you."

[Don't be pretentious! You've run out of power!] the God of Hope pressed out.

Unfortunately, he was wrong. I had enough power left to capture the God of Hope.

I'd absorbed all the power that the fake left behind. Anyway, I used my ability again to prove that I had enough left.

“Zit pop.”

[Damn it! Please don't use that damned skill!]

I didn't have to use Zit Pop. Of course, I didn't have the means to create a skill as explosive as Zit Pop right now, but I didn't mind using any other skill at this time when no one was able to stop me.

But...

If you tell me not to do it, I want to do it more.

I sent one more blow over to the collapsing Holy Land of the God of Hope.

“Yes, Zit Pop.”

Chapter 323

God of Hope (2)

[You're not following him?]

Seregia asked, looking at the god of hope who'd abandoned his holy land and fled.

I won't follow him. I didn't even know where I was going, so how could I go after him? I took a lot of information out of the god of evil. If I got to know the realm of the God of Hope, I could destroy it one by one rather than going after him blindly.

"I would drag on the fight by playing tag for no reason. If I destroy his regions one by one, the God of Hope will have nowhere else to run."

[Good, an example of fine judgment.]

"What?"

Seregia did not answer back. I had a strange sense of déjà vu. I thought it was just my feeling.

The Holy Land of the God of Hope made its name clear. Two Zit Pops, and only remains of the once beautiful landscape was left. It was amazing that it had not been completely turned to ashes.

The ones subjugated to my attacks weren't usually durable. Among the remains of the building, relatively healthy ones were picked and put into space.

[What are you doing?]

"I'm going to take some materials. Later, I'll ask Yong-yong to make me a temple with this."

[You're so frugal.]

What's with that?

I did this hoping that the God of Hope's mood will become worse. I was cleaning up the debris and looking for some usable materials, when a red wall came out. The remains of the white temple were spotted with bright red bricks. The red walls were intact as if they had not been affected by the Zit Pop explosion.

Curiosity drove me to inspect the wall. It was not that difficult to pierce. The wall had endured the explosion, but it was easy to penetrate the wall when power was condensed at a single point.

I made a big hole, and entered. It was a space full of strange machinery that had never been seen. And there was one thing that was wriggling among the machinery.

It was a human.

"Hey, do you want to get hit and dragged out, or will you come out on your own?"

"If you don't hit me, I'll come out!"

A very rational reply came back.

"Yes, I won't hit you."

"Okay!"

A human being who was hiding among the gadgets appeared. It was a human figure, but he was not ordinary. He's an apostle, that's why he's here. I could be convinced.

"Heh... you're not going to hit me, are you?"

Of course, I'll hit you. I hit the apostle's knee in a swift move. On that broken leg, bones popped out from inside the knee that was broken.

The apostle of the God of Hope fell down and did not realise what had happened.

After looking at his knee a moment later, he squeezed out a scream as if he felt pain. The high-pitched scream, as if squeezing a nearly dried mop.

I grabbed the ankle of the apostle's broken leg and tore off the shaking limb. The leg bones sticking out from the knee looked sharp and usable.

I spoke in a low tone, with the leg bone against the apostle's neck, "I'll decide whether to hit you or not depending on my mood. Do you understand?"

The apostle nodded his head convulsively and replied yes.

"Now, shall we get to what these gadgets are, first?" I questioned him.

But the apostle was groaning in pain. The pain was too severe for him to explain, it seemed.

"If you don't start your explanation quickly, there will be more pain."

* * *

The apostle eventually began to explain only after one more wrist disappeared. I wish I had done it earlier.

"This is the..."

The apostle unwittingly pointed to the gadget with his right hand. To be precise, he pointed with what remained of his arm. His wrist was torn off and lying on the floor.

"It's a device that watches all over the Holy Land, It is used for managing it."

It looked similar to a CCTV on Earth.

I had one question.

“The God of Hope doesn’t need a device like this.”

“God has entrusted us with taking care of it.”

Well; That would be the case if there were several temples.

I left Lee Yeon-hee as an apostle on the 60th floor right now. Come to think of it, I wonder if Lee Yeon-hee was doing well.

The apostle continued to explain while I was thinking about something else.

“This way, we can watch the rooms of the upper compartment.”

A huge screen showed people living above the hourglass. Each room that people lived in was about the size of a container. It wasn’t a small room.

“The people who live there are supposed to never leave that room for the rest of their lives.”

It was too small to be their whole world for life. I felt sorry for the people who were trapped there because I had been stuck on the 60th floor for a long time.

“Everyone’s stuck alone.”

“Yes, it is.”

“Then how do they give birth to babies?”

The apostle replied that if people apply to become a couple by mutual agreement, sperm and eggs were extracted and artificially conceived while the two were sleeping. It was an excessively inhumane method of breeding.

“Ahhhhh!”

I tore off the apostle's right forearm.

“...B-but I'm just telling you the truth...!”

That fact made me feel bad. Still, it was good that people could communicate with each other.

People in the room were usually looking into electronic devices similar to computers. Sometimes, some people read books, but most of them seemed to spend time communicating with each other through electronic devices.

“...anyhow, a child born that way will be cared for in the Holy Land until the age of 10 and then assigned a room at the top of the upper compartment.”

And then, they start living in captivity. Wait, there were kids in the Holy Land? I expanded my senses and looked around.

The place where the children were located was the deepest part of the Holy Land. Fortunately, everyone there looked fine. It appeared to be a sort of shelter.

The guards I first encountered must have detected my intrusion and collected them there. I praised them in his heart. I'd already killed all the guards.

“What was that situation when that room crashed to the bottom?”

I asked what I was most curious about. The apostle hesitated for a moment. He was afraid I'd hit him again for being offended.

“If you don't tell me, you'll get more hurt.”

“...death. One room falls down every day. The room at the bottom falls. It usually takes 10 to 25 years for the top room to crash.”

“So the people there usually die between twenty and thirty-five.”

“Yes, we call it life expectancy.”

Twenty-five. It was too early to admit one's death and face it calmly. No, it has nothing to do with age. Who can stand death coming in visible form from day to day?

“Instead, one person a month is blessed with random ascension.”

“Ascension?”

“Yes, the God of Hope allows us to live in the Holy Land. Then we're free from death. In fact, that's how I came up to the Holy Land.”

I had seen people praying. Now I knew what they were praying for. They were praying for ascension.

I didn't want much faith. The problem was not the materials, but the believers. If people remained, the God of Hope would continue to squeeze the believers out of their faith. I'll steal the believers, not anything else.

[Are you going to take the ordinary people and use them?]

They don't really need to be used. If I thought about it, it's for the Tutorial stage. I can take the entire tutorial from the Hundred Gods Temple at any time. And many of the Tutorial stages were undeveloped.

Or there were places where the civilization had already been destroyed. I couldn't just leave such a place alone, so it wouldn't be a bad idea to let those people live there.

[Will they want that?]

Well... I didn't know. Life out of here must be hard for them. Instead, they will be given freedom, but some people would want comfort instead of freedom.

But still.

“I can’t leave them like this.”

It’s not because of my idea that people should be free. This was because their existence gave strength to the God of Hope.

I projected myself into each room. People were surprised and delighted to see me suddenly appearing. I told people I’d let them get out of this narrow room. Naturally, people were glad that I was talking about ascension.

“Oh... God, at last.....”

“Thank you, thank you very much.”

Those people knelt and prayed before my projection in the room. They cried and expressed their gratitude.

There were various people. Some of them showed unusual reactions. Especially a young woman. Of course, most of the people here were young.

“...can you take someone else besides me?”

I asked her.

[Who are you talking about?]

“There’s my son... He’s only 16, but he’s in a room lower than me. Please...”

Luck seemed to apply a little bit to falling down. I couldn’t believe the son was further below his mother. By the way, I was curious about the age of the woman.

“I’m 36.”

She was older than I thought.

Age usually fell between twenty and thirty-five before the died, so she may be one of the oldest by this standard. It seemed fine to let this woman manage people later.

[Your son will also go to the new holy place. Not only your son, but everyone.]

The woman was thrilled.

Rather than saying that everyone would ascend to heaven, she seemed more pleased to be able to meet her son in person. Some people asked something different from women.

“...Can I not go?”

[Why?]

Dumbfounded, I asked roughly, not even thinking about maintaining dignity.

“I... just feel comfortable and good here.”

[If you stay here, you'll fall and die soon.]

“We still have five more years to go.”

The man said smartly. He was a very lazy fellow.

[No. Destiny can't be avoided just because you hate it.]

I recited a deceptive line after quite a long time, ignoring the man's request to leave me alone. I'll have to send him to a rough place. I thought it would be nice to have him on the 12th floor of Hell
Difficulty level.

As I took questions one by one, people began to ask all sorts of things. What was going to happen in the future, where were they being sent, and more such queries.

I answered as much as I could. It was an act of little help to God's dignity, but I wanted to give people a minimal explanation.

Many of them asked questions like.

“Who... who are you? Who are you?”

“Are you really God? Did you listen to my prayer?”

There was a man in every world who doubted the existence of God. Even the world where God himself existed, was no exception.

I answered them.

“Your God, and your hope.”

All the people were sent into space. Then Seregia asked me a question.

[Is it okay to call yourself hope?]]

It's alright.

Faith is a curious thing. Hope for them is no longer the god of hope, but me who met them face-to-face and talked to them.

Ambiguity protected God's authority, but it also confused the direction of faith. There were countless stories of believers who had come to worship the representatives, not the gods, even in the religion of the earth.

People would regard me as the god of hope, not the God of Hope that they had never seen or heard of in their lifetime, but the one who'd appeared in person and liberated them.

It had now been too inefficient to deny the God of Hope and to put forward new faith. The faith of hope was already deeply embedded in people's minds. It was easier to impersonate the name of the god of hope and direct their faith toward me.

I put everyone in the open space, and moved the children in the shelter to an open space. Then, in the Holy Land of Hope, only me and the apostle were left.

“God, I will do my best. Take me with you.”

Said the guy, bowing down.

I’m sorry, but I didn’t intend to do that.

“You know why I kept you alive?”

“...yeah?”

“The God of Hope is watching me through you.”

“Well, that’s not... No, I don’t think I’m such a great person...”

This guy introduced himself like a head of ordinary managerial jobs, but it couldn’t have been. Apostles were no ordinary believer. Beyond their body, they were like a god’s alter ego.

Everything he heard and saw was seen and heard by the God of Hope.

“Had enough watching me rampage in your holy land?”

I grabbed the head of an apostle who was trying to flee and raised his body. I said, turning his head to make eye contact with me. Towards the God of Hope beyond those eyes.

“Wherever you hide, I will find you.”

As soon as I finished speaking, I burst the apostle’s head.

[Are you sure you’re leaving right away?]

Let’s go.

After all, this holy place had been burned neatly so that even its remains could not be found.

Chapter 324

God of Hope (3)

God of Hope (3)

It was a great idea to secure believers in the Holy Land of the God of Hope.

It also had the effect of cutting off the supply of faith sent by believers to the God of Hope and eliminating the land where the God of Hope would return to. But more than that, I was more satisfied with the faith conveyed to me by the believers in the subspace.

“In this case, there is no need to rush to connect the 60th floor to replenish your divine power.”

Of course, we should connect the 60th floor to the Earth, even if there wasn't a need to replenish my power.

There was no need to rush, so delaying the pursuit of the God of Hope wasn't a problem.

[Right.]

Seregia answered calmly, but not with a very patient tone. She seemed to want to go back quickly and replenish her power.

“Why don't you gather the believers, too, this time?”

[No.]

She was quite stubborn. The 61st floor was the only place with believers so far, so I hadn't actively recommended it. But she refused to accept faith through believers until now.

[No, I don't want to.]

I didn't recommend it anymore.

Then I'll just take it all for myself.

The next place we arrived at, after leaving the sacred place with the hourglass, was a city that existed in the deep sea.

The city was relying on a protective shield to protect against the pressure created from water, and food was dependent on the relief supplies from the God of Hope.

Naturally, I thought of the 49th floor. People who were besieged by monsters and dependent on food sent by the God of Hope.

There, I'd blown up a poisonous Zit Pop to wipe out all the monsters, but instead had covered the people with poison. And the God of Hope had cleared the stage, saying he liked the situation.

This was his taste in the first place. People isolated in limited space, forced to rely on themselves.

This place didn't look like a holy place. It was just a gathering of believers and belief, and there was no such thing as a temple where the God of Hope lived. Nor did the God of Hope seem to have fled here. His power seemed too weak for that.

This was such a mess.

[What should we do?]

Of course, we were going to destroy this place.

First, I had to take care of all the believers. In the middle of the city appeared a man living in the tallest building. He introduced himself as the mayor of this deep-sea city.

I informed the mayor that I would send all the people of the city to a new world. And led the people there. The mayor didn't even doubt me when I showed my powers.

In fact, it was not easy for a mere human being to doubt while facing a divine force, let alone, call it false. The mayor looked somewhat troubled and hesitant, but immediately faltered when I said I would give the role of leading to someone else if he refused.

At that point, I called myself the God of Hope.

“Oh... are you the God of Hope?”

[Yes.]

“Please punish me for the sin of doubting God. God himself entering the city is considered an old story from the past, that only appears in myth. I thought an apostle was here. I'm sorry.”

The mayor asked in a slightly hoarse voice.

“...I'm so sorry, but why now... May I ask, why now?”

[What?]

“One thousand people die of hunger every year. There's an unknown epidemic that kills more people every year, but we couldn't get out of this city, we just had to endure it.”

An epidemic. Did the God of Hope hide it to bring out more faith?

“Thank you very much for taking us to another world, but... I don't know why you're here now...”

Unexpectedly, the mayor was brave. If he'd asked this question in front of another god, and not me, he would have died on the spot. But I decided to explain.

Because I was a good god.

[cough...] Seregia chuckled.

“What?”

[Sorry, I’m so surprised that a cough came out.]

Well... I mean...

I wanted to refute something to Seregia, but there was nothing I could say. It was Seregia who knew my behavior better than anyone else. I also knew well that I was not a good god.

However, the God of Hope I was impersonating would be a good god. I felt that hope was buried in the deepest place. Not like a rope unfurled from above.

No one would find hope in peaceful times, but it stays dormant, so quietly, like it’s waiting for the day the being needs it. Truly a virtue that doesn’t reveal itself to the world.

I thought that was true hope.

Those who believe in such hope will live with the “hope” that they’d be able to get through it even when they are at peace and that there’d be God’s help.

It was an ideal hope if it relieved people of the burden of failure and danger, making them more courageous and able to live with a strong will. How can one call it hope if it evoked despair for one’s existence?

I replied to the mayor, who was a little puzzled, perhaps because I was late in answering. Of course, it was a false story.

[Sorry, I haven’t cared about you in the meantime.]

The God of Hope would be very damned if he finds out about this. It was not enough to impersonate his identity, but I just had to apologize to a mere human being, which may be a blow to his godhood.

But I didn't really care.

[In the meantime, I had no choice but to leave you here. But now that the new world for you is complete, I intend to lead you there.]

While lying, I even said, "The whole world was in danger due to the great war between gods and demons outside, and that's why people were evacuated here for a while."

The mayor was moved to tears. Since then, the mayor actively cooperated to persuade people. Most agreed to move to a new world because they were suffering from hunger and infectious diseases.

Of course, there were some who wanted to stay, but everyone decided to follow me on the lie that there was no more food in this city.

[They're being fooled so easily. If the God of Hope finds out, he'll explode in a rage and die.]

That's what I said too. I wish there were an apostle here. If an apostle were able to show this situation to the God of Hope, I would have felt the greatest joy.

* * *

I continued to wander in the realm of the God of Hope, destroying it, absorbing the power.

It would have been difficult for a world of mixed gods, but all the places I visited were the worlds dominated by the God of Hope.

Whilst roaming his territories, I even encountered the God of Hope. Many times. Each time the God of Hope ran away from me, and I absorbed the power there.

As this pattern continued, the number of coordinates given by the god of evil were dwindling. Since then, the God of Hope had fled to the realm of other gods, not to his own.

Leaving a trace as if he were waiting for me to come after him. I assumed he was doing so to cause a clash between the other gods and me and was going to take away my powers.

I was steadily replenished by the believers who I had taken from the God of Hope. Even the believers who had received new salvation because of me had sent a considerable amount of faith.

“Hey, you’re a bit strong among the Rulers.”

“No, no. Who said that?”

This took place just before the Ruler god, whom I had just met, was defeated.

He was the god of Gochang.

(T/N: This part... I’m kinda clueless myself, it literally says Gochang, which is a county in Korea.)

I defeated him after hearing a few curses.

The god of Gochang eagerly denied my words.

“Ai, I haven’t even been recognized as a Minor God yet. It’s just like this, ah.”

What Minor God?

It looked like there were divisions even among them.

“By the way, do you know more about the realms of the God of Hope?”

“Ye, I’ve told you everything I knew.”

The only place that the God of Gochang told me was where I had already raided.

I gave one more push.

“Then is there no one else who knows?”

“Well... he wouldn't have told anyone if it was an external secretive land. But there won't be many places like that. If it's a Ruler, they'll try to hide their territory, but when it's the God of Hope, it's safer to announce that this was his territory.”

Is that so?

I had to say, he was a good speaker. I'd always liked someone who was good at explaining things.

“How much would he have, if so?”

“One or two, he'd have one or two. It may be hidden in a multi-religious world. If so, that alone would be a great shame.”

In fact, I wondered if there was anything more shameful than a god running away from his own believers when the God of Gochang had explained that.

“I see.”

I'd met many gods. Most of them were Ruler gods.

The land of the God of Hope, which was told to many gods, including the god of evil, was thoroughly raided. At this rate, almost all the supply of faith had been blocked. Now, it was not a matter of supply and demand, but of maintaining his godhood.

I opened the quest window.

[God of Order-?]

[God of Light-Explosion, please! (Complete)]

[God of Duel- Return of powers]

When did the god of light see me use it again?

I hadn't noticed.

[God of Hope-Truce]

Alright.

I'll call you now.

I'd already absorbed everything I could.

"How am I supposed to accept this?"

"Heng! Do you want me to deliver it to the God of Hope?"

While I was muttering to myself, Kirikiri's face popped out of the quest window screen.

I said hello to her and then asked,

"Will you?"

"Yes!"

"Then do you know where the God of Hope is?"

If that's the case, I would go catch him without a moment's hesitation.

"No, I don't know where he is. I can only deliver the words."

It was a shame. I wish I could capture him neatly.

I didn't know that the God of Hope would continue to run away to the end even though his base was completely blown away.

[God of Hope-Truce (Completed)]

Soon, the quest window was renewed.

Kirikiri waved to me.

“Hihi! Then see you next time!”

Then she disappeared again. It was certainly convenient.

“Well... did she just... Who is she?” Next to me, the god of Gochang spoke.

“Kirikiri, from Tutorial Hell difficulty...”

I was about to ask if he knew about the Tutorial, but the god of Gochang seemed to have understood who Kirikiri was.

“Ah, so that’s the crazy...”

The god of Gochang stopped talking the next moment.

Kirikiri’s face popped back out of the quest window, which had not yet been closed, and was staring at the god of Gochang.

The god of Gochang knelt slowly in that posture.

“Sorry, I almost made a mistake.”

“Heng-heng, don’t mess with other people’s privacy.”

Kirikiri said, and then disappeared from the quest window screen again.

I pressed the god of Gochang to give me information about Kirikiri, but the god of Gochang kept his mouth shut until the end. Even if I were to torture him, he wouldn’t budge due to privacy, so I couldn’t help but leave it be in this situation.

[Are you going home now?]

I should.

[I remember you wanted it to end completely.]

I've done enough.

It was not a victory to wipe out all the enemy's population.

If you destroy all your enemy's forces and absorb the enemy's infrastructure and facilities, it's considered as big a victory as the word "Loser!" engraved on the enemy's forehead.

Above all, if the God of Hope decided to give up everything and hide, I would not be able to clear the quests to take over the Tutorial. Now that I'd solved the quests; if there's another quarrel some other day I could really end it with just a few words.

[It's going to be annoying for a while.]

It will?

Why?

[Didn't you absorb a lot of believers? In addition, you said you were the god of hope. It won't be easy considering Warrior's personality.]

Come to think of it, it was annoying. To act more like the God of Hope and attract believers, I had pretended to be virtuous.

[Managing people is the most annoying task. Do you have the confidence and patience to do so?]

Absolutely not.

The sect on the 61st floor had Old man and Grandma as the managers. I had asked them to take over my part as a god and lead them.

"I'll just leave it up to Hochi."

[Will he do that bothersome work?]

“I can make religion and sect management like a game system. Just like I did in the Dungeon.”

He'll find it interesting if I arrange it to Hochi's taste.

[And if he refuses?]

...Well.

If I asked him sincerely, wouldn't he do it?

[I think it's very likely that he won't listen.]

It was.

Because of my old mistakes, Hochi wasn't too pleased to ask me to do something. It was not short-term work, and it was highly likely that he would refuse to go along with a work functioning for long.

“Then... shall we kidnap Hochi's favorite novel writers?”

If he accepted it, it'd be set in stone.

If he refused, I'd pose a threat of kidnapping them and thus have his novels in a perpetual state of limbo never to be finished.

Chapter 325

God of Hope (4)

This concluded the series of disturbances that had occurred when the God of Hope intervened in Japan.

I had to dig more before hitting anything next time.

It was as rewarding as I had anticipated it would be and it came with the added bonus of f*cking over the God of Hope. I hadn't completely devoured the God of Hope, but I destroyed his base and took the majority of his believers.

What's better than that?

I was very pleased to see the God of Hope running away cursing me whenever he ran into me in his holy land.

At the end, the God of Hope, who kept saying, "Hope shines more strongly in despair," ran away and did not respond to my provocation. It would be true that the more desperate the situation is, the greater the power of the God of Hope.

However, the land destroyed by me was greater than the power that he had been receiving from his dwindling following. All the believers of the God of Hope were anxious for salvation.

For decades, for life, or for generations, they were hoping for a better life, squeezing faith into the God of Hope. So when I gave them real hope, they came into my arms without any doubt.

I'd gained a lot. For ordinary gods, the number of believers and their faith were more important than their power.

I can confidently say that my achievements have given me the foundation to rise from where I am now and get even stronger. Of course, the believers on the 61st floor would be disappointed to hear this.

It was true. So I was able to come back to the flat with great satisfaction.

A feeling of panic rose in me. There was no one there. When I came back to the flat without much thought, it was empty. Of course, I thought Hochi would be lying on the couch, and Yong-yong was playing in the room.

On checking, Hochi and Yong-yong's energy still remained in Japan. I was wondering what was going on, so I moved to where Hochi was. Hochi was sitting on the beach with Lee Joon-suk, watching the sunset.

They look tired. That's good. Someone's been working hard.

"What are you doing?"

"Huh? Just... uh?"

Hochi had a stupid look on his face.

Hey. I wished he wouldn't do that with the same face as me.

I once asked Hochi if he wanted to change his face. I thought he would prefer to live with a different face because it was Hochi's face that states that he was my clone.

The face represents the person's identity. The same was true for me and Hochi. But Hochi was against having his own new face.

For some reason, Hochi kept the same face as me. The reason was unknown. I decided to respect Hochi's choice. But when he was wearing such a look, I always thought, "I wish he had a different face from mine."

"I went to the flat, and was confused because you weren't there. What are you doing here?”

“...T-that’s...” Hochi stammered.

Perhaps because he was facing the sunset, his face looked red. He seemed to be embarrassed about something.

“Hyung, are you hurt anywhere?” asked Lee Joon-suk.

“Of course not.”

He then asked, “What happened then? Was it a big deal?”

I gave a rough account of what had happened.

“I went after the runaway God of Hope. I didn’t catch him.”

“Oh, that’s why you’re late. What a relief. Hochi Hyung was so worri-ungh...!”

Hochi shut Lee Joon-suk’s mouth. Only then did I understand why he was embarrassed.

“What? Were you worried about me?”

“No!”

Hochi was in a flustered state of denial.

Yong-yong appeared in the air. Right in my arms.

“Daddy! You came too late!”

Yong-yong hugged me once, raised his head and rebuked me. He must have been sad that I disappeared for a few days without contacting him.

He had that familiar look in his eyes. When Yong-yong did something wrong as a child, I gave him the same look while I scolded him.

How old was I again? Already getting scolded by my son. Still, it wasn't a bad feeling.

"Sorry, the God of Hope ran better than I thought."

The essence of hope remained till the end, and the God of Hope was confident. If he had been a decent god, he would have prepared for a final stand even if he was ashamed to see his main plan failing like that. The God of Hope, who gave up all his apostles and Holy Land, and chose to run away, was certainly an exceptional case.

When I apologized, Yong-yong quickly straightened his face and hugged me.

Ah, my pretty son.

"Yong-yong, were you worried about your daddy, too?"

"Hey, I wasn't worried about you!" shouted Hochi beside.

I ignored him. It was not meaningful to shout those words with a face redder than the sunset.

"No, I wasn't worried." Yong-yong replied in a calm tone.

He wasn't worried. In fact, this was the right decision, but somehow I felt sad. I wanted him to believe me so firmly that he didn't worry about me, but on the other hand, I had a contradictory feeling that he should worry about me.

"Hehe."

Either way, Yong-yong was rubbing his face against my chest, saying it was good to have me back.

I stroked Yong-yong's head.

“A little while ago... Ahhh!

Lee Joon-suk screamed.

“What’s wrong?”

“He must have been bitten by the mantis for putting his finger in the box.” explained Hochi.

What? The mantis? So, he pinched Lee Joon-suk’s finger, huh. I thought they had gotten a lot closer since then.

“By the way, why aren’t you waiting at the flat...”

Boom!

I heard a dull explosion noise from behind while I was talking. Looking back, construction materials were being transported. There were quite a few busy construction vehicles and people.

The restoration of the coastal defense line had begun a long time ago. There would be no more monster waves here. But people were not sure of the fact. Maybe it’s natural for them to be like this.

It was meaningless hard work, but it’s not worthless. Furthermore, what happened on this coastline must have been at a magnitude beyond human standards. It made sense to be on guard.

That may be why the group was still staying here. In fact, I was worried a lot. About Hochi. I always wondered if he could do something alone since he was a lethargic fellow.

However, when I left the job to him, he was not only doing his best as much as he could, but also showing a responsible attitude.

“You’ve done well,” I said to Hochi.

Come to think of it, I don’t think I’d ever said this to Hochi.

I was only saying, “Work harder.”

“...Well... it was supposed to be that way. Yong-yong and Joon-suk worked better.”

Of course, it wouldn't usually happen like this, but now I thought it wouldn't have gone well without him. Should I say I was relieved or proud? Probably both.

I asked Hochi what I thought I'd leave to him.

“Hochi, I've absorbed the believers of the God of Hope this time.”

I told him about the situation the believers were in and the direction I wanted to lead them.

“I want you to take care of them. I'll take responsibility and make it look like a game system. The interface will be very friendly, so it won't be too difficult. And as long as you accept it, I will...”

“I'll do it.”

“Can you... Huh? You will?”

“I don't know if I can do well, but I'll give it a try.”

I smiled quietly.

I was going to take him to the flat right away, but Hochi was showing such a responsible and mature side that I didn't want to move him away.

“Okay, then I'll go back first and take a rest. Come back later. Let's talk about it again when you're back.”

I also told Lee Joon-suk to talk to me later.

I thought it would be better to train him and let him stick with Hochi in the future.

For some reason, Lee Joon-suk seemed to be pleased with my saying that we would talk later.

* * *

“You’ve done a very good job. Ahahaha.”

Kirikiri laughed. She wasn’t pretending. She looked to be in a good mood. She is always smiling, but I can tell how she felt after observing her for so long.

“What’s the state of the God of hope?”

“He’s ruined, so ruined, totally ruined.” said Kirikiri, drumming her fingers.

The defeat of the God of Hope seemed to be truly joyful for her.

“Can he maintain his position as god?”

“He can.”

That was an unexpected answer. I thought it was more likely for him to not.

“The God of hope was not only believed by ordinary believers. He was in danger because most of his believers were Ruler Gods.”

A god who was receiving faith from other gods. It was not an unfamiliar experience. Through the God of Slowness, I knew that there was a god who feared another God.

I confirmed this fact through Old Man, Grandma and Seregia.

“Well, that’s something you can only keep up with enough power. Problems are going to start popping up internally, too. It would be difficult for him to make a comeback in a short period of time. Ahahaha!”

Kirikiri looked really happy. It was somehow weird to see her rejoice over another's misfortune.

“The God of Hope has been an old headache.”

I'm sure he is.

If he was given faith by the Rulers, it would only be profitable for him to raise the Rulers. He must have developed his power by giving information on the Hundred Gods Temple, and by using loopholes in the system to increase his power.

In a way, it was safe to say that this was the ultimate cause of the earth's end. It was the God of Hope who was backing the monsters, gates, dungeons, and the Rulers who commanded all that.

It was no wonder that he prepared the fake for when I came outside with hostility from the beginning. He couldn't have done harm to me in the Tutorial, but I could imagine how nervous he must have been to see me clear each floor.

I checked the quest window again. Some of the gods' quests had already been marked complete. Like Kirikiri, they were gods who wanted to weaken the power of the Rulers.

This was also the case among the gods whose quest was completed.

[God of Light-Explosion, please! (Completed)]

[God of Nature-(Completed)]

[God of Sky-(Completed)]

[God of Sacrifice-(Completed)]

Some gods completed their quest for no particular reason or no reason at all. As for the god of light. He was a unique case.

But in case of a god of nature or god of sky...

“Heng, they don’t want to be involved anymore.”

Did they want to stay away from the conflict between the Rulers and the others?

“You’ve been acting so crazy, breaking into other people’s holy land. There are many reasons why they don’t want to be associated with Ho-jae anymore. On the contrary, there are gods who say that if a person is as strong as Ho-jae, they should be automatically included in the Hundred Gods Temple.”

That was my problem. It would be enough if it were the God of Nature or the God of Sacrifice who had some problems with me. In the case of the God of Sky, we had a problem that I needed to go and argue about.

It wasn’t an emergency though. Rather,

“They want me in the Hundred Gods Temple?”

“Yes, yes. I also think it’s not a bad offer. What do you think of it, hoo-woo-jae-ae?”

At that moment, I had the urge to grip the back of Kirikiri’s head.

‘Not a bad offer.’

“I don’t intend to be under the control of the system.”

It’s been only four months since I’ve escaped the tutorial, and now you want me to be bound by the same shackles?

Definitely a no-no. If there was such an offer, I was willing to resist desperately.

“He-heng, it would be great to be like a Korean family with Ho-jae.”

You evil bunny.

Becoming a Korean family with Kirikiri, who was delighted by the fall of the God of Hope.

It was a shame to have a family relationship with the wicked gods. That was a serious problem. I heard that the reason for the birth of the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon was because of dangerous gods who clashed with each other.

Maybe I would be forcibly recruited that way, too. Measures were needed.

“Ah, here comes a visitor. I’ll get going!”

Kirikiri exclaimed and disappeared. I soon found out who Kirikiri was talking about.

The air in the flat was distorted and a man appeared. Flaming red skin, height twice that of a regular human, and a body with toned muscles.

He looked like the monk from the 13th floor.

“God of Duel?”

Chapter 326

Seoul (17)

The God of duel.

The god who had been watching me since the early days of the Tutorial.

Since I was an amateur challenger who didn't know anything, when I didn't have the same confidence I had now. Thanks to that, he didn't have a good impression of me.

Somewhere in between, he had a change of mind, so he gave me some power as a gift. He was also a god who didn't pay much attention to me because his evaluation changed again.

Before entering the 60th floor, the messages I'd seen about the God of Duel were usually like this:

[God of Duel regrets something.]

[God of Duel is displeased.]

[God of Fight regrets something.]

[God of Duel is disappointed in you.]

Such was the case. That was all. I knew what the duel god wanted.

Me to have a fair confrontation with an enemy.

But f*ck that, it wasn't possible in the Tutorial's Hell Difficulty.

No matter how much I got stronger, at the time, it was abnormal to demand such a thing at a high level of difficulty, where the easier option was to hit someone's back or find a shortcut.

Was it on the fourth floor? There was a negative message for me, saying that I'd have to repeat the attack against the city of Goblins. Should I have run straight from the main gate of the city of Goblins to the throne room of the King Goblin?

What the duel god wanted was always unrealistic. Of course, after gaining more power, I was able to clear it in the way he wanted me to.

But why would I? I was never interested in fair confrontation. It has always been that way, and it will continue to be so.

In conclusion, the God of Duel was a god who wasn't on good terms with me. So when Hochi and Yong-yong had participated in the Tournament, the God of Duel demanded the return of his power.

That obstinate god suffered whenever his power was used in a wrong way. That may be why the power, which had already been altered, copied, torn and used, was still asked to be given back, with a promise of reward.

"God of Duel."

He nodded his head.

He was a giant with flaming red skin, bulging eyes and a muscular, yet irregularly-shaped body that was reminiscent of the goblins listed in folktales. He resembled the monks I'd met on the 13th floor. Maybe they're from the same clan.

"What brings you here?"

"Requirement: the return of powers."

The God of Duel answered, plainly, in a firm voice. He was a little different from the God of Hope, who telepathically communicated in the shape of a strange fly.

Stiff talk. He looked like a monk, but his tone was a little different.

“That request was accepted by me.”

The God of Duel nodded. The God of Duel had promised a reward. It was of no consequence to return a power that was already useless to me.

But...

“Who gave you permission to come here?”

“Of course your...”

The voice of the God of Duel, who’d answered in a monotonous manner, halted.

Everything in sight began to vibrate. The sofa, alarm clock, table, and other furniture in the living room of the flat rose into the air and were broken into pieces while vibrating. The walls and ceilings of the building were drilled with holes. Same was for the God of Duel.

His skin couldn’t stand the shock and began to peel off. He, who already had red skin, became more red with blood clots all over his body.

This was different from the God of Hope who summoned his own world to Japan and dealt with me. The God of Duel jumped into the middle of my territory, and to make matters worse, exactly where I was.

Die.

“I accepted the demand for the return of your power. Though I don’t remember saying that you could come to my place at any time.”

The God of Duel tried to use his power and protect his body.

He spat out, “Have you been busy?”

His voice was weirdly calm. And the answer wasn't fit for a situation where his eyes were being half pulled out. It was definitely a busy day.

Restoration of Seregia... I had to find a solution. I still needed to call in Kim Min-hyuk to find out what happened over the past few days, and what Hochi and Yong-yong had been doing. I also had to visit Park Min and wring his neck.

"You must have been very busy. I'm sorry. You told me to come later, so I thought that the timing wouldn't be important."

The God of Duel immediately apologized. I didn't like it. Even in such a situation, he gave me a calm reply, not a scream.

"More than anything, I thought it would be best to meet you now. For me, for you and for the other gods watching us."

F*cking bastard.

This was the most annoying thing. The God of Duel did not come alone. There were countless eyes of gods with him. The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

Just as Lee Yeon-hee came to the 60th floor with the eyes of those gods, the God of Duel did the same. The fact that the gods could indirectly come out and look at Earth through the God of Duel wasn't pleasant for me.

"What do you mean by 'would be best for me'?"

I won't allow him to make a bullsh*t story. I'm willing to pull out his eyes and make him blind like the guy on the 13th floor.

"Many gods are anxious."

"Why?"

"Of course, because of you."

Tch.

I clicked my tongue. It was the same as Kirikiri said.

“You are an anomaly in many ways. Most Combat Gods can’t even reach the Minor God level, but you are well beyond it.”

“I see how it is.”

It’s no wonder that the Hundred Gods Temple was concerned about my power.

A more important problem. What I wanted was owned by the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

“It’s been less than a day since the hunt was over, have you already prepared the cauldron?”

As soon as I had finished hunting down the God of Hope and the Rulers, they checked in immediately. It was too much of a coincidence. I thought about dealing with them once I kill the God of Duel, the medium of their gaze, and shut all the eyes on Earth.

‘Seregia.’

[Yes, Warrior.]

‘Help me.’

[It’s too much right now.]

‘Can’t you do anything?’

[I’m helpless.]

Damn it.

Seregia seemed to be in a worse condition than expected. When she killed the fake, she was hit hard by the power of God of Hope.

I was also harmed by that power, but Seregia, who had to face it head-on as a weapon, suffered even more damage.

It wasn't something that I had noticed while getting back to Earth. First, I had to solve the issue at hand. Before the Hundred Gods Temple could come down to Earth in earnest, I'd have to kill the God of Duel.

I was planning my future actions, when suddenly the quest window opened. Having opened without my will, the quest window flashed brightly.

[Quest Window]

[God of Slowness-Conversation with God of Duel.]

[God of Remorse-Conversation with God of Duel.]

[God of Origin-Conversation with God of Duel.]

[God of Amusement-Conversation with God of Duel.]

[God of Devotion-Conversation with God of Duel.]

[God of Light-Explosion! (Completed)]

[God of Light-Explosion! (new!)]

It was an unexpected quest. But I could understand the will of the Hundred Gods Temple. They wanted me to talk to the God of Duel. They're going to talk to me, using the god of duel as a spokesperson.

[God of Slowness-Conversation with God of Duel.]

Explanation: The God Of Slowness is curious about your latest move.

The God Of Slowness would like to learn more about you through a conversation with the God of Duel who visited to get his power back.

[God of Remorse-Conversation with God of Duel.]

Explanation: The God of Adventure asked.

[God of Origin-Conversation with God of Duel.]

Explanation: The God of Origin is deeply concerned about your recent move.

The God of Origin would like to confirm that your move does not threaten the safety of the God of Origin, through the conversation with the God of Duel who has visited to receive his power back.

There were even different explanations for what they wanted even though they all gave the same quest.

The Gods of Slowness and Adventure were intrigued while the God of Origin was concerned.

The God of Light...

What is this?

I'm sure I already did that.

[God of Light-Explosion, please! (Completed)]

[God of Light-Explosion, again please! (new!)]

Description: The Lord of Light is shouting 'One more time'. The God of Light has prepared a reward for the quest, a new price, but not consent for the transfer of the tutorial. Whatever the reward is, you'd better ignore it.

I'll ignore it.

All the other gods wanted me to have a conversation with the God of Duel. It was not to draw a conclusion through conversation, but to use it as a basis for judgment on me. It was strange, but that was the attitude the gods had been using for the challengers.

“Conversation.”

“Are you willing?”

The God of Duel was still calm.

I wanted to throw a stone in that calmness.

Conversation.

My preferred conversation was one that involved throwing hands and not words.

“Ta-da!”

Then, Kirikiri, who had disappeared through the quest window, came back out.

* * *

“Heng heng, I knew you two were going to fight,” commented Kirikiri, munching on a chocolate pie.

Now, even if I didn’t give it to her, she brought snacks out of the kitchen on her own.

“Come on, eat. Talk while eating.”

Kirikiri said so, and gave me and the God of Duel one slice of chocolate pie each.

Hey, this is mine.

It’s my house.

To put it aside, it was a house owned by Kim Min-hyuk, and the snacks he bought.

“The God of Duel doesn’t speak well. How dumb. Ahahaha.”

Kirikiri laughed, pounding the back of the duel god. The God of Duel quietly tore off a piece of the choco pie, and began munching on it. It seemed that he didn’t even care that Kirikiri had hit his back.

It was annoying. The fact that he remained so unguarded irritated me.

“There are two main concerns of the gods.”

“What is it?”

“One is that you’re completely out of the constraints of the system.”

Does that matter?

It was different from the God of Hope, who used the boundaries of the system to his benefit. The God of Hope used his men, but the other gods did not punish him because he belonged to the Hundred Gods Temple.

But in my case, my land was only vaguely related to the Hundred Gods Temple, and if you looked closely, I myself, would be considered a third party.

If I’d intruded into the joint area of the Hundred Gods Temple without permission, I would be attacked by the Hundred Gods Temple.

“Well, maybe you can find a loophole. Above all, In the eyes of the Hundred Gods Temple defense is impossible if you attack only the personal land of a particular god. Just as you destroyed the holy lands of the God of Hope.”

It’s not the problem of the Hundred Gods Temple, but a particular god then.

“Some of the gods are worried they might be your target.”

That won't happen.

“You think I'm going to pick a fight with just anybody?”

“Heng-heng.”

Kirikiri just smiled.

I guess you think so.

“The second worry is choosing a way to avoid the restrictions, with Ho-jae protected by the system.”

“And how is that possible?”

To avoid the restrictions while being protected by the system.

“You already know. By becoming the apostle of another god.”

Apostle.

I hadn't expected that to appear again.

“In the first place, the apostles were created by the gods to free themselves from restrictions and expand their sphere of influence. If you're an apostle of another god, you'll be a part of the Hundred Gods Temple, but you can avoid the system's constraints. ”

“Can you be an apostle of another god even after you become god?”

“Of course.”

Several hypotheses came to mind.

About the God of Hope.

“Among the gods in the Hundred Gods Temple, is there any other “God apostle”?”

“Yes. Yes. There are. Typically they were under the God of Hope.”

The God of Hope. That’s why I got the impression that he was free from the system.

Kirikiri said, looking at the God of Duel sitting next to her.

“God of Duel here is also an apostle.”

The God of Duel was the apostle of another god.

Whose apostle was he?

Soon, I got the answer.

“The God of Slowness.”

The God of Duel nodded.

“Heng-heng. Anyway, Ho-jae is very unique, such a situation has never happened before. That’s why it’s like this. Just know that the Hundred Gods Temple doesn’t want to antagonize you right now.”

The Hundred Gods Temple had no intention of antagonizing me. Of course. There was no unified opinion in the Hundred Gods Temple. Practically each god had different thoughts and goals after all.

“So what was the conversation they wanted to have with me?”

“Well, they wonder what you’re going to do in the future, and whether you plan to antagonize them in the future.”

I asked the God of Duel, but Kirikiri answered instead.

The God of Duel stared at Kirikiri and opened his mouth.

“I have a proposal for you.”

“Huh?”

Kirikiri looked at the God of Duel with her eyes wide open. The God of Duel spoke without regard for her.

“It’s a proposal from the God of Slowness. Become her apostle.”

Kirikiri’s eyes began to glow fiercely, her face radiating as she glared at him.

As expected, each god had their own agenda.

Chapter 327

Seoul (18)

Kirikiri's eyes glowed and she glared, but the God of Duel paid no attention to her. Rather, he looked at me calmly as if he were waiting for my answer.

I thought while looking at them,

Fight.

Please, fight.

“What do you mean?”

“Literally what I said. The God of Slowness wants you to be her apostle,” the God of Duel answered my question.

Suddenly, this guy seemed better.

Kirikiri, who was staring at the God of Duel with a burning gaze, opened her mouth.

“Isn't asking this a different story as opposed to what you came here for?”

The God of Duel ignored Kirikiri's words altogether.

Very good.

You two fight this time.

I can sacrifice my house for the sake of a fight between the two.

“Come on, don’t be so hard.”

Fight.

Fight quickly!

“I want to hear stories from both sides.”

“The God of Slowness promised you the best treatment. It would never be a disappointing proposal for you.”

“Heng, you’re just telling him to become a lower God. Like you!”

Rough words begin to pour out of Kirikiri’s mouth.

Very good.

Now, the God of Duel was furious...

“That’s right.”

I just agreed.

It’s not good enough.

“But a price is promised.”

I’ll fan the flames again.

“Can I hear what the price is?”

“Of course.”

“No! Don’t listen!” Kirikiri screamed.

She had stood up, fluttering her arms, showing her urgency to keep me from hearing the proposal.

Yes, attack the God of Duel.

Attack and shut that damn mouth!

Fight!

But the God of Duel spoke calmly, overshadowing my enthusiastic support.

“I’m glad you’re interested in the proposal. I’ll give you more details next time, in a quieter and calmer situation. For now, I’ll bid goodbye.”

And he disappeared. It was a sudden exit, just as he had first appeared.

F*cking b*stard.

I couldn’t believe he ran away from here.

* * *

“Heng-heng.”

Kirikiri ran to the kitchen as soon as the God of Duel disappeared.

She returned to the couch with a bunch of snacks under her arms (that was hidden by Kim Min-hyuk so that Hochi and Seregia would not eat everything) from the cupboard.

“Come on, eat up.”

This is my house, Kirikiri.

“It’s the first time I’ve given food to Ho-jae!”

This is my chocolate pie.

Eitherway, I ate the chocolate pie quietly.

If I assumed from what had happened, the God of Slowness and Kirikiri were divided within the Hundred Gods Temple. That was good news for me.

Given Kirikiri's behavior, it was easy to guess her position in the Hundred Gods Temple.

Same went for the God of Slowness. All the words used to describe the God of Slowness were obviously not enough, since she was revered even by the other gods. Apart from her influence within the Hundred Gods Temple, it can be assumed that the God of Slowness has exceptionally strong ability and power among them.

And if those two were at odds... Of course, it was a good thing for me. Just by dividing opinions about me there, it became difficult for the Hundred Gods Temple to impose punishments or force something on me.

The Hundred Gods Temple goes with a majority vote anyway.

"Heng-heng, will you become the apostle of the God of Slowness?"

Of course, I didn't intend to.

"Well, let me think about it."

Kirikiri, who was biting into a Choco Pie, had a bad complexion. Wow, Kirikiri's expression was dark even though she had something to chew in her mouth.

"Can you explain to me a little bit about the God of Slowness for now?"

"Yes, the evil god."

Lightning struck from the sky.

“Ahhhhh! You’re just mad!” cried Kirikiri, pointing out the window.

Well, a lying god looked worse than one who drops lightning for swearing at her.

By the way...

“What are you doing on someone else’s planet?”

“Right? How rude!”

Kirikiri said with a bright smile. It was obviously a bright smile, but it felt strangely mischievous.

There were few things I knew about the God of Slowness. The God who was related to time. A God who had nothing to do with the source.

Even in the world of polytheism, she was not well known to people.

“The God of Slowness is peculiar. Especially among Hundred Gods Temples, as well as the Pantheon.”

“In what way?”

“That’s because she’s the oldest god in existence. She existed before the Hundred Gods Temple was made, before the source was discovered and divinity increased.”

It didn’t make sense to explain it like that.

“She’s a god who doesn’t care much about ordinary people.”

“Why?”

People were the main source of power. No matter how much one hated, most of them were simple human beings.

“The gods instead fear the God of Slowness. It’s nothing to be shocked about; which one would give more faith? An ordinary human being or a god who's reached a high level?"

It was obvious. Of course, the faith from the god was much greater. Overwhelmingly.

Was that why the God of Slowness wanted me to be an apostle?

I didn't think so. Kirikiri warned just a moment ago that a god that became an apostle of another god could be a risk factor, crossing the constraints of the system.

If the God of Slowness wanted me for that reason, it was something that would work for Kirikiri, who wanted to stamp out the God of Hope for the balance of the Hundred Gods Temple.

"By the way, what's up with the sudden increased interest in the Hundred Gods Temple? Now that you've struck out the God of Hope, are you saying it's useless now?"

"No, it's not like that."

Kirikiri scratched the end of her ear.

Her ears were so long that I couldn't reach them at all, so she'd folded them, pulled them down to her cheeks, and scratched them like she was combing her hair.

"Rather, she's nervous because you're so intimidating. A few gods were interested like the God of Slowness. Most are on the edge though."

It was the same story that Kirikiri had explained a little while ago.

"Even if you don't necessarily become an apostle of any god, Ho-jae is a powerful enough god. It's rare to see a god with such a combative disposition. Even the God of Duel is a very exceptional case. You, who have strength way beyond that of a Minor God at the Minor God level but are also a Combatant God, naturally come off as intimidating."

This was rather unexpected. Few of the gods were combative.

“But of course. A combative disposition doesn’t help much after you ascend to higher ranks.”

I didn’t think so.

Let’s find out more about this later.

“And I’m more anxious about Ho-jae’s absorption of the believers by impersonating the God of Hope.”

“Huh? Why?”

“In fact, you shouldn’t have done that. It’s obvious that just impersonating another god will affect your own divinity.”

[Warrior, are you alright?]

Seregia piped up.

I thought she was sleeping, but she must have been listening to our conversation. I answered that I was okay.

Pretending to be the God of Hope, I didn’t feel particularly hurt by anything.

“The Hundred gods Temple’s gods are afraid you’ll impersonate them in a place where they can’t act directly.”

* * *

I promised some things to Kirikiri, who had been sticking to me for a long time.

Unless they antagonize me, I won’t attack or impersonate a particular god first.

Kirikiri wanted a promise that I wouldn’t impersonate the god even if they were hostile to me, but I refused.

I knew impersonation of a god was threatening, so why wouldn't I use it? I should use it if I need it.

In return for my promise, I asked for information. I became a god, and I came out of the Tutorial, but there was so much I didn't know yet. At this point, I wanted to answer some questions.

"Next question."

"What is it?"

"Hundred Gods Temple. Where do they meet?"

I understood that the Hundred Gods Temple was a group of over a hundred dangerous gods. But sometimes I wonder if the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were all gathered together in a certain space.

When I was in the Tutorial before, I saw the message from the gods.

"Yes, yes, there's a place like that. Of course they are. There's a rule that all the Hundred gods Temple's gods should keep their bodies there. That's why I was able to deliver the offer of surrender to the God of Hope."

Their bodies were gathered together. Other than that, I asked about the constraints of the Hundred Gods Temple itself, but Kirikiri didn't answer everything.

"I can explain more than I used to, but I can't tell you everything."

"Then, the next question."

"Heng... how much more?"

Of course, it's until you pull out what I want to know.

"I've explained so much that my mouth is burning."

The burnt smell in Kirikiri's mouth was not because she talked too much, but because she ate too much Choco Pie.

* * *

Kirikiri was satisfied with getting some promises from me, so she ate all the snacks by herself and then went away.

“What are you going to do?” asked Seregia, who was lying on the bed.

I shrugged my shoulders.

“You need to build up your strength again. I need to connect the earth to the 60th floor, and absorb the believers of the God of Hope perfectly. No rush though as time is on my side.”

I got a lot from today's conversation with Kirikiri with the God of Duel. It was miscellaneous information but I got confirmation that the Hundred Gods Temple were not taking immediate hostile actions against me. It was even better to confirm that the God of Slowness was at odds with other gods in the Hundred Gods Temple.

“What about the proposal of the God of Slowness?”

Of course, I intend to refuse.

I could listen to the proposal, but that didn't mean I would accept it. I couldn't bear to be under anyone in the first place. The God of Slowness may not know the fact. If it were the God of Slowness who had been watching me all along in the Tutorial, I was sure she'd expect me to refuse.

Clearly.

Still, should I think that the proposal provoked Kirikiri? Or maybe I should try to induce a dispute. I don't think the spark of the dispute would hit me. Though I should be careful.

“Oh, you're back.”

Kim Min-hyuk opened the door and came in.

I greeted him.

Kim Min-hyuk said while putting down the stuff he had in his hand, "I'll have to call Hochi. He was really worried."

Hochi must have been really worried about me.

"I already met with Hochi and Yong-yong."

"Oh, really? What's wrong with Miss Seregia? Are you sick?" Kim Min-hyuk exclaimed when he saw Seregia lying in bed.

In fact, it was not a day or two since Seregia was lying down, but now she was showing that her whole body was sick. Her hair was disheveled, a blanket covered her nose, and her forehead was draped with a wet towel.

"Uh... um... well, if it hurts, it hurts."

Seregia's strength was exhausted in the battle against the God of Hope and the fake. There was a lot of damage during the attack.

But lying down like a flu patient wouldn't restore Seregia's strength. It was just a formality.

"I want to eat tangerines," sniffed Seregia.

"She wants to eat tangerines."

"...Do I look like the maid who does grocery shopping?"

Chapter 328

Seoul (19)

“Leave Hochi and Yong-yong alone. They can take care of it themselves...”

Seregia said, as I sat beside her on the bed and peeled tangerines.

It’s kind of annoying.

“Are you going to be okay?”

We successfully defended against the waves of monsters that attacked the East Coast of Japan.

There will be no more recurrences.

But that’s not the end of my inconveniences.

We still need to communicate and reassure those who were wondering exactly what happened and what will happen in the future.

Hochi and Yong-yong are not obligated to do that, but as they know something, they should provide at least a minimal explanation for those who are concerned.

Of course, you could just ignore them, but it will only be a hassle later on.

On top of that, we should also be in line with the Japanese government, which is trying to wrap up and promote this incident as a successful defense and subjugation effort.

Which means we’ll have to participate in the promotion too.

“It’s all right.”

It’s going to be a real pain in the neck.

I don’t have to participate in this, but, oh well.

After Hochi finishes his task successfully, I plan to entrust him with the believers I gathered at the Holy Land of the God of Hope.

“I’ve also gotten in touch with a private group. When should we make an appointment?”

I heard that there is a pseudo-religion that sells my name in Gangwon-do.

Business must have been good already, but because my name has been appearing more often on the news recently, it’s bound to be even more successful.

“I’ll leave that to Hochi, too.”

You can think of it as a rehearsal before I tackle the believers of the God of Hope.

Yes, the believers of the God of Hope were a bit more difficult.

It would be easier to deal with the rural people who were tricked out of their money due to pseudo-religion than to deal with the believers who struggled in despair because of the God of Hope.

It’s safer too.

“Ah.”

As soon as I finished peeling the tangerine, Seregia opened her mouth.

She shook her head when I tried to feed her the whole tangerine in one bite.

“What, you want me to put them in one-by-one?”

Seregia nodded.

It was annoying.

I threw the whole tangerine into Seregia’s mouth.

She glared at me, but she didn’t spit out the tangerine in her mouth either.

She just mumbled and ate.

“Seregia, why don’t you eat something like strawberries instead of tangerines?”

Peeling a tangerine was so annoying.

“If you pick off the tops, then I’ll eat the strawberries.”

Yeah, I don’t want to.

It’s a hassle.

“Are you almost done then?”

“It was the first thing I did as soon as you came.”

said Kim Min-hyuk, nodding his head.

His complexion was a little better than before.

After sending Hochi and Yong-yong to Japan, his face had improved a little while they were gone.

He’s going to be busy again. Should I tell him?

“Call Park Min to the Association.”

“Why do you want to call him? Didn’t you decide to let him go already?”

I didn’t.

Although there were some extenuating circumstances to consider, it was mainly because he had been previously used by the God of Hope.

So I still had to get my hands on him.

“It would be enough to infect them and make them puppets.”

“...Can you do that, too?”

Of course I can.

If the subject were a non-deity, I can do anything imaginable.

“Let’s also gather some of the Newly Awakened.”

“Why would you need the rookies? If you need any Awakened, just the guild members would be enough.”

“No, it’s not enough.”

My own strength was enough.

Even the party and its 61st-floor subordinates were nowhere near my ability.

The problem was the number.

We needed more numbers to expand our power.

“I need more rookies to work for me. But perhaps externally, more will be working for Hochi or you.”

Kim Min-hyuk said after thinking for a while.

“The only ones I can recruit from my sources right now are the rookies from the guild. There are some who say they’ll come when their contracts are over, but not a lot.”

In short, more bait was needed. Bait to attract the Awakened.

“System window to assist leveling-up. Limited size inventory. One item from the Tutorial. Is this enough bait?”

“It’s enough.”

Kim Min-hyuk nodded.

“It’s an irresistible offer for even me right now. Can you support the system and inventory though?”

I’m already doing it.

I’m already creating the system.

The inventory can be made by giving up part of my subspace and setting personal coordinates.

The items will also be easily accessible from the Tutorial.

“Just leave the rookies who don’t want to come, they’ll only be a burden. Not all will accept the recruitment anyway.”

There is no need to cling to a person who is not interested.

“But what are we gonna do with the rookies?”

asked Kim Min-hyuk.

In fact, it’s no loss if we aren’t able to gather the Awakened from Earth.

But more than Earth,

“I’m going to send the rookies away from here...”

“Away?”

“Other dimensions.”

The Awakened of the Earth who cleared the tutorial were all used to moving on to the next world and clearing the missions.

If we can train them a bit more, then we can send an expedition beyond the dimensional gates.

“A different dimension? Is that possible?”

It’s possible.

In fact, if you have the right coordinates, you can easily create portals connected to other dimensions.

I’ve actually learned quite a lot of coordinates by chasing the God of Hope around.

As I tracked down the God of Hope, I also marked the corresponding coordinates of each location.

Among those, there were some planets that could allow the Earth’s people to make a steady advance.

A dimensional expedition naturally brings tremendous advantages.

And if you think about it, new resources and artifacts will come from the civilizations of other dimensions.

You could colonize the undeveloped ones, or you could make deals and trade with the civilized ones.

Through these exchanges, the influence of human beings on Earth will naturally increase in indigenous areas.

And the growth of Earth's influence will also grow my influence.

I will be the one opening and managing the dimensional gates after all.

We can offer an appropriate fee to the humans who use the gates and let them enter the portal.

"It's not an admission fee, so we can adjust and monopolize it from the beginning, right?"

Kim Min-hyuk asked.

He seemed to be eagerly thinking about it when I opened a new topic to discuss.

It was an attractive offer.

"Or we could just split up the groups and bring them all into our own group. We're already the ones maintaining and managing the dimensional gates anyway..."

"Yes, yes, it's fine with me, so make the model yourself."

"Okay."

Kim Min-hyuk looked serious and didn't move for a while.

After all, it would be comfortable having someone who would devotedly think about such troublesome things instead of me.

That way, I don't have to use my brain.

"Warrior."

Seregia, who had been quiet, called me.

"What is it, do you want more tangerines?"

“I want some pork cutlet.”

...Oh, right.

I want some pork cutlet too.

Let's go with that...

“Hey... hey... hey.”

I called Kim Min-hyuk who was deep in thought.

I had to call him several times since he seemed to be too absorbed in the gate.

“What?”

“Hey, why don't we have some pork cutlet?”

What I meant was, ‘I want you to buy it.’

As a bonus, you can also buy your share.

“I'll order it. We can have it delivered.”

“No, you have to buy it.”

“...Why?”

“We're going to the temple in Seoul. The one that's being remodeled in Jamsil Stadium. Delivery isn't allowed there yet, so you have to buy it and bring it.”

The temple will not be opened to humans until Yong-yong is done with the decorations.

It's a temple after all.

If it looks too shabby and insignificant, then it will lose its prestige.

“...Do we have to eat a huge pork cutlet?”

“No.”

Seregia responded sharply.

She usually speaks in a calm tone that's barely audible, but she only raises her voice at times like these.

“...okay.”

Kim Min-hyuk sighed and left the room with his shoulders slumped.

You don't have to read his mind to figure out what he's thinking.

As soon as the missing guys come back, I'm sure he's going to be grumbling in annoyance again.

Seregia looked at me as soon as Kim Min-hyuk left.

“Would you like more tangerines?”

Seregia shook her head.

Of course.

Seregia likes to eat, but not this much.

She was just dissatisfied.

She laid in bed pretending to be sick and made me do all the work.

She was grumbling like a human.

It wasn't because I ignored her suggestion of going back to Earth immediately, or because she complained that I have been using her roughly, and forced me to feel guilty and apologize.

Seregia was a sword, a weapon.

There was no way she would be angry because I treated her like a tool.

Now that Seregia sent out Kim Min-hyuk like she wanted, it was time to hear the reason.

“I didn’t have to hit it head-on.”

Okay.

So it was because of that time.

I expected her to bring it up to some extent...

That time when we crossed swords with the fake who received the power of the God of Hope.

Seregia was talking about that time.

“But you won in the end.”

Seregia didn’t respond.

I know.

Seregia was not doing this because she’s an idealist, but because she’s worried about what’s coming.

“The enemy was barely a god. But its power was on par with yours. Maybe he was even stronger.”

It certainly was.

If I only thought of the total amount of power, then the power of God of Hope, which the fake wielded, exceeded my power.

“The opponent, of course, prepared for a one-shot fight.”

The fake had chosen the most natural way to press on — with force.

It put all of its strength in one stroke so that I would not be able to block it or redirect it.

It was a good judgment, and it was the right decision.

Even I would have done the same if I were in that position.

“The other person must have been planning the moment and was preparing for it for a long time. His judgment was sound enough.”

“I suppose it was.”

In the first place, the God of Hope seemed to have prepared the fake just for that moment.

It was a moment when he focused on his whole life, even from a fake’s point of view.

“If only I had any attraction to the fight, then it would have been my victory.”

“Yes.”

If only I fought it head-on and not dragged it out.

If the God of Hope fled first and disappeared, then the fight with the fake wouldn’t have such a twist.

It would have been easier to win.

That was why Seregia was concerned.

Of course, I won, but the power that the fake released at the moment was to the extent that Seregia became exhausted and ill.

This was not a game without any risk at all.

I was someone who used all means and methods to achieve victory, so why did I dare to accept a head-to-head confrontation in favor of the opponent?

The excuse that it was for growth and experience, as in the past tutorials, did not work.

“Surely that head-to-head confrontation is something that you would choose when facing the God of Duel instead.”

“That’s right.”

Seregia’s concern is that the reason for the head-to-head confrontation might be pity or sympathy for the fake.

In fact, while the fake was dying, Seregia once asked if I sympathized with the fake.

Seregia is always concerned about this.

I wonder if that gap was caused by emotion.

Or maybe it was just her way of thinking as a weapon.

My way of thinking was exactly the same as hers once.

In fact, there was only a slight difference even now, but it’s not very pronounced.

Before answering, I moved inside the temple.

It was a story that no one should overhear.

After we moved, I told Seregia,

“There are two reasons.”

“You have two?”

Seregia asked back.

I thought she'd rather complain that I only had two reasons behind that decision.

I wondered if she saw me as a unicellular organism more than I thought.

“The first one is just because I thought I would win. I'll win no matter how many advantages my opponent has over me and no matter how much they've prepared.”

Such confidence allowed me to accept the outcome.

I wouldn't even be here if I hadn't been convinced in the first place.

“And the second reason is that I couldn't back down.”

“What do you mean?”

Seregia asked back.

It's hard to explain.

“You know, sometimes you feel like you've won and lost.”

I often felt it when I was a professional gamer.

Apparently I won, but I'm annoyed, as if I lost.

“...Maybe that feeling means defeat?”

“Yes, even if in substance you didn't lose.”

Seregia was silent.

I accepted her silence, and had to wait a moment.

The basis of my divinity is a continuous victory.

Confidence and faith in that victory has made me who I am now, and it sustains me.

To put it another way, I can't keep my divinity in a situation where I can't win.

That's what a deity is.

Just as the God of Duel can't hit someone's back for a mean victory, and the God of Light can't fall asleep in the dark.

It was not a matter of preference, but of identity.

“...the penalty is too high.”

said Seregia, who had been silent for a while.

It was as she said.

But it was that powerful.

I hoped for overwhelming force, not just moderate strength.

For my purpose, I even had to assume that all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were turned against me.

I had to take such risks to make the 60th and 61st floors my sacred sites and to get all the stages of the tutorials into my hands.

“Even if it's only once, if the word defeat rings in my mind, I might lose everything.”

Even if I lose, I'll get through it if I think it's a stepping stone to a final victory.

But even if I win, if I have a sense of defeat in my heart, that's it.

“But I'm sure.”

“What are you sure about?”

“I'm sure I'll get through it in the end. I'm confident that I'll keep going no matter how many times I fall and get blocked. I'm sure I'll never lose.”

And I assure you.

That this conviction can never and will never be broken.

Chapter 329

Seoul (20)

“Ladies and gentlemen, we are now crossing a zone of turbulence. Please return to your seats and fasten your seatbelts...”.

The in-flight broadcast came out.

“Hyung, they want you to buckle up.”

“What about the belt?”

Instead of wearing the seatbelt, Hochi used his powers to adjust the surrounding climate.

The aircraft, which had been shaking earlier, immediately became stable.

“...Huh?”

Yong-yong, who was dozing off, raised his head.

Yong-yong, who had fallen asleep as if nothing had happened, looked around and rubbed his eyes in reaction to Hochi using his power.

“It’s nothing. Go back to sleep, Yong-Yong.”

As Hochi patted his back, Yong-yong, who had been blinking for a while, soon closed his eyes again and went back to sleep.

It was a new feeling; he felt, as he looked out the plane window and held Yong-Yong, who was fast asleep.

For Hochi, Korea and Japan were so close that it seemed like you were merely crossing a stream, one where you could cross and return at any time.

However, he felt a sense of satisfaction when he faithfully completed his duties and returned home by flight according to the protocol.

“By the way, when are we going to eat?”

He heard some nonsense somewhere, but Hochi ignored it.

Instead, he asked Lee Jun-seok.

“Aren’t we going back too late?”

“Uh... Well. At this rate, yes we are...”

In fact, it was too late to return home.

It was a return after almost two months.

Hochi wanted to get the job done “well” just as Lee Ho Jae asked.

He did his best to fulfill the numerous requests of the Japanese government as much as he could.

As soon as the Japanese government realized that Hochi was cooperative as the Japanese government did, they filled his schedule with jobs that weren’t planned but somehow seemed really necessary.

Of course, it was to delay his return as much as possible and try to recruit him in the meantime while he was in Japan...

But, it didn’t work.

Thanks to this, Lee Jun-seok, who wanted to return to Korea as soon as possible and receive his items, had to worry about it every day.

“But aren’t you hungry?”

“Didn’t you just eat the in-flight meal earlier?”

Eventually, Hochi couldn’t stand it, and he replied to the Mantis.

The Mantis was lying on the bed in the box, and pouted.

“I’m still hungry.”

“Shut up.”

This guy had evolved into a new race because it couldn’t adapt to life in the box.

From a mantis, to a carnivore.

All-day long, it just thought about eating something.

At first glance, it looked similar to Seregia, but in Seregia’s case, her interests were extremely limited, and snacks were one of her interests.

The Mantis was only thinking about eating or sleeping.

“Oh, I’m hungry.”

Like a wasted man in his room, lying on a bed in the box, scratching it’s stomach and saying, ‘I’m hungry.’

No matter how the Mantis behaved, it didn’t matter much to Hochi, but it was still unsightly.

“If you shut up until we arrive, then I’ll buy you something delicious.”

“Really?”

The Mantis was delighted and clapped its hands.

In the meantime though, the Mantis did not budge from the bed.

Hochi was grumpy because he didn't like that.

“Stand on your hands until we get there.”

“Yes!”

Hochi sighed as he watched the Mantis beginning to do a handstand and thought,

‘I shouldn't do that.’

Not long ago, Hochi himself was equally aimless, and he loved being lazy.

In fact, it wasn't much different now.

However, looking at the Mantis, he decided that he should not become someone without goals.

* * *

An uninvited visitor came first thing in the morning.

The visitor was Japanese.

She was told to go home after finishing her tasks, but she tried to meet with me and told me about Hochi, who had not gone back in 2 months.

“So the God of Balance intervened on Earth. You came to tell me that?”

“Yes, that's right.”

A Japanese woman called Hisano answered calmly.

Her tone was polite, but something in her mannerisms irritated me.

It felt like a parrot talking to a city hall official who only answered with “yes” or “no”.

Hisano started talking, saying the God of Balance had something to tell me.

The story went like this:

In the midst of the chaos in Japan, the God of Balance intervened on Earth.

It was something that I also knew about.

The woman named Hisano spoke to me as if to inform me of that fact.

And that was it.

The God of Balance intervened in my realm, Earth.

But did he just send her to inform me about it without apologizing or compensating me for it?

I stopped yawning because it was embarrassing.

I knew quite a bit about the God of Balance.

He was one of the Hundred Gods that showed interest in me.

I remember he was a pretty good god at first.

When he saw that I was satisfied with the way I was willing to kill my enemies, I thought that all the gods in the Hundred Gods Temple were also different.

Still, among the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple, he had the most common sense.

Anyway, the God of Balance is a god who gives back the same thing as what was given to him.

Notifying me that he violated my territory and returning without mentioning any compensation for it?

Given that this is the God of Balance, this was like a declaration of war to me.

Rather, if he didn't inform me about it, then I wouldn't have taken it like that.

"I don't know why the God of Balance told you this."

Hisano replied in a somewhat disgruntled tone.

"Anyway, that's what you should know. The God of Balance has a purpose, so I'm sure he wants it delivered."

"The God of Balance isn't like that."

The God of Balance, as I know him, doesn't do things this way.

I put great importance on the divinity of the gods.

Since the beginning of the tutorial, I have done so.

With the divinity of the gods and their character in the message, I tried to analyze the gods even a little more.

That's why I was pretty sure that the message from the woman named Hisano was not the God of Balance.

"No, the God of Balance told me to tell you that."

Hisano spoke with a sharp voice, but she was visibly embarrassed.

What is the problem?

"Did you miss anything? The god must have said something else other than that."

Hisano looked hurt by my harsh words.

“The God... You know... Heuk... Keuk.....”

Hisano, who was trying to raise her voice, immediately began to shiver and tremble when I pressed her down with force.

The God sent her, so I had to deal with it.

At times like this, it was necessary to use force to squeeze out information.

“Did you leave anything out of what the God of Balance said?”

It seemed more likely that the woman did not convey the words of the God of Balance correctly, rather than the God of Balance did not even offer an apology or a reward.

Unless the God of Balance really intends to declare war on me.

“Tell me. The truth.”

Hisano trembled and stuttered.

“Th, the compensation for intervening on Earth... He said he’ll pay.....”

Yeah, that’s right.

He is the God of Balance, after all.

By the way, there was a reason why this woman was not appointed an apostle even though she had received power.

Considering the divinity of the God of Balance, he would prefer you to execute the instructions received without error, rather than for you to omit words to preserve his honor.

“Is there any more?”

“...He said he would meet you in person and apologize.....”

Ah, yes.

That would be awkward to convey from a god-worshipping standpoint.

[Can I come in?]

I heard a voice from outside.

It was a divinity manifested.

I felt the energy at first, but since there was only one deity that would appear at this timing, I knew that it was the God of Balance.

“Come in.”

At the same time as my permission, the space in the room began to distort.

After a while, when the distortion of space ceased, the God of Balance appeared.

The God of Balance was in the form of an old human man.

“I think this apostle candidate will be insufficient as your apostle.”

I said, looking at Hisano who collapsed on the floor trembling.

Instead of affirming my words, the God of Balance shook his head with a smile.

“No. My explanation wasn’t enough, so I could have made a mistake.”

The God of Balance defended Hisano.

Meanwhile, he breathed some power into Hisano, who was being pressed down with my power.

I did not expect that the God of Balance wouldn't disapprove of her.

Hisano was released from my pressure by the God of Balance's power , but she didn't get up from the floor properly.

"Now then, tell me what you want."

* * *

"Is this enough?"

Asked the God of Balance.

Of course it was enough.

The God of Balance neatly apologized to me for invading my territory.

It was just a word of an apology, but that was enough.

The God of Balance not only apologized, but also paid sufficient compensation.

First of all, he cleared the quest, and gave me the dimensional coordinates of the common area of the Hundred Gods, so the price for a slight intervention in the earth was enough.

"Of course."

He laughed as if he was fortunate to be the God of Balance.

Unlike the God of Duel, which had a geek-like side, the God of Balance really looked like an ordinary human old man.

Maybe he's from human origins?

Do you have a deep understanding of humans?

"Thank you for understanding. Although. Even though it was an urgent situation, I thought it might get bigger if I didn't apologize because I intervened without permission in the realm of another god."

It is true that the Earth is my realm, and that the God of Balance intervened without permission, but I was a little angry that he sent a message to one of the Awakened who had a relationship with him to run away.

If Yong-Yong hadn't blown up the space in time, it would have been clear that Hisano, who was actually lying face down, would have died without leaving any bones.

Maybe he thought it was fortunate that things went well, but the God of Balance smiled brightly.

I had a long conversation with the God of Balance.

Whether he liked me, or if he thought I was a little short of reward, the God of Balance gave me some valuable information.

"As you say, it is true that there are factions amongst the Hundred Gods. However, apart from the factions, most of the gods choose to judge their own right. Of course, the actions and choices of the gods are often forced according to their divinity."

"Maintaining the incarnation within the Hundred Gods takes quite a lot of power. Just being in the Hundred Gods' Temple and having to leave the incarnation there at all times is a big constraint."

"So, the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple often compare their superiority with each other with the power of their incarnations. The God of Hope, who fought with you not long ago could barely maintain his incarnation in the Hundred Gods Temple with the little power he has..."

"The God of Adventure was the leading god at the time of the establishment of the Hundred Gods Temple."

"Interesting, of course... It's better not to care."

“The God of Slowness and her followers are too dangerous. The God of Hope is the only one who’s been running around but...”

This was the information I received.

Thanks to that, I learned more about the Hundred Gods.

I was also happy to hear once again that the God of Hope had suffered a devastating blow.

The God of Balance asked me one last request.

It was a little surprising.

“I want to take that child as my apostle in the near future; however, she still wants to live with her family in her hometown. Will you allow me to summon her from time to time while living here?”

I see.

After all the apologies and rewards, he still shared more information.

He was hoping for more.

I pondered for a moment, and then I replied.

“If you receive a favor, then you should return just as much. You may summon the apostle Hisano anytime. I am also allowing her to return to Earth.”

The God of Balance was greatly pleased with my answer.

It seemed like a good idea to maintain a proper friendship with this kind of god.

Since he is a god who returns whatever he is given, there is less risk of being stabbed in the back.

The God of Balance went back after our little chat.

I also got up from the sofa and prepared to return to the temple, when I saw Hisano standing up awkwardly...

He didn't take her with him.

"Hey."

"...Yes, yes!?"

Hisano replied in a daze.

It was a huge contrast to her previous manner when she informed me in a clerical tone.

Her hair was a mess, and her eyes were bloodshot.

The drool that dripped earlier dried up around her mouth and her eyes were puffy.

The God of Balance gave her some strength earlier, but it would have been difficult just to be around me and the God of Balance.

In fact, it was amazing that she was able to endure it without losing consciousness.

My first impression of her wasn't that good, but she's quite useful.

No, she was very useful.

An apostolic candidate who is cherished enough that the God of Balance came and made a deal with me in person.

However, she is not yet an apostle.

And she still lives on Earth, my territory.

I secretly blocked off access to the outside and told Hisano,

“Work with me.”

The God of Balance is an honest god who can't stab me in the back first.

But of course, I am a god who can stab anyone in the back first.

Chapter 330

Seoul (21)

[Guild Leader Kim Min-hyuk announces the recruitment of Japanese Awakened Hisano Okabuchi]

Even though there had been a flood of sensational news recently, the latest headline was enough to draw people's attention.

Korea was excited with the recruitment of Hisano. Aside from being a known SS class, Hisano also possessed various skills and specialized in both civilian protection and monster raids.

Japan, on the other hand... seemed to have gotten the shorter end of the stick.

They tried to recruit Hochi and Lee Jun-seok who participated in the Eastern Coast Raid, but their efforts were all in vain and they eventually gave up.

Most of the best Awakened in Japan have been recruited abroad.

The Japanese Awakened Association naturally became angry, and demanded clarification from the Korean government, the Association, and the Guild, while they attempted to contact Hisano and convince her to disregard the other party's offer.

However, Hisano rejected the Japanese Association's desperate request to renew her contract.

The Korean Awakened Association said it wasn't their job, and the Korean government didn't even understand how things were going.

And lastly, the Guild.

“I just ignored it.”

Kim Min-hyuk eventually had to get some time off to let out some steam because he had been continuously overworked for the past few days.

“F*ck, what would they do if I told them that I’m going to dive with my cell phone off?”

Of course, the Japanese Awakened Association did not intend to give up just because they could not reach Kim Min-hyuk.

They even sent a member of the Association to Korea and tried to set up a contact point for him.

As a result, Kim Min-hyuk simply hid in Lee Ho-jae’s temple.

Occasionally, he would call the Guild through a second phone to get up-to-date with the operations, but he mostly chose to completely seclude himself.

“Good job.”

Seregia, who was lying in a sleeping bag, said to Kim Min-hyuk.

For Seregia, she was welcomed in Kim Min-hyuk’s seclusion.

Of course, he had to welcome a dedicated maid-in-charge to deal with accommodation and meals at work.

The shrine, which was remodeled from the World Cup Stadium that was closed due to the appearance of the gate, had changed so much that it was hard to tell how it looked before.

It was thanks to Yong-Yong who came back from time to time to decorate the temple even while Hochi and his party were in Japan.

When it came to architecture, even Yong-Yong confirmed that Lee Ho Jae was better.

The temple was built around a gate on a tower so high that it could be seen anywhere in Seoul, and the soccer stadium that surrounded the tower was equipped with magical engineering that would make even the earthlings accustomed to advanced civilization drop their jaws in amazement.

Functional spaces, including prayer rooms and other rooms required for a temple, were well organized, and accommodations for visitors and pilgrims were built as well.

Security was of course flawless, and the temperature and humidity were constantly adjusted so that each resident could be comfortable.

It was also equipped with a strong defense system that would completely block the eyes of the gods who have been spying on Earth from time to time.

Presently, only three people –Lee Hojae, Seregia, and Kim Minhyuk — stayed in this magical temple. Although, a large population could live here without experiencing any inconvenience due to the space distortion.

At first, Kim Minhyuk merely stopped by the temple to check on Lee Ho-jae's progress, but he eventually began to do his work in the temple altogether.

He didn't want to leave the heaven-like temple where he could easily move around like a wizard and where food appears whenever he wanted to eat.

So, as soon as something bothersome happened, it was natural that he hid in the temple.

Of course, there were troublesome things like opening snack bags for Seregia, picking strawberry tops, emptying a watermelon to make a fruit salad, or picking fish bones for her, but Kim Min-hyuk thought it was worth it.

“How is the healing lottery doing?”

Lee Ho-jae, who had been away to set the dimensional coordinates of the Tutorial, asked as he entered the break room.

* * *

In the past, I had told Kim Minhyuk that he should invite 30 people a month by lottery and invite them to the temple to be healed of any illness.

It was an easy way to raise my influence on Earth.

At the time, my reputation as the crazy terrorist who bombed Seoul Station had somewhat improved.

“But their reaction is a little different from what we initially thought.”

“What do you mean?”

I asked as I sat down next to Seregia’s sleeping bag and peeled some grapes.

“What we thought was this: Wow! Healing incurable diseases! God’s miracle! Wow! Amazing!”

Kim Min-hyuk exaggeratedly raised his hands and rubbed them together.

His explanation was a little over-the-top, but it was correct.

Healing any disease is usually treated as a miracle of God.

“But the timing was bad.”

“Ah.”

As soon as I peeled the grapes, Seregia opened her mouth and waited...

She was lying in the sleeping bag and opened her mouth just like a goldfish.

Sorry, but you don't get to eat the grapes I peeled.

I focused on Kim Min-hyuk's explanation, and ignored Seregia's gaze as I popped a grape in my mouth.

"You're recruiting the Awakened by releasing equipment and items from the Tutorial. Recently, Hisano's recruitment has also raised attention. So, it's not a miracle, but people came to the conclusion that you got a healing item as a reward for clearing Hell difficulty and that the limit for that item is 30 people per month."

"That's not good."

I understood what he was trying to say.

In a way, it was a mistake.

It was a mistake because it meant that I wasn't efficient with getting things done in the right order.

But my priorities for collecting influence and faith on Earth were too low to consider all that.

Earth was initially equipped with a state-of-the-art civilization, and indigenous religions are still strong.

With the Tutorial and monsters appearing, information about the Hundred Gods Temple was pretty much released.

Frankly, it seemed nearly impossible to gather enough faith on this planet to satisfy me.

"Then think of healing rituals as just volunteer work."

"Or, what if you took the Old Man or the Grandma with you? If you perform healing rituals while showing your true form, then people would have no choice but feel intimidated or mystified."

It was rejected.

It's not like they're going to agree to do that in the first place.

“Let's do it later if it is connected to the 60th and 61st floors.”

Among the giant warriors who have become idle like an unemployed man on the 61st floor, there were some who I thought could serve as a mascot of the temple.

If none were willing, then I'll just make one.

What about her?

“Seregia?”

“No.”

She refused it without a second thought.

Come to think of it, I do need a symbol of my religion.

The members of the 61st floor don't even care about that.

But as religion becomes widespread, the time will come when it will be necessary.

I have to think about it.

“And about the guys who were doing stuff in Gangwon-do.”

“Uh, didn't you set an appointment with them?”

“I did, but they were procrastinating and delayed the schedule.”

Kim Min-hyuk explained the recent changes in the pseudo-group.

“Have they really become a religious group?”

“Uh, maybe because they were born crooks, they have the ability to convince people. We even prepared a site for them in Gangwon-do, and the number of believers gathered there was significant.”

So, I explained that by gradually inflating and fabricating the bombing of Seoul Station, the eradication of the G-class, and the defense against the monster waves on the east coast of Japan, it will have an effect of deifying.

If they are doing that, then it’s a waste to just throw it away.

They’re acting on behalf of me and managing the religious organization which I’m not good at either.

“What if you visit the Gangwon-do sect? Give a speech in front of the believers.”

Well, it’s a little annoying for me to go.

Let’s leave this to Hochi.

Just in time, Hochi, Yongyong, and Lee Junseok entered the temple.

“Uh, you’re here?”

Oh my gosh.

When I told him to come back after finishing in Japan, Hochi, who had been away for two months, returned.

But when I saw the proud smile on his face, the words automatically came out,

“You must have done well.”

Hochi nodded.

“It was successfully finished.”

“It was a problem because it was so perfectly done...”

Lee Jun-seok muttered in a small voice next to him.

It seems that he came back after accepting the requests of Japanese politicians and members of the association, who were making him do even the most trivial things.

“Yes, good job. Well done.”

Still, I couldn’t blame Hochi who was doing something for the first time and was proud of it.

For now, I just praised him.

I can tell him later that he didn’t have to do every single request.

The believers of the God of Hope who I wanted to entrust to Hochi needed to be taken care of well anyway.

It wasn’t bad to listen to the members’ requests.

“Why is Seregia lying down?”

“I am sick.”

“Why?!”

“Because somebody treated me so roughly.”

Seregia.

That’s a little weird to hear.

No, it IS weird.

It was fortunate that Yong-yong was asleep.

“Haha, grapes.”

The Mantis interrupted and reached out for the grapes in the plate.

I unintentionally flicked the forehead of the Mantis approaching the plate.

“Ow!”

“Why is this thing out of the box?”

“Oh, we let it out for a walk.”

Do human-eating monsters need walks too?

Kim Minhyuk, who was next to me, quickly moved behind my back.

However, Hochi or Lee Junseok were not wary at all.

Did you guys develop a trusting relationship?

“Some days, it doesn’t think about escaping, nor about eating people. It’s safe if you just feed it on time. It listens well to Yong-yong.”

Hochi explained.

When I checked, the power of the Mantis was growing rapidly.

Considering that time when we first met, its power was about half a penny that I couldn’t even treat it as complete. Compared to its power now, I could say that its improvement was considerably big.

At this point, it seemed safe to call it a half-god.

“Haha.”

There is absolutely no way that the Mantis, who was excitedly eating grapes when I stayed still, grew up on its own.

When I looked closely, I could see that some of Yong-yong’s power was mixed inside the Mantis.

It seems that Yong-yong gave it some strength.

Did you feed it?

Only then did I understand.

There is only one difference between the Rulers and the monsters who are obsessed with desire.

And that thing was called 'reason'.

Unlike the monsters, who only have a basic desire for more power and survival, the Rulers can make judgments.

How strong are the enemies you need to eat to gain strength, how many are the odds you have, how do you fight and grow.

Before the Mantis was caught by Yong-yong, it was hiding using the characteristics of the earth, where neither the gods nor the Rulers were able to tread recklessly.

The principle of action is still simple, but it had that level of intelligence.

If you convinced the Mantis that the safest and easiest way to get power was to remain as Yongyong's pet, then of course, it will be Yong-yong's faithful pet regardless of its pride

It's okay.

I wondered if it would be a little easier when dealing with the Rulers later if I kept these characteristics in mind.

It may be a little different if you are a Ruler who has enough power to reach Godhood, but in a fundamental way, it may not be that different.

But there's only one problem.

When that monster decides one day that it is better off being something other than Yongyong's pet, it will betray him coldly without thinking about affection or loyalty.

That's something that Yong-yong will have to endure and deal with in the future.

I thought it would be better to watch Yong-yong's choice, rather than worrying about it.

"Hey, have you made any progress connecting the 60th floor to the temple?"

Hochi asked.

How did this guy suddenly feel so grown-up?

"Yes, it's almost done."

It was going to be done in a week's time.

In a week, I would be able to finally connect the residential area on the 60th floor of the Tutorial's Hell difficulty to the temple in Seoul.

PDF by: traitor/1ZEN

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 11 -

-AUTHOR-
Gandara

[Nocturne Translations]

Chapter 331

The Hundred Gods Temple (1)

“Hey, why didn’t you return Lee Jun-seok’s item?”

“Huh.....? Huh?”

Hochi suddenly asked about Lee Jun-seok’s item.

What item?

“Before, when Lee Jun-seok cleared the Tutorial, he said he gave you an item.”

Oh, I remember.

When I persuaded Lee Jun-seok to go outside, Lee Jun-seok sent me all the items he had collected.

From miscellaneous items, such as a growth journal, to equipment that were used as core items.

It was an inevitable choice because he couldn’t take anything outside the Tutorial.

Of course, in my case, I am free to use my inventory even outside of the Tutorial.

“The items, they should still be in your inventory.”

...Not really.

“Give it quickly. Hey, he says he really needs those items.”

I'm in trouble.

Hochi asked this as soon as we met, so Lee Jun-Seok must have asked him to do this in advance.

Lee Jun-seok must have been really desperate, so I can understand.

He only developed his skills up to the point where he felt powerful.

The problem is that he lacks the ability to reliably maintain that power.

Naturally, he had to accept a certain amount of risk every time he used his power, and because he couldn't control it, any technique that allowed him to focus his force on a single point or limit its range was a dream come true.

He was both a glass cannon that couldn't even handle his own strength, and a human bomb that deals hard hits and then explodes.

Lee Jun Seok was mumbling next to Hochi.

By looking at his brightly red face, it was easy to see how much he was looking forward to it.

But the problem was...

[I already distributed them to the communities.]

The items Lee Junseok needs were probably the core items he used as main weapons.

He probably wouldn't bother about the other items such as the journals, the accessories, or the potions.

But those core items... were already given out to the communities...

On a first come first serve basis.

Of course the whereabouts of those items... I had no idea.

[...Are you crazy? Why would you give out stuff that other people have entrusted to you!?]

Hochi admonished me.

I had nothing to say.

“Junseok.”

“Yes, hyung.”

“The way I see it.....”

I had no choice but to sell my medicine.

I felt really sorry for Lee Junseok.

“You don’t need an item. Even if you solve your problem with an item now, you’ll just rely on that item again. The priority is to grow yourself and overcome your problems.”

I was just spouting a bunch of nonsense.

If you can overcome weaknesses with items, then you can overcome them.

It was a phrase that I would say in the past, when I was paranoid about trying to get rid of my weaknesses.

Of course, for Lee Jun-seok, who knew me in the past, he would have nodded with an ‘ah, I knew it’.

“But, hyung... I can’t even train properly on Earth. I have no one to test my strength against. If I do something wrong, then there would be a risk of damage.....”

Good point.

Damn it.

I thought of a quick way out.

“Then, you can train somewhere else, not on Earth.”

“Somewhere else?”

I nodded.

If training on Earth was difficult, then it would be ideal to send him to another place.

[Quest window]

[God of Death – Thanatos’ Purification]

Description: The God of Death wants to purify Thanatos, which has been contaminated with a continuous regression.

Thanatos was completely contaminated, since it was a place where experiments were conducted to artificially create numerous perfectors.

There, the deceased eats the deceased, and the eaten is reborn and eats the deceased who ate him.

It was an endless loop of predation, and at the same time, it was a cycle of immortality.

Thanatos is a common area of the Hundred Gods Temple, but it is a place where the influence of the God of Death was strong in the past.

The God of Death wants to purify Thanatos and restore its past.

Destroy all the dead that exist in Thanatos.

Thanatos’s dead aren’t very dangerous by normal standards.

However, the conditions for intervention are difficult due to the fact that it is an abandoned planet that remains a common area of the Hundred Gods Temple.

The God of Death presented a challenger with countless powers, but the challenger of course, did not choose the God of Death (ahahaha), so he eventually asked for the purification of Thanatos through a quest.

Let's just ignore the 'Ahahaha' but focus on the God of Death in the middle.

It is said that this quest window was created by Kirikiri herself, not by the Hundred Gods' Temple system.

In any case, Thanatos seems to be a suitable place to send Lee Jun-seok.

What the God of Death wanted in the first place was not a request for me, a God.

It was just a request to ask of an ordinary apostle.

The problem is that the God of Death could not secure an apostle through the Tutorial.

I thought Lee Jun-seok could do this kind of quest.

Since it is an abandoned planet, there is no need to worry about damage to the surrounding area while killing the dead.

I suggested it while informing Lee Jun-seok of the quest.

"If it's such a place, then you can practice as much as you want. Secondly, quests are an opportunity to try to use your strength as much as you want."

At the same time, I was too lazy to do the quest myself.

Of course, the quest should be done by me, but to be honest, connecting the 60th floor to the portal was more urgent than that.

“If you do this well and show significant growth, then I will create a new item as a reward. Something fancy.”

I bet it would be a much better item than what Lee Jun-seok entrusted to me.

“How about that, can you do it?”

“Yes.”

Lee Jun-seok, who was worried for a while, answered.

It was a relief.

“I’ve seen Thanatos’ dead on the 93rd floor. It might not be easy to kill all the dead on the planet, but I can’t afford to miss the opportunity to work hard and grow.”

Fortunately, Lee Jun-seok seems to have experienced Thanatos in the Tutorial.

Lee Jun-seok smiled as if he was glad that he had the opportunity to train rather than the difficulty of the mission.

As expected, the effort to reach level 201 was enough.

“Yes, it might be dangerous, so I’ll send Yong-yong with you at first.”

Lee Jun-seok did not start immediately.

Since he just got back from Japan, he said that he would stop by his house and visit his family first.

I didn’t know how long it would take, so I told him to take a break.

After Lee Jun-seok was sent away, Hochi’s eyes were sparkling.

Did it seem fun to get a quest from me?

I asked Hochi to visit the cult in Gangwon-do and meet them.

I plan to use it as a rehearsal before I entrust the believers of the God of Hope to him...

“They think I’m a phantom, but I’m a real god. It would be enough to correct that misconception and inspire the believers. Can you do it?”

“Of course.”

Hochi’s answer was confident.

* * *

It was a place where the soft touch of grass was laid on the floor.

The warm light and the dirt that was neither loose nor damp.

It was an environment that anyone could refer to as a beautiful field.

Anyone would have called it so, if not for the huge wall that was visible in the horizon and the ceiling blocking the clouds above.

The walls and ceilings of unrealistic dimensions indicated that this place was indoors rather than outdoors.

Kirikiri liked this place.

Her favorite place was usually a field or a mountain where the energy of life was widespread and open.

So she had to control her expression in the presence of her visitor.

Kirikiri liked this room the most inside the Hundred Gods’ Temple.

It was her room, and it was designed to best suit her taste.

“What do you think?”

Asked the God of Balance who came to Kirikiri's room.

Kirikiri didn't answer right away and scratched her nose.

She had no choice but to.

Kirikiri had not yet chosen.

“I'm not asking you to judge.”

“Then?”

“I just.....”

“I'm curious what you're thinking.”

There was a voice that cut off the God of Balance.

It was a voice of a woman who was gentle and soft but at the same time cold and sharp.

The ears of the fox, not the rabbit's ears, were visible, and several tails fluttered behind the back.

“God of Sacrifice.”

“I know it's difficult to make a judgment right away. I just want to hear what you are thinking, and we just want to understand the situation a little more.”

Kirikiri found it difficult to keep silent at the words of the God of Sacrifice.

“He will eventually collide with the gods, for whatever reason.”

It was a natural story.

She made a quest window for him herself, but it was only a drag in the end.

The Gods of the Hundred Gods Temple agreed to the conditions given by Kirikiri.

By a majority vote.

Each one will present a quest, and when Lee Ho-jae clears all of them, the Tutorial will be handed over to him.

The gods knew.

Some gods will not give up their rights to the Tutorial, no matter what conditions Lee Ho-jae has cleared.

So she found out that it was virtually impossible to transfer the Tutorial through the quest.

For them, the quest given to Lee Ho-jae was not a transaction in exchange for the Tutorial, but only to deceive him and make him finish quests for free.

“He knows. Actually, the quests don’t mean much.”

“Is that so? He tolerated the survival of the God of Hope because of the quest. Unwillingly endured with the God of Duel. Then, he even made a deal with the God of Balance.”

The God of Sacrifice disagrees with Kirikiri’s predictions.

“No, I’m sure.”

“Can you tell me why?”

Prior to answering, Kirikiri drew pictures like scribbles on the ground.

It was a really, really old habit.

As old as the very long time that she has existed for.

The God of Balance and the God of Sacrifice knew her habits, so they waited silently for Kirikiri to finish her scribbling.

“If the quests were really important, he would have already cleared most of them. Moving quickly. He can’t afford to go wrong with the goal in front of him.”

Lee Ho-jae had done little since he came to Earth.

He organizes his surroundings a little and gives the group of people who came to Earth experience to adapt to Earth.

And he is dedicated to connecting the 60th floor of the Tutorial.

Although he clashed with the God of Hope previously, he did not take the offensive until the God of Hope blatantly attacked him first.

The meaning of the connection with the 60th and 61st floors was clear.

To facilitate the supply of divine power and to retrieve the hidden powers from the 60th and 61st floors.

His current strength was enough to clear the quests specified in the quest window immediately.

Clearly, Lee Ho-jae was preparing more than the strength required to clear the quest.

“It may be because he just likes to be connected with his holy place,” said the God of Sacrifice.

Kirikiri disagreed.

If she knew Lee Ho-jae, then she wouldn’t be so relaxed.

No matter how much time has passed, he has changed a lot.

“In the end, rather than doing all of the gods’ favors, I know that some gods must succumb by force like the God of Hope.”

“Huh, that’s where you get into trouble, isn’t it? Which one will win. No, it seems like it’s a question of which side will win the Hundred Gods’ Temple.”

Lee Ho-jae’s power has not yet been revealed.

When he fought with the God of Hope, most of the Hundred Gods simply watched the fight happily.

It was the collision they wanted.

The God of Hope, who had been eating away the Hundred Gods by twisting the rules, was treated as a work by many gods.

However, as the result of the conflict was revealed to be Lee Ho-jae’s one-sided victory, the attitudes of the gods changed rapidly.

It was because of Lee Ho-jae’s special existence.

He did not twist the rules like the God of Hope, but existed outside the rules altogether.

It wasn’t strange that the gods became wary.

Right now, there were discussions and voting that Lee Hojae should be included in the Hundred Gods Temple, at least in the Pantheon.

The claim that he must be forced to belong to the temple may soon become a reality.

If so, depending on the timing, regardless of the Tutorial, he and the gods of the Hundred Gods will face each other eventually.

“I haven’t yet decided which side to help or in which direction to lead the situation.”

Kirikiri answered.

The God of Sacrifice smiled and said,

“Thank you for the explanation. Whichever you choose, know that I will agree with you.”

“Do you believe in my choice?”

At Kirikiri’s question, the God of Sacrifice shrugged.

“Then I have to believe. Sacrifice is inevitable for everything, but I hate being on the side of being sacrificed. It’s natural to always stick to your side on the other side”

“I will follow your choice. You have always chosen the direction to end chaos.”

Following the God of Sacrifice, the God of Balance also expressed his will.

After the talk, the two left Kirikiri’s room.

Kirikiri, who was alone again, ran across the field, jumping.

After running around like that for a long time, Kirikiri’s mood was a little refreshed.

“What’s really going to happen?”

Kirikiri was more concerned about the future than the clash between several Gods and Lee Ho-jae.

When he defeats all the opposition of the gods and obtains the Tutorial. When he finally achieves his long-cherished goal.

She was worried about the future after that.

“Hoooojaaaeeee.”

Kirikiri, muttering his name to herself, giggled for a moment and laughed.

Never in her dream that a human with this strange name would grow up to this point.

And she didn't dare to guess what was to come.

She looked up at the sky, trying to ignore the ceiling beyond it.

What was the God of Slowness thinking?

How far was the god who proves the existence of time in the universe itself looking?

She didn't know.

She cannot foresee the future nor engage in causality.

It was just a wish.

She couldn't get a glimpse of the consequences before the adventure began.

Chapter 332

Hongcheon (1)

It had only been less than two months since Ho-jae and his party returned to Earth.

And the humans had already begun to experience huge changes.

Gates that previously poured out monsters no longer appeared unexpectedly.

The gates that used to randomly generate at all times suddenly became a huge risk factor during that time.

Due to this occurrence, humans had no guarantee of safety anywhere.

As a result, the social foundations became concentrated in the big cities, and the value of the Awakened who was a powerful force in street warfare soared.

But currently, the monster gates were no longer appearing.

It was a simple sentence, but what this sentence implied could not be explained in just a few words.

The monsters that suddenly appeared one day weren't just natural disasters that caused human casualties.

The appearance of monsters changed the landscape of the world.

Numerous people lost their lives to the monsters, and almost all countries lost their territory through monster invasion.

Even the United States and Korea, which were known as Monster-safe areas, still had areas that were overrun by monsters.

Fortunately, monsters that jumped out of the gate do not leave the area, stopping when they reached a certain point.

As if someone had placed a rally point on them.

Rather than eradicating all the monsters, the countries left some of those lands alone.

Instead, the numbers of the Awakened and the army were concentrated in limited areas.

As a result, it was relatively easy to protect the citizens of the city from the monster spawns or gates, but places far from the cities became defenseless against monsters.

In the case of South Korea, the incidence of gates appearing was so low in the first place, that it could be limited by abandoning some areas.

However, in some countries where there was a high probability of gates appearing, most of the land was lost.

But now, those gates do not appear anymore.

The damage caused by monsters nowadays had been minimal, with the exception of the occasional monstrous wild animals and the monsters that roamed around and entered the human settlements.

Although suspicious of this sudden phenomenon, many countries put their doubts to rest for the first time and began to move into the suburbs.

Naturally, the mainstay of this effort was the military forces.

Depending on the situation, the Awakened were also called out, but their importance was significantly lower.

And that was how Lee Ho-jae began to attract the Awakened with his trump card called the Dimensional Portal.

It was all over the newspapers, even the one that Hochi was reading.

Lee Hojae and Kim Min-hyuk's idea was simple.

Soon, the Awakened will be out of jobs.

The best advantage the Awakened had over the military was their combat power and experience fighting within the city.

And although they cannot replace the firepower of the military units in the field, both parties could still cooperate.

However, the jobs they would be entrusted with would probably be eradicating the monsters left in the remote areas at the most.

But that arrangement will not last long enough now that the monsters are no longer spawning.

Above all, the Awakened who were treated like nobles and heroes in the city would not be pleased with the mission to clear out monsters outside of the country.

They have already enjoyed too much wealth and honor to be treated as warriors on the front lines.

The army will still want them, but they will offer them a significantly lower price.

But with the opening of the Portal Gate, the Awakened who have been struggling with work, lost wealth and fame, will emerge as important resources again.

The Awakened who have had similar experiences in the Tutorial will quickly adapt to their expedition to other dimensions.

"Do you read the newspaper?" Asked the old man sitting next to him.

"Yes," Hochi nodded, feeling a little absurd.

The old man did not recognize Hochi's face as Lee Ho-jae's.

With the appropriate cognitive dysfunction magic applied, the old man will only see Hochi as a normal young man.

“Oh, it's a mess. It's a mess.”

The old man glanced at the newspaper that Hochi had spread out.

It was a literal mess.

Just reading the newspaper headlines revealed how confusing the situation was.

One crisis disappeared, but another crisis arose.

There were articles that talked about the ideal future, while others were anticipating new opportunities.

In any case, the newspapers were predicting that the times would change once again.

“Ahhh, tsk, tsk, tsk.”

The old man seemed to dislike the current situation.

Eitherway, Hochi was puzzled.

Hochi still felt awkward when someone he didn't know talked to him without hesitation.

The old man shook his head and said, “I don't know how the world has come to this. The government hasn't even issued an evacuation notice yet, but they're already fleeing...”

The stale smell of sweat.

Packages wrapped in cheap, wrinkled packaging.

It was a scene inside the train where there were more people standing than those sitting in the seats.

As the old man said, the people seemed to be taking refuge somewhere.

“But it’s a little better these days.”

“Is that so?”

“Yes, because a few years ago, I never thought of going home by train like this. In my hometown, it was hard to go to the next neighborhood. One time, while we were sleeping at night, monsters appeared in front of the apartment, and the residents of the apartment blocked the entrance to our building and tried to hold out...”

The old man shared what he had been through.

It was an experience that could have appeared in a blockbuster movie.

Hochi wondered if the old man’s words were mixed with a little exaggeration.

Clackety clack. Hiss.

The train slowly slowed down and came to a complete stop.

The people standing in the corridor of the train stumbled forward in reaction.

But the train had not arrived at the station yet.

The train stopped once every ten minutes or so and resumed operation after examining the surroundings for danger.

“Is this train usually so crowded?”

The old man said that he often goes to his hometown.

The old man who heard Hochi's question nodded and replied as if it were something natural.

"Yes. This train is going from Seoul to Chuncheon and Gangneung, after all."

It was a train that connected Chuncheon and Gangneung, some of the few cities left in Gangwon-do.

In the past, it used to be a train that would run several times a day, but now he wondered if it only goes back and forth once a week.

If so, then it was normal that people would crowd it.

"Here, please!"

The Mantis sitting next to Hochi raised her hand.

He wondered why she did that, and saw that a salesman was pushing the cart down the crowded train aisle.

"Yes, what would you like?"

"A boiled egg and cider."

"We're out of cider."

"Ah....."

The Mantis looked sad and ordered bottled water instead.

"Do you give out peanuts as a service?"

"No, you have to buy it."

The Mantis ordered peanuts with a more regretful expression than before and looked at Hochi.

“...Do you have any money?”

He had no choice but to buy it for her.

He got enough money from Kim Min-hyuk before they left after all.

The Mantis began to peel the eggs with a giggle.

Hochi sighed inside.

Still, Lee Ho-jae told him to buy something delicious on the train.

However, Lee Hojae talked about a variety of lunch boxes, not boiled eggs, potatoes, or squid.

After the big city became safe from monster attacks, mankind faced a shortage of resources and food.

It was natural because procuring them to sustain both supply and demand became difficult.

Due to this, the current era had become a time where everyone cherished and put up with what little they could get.

“Are you a couple?”

The old man asked.

Hochi looked serious.

“No.”

“Then she must be your wife. She’s so active and healthy, how nice.”

“No, she’s not.”

The old man did not answer.

You're not listening to me.

“This is.....”

He took the egg from the Mantis and gave it to the old man.

“Hon hon, you're a very nice young couple.”

We're not what you think we are.

Please don't talk to me while you're eating.

He turned the old man's attention to the egg and opened a virtual window.

[Faith Window]

[Lee Ho Jae's Faith (tentative name)]

[Location: Hongcheon County, Gangwon Province]

Religious building status: Hongcheon County Main Office (1),
Branch Office (6)

-The church is rapidly expanding due to the recently constructed church building.

Through six offices, the enlightening of rural people in the remote regions is taking place.

Received faith/number of believers

-2,227pt of faith is being produced every month.

-The total membership is 4,207 people.

-The number of believers is insufficient to be treated as a formal religion.

-Less faith is produced compared to numbers.

-A few believers have fanatic beliefs.

-There are some believers who have no faith at all.

Religious Influence

-The influence within the country is significantly dropping.

-The national government is not even aware of the sect.

-The reputation within the country is very poor.

-The public sees the sect as a pseudo-multilevel organization that mixes eschatology and idolatry of the Awakened.

Clergy Status

-There are no priests who have been properly educated in doctrine.

-No qualified clergy exists.

-The clergy in the Church's leadership have very little faith]

This was a Faith Window created by Lee Ho-jae for Hochi.

It was a rough mix of the System Window of the Tutorial and the Quest Window that Kirikiri made.

“Hmm.....”

Hochi confirmed the problem by reading the Faith Window seriously.

Hochi liked the Faith Window.

Lee Ho-jae's prediction that such a hologram window, reminiscent of a game system, suits Hochi's taste, was correct.

-Achievement tasks-

Mission 1: Reform the priesthood that sees Lee Ho-jae's Faith as a means of business.

Mission 2: Reveal the basis of faith for the believers of Lee Ho-jae's Faith to devote their faith.

Mission 3: Improve the public image of Lee Hojae's Faith, which is considered a stupid and childish cult.

.

.

.

There were even missions that aroused his desire to achieve more.

However, Hochi was still inexperienced in mingling with society and the people outside.

But that didn't mean that he was completely ignorant of the ways of people.

Most of his sources came from novels, but he read various stories through them.

He also shared the memories of Lee Ho-jae who experienced various worlds in the Tutorial.

Hochi eagerly looked into the Faith Window and wondered how to change the group and how to grow it.

It was a pleasant worry.

Hochi felt confident that he could somehow do it successfully.

“Are the preparations going well?”

Lim Seong-hyun asked the subordinate priest about the preparation.

“Yes, it is.”

The subordinate replied nonchalantly.

His attitude was terribly annoying.

Lim Seong-hyun frowned.

‘You punk.’

‘You might be wearing those robes now, but still act just like a thug on the streets, with a cigarette in your mouth and just nodding your head.’

He wanted to throw him out right now, but he still had to use him.

‘After this, I’ll have to find new guys that can be used as limbs.’

Lim Seong-hyun was a veteran with 20 years of experience as a fraudster.

When he was young, he made money by seducing innocent country girls.

After getting a little older, he made money by tricking old people who were ignorant of the world to join multi level marketing scams.

However, after the monsters appeared, his life changed rapidly.

The time had come when money was no longer important.

Of course, money was still important, but its value had relatively declined.

For him, who uses his desire to make easy money in scamming people, his means of business had disappeared.

He eventually had to change his business.

He started selling fear instead of desire.

Elderly people in the countryside who lost contact with their children in the cities and who couldn't sleep due to fear after hearing the sound of monsters coming from over the mountain, were really easy to deceive.

He brought out a universal eschatology and incited the people.

Heaven has punished men for its sins.

Everyone will die, but you will not die if you receive divine revelation...

You have been chosen.

People in the mountainous regions of Gangwon-do, abandoned by the government and the military, were easily convinced.

Some volunteered to become a believer immediately with a few magic tricks.

The problem is that after some time, the Awakened appeared.

They looked like godly superhumans that overturned the desperate situation.

Communication with the city was restored.

People have come to know about the somewhat absurd, but very mysterious, facts of Tutorials and the Hundred Gods.

Meanwhile, Lim Seong-hyun's eschatology lost its mystery day by day.

So Lim Seong-Hyun chose to deify the Awakened.

The Awakened claimed to be the guide of choice by the gods.

He insisted that someday, the strongest and greatest guides would come down to the world to lead people to heaven with himself as the revelator.

And the most powerful guide was Lee Ho-jae.

In fact, Lim Seong-hyun chose Lee Ho-jae because he was unlikely to come out of the Tutorial.

But Lee Hojae eventually came out.

He really has to close his business now. But then, good news came when he was agonizing whether he should close his business.

Lee Ho-jae's progress had been extraordinary.

He appeared in an endless explosion.

Fighting G-class all over the world alone.

And he did not even contact the media the whole time he was doing it.

It was a move that perfectly fit the ideal guide of Lim Sung-hyun's pseudo-religion.

Lastly, Lee Ho-jae was not very negative about his pseudo-group.

As soon as they got in touch, he said 'let's meet in Seoul and talk'.

Afterwards, he said he was like his family, and that he was going to send a representative to discuss the future with him.

"Is this really okay?"

Asked the subordinate priest.

This kid stretched and contracted like a rubber band.

“Of course. I already got a reply.”

Several times, he sent emails to Kim Minhyuk asking if the pseudo-organization he was running offended Lee Ho-jae...

Kim Min-hyuk confirmed the number of believers and said that Lee Ho-jae was also surprised and delighted when he mentioned that the current number of members exceeded 4,000.

Lim Seong-hyun was confident in his ability to deal with the Awakened.

He often invited the Awakened by running pseudo-groups.

Of course, most were third-rate Awakened.

Apart from the C-class, most were Awakened with D-class ranks or lower.

Most were Awakened who committed crimes, left the city and wandered around the suburbs.

They were violent and dangerous, but Lim Seong-hyun controlled them without difficulty.

The Awakened were all drunk with power.

They had a sense of superiority that they were different from the others.

The sense of reward that this kind of treatment was right for them as they gained power through hard work was what convinced them to join.

He just needed to match it appropriately and satisfy their desires.

The Awakened called Lee Ho-jae was not much different.

“Are the other kids ready?”

The subordinate priest nodded with a sordid smile.

“What about Miyoung?”

“She said she didn’t want to die.”

“That’s not good.”

Some women are easily deceived by their authority as revelators and fanatical doctrines, but there are also women who sometimes refuse the requests of the priests.

“Emmy and Abby were all third-degree believers, right?”

The third degree believers were a special class.

In the words of the priests, believers are people who have been brainwashed enough to enter a fire pit.

“Bring her in and ask her to persuade Miyoung. It’s urgent.”

Soon, the representative of the leader will come.

He doesn’t know exactly what that representative is.

The future of the church is different depending on how Lee Ho-jae thinks and treats the church.

Everything needed to be prepared.

“But is it really okay, hyung? I’m honestly a little scared. Why don’t we just run away now?”

Lim Seunghyun frowned and said,

“Shut up, you coward, scared, tired. The Awakened are humans, just like us. There's nothing to be afraid of."

Chapter 333

Hongcheon (2)

“Aigoo, those bastards again.”

The old man who was quietly eating the egg got angry.

The yolk popped out of his mouth and got stuck on the back of Hochi’s hand

‘Uh..... ’

Hochi wiped the back of his hand and looked up, following the gaze of the old man.

While the train had not yet started, a man came into the train car and made a ruckus.

“Please believe! Come and find the light before the coming end! Enjoy eternal life!”

It was a believer from the pseudo-religion.

The people on the train frowned because of the man’s loud voice.

Aside from spouting nonsense, the passengers were displeased because the man was talking in a loud voice.

The man who had been preaching about the “Hell of Disbelief” a moment ago suddenly lowered his voice when he spotted a female student sitting in front of him.

“Hey, are you a student?”

“Y-yes...?”

“Hmm, just by looking at you, I could tell that you are blessed with good fortune.”

What the hell is that?

Hochi was worried for a moment.

“But I could feel that your energy is under pressure. Things aren’t going well for you these days, right? That’s because your energy’s compressed. If you have time, come have a little chat with me once we arrive at the station.”

That man must be a pseudo.

The girl, whose arm was held by the man, was confused and could not push him away.

The man began to explain to the girl and sat beside her as if she were expecting him to sit with him from the start.

“Now, look at this brochure. This is our church in Hongcheon.....”

The girl couldn’t say anything as the man carried on.

Is she just scared, or is she embarrassed?

Probably fed up with what they were hearing, several passengers suddenly started talking aloud,

“That’s a load of shit! F you!”

“Girl, don’t follow him. If you follow that, then you’ll end up throwing away your money.”

The passengers’ angry voices poured out from around them.

Embarrassed at being called out, the man who was talking while holding onto the girl escaped with a dejected expression.

Hochi thought about it for a moment.

People around her helped her on the train, but what if it were a place with few people?

Would that girl be able to get rid of the pseudo?

It might be a more dangerous pseudo than I thought.

The pseudo-man moved toward the back of the car, avoiding the glares of the people around him.

Hochi made eye contact with the man as he walked down the alley.

[Lee Deoksam]

Age: 37

Status: Lee Ho-jae Faith (tentative name), 4th degree priest

– Produces 0pt of faith every month.

– Does not have any faith.

-Contributes greatly to the recruitment of new members of the denomination.

-One of the causes that is degrading the church's reputation.

-One of the pillars of the Church's business.

-A multi-level operator.

-Recommended to be expelled from the denomination or punished as an example.

‘...Was it the Lee Ho-jae Faith?’

He was wondering if it was a pseudo he ran into on the way to Gangwon-do.

He didn’t know it was really the Lee Ho Jae Faith.

“Excuse me.....”

The man named Lee Deok-sam suddenly lowered his posture and spoke.

Hochi looked at him surprised to see if he had recognized him, but the person Lee Deok-sam was talking to was not Hochi.

“Your mouth is so plump. You have a blessed face. By the way...”

He was talking to the mantis who was eating a peanut in the seat next to Hochi.

The mantis looked at Lee Deok-sam with wide, open eyes.

At that time, an egg shell flew onto Lee Deok-sam’s face.

“Go away!”

The old man sitting next to Hochi threw the remainder of the egg shells in his hand.

Lee Deok-sam, who was struck by an egg shell to his face, shook off the shell on his face with a harsh expression, and then fled.

“Ah-hyo, those rotten bastards.”

When the man went to the next car at the back of the train, the old man cursed again.

Hochi was speechless for a while.

Then he asked the old man a question.

“Did you know about that pseudo?”

“Everybody knows. They’re famous these days. Those guys are very dramatic.”

Hochi wanted to sigh.

Somehow, things might be more troublesome than he thought.

He asked the old man again.

“It’s not about taking innocent kids like before, joining the denomination and asking for money. The problem is that some people really believe their words and become believers.”

“Is there anyone who really believes in that?”

Of course, through the Faith Window, he could check the number of faith and believers received by the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

However, he didn’t think that there would be anyone who wanted to become a believer from what the man was talking about earlier.

“It’s what people in the countryside believe. When the monsters appeared, people became isolated.”

After the appearance of the monsters, the rural people were cut off from civilization for many years without knowing the cause of the sudden appearance of monsters or the many things happening in the world.

They just gathered in the countryside and lived in hiding.

After the Awakened appeared, the situation gradually calmed down, and only after the contact network was restored were the people able to hear detailed explanations.

The explanation they heard at that time was so absurd.

The strange world of Tutorials, the ordeal of the gods, and the unknown monsters.

When the confusion was aggravated by the unorganized information, a person appeared to stir up their confusion.

Those who show the power of the Awakened introduced them as guides from heaven.

The people in the countryside were infatuated with their mysterious abilities, hoping for safety from monsters that they promised.

“...Yes, well, that’s plausible.”

From Hochi’s point of view, it wasn’t a story that deeply resonated with him.

Humans would be able to do that.

“I don’t believe it. Do you know how many Awakened I saw in Seoul? They eat, they poop, they’re scared of monsters just like us.”

The old man responded with a snort.

Then he lowered his voice and whispered.

“And by the way, one of my friends joined that pseudo.”

“That pseudo?”

“Yes, do you know what that cult worships?”

“What do they worship?”

Hochi asked.

“There’s an Awakened named Lee Ho-jae who came out a while ago, and they worship that Awakened like a god. They display his pictures and pray and bow before it. My friend didn’t say it was weird. Aish, crazy guys.”

“Ah.....”

He’s right.

“They’re serving the Awakened who is doing well in Seoul. That Awakened probably doesn’t even know that there is such a cult.”

No.

He knows there is a pseudo.

Hochi wanted to tell him the truth.

However, it was difficult to explain anything, and he quit because he thought he would be treated as a pseudo too.

Hochi tried to organize his thoughts for a moment.

To the rural people who had been isolated for many years, the Awakened would certainly seem like divine beings.

Even after finding out about the Tutorial and the Hundred Gods, they still will.

It would sound like a story of a warrior who had been chosen by God to be tested and returned to Earth to save them.

It wasn’t really far from the truth.

Even if the Lee Ho-jae Faith continues to operate that way, there will be no major problems.

Rather, it would be easier to understand that Lee Ho-jae is a guide or a revelator than to say that he is really a god.

It will be easy to accept.

However, it was said that scammers ran the faith.

The scammers are people who will sell anything if it makes them money.

Unsurprisingly, they seemed to run a faith without considering Lee Ho-jae at all.

And perhaps because of that, people's perception of the Lee Ho-jae Faith became bad.

'This is going to be troublesome.'

People's perceptions are solid.

Their impression of the pseudo believers as idiots will not change easily.

Those who believe this are unlikely to become believers.

The image of the Faith needs to be renewed.

The best way to change people's perceptions is for Lee Ho-jae to work miracles as a god.

But that was Lee Ho-jae's job, and it wasn't the job entrusted to Hochi.

How can we change their perception of the denomination?

Is it possible to change their perception while maintaining the framework of the religion that idolizes the Awakened?

He was skeptical.

“Now, the Revelator’s agent is visiting the church for the first time. Let’s show him our sincerity!”

“Yes!”

Im Seong-hyun smiled as he saw the believers responding to him with a loud voice.

The congregation gathered here were all second degree or higher.

So a friendly smile was bound to come out.

In order to become a member of the second level or higher, they had to make a substantial donation to the denomination or devote themselves to the priesthood.

“Okay then, let’s get ready to welcome him!”

“Yes!”

The believers replied, singing in a chorus.

Lim Seong-hyun kept himself from snickering.

It was disgusting that old people responded with bright voices like kindergarteners.

He sent out the members and sat on his chair.

All of the members were in the midst of preparing for the welcoming event, but it was not something he should help with.

He leaned against the back of his chair and closed his eyes for a short nap.

“Hyung.”

As the surroundings became quiet, a subordinate priest approached.

He was wondering what kind of grievance the guy who had been talking about being anxious or scared a few days ago would be complaining about this time.

It was annoying, but he couldn't completely ignore it.

Lim Seong-hyun asked with his eyes closed.

“What?”

“Let's just run away.”

“Do you want to get your ass kicked?”

Lim Seong-hyun got up from his seat, feeling the momentary rush of anger.

He just couldn't understand.

Life has finally come to an end, but what kind of escape is running away?

“Hey, do you know how much money we're making? If you keep going for 3 years like this, we will be playing and eating forever. You can live while pretending to be the head of the church for the rest of your life.”

“No... Brother, it's not that I don't know that.”

“Then what is it?”

The subordinate priest hesitated and said,

“I looked into it, but there are some rumors of the person named Lee Ho-jae... Strange. I think he is a little different from what is known.”

He knows about Lee Ho-jae.

In fact, any Korean knows.

In the past, Lee Hojae's documentary was always shown when you turned on the TV.

In times of despair, the media and the government tried to give people hope by selling Lee Ho-jae's name.

Thanks to that, his religion had grown this much, so of course he knew a lot about Lee Ho-Jae.

“What is it?”

“He's kind of... an asshole. But just a bit.”

Lim Seong-hyun smiled.

None of the Awakened he met were not a fool.

“There is also a story that he killed a lot of people.....”

Lim Seong-hyun put his arm around the shoulders of the subordinate priest.

So what if he killed people?

All the Awakened he had met so far were criminals.

“Hey, it's fine. What do you think those crazy guys want?”

“Hyung...”

“Power? Money? What?”

Lim Seong-hyun crossed his hands and clapped loudly.

“You think that crazy guy would hate selling his name?”

Bam bam!

A rough knock sounded.

Soon a member of the congregation entered.

“Guardian! He has arrived! But.....!”

The believer’s face was white as a sheet.

Chapter 334

60th floor (19)

“What is inside of all that luggage you packed, Yong-yong?”

Yong-Yong did not answer and just laughed.

It was strange.

It was obvious that Yong-yong attached space warping magic to the backpack he was carrying.

That bag looks so full, just what in the world did he stuff in it?

“Are you going to take it to your room?”

“Yeah.”

I guess there were a lot of interesting things he saw for the first time on Earth.

Yong-yong has always been taking strange things or things he had never seen before to his room.

“Hey, wouldn’t it be better if you stayed on Earth?”

I asked Kim Min-hyuk.

In fact, there was no reason for Kim Min-hyuk to come with us to the 60th floor.

“No, I’m going to go there.”

It seems that I placed too much stress on Kim Min-hyuk.

He had several chances, but he kept himself from diving and avoiding work ever since he joined us.

“Let’s put this soup in my sub-space. It will cool down.”

I received the packaged soup, rice, and side dishes from Kim Minhyuk and put it in my inventory.

I succeeded in connecting the 60th floor to the portal and had a chance to meet Lee Yeon-hee’s parents before going there.

Unlike my family who all disappeared or died, everyone in Lee Yeon-hee’s family was alive and well.

They were even living a decent life by receiving subsidies from the government.

However, even though they were living in abundance, they were sad that they have not seen their daughter in 10 years.

Lee Yeon-hee’s parents asked me to deliver their homemade pork soup to her when I said I would go to the 60th floor later to meet her.

During our conversation, I learned that her parents had been selling pork soup before. And because of that, Lee Yeon-hee ate a lot of pork soup during her childhood.

“Let’s go when we’re ready.”

“Huh. What am I supposed to do? Should I drink some potions?”

Kim Minhyuk asked.

“You just need to stay still like when you’re going into a Tutorial portal.”

Kim Min-hyuk somehow got a little anxious and climbed the portal.

I also stood on the portal holding Yong-yong’s hand.

“Why, Seregia, do you want me to hold your hand too?”

“No thanks.”

Seregia, who hesitated for a while, climbed the portal a beat later.

“Then move.”

* * *

[You have entered the 60th floor.]

“Oh, is this the 60th floor?”

Asked Kim Minhyuk.

“It’s completely different from the 60th floor in normal difficulty.”

“Of course. I did a few remodeling.”

Because I smashed it in a fit of anger.

I had to do some major reconstruction work four or five times, not including the countless small repairs here and there.

There were also many new things that have been created since Yong-yong became interested in architecture.

Anyway,

“It’s been a long time since I’ve been here.”

I have been on Earth for only two months, but I feel like I’ve been gone for a year.

I scratched my chin.

Even though it was a place where I previously struggled to leave, I never expected that I would feel like I was back home once we returned.

“Yeah! It’s been a long time!”

Yong-yong answered.

It’s been a while since we’ve been home, so he was pretty excited.

I could literally feel Yong-yong’s heartbeat from his little hand that was holding onto mine.

“Dad, I’m going to my room.”

“Okay.”

Yong-yong excitedly flew to his room.

Was it in that direction?

From Yong-yong’s point of view, this was literally and truly his home, so his reaction was only natural.

“Where is Yong-yong’s room?”

Asked Kim Min-hyuk.

He seemed to be wondering where Yong-yong had gone.

“There.”

“There?”

“No, it’s the one at the top.”

Kim Minhyuk asked with a quizzical expression.

“But... that’s a tower, right? It’s a tower. That’s, crazy. I thought it was some kind of background.”

Yong-yong’s room is a little big.

It may be difficult to recognize because it cannot be easily seen at a glance.

“It’s not really that big, it’s just the space distortion magic... Seregia! Where are you going!?”

Meanwhile Seregia, who was next to him, was quietly heading in a different direction.

Seregia disappeared without answering.

When I looked at the direction she went to, I noticed that she headed for the barriers.

Seregia spent a long time becoming an energy source for the barriers as a great sword.

Maybe Seregia feels like the inside the barrier was her room.

Sigh.

Yong-yong and Seregia quickly left for their rooms after arriving.

I wish Hochi had come with me.

“Let’s go to my room first.”

“Is your room like that tower?”

But before that, there was someone I had to take care of first.

There. There was a woman hiding among the buildings in the residential area who was quietly observing us.

It was Lee Yeon-hee.

“Ah, uncle?... Are you really uncle?”

* * *

“Waaahhh.”

“Eat slowly, a little. Rest and eat later.”

Lee Yeon-hee was literally pouring out tears like a waterfall while eating the soup.

It was a grim sight, but on the other hand, it was also unhygienic.

If she keeps, her tears and the mucus from her nose would fall into the soup.

I forced Lee Yeon-hee to hold a towel in her hand (a small handkerchief or tissue paper wasn't enough to handle), wipe her face first, and eat the soup.

“Have you calmed down?”

“...Yes.”

Lee Yeon-hee said after wiping her face continuously with the towel.

In that short time of crying, her eyes and nose became very red.

“Is the soup that delicious?”

Lee Yeon-hee was anxious and scared when she saw me on the 60th floor.

Honestly, I thought she would be a little happy, so I was embarrassed.

First, I tried to warm up the mood by letting her eat the soup and talking slowly.

And as soon as Lee Yeon-hee put the soup in her mouth, she started crying.

“Yeah... It’s very good...”

Lee Yeon-hee, who answered that it was delicious and ate the soup again, began to sob again.

This is driving me crazy.

I reluctantly put the spoon down.

Lee Yeon-hee’s parents prepared plenty of soup so that me and Kim Min-hyuk could also eat it.

I was also looking forward to eating soup because it’s been a long time.

But I lost my appetite upon watching Lee Yeon-Hee sobbing like that.

She wasn’t just crying, she was completely sobbing while shoving soup in her mouth at the same time.

“Is it really that delicious? I’ve had much more delicious food from the Tutorial shop than the food from Earth.”

I muttered quietly.

Kim Min-hyuk, who was sitting next to me, kicked me in the leg.

As I looked right at him, Kim Min-hyuk turned his head and pretended not to know.

Even though it was Lee Yeon-hee who was supposed to be sad, I could also feel my chest tightening a little.

Her emotion at that time was something that I was familiar with.

All members of my family had died or gone missing.

And by the time I entered the Tutorial, they were completely out of the picture.

So in a way, I could understand Lee Yeon-hee's feelings.

Her case wasn't like mine, but Lee Yeon-hee was also trapped for a long time.

She was alone.

It must have been even harder for her after being trapped on the 60th floor.

It's only been two months, but an isolated person will naturally become unaware of the passage of time.

But in the midst of all this, as soon as she felt the taste of the food her parents used to serve her when she was a child, tears welled up in her eyes.

Lee Yeon-hee's goal was to return to Earth.

I understood her because I knew how much she wanted to see her family again.

I felt sorry for her again.

"Lee Yeon-hee."

I called Lee Yeon-hee while keeping my voice from cracking.

Lee Yeon-hee raised her head, which had been plunged into the bowl, and looked at me with teary eyes.

"Your mother's soup is delicious, right?"

Lee Yeon-hee nodded.

“You’re thankful I brought it to you, right?”

Lee Yeon-hee nodded.

“Aren’t you lucky to be my apostle? If you had refused, you wouldn’t have been able to eat that soup.”

Lee Yeon-hee nodded her head repeatedly.

I also nodded with a warm smile.

Hahaha.

“Yes, yes, eat a lot. Slow down and eat a lot. Let’s talk about it later after we’ve finished eating.”

From the side, Kim Min-hyuk looked at me with disgust, but I ignored it.

This is really important.

Lee Yeon-hee was an important resource in many ways.

It’s good to score points when she’s not alert.

“Auntie, don’t cry.”

Before I knew it, Yong-yong had sat on Lee Yeon-hee’s lap and started patting her.

Lee Yeon-hee embraced Yong-yong unconsciously and began to cry again.

Don’t ignore me.

It looked like Lee Yeon-Hee kidnapped Yong-Yong and used him as a hostage.

When the emotions are so intense, the head does not work rationally.

Yong-yong gave Lee Yeon-hee a small pat.

Such a sight would warm anyone's heart.

Yong-yong did not panic and hugged Lee Yeon-hee tightly and patted her back.

I guess it's a good thing I packed the soup.

I was worried about how to make up with Lee Yeon-Hee and get closer at first, but this seemed to be a good opportunity to move on.

Although Kim Min-hyuk was looking at me like he wanted to say a lot of things, I decided to ignore it.

* * *

"At first, I thought it was a hallucination."

"What, us?"

"Yes....."

When Lee Yeon-hee saw us on the 60th floor, she thought she was seeing hallucinations.

"I have been alone for too long... As I keep thinking the same thing all along, I've always felt like I could see what I was thinking....."

I nodded.

I know what it's like.

I've been through it a few times.

"Thank you for doing the work I asked you to do. Had it not been for the signal you sent here, it would have taken me more time to reach the 60th floor.”

“Yes...”

Lee Yeon-hee nodded.

Still, her complexion looked a little better than when I first saw her.

“By the way, uncle.”

“Uh, what?”

“Are you not going to kill me?”

I paused at the calm question.

I think you asked a similar question before.

“Why would I kill you?”

“...because I’m now useless?”

The biggest reason for leaving Lee Yeon-hee as an apostle on the 60th floor was to easily connect the 60th floor to the Earth.

Do you think we don’t need you anymore because you’ve already fulfilled that role?

“Do I look like someone who just kills you once you are useless?”

“Yes.....”

It was a cold judgment.

“I even betrayed you and... I don’t think you’re going to let go of the one who turned their back on you.”

In the past, Lee Yeon-hee quietly asked if I would kill her on the 61st floor.

However, looking at her actions, it was not like she was a person without regrets in life.

I was curious about her psychology.

“I was betrayed, but the truth is that I betrayed you first. It couldn’t be helped, and as a matter of fact, you couldn’t help it either.

If I had to argue, my fault was bigger than Lee Yeon-hee’s.

I expected Lee Yeon-hee’s betrayal, helped, and even induced it.

Of course, I didn’t mean that someone should apologize because the other did worse.

She meant that she had no intention of talking about the crime because of her fault.

“Although I was an enemy.”

And this was the most important.

“I won anyway, right?”

“Is that so.”

Lee Yeon-hee asked again.

“So I’m not an enemy anymore?”

“Right.”

Lee Yeon-hee quietly nodded.

Her body froze, without even a fine movement.

However, I could see her muscles relax.

On the surface, it didn't show at all.

Certainly, Lee Yeon-hee had excellent talent.

In fact, it was obvious.

Although I also lent her a hand, she climbed up to the 60th floor of Hell difficulty on her own.

If anyone could do it, I would have cleared the Tutorial 10 years ago, not two months ago.

I told Lee Yeon Hee about my future plans.

Previously, I've given her clues little by little, but I never spoke openly.

"I am taking over the Tutorial from the gods."

"Well... Looking at the 61st floor... It doesn't seem impossible at all," sighing, Lee Yeon-hee responded.

"Have you been there?"

"Yes."

She had been to the 61st floor, and it seems like she has met my followers.

Seeing that she was alone on the 60th floor, it seems that she was not accepted even though she met them.

"As an apostle, I wondered if you really needed me."

Maybe that's why they didn't accept her upon their meeting and the reason why Lee Yeon-hee thought I was going to kill her.

“I need you.”

I will be taking over the Tutorial from the Hundred Gods’ Temple, effectively removing the time rewind that was applied to the Tutorial stage and preventing the dead and the destroyed land from coming back.

That was my goal.

However, if left alone, most of the Tutorial stages will be destroyed immediately.

I didn’t mean to bring the Tutorial world to ruin according to the order.

I wanted to overcome the crisis and face a new future.

“So that’s my role. So you’re saying that I will be God’s apostle who will save the worlds on the verge of destruction, is that it?”

“Yes. In fact, it won’t be much different from the stage mission in the Tutorial. The difference is, unlike before, when you didn’t have to worry about the future after you cleared it, you have to keep the future in mind.”

It’s not a recurring time, but a whole new future.

“I will give you the best treatment as an apostle. After the Tutorial is completely handed over to me, you will be able to go to Earth and see your family whenever you have time. Of course, on the premise that you do your job well.”

Lee Yeon-hee asked me after worrying for a while,

“...Why me?”

“What do you mean, why?”

“That’s something other people can do, even if it’s not me. Why do you want to entrust that job to me... May I ask why?"

I was silent for a moment.

I was expecting Lee Yeon-hee to drop her passive attitude.

However, the word 'something other people could do' was not easy to handle.

In the past, Lee Yeon-hee was an irreplaceable, must-have existence for me.

I gave her all my expectations and attention.

Lee Yeon-hee also tried to live up to my expectations without feeling too uncomfortable about it.

"Because I need you."

I decided to be as honest as possible.

"Because you are more like me than anyone else, in judgement and even actions. I taught you that, but you grew up that way too. So I think I can entrust the Tutorial world to you. Because I can trust your judgment there."

I was serious.

Her judgment did not differ much from my judgment.

Although there were differences, depending on the situation, Lee Yeon-Hee's judgment could have been better than mine.

I remember every decision that Lee Yoon-hee made as she went through the different stages.

When she first encountered life on the 4th floor and a civilized species.

When she was isolated on the 6th floor and faced despair.

The first time she encountered an enemy who showed her favor on the 13th floor.

On the 16th floor, where she was able to meet some weird but funny friends.

The judgments on the 20th floor where the enemies who looked disgusting and looked ugly appeared.

Stages on the 40th floor where you had to deal with various kinds of monsters and the stages on the 50th floor where you had to lead people as an apostle.

After that, even when the number of communication with Lee Yeon-hee decreased.

I've been keeping a close eye on how she cleared the stages.

I also gave advice accordingly.

Remembering all of her steps in those messages, I was able to trust her future judgments.

“And above all,”

It's not about competence.

“We went through the hardest time together.”

Even though it was a conversation that I couldn't see before and exchanged only through letters and messages.

In the days when every second was like hell.

With Lee Yeon-hee, I could see the future and live.

“I'll do it, I'll become uncle's apostle.”

Chapter 335

Tutorial Level 60 (20)

“How surprising.”

Kirikiri said.

“What?”

“Hihing.....”

Kirikiri didn’t answer and scratched her ear.

Unlike humans who can scratch their ears simply by raising their hands, Kirikiri had to stretch her arms high in the sky to scratch her ears.

It looked pretty uncomfortable.

Eventually, Kirikiri scratched her ear more comfortably after pulling her ear down to the front of her face.

“Do you have any fleas or something?”

“I do not!”

Kirikiri cried out.

It’s because you keep scratching your furry ears that I thought there were bugs.

Kirikiri glanced at me as if she was angry at my words, snorted and then sighed.

I guess asking her whether she had fleas or not was worse than I thought.

Is it because it's Suin?*

Usually when you ask humans if they have fleas, it's just because they're dirty enough to have it or they don't wash up...

Well, it might be upsetting though.

“Apologise!”

“Yes, yes, I apologise. I'm sorry.”

“Tsk.....”

Kirikiri seemed less relaxed, but she didn't say anything after I apologized.

“But what's surprising?”

I decided to change the topic.

Kirikiri unwittingly tried to scratch her ear again at my question, but noticed it and hurriedly lowered her arm.

Instead, while fiddling with her cheeks, she said,

“I didn't know how Hoojaee would say that.”

That?

“Are you referring to what I told Lee Yeon-hee earlier?”

“Hmm.”

Kirikiri had been with us since we entered the 60th floor.

It was just that she was hiding from Lee Yeon-hee, saying she would be angry with her.

“You must have thought that I would kill Yeon-hee Lee too.”

“Hmm.”

Kirikiri curtly replied.

I was wondering how close my impression of Kirikiri was.

“Oh my god, I’m so disappointed.”

I tried to imitate Kirikiri’s tone.

“Don’t.”

Kirikiri said with a sharp look.

Honestly, it didn’t look so scary.

“Alright, I won’t. Sorry.”

“.....”

After a quick apology, Kirikiri couldn’t say much again.

I found a new strategy.

But it’s better not to overdo it.

If I cross a certain line, she would lose confidence in my words and would treat whatever I say as a joke...

“It was really surprising. It wasn’t that you didn’t kill Yeon-hee, but that you would say such a thing to her I do know that Hooojae would get along with people like him, though.”

I nodded.

Kirikiri knows me so well.

I was once her enemy, but we got along after we ceased to be enemies.

It was because most of the people I met were either an outright enemy or someone from the Tutorial Stages that was supposed to be an enemy.

So there were only a few people in the Tutorial that I could talk to and connect with.

“I also knew that you cared for Lee Yeon-hee’s ability.”

Kirikiri showed me the letters Lee Yeon-hee had exchanged with me in the past, and discussed the replies I sent.

“But I didn’t know how to persuade the two of you to talk about your bond.”

Was that so surprising?

“And the HooooJaaee I know wouldn’t lie about that.”

“Yeah, I meant it.”

In fact, my relationship with Lee Yeon-hee was a bit complex.

The time we spent together was too short for us to be considered family or friends.

It was more appropriate to say that she was a colleague or a disciple.

I couldn’t exactly tell what kind of connection we had, but I was sure it was a deep relationship anyway.

At least I thought so.

I believe Lee Yeon-hee would think the same way too.

“I don’t know if HoooJaae... I didn’t think you would know the importance of family and colleagues.”

Kirikiri said, and eventually pulled her ear down and scratched it.

“Instead, I knew that you thought such bonds would be a weakness, standing in the way of you achieving your goals.”

I told Lee Yeon-hee about our bond and that I needed her for that.

This is an important matter

At least for Kirikiri.

“It used to think so too.”

In the past, I valued friends and other relationships, but I certainly considered their existence as a weakness, and it made a gap in my mind.

Nevertheless, I didn’t let go of them because they were so precious, but I was anxious that I would forget my goal because of the divided attention. As a result, I distanced myself from them to some extent.

“Is it different now?”

I nodded at Kirikiri’s question.

In the end, it was not myself, but others who helped me endure the 60th floor.

Park Jung-ah, who helped me keep me sane every day.

Lee Yeon-hee, who made it possible to see the future again.

Hochi and Yongyong, who became my family.

And from start to finish, Seregia, who trusted me and waited for me.

Thanks to those around me, I was able to withstand my trials and go further.

It was a cheesy and embarrassing story, but I honestly told Kirikiri my thoughts.

Kirikiri said with a bright smile,

“That’s a good thing.”

A snort came out when she laughed.

“The God of Slowness must be upset. Hi hi.”

Does that even matter?

I was dumbfounded and just laughed out loud.

* * *

“You’re leaving?”

“Hmm.”

Kirikiri nodded.

“Why don’t you go see Lee Yeon-hee after she wakes up?”

Lee Yeon-hee, who was crying while eating soup, fell asleep as soon as she calmed down a little.

I wouldn’t be able to sleep just like that if it were me.

“No.”

Too bad.

I guess it was still awkward for her to face Lee Yeon-hee.

I thought about another way to persuade Kirikiri.

“No wonder when you’re here, I feel like someone is stealing my power little by little.”

Gosh.

So sharp.

“Then... it can’t be helped. Goodbye.”

“Hihing, goodbye. People will be summoned here in about 5 minutes.”

Kirikiri disappeared from the 60th floor after informing me.

I opened the message window after a long time.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: Jung-ah, are you ready?]

[Park Jung-ah, 90th floor: Yeah.]

The answer came from Park Jung-ah.

Somehow, her responses had gotten shorter again.

I was a little nervous.

[Lee Ho-jae, 60th floor: It will start now.]

Soon, all tutorial challengers from the Earth server will be summoned to the 60th floor.

Originally, such a thing was not possible.

But the Earth was now my territory, not the Hundred Gods Temple’s.

Of course, it was an act of authority to run a Tutorial for the people of the Earth for the Hundred Gods Temple.

It was also an invasion against my territory.

I agreed with Kirikiri's proposal to bring Earth's Tutorial challengers back to Earth through the 60th floor.

[Stop all tutorial stages on the Earth server.]

[The qualifications of the challengers on the Earth server will be requalified.]

[The challengers of the Earth server are forcibly moved to the outer dimension 'HX60'.]

That 'XH60' was the name of the 60th floor, which was no longer a Tutorial stage.

Whether it was because of the sudden system message or the opening of a new dimensional link, Lee Yeon-hee, who was sleeping earlier, suddenly woke up and alertly observed her surroundings.

I roughly explained the situation to her.

Soon after that, people began to be summoned to the 60th floor.

There were people who gathered quickly looking for a face they knew, and others were wandering looking for someone while trembling.

There was less confusion than I thought.

Well, they have stayed in the residential area for two months, so they've probably heard of this situation in advance through the system messages, that's why there wasn't much confusion when they finally had to move to the 60th floor...

There were also some people who were on bad terms, so some of them were raising their voices at each other.

It was noisy.

Somehow, when a thousand units of people were suddenly summoned in one place, it was bound to be crowded.

I decided to ignore it for now.

Rather, as soon as she was summoned, I had to accept that a woman was running fiercely at me.

Bomph!

“Ugh!”

Park Jung-ah crashed into my body and screamed against my chest.

Fortunately, she did not pass out after making contact with my body...

Otherwise, Park Jung-ah would have been in a shape similar to minced meat by now.

“I’ve adjusted my strength as much as I can.”

Park Jung-ah didn’t say anything and stayed still while she pressed her face against my chest and hung from my body.

“Let me see your face. It’s been 10 years since we’ve met, let’s see your face.”

Park Jung-ah did not raise her head.

She didn’t even answer.

Instead, she started to poke her fingers tightly on my side.

“What are you doing?”

“In the past, when I pressed here, you would flinch and get ticklish.”

Umm.....

There is no way I'll react to such a thing now.

"Maybe after you became a god, your senses became dull."

What's she trying to say?

"Or you have been freed from your mortal troubles and became liberated, or your sexual desire was... No, that's not it....."

"No, I'm still healthy. It's normal."

I replied in annoyance.

Was Jung-ah always like this?

Yes, her personality was just as I remembered...

However, becoming a god does not mean that desire disappears.

Rather, they just cling to you more blindly.

Park Jung-ah was still not raising her head.

I wrapped my arms around her shoulders and hugged her.

Then I felt her trembling more clearly.

"Jung-ah."

It was always like this.

Park Jung-ah always pretended to be bold.

She looked bolder and more brutal while trying to hide her weakness.

Knowing her for a long time, I quietly waited for her to say something.

“.....Are your feelings still the same, or...”

I guess that's what you really wanted to ask.

Too much has happened in the meantime, and too long has passed.

I could understand where her anxiety was coming from.

It was because I had that anxiety too.

“If, if so, then, tell me now.”

“No.”

I was able to give a definite answer.

Park Jung-ah spoke again after being silent for a while.

“...you've kept me waiting for too long. Did you ever want to see me again?”

The last time I met Park Jung-ah was before I was trapped on the 60th floor.

At the third contest.

That was 11 years ago.

“I've always wanted to see you again.”

I said honestly.

Hoping that my true feelings would be conveyed.

“And...”

I was always sorry for Park Jung-ah.

Even now, when I see her being so anxious.

But selfishly, on the other hand, I was also happy.

“Thank you for waiting.”

I knew that the reason Park Jung-ah remained in the Tutorial was to wait for me.

She reached the 90th floor a long time ago, but now she doesn't have to worry about the Order of Vigilance anymore.

When she left first, she was waiting, worrying about me.

Only then did Park Jung-ah step back away from me.

As she wiped away tears from her eyes, she smiled as if she were relieved.

“Hah, I should've asked you the truth before; I hesitated for no reason.”

Park Jung-ah quickly regained her gallant attitude.

It was good to see.

The image of her that I remember from the past remained the same.

In fact, her appearance almost didn't seem to change at all, so it was even more so.

“What do you think after seeing my face ten years later?”

“It's good. And...”

Park Jung-ah stood up for a while and said ‘umm...’

“It’s awkward.”

Then she grinned.

I couldn’t help but chuckle.

It had been so long since I’ve seen her, but I did not feel uncomfortable around her at all.

I did notice some changes from what I remembered of her, but those were natural changes that occurred over time; changes that we never observed from each other, or indirectly heard through the messages we exchanged.

“Thank you, and I’m sorry.”

This is what I said when I relayed a message through Hochi.

I also said it several times through my messages, but I wanted to see her face and say it again.

“Me too.”

Park Jung-ah replied and hugged me tightly again.

As we hugged for a while, Park Jung-ah smiled.

As if she were showing someone.

Park Jung-ah placed her face over my shoulder, away from my sight.

However, even if I didn’t dare to look directly, I could see everything around me.

Park Jung-ah, who hugged me tightly, was smiling over my shoulder, looking at Lee Yeon-hee who was standing behind me.

Lee Yeon-hee was staring straight into Park Jung-ah’s eyes without looking away.

With a scary look.

This... this situation is a little difficult.

* * *

I excused myself from Park Jung-ah for a moment.

My reunion with her was important, but I couldn't leave the rest of the humans in a mess.

"Now, be quiet. Focus here."

At my word, everyone's mouths closed in unison.

I climbed on the platform in the square and explained the situation to them.

Let's see how they'll react.

"From now on, you can only say what you need. Or when you're being questioned."

The order that only necessary words could be spoken was useful in many ways.

Anyone who tried to ask useless or redundant questions were unable to open their mouths.

"Are we going back to Earth?"

Someone asked.

I'm sorry, but you're not.

"No."

I took these people over from the Hundred Gods Temple.

So their fate now laid in my hands.

They were a usable manpower, and I needed manpower now.

They believed that I would be returning them home, but there was no such thing.

“Unfortunately, you have not completed all the Tutorials, so it means that your training is not yet over. In the future, it won’t be in the Tutorial, you’re going to go somewhere else for training.”

After that training, they may be able to return to Earth.

At least, they may during the holiday season.

“That... Is the training dangerous?”

It was a very sharp question.

“Yes, it’s dangerous.”

I told him the truth.

The expressions of the numerous challengers gathered in the square suddenly darkened.

My training will be dangerous.

It will be difficult too.

However, there was no risk of losing one’s life.

Their reward will also be certain.

All the men who have gone through my training have grown enough to do their part wherever they go.

I’ve said it many times, but the only exception is Hochi.

“Hey... I’m a challenger on the 99th floor of hard difficulty. Isn’t that enough to deserve to return to Earth without having to retrain?”

“Shut up.”

I ignored the unfavorable question.

It was a little coercive, but I had no intention of dealing with them.

I will pay them enough compensation.

To the extent that I think they would do well to be with me in the future.

[Call]

“Huh?”

I’ve been explaining to the challengers for a while, but I got a call signal.

There was only one person who would call me this way.

It was a call signal from Hochi, who was left on Earth.

Hochi was calling me.

Translator’s Notes:

Suin*: hybrid beast

Chapter 336

Hongcheon (3)

The sound of the janggu and the bok drums were noisy.

Fireworks soared into the sky, and the people holding hands began to sing.

It was a song about praising the great leader Lee Ho-jae and the stories of the believers who were waiting for him.

The lyrics were too explicit, childish, and cringey for Hochi to bear.

When he heard the section that praised Lee Ho-jae's past heroics, Hochi's face turned red.

They were fictional stories in the first place, so it was difficult to understand, let alone empathize with.

But people didn't seem to think that way.

They cheered, clapped, and wept.

Hochi was stunned by their reaction as if they had a reunion with a family member they hadn't seen in ten years.

It was a very unfamiliar and embarrassing welcome event.

He accepted the bouquet the kids brought him.

Hochi hurriedly nudged the mantis with his elbow and told it not to eat it, as it brought its face toward the flower.

The mantis muttered with a very unhappy expression.

“I was just trying to smell the flowers.....”

Hochi felt awkward.

He thought the mantis was eating the flowers from the bouquet.

He felt a little sorry for seeing the mantis as only a carnivorous pig.

“Soon, brother... The Head Priest will come. You came so suddenly... haha. Please say something to the believers.”

Said the male priest who stood next to him.

After Hochi arrived at the train station, he went to the denomination with the mantis, ignoring the people holding the signs “The Guide’s Agent, Hochi”.

It was a sudden visit, so it was natural that they were not ready.

There was no particular reason.

There was a member of the pseudo-religion that caused a disturbance in the train car, and Hochi didn’t want to be guided by them to the denomination.

“Great, thank you for the warm welcome. This... Ho-jae will also like it.”

Cheers burst out from the crowd.

Their reaction was good, but Hochi was a little embarrassed.

He was confident that his communication skills were better than Lee Ho-jae’s.

He never expected that the spotlight would be turned on him like this and be asked to say his thoughts and opinions in front of a large audience.

Until recently, Kim Minhyuk had kept them from public meetings as much as possible, and in Japan, Lee Junseok also came forward to speak for him.

So this was his first time speaking in front of a crowd.

And there was no way he could do good at his first speech.

The reason Hochi thought he was good at speaking was simply because he had frequent trivial arguments with Lee Ho-jae, and that Lee Ho-jae, the subject of comparison, had too little to say.

Hochi admitted that he was not good at speaking, and tried to speak as calmly as possible.

“There is one thing that I have always been thinking about since I first came to earth and heard of your existence.”

The male priest whispered next to him and said that it was okay not to speak formally.

He ignored it.

“And it is to repay your trust and support.”

From the point of view of the indigenous religions of the earth, it is very unnatural in itself for God to reward faith.

However, it was not so from the perspective of the believers.

When they believe in religion, most believers think of the benefit.

They can't help but think.

In the first place, it was natural to think that the greatest bait to attract believers to a faith, was to promise something in the future or in the afterlife.

If you believe, you can go to heaven; if you believe, you can be immortal; if you believe, you can be free from anguish; if you believe, you can be free from disease and suffering.

The Believers turn to religion for that.

Some people may not have the same reasons, but most people do.

“Ho-Jae... no... Well, so did the leader Lee Ho-jae.”

Hochi managed to catch himself from saying that Ho-Jae was a good natured-man.

When in fact, Lee Ho-jae didn't care much about the people of this denomination.

He couldn't care less, but he had no choice but to find out about it and send Hochi. However, if he had been a little busier, then he would have ignored it instead.

Hochi didn't like it very much.

No matter how deceived by the pseudo-religion, Hochi thought he should take care of the believers a little more since they are the people who believed in him anyway.

“Your faith has really helped us.”

It wasn't just a feeling of confidence or small happiness that came from the cheering.

Their faith was actually a new way to generate more power for Lee Ho-jae.

Of course, compared to Lee Ho-jae's current level of strength, the amount given was very weak.

“So we decided to give back to you since that helped us so much.”

Most of the people were showing that they did not understand what he was saying.

Anyway, they responded and concentrated, but there seemed to be a question of what he was talking about.

The male priest who was right next to him had been acting annoyed for a while now.

He sighed irritably and rubbed the ground with his feet.

He wasn't saying anything, but it looked like he wanted to say 'Eh-hyo, you can't do that. A person who doesn't even know how cool they are has come.'

Hochi also understood.

But what Hochi was trying to give them now had never been done before.

"From now on, you will be able to check your faith and merit values by score. And you will get a real reward based on that score."

People still didn't seem to understand Hochi's words.

Each system window appeared in front of the confused people.

[Lee Mi Ja]

Age: 54

Status: Lee Ho Jae Faith (tentative name), Class 2 Believer

-Produces 21pt of faith every month.

-Working with all her heart as a cook in the church.

-Cultivating sincerity and is devoted to the denomination.

-Cumulative faith: 47pt

-Cumulative merit: 19pt

-Cumulative integrated score: 66

“What is this?”

The woman who had been absent-minded was frightened when she saw the words that appeared in front of her eyes.

It wasn't just her.

The words appeared in front of everyone in the denomination as well.

And...

[You can get a reward by consuming 66 points.]

[The required compensation is listed.]

[Miracle-Minor Healing: 1,500pt]

[Potion-Minor Healing: 50pt]

[Potion-Fibre Muscle Healing: 130pt]

[We recommend purchasing the lowest level healing potion. The lowest healing potion is excellent for various wounds and muscle disorders. It can greatly alleviate the chronic back pain of Lee Mi-ja. After taking the lowest healing potion, it is recommended to cure back pain through Miracle-Minor Healing.]

Lee Mi-ja, who had been overworked because of her poor circumstances from a young age, had chronic back pain.

The message listed rewards to heal Lee Mi-ja's back pain.

But that wasn't the end of the list of recommendations.

[Miracle List] [Close]

[Miracle-Minor Healing: 1,500pt]

.

.

[Miracle-Advanced Healing: 20,000pt]

[Miracle-Supreme Healing: 400,000pt]

[Miracle-Resurrection: 8,000,000,000pt]

.

[Miracle-Lower Guardian Summon: 100pt]

[Miracle-Reception (3 minutes conversation with God):
70,000pt]

[Miracle-Seance (There is a possibility of failure depending on the personal circumstances of God.): 100,000,000pt]

[Food Reward] [Open]

[Item Reward] [Open]

[Ability Reward] [Close]

[Ability-Stamina 1: 100pt]

[Ability-Strength 1: 100pt]

[Skill Ability-disease resistance: 900pt]

[Skill Ability-Strengthening: 1,200pt]

[Skill Ability- Avoid Accident: 4,000pt]

Some people are confused by the message that appeared before their eyes like Mi-ja, but some people also acted fast...

“I’m healed! The scar... It disappeared.....”

After purchasing and taking the scar removal potion as recommended in the message, the woman cheered when she confirmed that the long scar on her face had been removed, and soon began to weep quietly.

The kid, who was the model for the church’s publicity cover, turned his high merits into delicious snacks.

The child who ignored his mother who was trying to stop him put the candy that appeared out of the air in his mouth and was excited about the sweet taste that he tasted after a long time.

Some people were looking at the rewards of ability.

Some people were quietly pondering over miracles such as advanced healing or resurrection.

“You can get all the rewards shown in the message if you have enough points.”

Hochi, who had been quiet, raised his voice again.

Because his words were imbued with magic, all those who were distracted by the message focused on Hochi’s speech.

“Over time, the rewards will become more diverse. Please trust us more without doubt and work hard for the church. In return, we will reward you everything you desire.”

Religion should be mysterious.

Gods must be ambiguous, and his existence must be questioned.

The belief that humans have in fantasy is more powerful than that of conviction.

Most religions were like that.

But Hochi thought he didn't have to stick to mysticism.

Lee Ho-jae had sufficient abilities as a god, and he did not hesitate to show off those abilities.

He was willing to return the favor in relation to the amount of faith he received from the believers.

In the first place, what Lee Ho-jae wanted from the followers of the Earth was not a huge and deep faith.

Lee Ho-jae wanted his religion to become a popular religion on Earth.

To be the basis for one's own activities.

It was obviously a loss to use the faith he had gained and reward the believers with a real reward using that faith.

But Lee Ho-jae didn't care because he wanted the religion to spread faster.

And there was no need to worry about the deficit because the score was set lower than the faith and merit value that was actually supplied.

It will only be less profitable, but the surplus of faith will remain.

And, in Hochi's opinion, if they ignore some of the characteristics of existing religions, it seems that they can quickly raise the popularity of this religion.

Miracles in the form of rewards.

Who would dare to refuse it?

If you just devote your faith and dedicate yourself, you can attain the miracles you've always dreamed of.

Hochi was convinced that it would not take long for the Lee Ho Jae Faith to push out the Earth's indigenous religions and the emerging religions of the emerging Hundred Gods' Temple and spread them around the world.

There was no need to worry about anything after the believer earns the reward.

Lee Mi-ja, who was quietly looking around, purchased the lowest healing potion shown on the recommended list.

Then opened the lid and quietly drank it.

She could feel the potion going down her throat and down her stomach.

And she could feel the pain from her back disappear and the stiff muscles relax.

Freed from a long enduring pain, Lee Mi-ja saw Hochi smiling at her.

The figure looked like an angel from heaven and like a miracle.

She was overwhelmed with emotion.

[Faith has risen.]

[Produces 33pt of faith every month.]

[Cumulative total score: 16pt]

The list of recommendations recommended to Lee Mija to miraculously cure her back pain later.

But that wasn't the next reward she was hoping for.

She had a son with autism.

He was already thirty, but he had not been able to work properly in society or get along with people.

In the meantime, Lee Mi-ja took care of him with utmost care, but as she got older, she felt her limit approaching.

Lee Mi-ja was always worried about how her son would live in a world that became increasingly difficult and complex after she died.

But if autism could be cured as a reward.....

[Recommended list is updated.]

[Miracle-Intermediate Healing: 10,000pt]

[Autistic disorders classified as functional disorders of understanding, sensory perception, and sensory integration are not treated with simple healing potions. Treatment is possible with a specialized potion, but since it is very expensive and valuable, we recommend treatment through an intermediate healing miracle.]

It was possible.

The message announced that autism could be cured.

She had been looking for a way to fix it for a long time, but just as she completely gave up on her son's disability, a solution appeared.

Although she needed a high score of 10,000 points, Lee Mi-ja decided to dedicate herself to the denomination and get the reward.

[Faith is greatly increased.]

There was an uproar.

People became excited about the miracles they just witnessed and were making a fuss.

Hochi carefully observed the people.

No one clung to him or approached him.

It was unclear whether it was because of the magic that was in effect or if it was because his presence changed in people's perceptions.

However, there was one more feature that people haven't noticed yet.

Everyone was busy with checking their recommended rewards, but they were bound to notice it sooner or later.

It was a feature that would enable one to check the faith scores not only of themselves but also the faith and merit value of others.

Hochi didn't like the way the denomination was operated.

Before he arrived, it was considered okay to classify believers and priests by grade.

But with the appearance of the Faith Window, high faith and merit value will now be a new class determinant.

There may be side effects such as jealousy and supremacy, but on a larger scale, even those side effects benefited religion.

And...

The male priest standing behind Hochi turned around and began to run away.

[Koo Jeong-myeong]

Age: 31

Status: Lee Ho Jae Faith (tentative name), Level 4 priest

-Produces Opt of faith every month.

-Greatly contributes to the high crime rate within the denomination.

-Commits assault, verbal abuse, extortion of money, sexual assault, intimidation, fraud, extortion, and human trafficking among believers.

-It is recommended to punish him as soon as possible or to expel him from the denomination.

-Cumulative integrated score: -4,335pt

That man had probably confirmed that he could check other people's scores.

He didn't even have a list of rewards.

It was the right decision to run away before other believers checked his negative score.

They couldn't see a detailed explanation as much as Hochi, but they could see that score.

Minus four thousand.

Among the believers gathered here, few had an integrated score of 100 points.

But a thousand minus points.

It was easy to see how much harm he had caused to the church.

With this function, people can see who had contributed greatly to the denomination and who was a faithful person.

But what about the parasites of the church?

People will be able to crack down on each other and manage the denomination even if Hochi didn't interfere.

Hochi chased after the male priest who escaped.

He headed towards a huge banquet hall when he ran away.

On the table prepared in the banquet hall, there was a splendid dinner that Hochi had never seen before in Seoul.

Young women gathered on the side of the banquet hall, and the priests who seemed to be gathered in one group were also waiting for him.

-Cumulative integrated score: -853pt

-Cumulative integrated score: -1,135pt

-Cumulative integrated score: -421pt

-Cumulative integrated score: -677pt

-Cumulative integrated score: -2,995pt

-Cumulative integrated score: -188pt

They were pure garbage.

Hochi checked the women in the corner of the banquet hall.

Negative phrases were attached at the end of their status windows.

[I am in despair. I need help.]

[I am hoping for salvation. Hope is fading. I'm on the verge of giving up everything.]

[I am obsessed with strong hatred. We are praying for punishment from heaven on the priests of the Lee Ho Jae Faith.]

[I hope there will be retribution to the priests who have committed sin.]

It was terrible.

He didn't even think about finding out what had happened to them.

The painful feelings, such as fear, shame, and despair on the faces of the women appeared dark enough to be read even without a message.

"Welcome. I've been waiting for you. I am Lim Seong-hyun, who is in charge of the denomination."

A man who had a nice face approached Hochi.

Hochi didn't want to talk to him and ignored his greetings

[Lim Seonghyun]

Age: 57

Status: Lee Ho Jae Faith (tentative name), Level 6 class priest, denomination general affairs manager, a great revelator

-92pts of faith is produced every month.

-Has a high level of faith.

-Established the denomination.

-The first preacher of the church.

-Top manager of the denomination.

-Wrote the doctrine of the denomination himself.

- Is respected by members of the church.
- Considered a divine being to the congregation.
- The axis of the doctrine of the church.
- Greatly contributes to the promotion, administration, and management of the denomination.
- The initiator and chief executive of the denomination's business.
- Embezzling church funds.
- Neglecting criminal activities of priests in the church.
- Is in sync with the criminal acts of priests in the denomination.
- Cumulative faith: 2,043pt
- Cumulative merit value: 30,053pt
- Cumulative integrated score: 32,096pt

It was an overwhelming score.

Hochi felt embarrassed at that moment.

He even had faith.

He was a religious person worthy of praise even if he neglected and sympathized with the crimes of the priests.

But that was not the case.

He has contributed so much to the denomination and made himself a divine being only to arouse the faith of the church members.

In essence, he was a pseudo-scammer through and through.

‘Still... His score is too high.’

This was higher than the scores of hundreds of other believers combined.

If faith scores became the basis for one’s contributions to the denomination and if one of the highest scorers, the man named Lim Seong-hyun disappears, then it will be possible that the denomination will suffer major damages.

Hochi was worried.

A plan to cover up this matter appropriately, to forgive and rehabilitate that man, and to leave him to continue serving the denomination had to be made.

However, the women in the corner of the banquet hall were hoping for punishment.

They were hoping more strongly for those priests to be punished than to be saved from their current situation.

And the target priests included a man named Lim Seong-hyun.

But they didn’t have the points needed to acquire the miracle.

After all, they had absolutely no faith to begin with.

It would have been strange if they still had faith in religion left if one considered their circumstances.

On the contrary, that man had a high official merit and score.

Despite his evil deeds, he had that score.

It was certain that he would continue to help the denomination.

‘I heard you have performed an amazing miracle. I can see the rewards I can get. Hahaha. Please sit here. We have prepared a lot of food for you.”

Hochi was worried.

But he decided at that moment,

“I can’t do this.”

Hochi knew that Lee Ho-jae was not bound by good or evil.

That he prioritizes efficiency over morals.

However, Hochi wanted to punish them even after taking into account Lee Ho-jae’s disposition and his role.

Hochi brought out the strongest, most cruel punishment method ever given to him.

He called to summon Lee Ho-jae.

[Call]

Hochi kept thinking while calling Lee Ho-jae.

Is this really the right decision?

Hochi decided that he had to punish him, and he wanted to do it.

He wasn’t sure what Lee Ho-jae would think of his judgment.

Soon, a noise as if an iron plate was being torn was heard, and the space split.

Lee Ho-jae appeared through the space and said with a smile,

“That’s the right call.”

Translator's Notes:

Janggu and bok – Janggu is a Korean hourglass-shaped drum, while the bok is a barrel-shaped drum, similar to a Japanese taiko.)

Chapter 337

Hongcheon (4)

“That’s the right call.”

Hochi had to think again about what was so satisfying with seeing Lee Ho-jae appear with a wide grin.

He wondered if he made the wrong judgment instead.

He questioned whether calling Lee Ho-jae was too harsh of a punishment for the priests.

Even in the eyes of his family, Lee Ho-jae, who appeared through a tear in space, looked like a demon.

‘Maybe I should have just punished them myself.’

Obviously, from the point of view of the priests, it would have been better for Hochi to give the punishment himself.

However, Hochi took the crimes of the priests very seriously, and he brought up the highest punishment method allowed to him.

“Well done. You did better than I thought. So much more.”

As soon as he appeared through the space, Lee Ho-jae quickly grasped what had happened in the denomination, and started by praising Hochi.

“...really?”

“Of course.”

When I praised Hochi, he looked around.

I could see his face had reddened a bit.

He looks quite happy and embarrassed.

In the past, I used to get irritated when he did that.

Of course, I still feel a little awkward, but I was more satisfied with the fact that Hochi was happy.

“Hello, Lee Hojae. I’m in charge of the denomination, my name is Lim Seong... Heuk..... Ukh.....”

“Yes, shut up.”

I was talking in a good mood, but some garbage interrupted me without notice.

If you’re trash, you should be aware of it.

“You did really well.”

I praised Hochi again.

I wasn’t just saying it.

I wasn’t just praising him because I wanted Hochi to show more enthusiasm to the management.

Hochi did really well.

Religion is a relationship of exchanges made up of false advertising and hype.

The believers wanted a gift, but the gods didn’t have to give a good product, so they only sold an empty box wrapped in luxurious wrapping paper.

But who would refuse the opportunity to get a real gift?

Hochi's idea was a great sales strategy that would catch the attention of countless consumers at once in a world full of people thirsty for salvation and desire more than ever.

It was a market that was overly saturated

Although I didn't want any of those shares to begin with.

"That's a relief. I thought you might not like it."

No way.

Hochi did so well.

And I would have still praised him even if Hochi had blown up everyone on Earth.

"Then, what about those?"

Hochi asked, looking at the priests gathered on the side of the banquet hall.

There was Lim Seong-hyun, who fell on the floor and was groaning, and the priests who surrounded him.

Why is that guy overreacting like that?

I only blocked his ability to speak, but he is struggling as if he had a mortal disease.

Oh, was it a big shock that he didn't have a voice?

He's a scammer after all.

If a man who lives with his tongue cannot speak, he will starve.

I understood what Hochi meant by asking me.

I guess the pseudo-religion's inner workings were bothering him.

"Your judgment is correct."

I saw the women huddled in the corner.

It was reminiscent of a group of mackerel that united and protected each other.

It wasn't intentional, but anyway, they were harmed under my name.

I felt uncomfortable.

"Seong-hyun, stop groaning and come here."

Lim Seong-hyun, who was struggling in a frenzy, began to crawl at my word.

It was a desperate struggle.

I didn't mean to make him crawl.

But it looks like his knees aren't working well.

"Pl, please save me."

As soon as Lim Seong-hyun opened his mouth, he immediately begged for his life.

It must have been quite a shock that his mouth was blocked.

Or did he notice that I was going to kill him myself?

"Seung-hyun."

“Yes, yes. I was stupid. I should have cracked down on more people. I shouldn’t have let those old men run free. I should’ve rebuked them using my influence..... I.....”

He was lying as soon as he opened his mouth.

Just looking at the priests who were shocked and struggling with betrayal over there, I could easily tell that Lim Seong-hyun’s words were false.

“Seung-hyun, your mom told you not to lie or beg for food before she died.”

Lim Seong-hyun continued to act as a scammer, ignoring even the words of his parents who had been upset all their lives because of him.

He was a very neat piece of trash with no room for rehabilitation.

“That..... that’s..... how.....”

How did I find out about it?

“I, I will be useful, Lee Ho-jae! I am managing the denomination alone! I’m doing it all alone! Well, those bastards are just multilevel cheaters! Without me, the denomination wouldn’t work! I’m definitely useful! Yes! If you let me live, I will rebuild and I.....”

What a fool.

Is it because he’s a scammer?

The force that was now being poured out on Lim Seong-hyun is not the type of pressure that humans can just endure.

Under ordinary circumstances, humans would usually submit and be overwhelmed with the power I am pouring out, but this guy is trying to scam his way out to the end.

“You can’t do this. I founded this denomination! I pulled people together! I built this! With my own hands!”

Now he even raised his voice.

At this point, it’s funny.

“Please…… Please give me one more chance. Just one more…”

“Seong-hyun.”

“Yes, yes. Please tell me what you need.”

“Who am I?”

Lim Seong-hyun, who kept on talking, paused.

I asked again, slowly this time.

“Tell me, who am I?”

“…You are Lee Ho-jae.”

“And…?”

Tearing space and appearing out of thin air.

Manipulating a person’s body and will with a single word.

Reading other people’s thoughts at will.

Worshipped by the members of your new church.

What am I to you, giving you unbearable fear, regret, despair, and hope?

“…God.”

“Then you were aware. I thought you didn’t even know that.”

The one who volunteered to become the head of my denomination.

If he didn’t know that much, then he shouldn’t lead this denomination, right?

Lim Seong-hyun began to froth at the mouth.

It was natural because he desperately tried to speak even when his lungs were being crushed under pressure.

He was killing himself somehow to survive.

“I..... I’m guilty of death. Really..... I.....”

Now that he had reached his limit, Lim Seong-hyun’s voice began to falter.

“Yes, you sinned.”

How dare you pretend under my name.

You made yourself equal to me and were worshiped by the believers.

You used that position to hurt others and did it under my name.

“Then you should be punished.”

“Ye..... Yes, I’ll accept any punishment.....”

Lim Seong-hyun said while gasping for breath.

Yes, saying that makes my heart lighter.

Although it was already light to begin with.

“Eat.”

At my command, Lim Seong-hyun's shadow began to cover his body.

At the end of the shadow split into several branches, a toothed mouth appeared, and began to eat Lim Seong-hyun.

Lim Seong-hyun, who had already reached his limit, could not even scream while being eaten alive.

Only the sound of his bones breaking and the sound of breaking flesh and muscles rang silently.

“Please.....”

Even in his last moments, Lim Seong-hyun tried to beg in a faint voice.

I don't know why all these guys say the same thing before they die.

* * *

“Should you have killed him? Of course, you would kill him.”

Hochi asked me after I killed Lim Seonghyun and sent the women in the banquet hall outside.

Rather than presenting disagreements of my judgment in front of others, it seems that he waited for everyone to leave the hall.

I was pleased.

I thought he would never really grow up.

He had grown really fast since he came out to this world.

“Of course I would kill him. The faith he was holding is a waste. It's all supposed to be mine.”

Although it hasn't been that long.

It was, however, the best outcome that could come out of Earth at this point.

I don't think it's a bad ending for Lim Seong-hyun himself.

Since he became part of the god he wished to be.

“Then what about them?”

Hochi asked, pointing to the priests who were quietly huddled together.

When I looked their way, one of the priests prayed with both hands together.

“Please save me. Please don't kill me.....”

When one of them started to pray, the rest of them followed.

They were saying the same thing

They wanted to be my priest.

“Of course I have to save you. Huh? Did you know how much damage you fucking bastards did to me? It's just scores, but you won't die until you pay back all those minuses.”

I am not just saying it, but if they died suddenly, I was willing to revive them.

Not to resurrect or resuscitate, but as undead monsters such as zombies or skeletons.

You might wonder where I would use them, but those things are surprisingly useful.

“Now, be quiet and listen carefully.”

The priests who were trembling calmed down.

There are two promises they must keep in order to become my priest and not food.

“First, don’t tarnish my name.”

This is really important.

Sell my name and I will be able to pretend to be king on Earth.

It wasn’t like a fox with a tiger’s prestige, but a rat on top of a dragon’s head.

It’s none of my business that my priests eat well and live well.

I just can’t get past them smearing my name for self-interest.

“If you tarnish my name, you will become like the one who was eaten earlier. It’s better not to think that I won’t catch you or will just let it pass.”

If they do, they will be eaten like Lim Seong-Hyun, and their souls will be trapped in my stomach and suffer forever.

The second rule is also important.

“From now on, you can’t be beaten anywhere else.”

It was natural that you shouldn’t be beaten anywhere as a priest.

“Excuse me.....”

“Uh, what.”

“By any chance, what is happening?”

“I’ll make it so that you never get hit again.”

“.....”

As a last resort, I cast curse magic on the priests one by one.

It was a curse where the stigma was engraved on the back of the neck, and from time to time, intense pain will be felt in the area where the stigma was located.

The way to get rid of the curse is to achieve the set goal.

Otherwise, it was a curse that caused a shock from the pain that was directly transmitted to the brain through the back of the neck.

The pain that could lead to death drives a man to the limit of his existence itself.

All desires will be lost, and miscellaneous thoughts will go.

Soon, they will neglect survival and forget even suicide, and try their best to avoid suffering even momentarily

It was a curse I developed a long time ago to whip Hochi who did not want to become strong.

Even that Hochi had tried desperately until he grew enough to break the curse on his own.

Since then, our relationship has been completely different.

Anyway, it had an extremely powerful effect.

“Well, it would be safe to cast that one.”

Hochi said.

As long as all actions are rated as a result of faith and public value, they will not do anything but make their negative scores positive.

“Now. You’ve come this far, but would you like to see the congregation?”

Hochi asked.

I shook my head.

“No, I left the challengers on the 60th floor, I have to go.”

Above all, Hochi was doing so well that I had no need to interfere.

“And I don’t think I have to come out for nothing. You’re doing really well. Please continue what you’re doing.”

“Really?”

Hochi asked back with a childlike smile as usual.

I also smiled and nodded again.

Smiling, I opened the passage and returned to the 60th floor.

Chapter 338

Seoul (22)

“That’s too bad.”

The mantis, who was quietly eating food, muttered during the uproar.

Hochi had no choice but to ask it a question.

Was there anything regrettable about the current situation?

“What do you mean?”

“I could have eaten him.”

Hochi had to think about it for a while before he realized that what the mantis said was about Lim Seong-hyun who was eaten by Lee Ho-jae.

“Come on, you’ll get a stomachache.”

The reason Lim Seong-hyun was eaten is simple.

He gained faith by selling Lee Ho-jae’s name.

And the amount of faith he accumulated was quite large.

Regardless of the severity of the sin, Lim Seong-hyun was destined to be eaten when he met Lee Ho-jae.

And Lee Ho-jae is not someone who would hesitate to eat his own kind.

Lee Ho-jae wasn’t the type to get entangled in negative relationships in any way.

Hochi, an experienced man, knew better than anyone.

“Let’s get out of here.”

The believers were still waiting for him even though Hochi had nothing more for them.

But he still had to strengthen and build trust with the members who were still confused and anxious.

It was for the religion, not for them.

“Can’t I just wait here?”

The mantis who was eating rice puffed its mouth.

“No.”

The mantis also had work to do here.

It was able to change appearance freely.

It can play the role of the church’s mascot, or it can blend in among the congregation and get a glimpse of their atmosphere.

It was useful in many ways.

“I told you that if you work hard, you will be free again later.”

“I don’t want to. I want to live with my master forever.”

Here, the master meant Yong-Yong.

Hochi thought seriously.

Shouldn’t we force that insect away from Yong-yong?

There was only one reason why the mantis liked Yongyong, calling him it's master.

It's because he gave it food.

Food that was nutritious enough to be incomparable to that of humans.

After giving it some thought, Hochi decided to leave it to Yong-yong.

Hochi thought he would do well on his own.

* * *

“...you want me to go too?”

Again, she spoke informally.

As soon as Park Jung-ah heard me, her mood changed.

“Yeah.”

Park Jung-ah's eyes sparkled even more sharply at my answer.

Wow, isn't that a skill at that point?

I asked Park Jung-ah to go to the new tutorial I made with the other challengers.

The challengers were a valuable resource.

Over the past decades, Gods have mined the power of the source from Earth.

As a result, the planet's sources are almost exhausted.

Once the earth's sources run out, the earth will slowly begin to fall.

Environmental deterioration and resource depletion.

The earth has already been ill with environmental pollution caused by technological advances.

I'm not even sure how long it could last.

Kirikiri said that the source also affects the development and creation of planetary civilization.

Considering that, it would be wise to move the Earthlings to another planet as soon as possible.

I haven't decided whether it would be a blank space in the Tutorial stage or another dimension connected by a dimensional gate, but it was true that a lot of work was required in the process.

And those challengers will be in charge of that effort.

Challengers were essential since I couldn't do everything by myself.

And in order for them to be of use, that much training was also necessary.

"I... To be honest, I don't want to manage people and do anything like that anymore."

Park Jung-ah said.

Of course, I was trying to send her with the challengers because she could be trusted, and also because she had a long history of leading and managing people.

"To be more honest, I just want to go back to Earth and rest. Can't you just leave me out of it?"

"No."

Park Jung-ah's face fell.

My words would sound disappointing enough at her who lost interest in vigilante work and was just waiting to come out.

“Can you explain why?”

Of course I could explain.

“You need training too.”

Although there was no difference in strength between Park Jung-ah and me in the past.

I flew too hard now.

Park Jung-ah was a challenger of easy difficulty, and she didn't even try to develop strength unless it was for self-defense.

Compared to that, I...

“Honestly, it's difficult to control your strength.”

Really.

It's not that I'm just giving her a hug and doing nothing since it's been a while.

If you move hastily, you may have a terrible accident.

“It's okay to give a little hug or hold hands like now. But we... we can really only hold hands if we were to sleep.”

“...I will go.”

Park Jung-ah put her hand on her forehead and replied with a long sigh.

Actually, she said this was a problem she was expecting to some extent.

Perhaps that is why she gave up quickly.

So, the challengers, including Park Jung-ah, were moved to the tutorial.

Just before the move, Lee Yeon-hee gave a nasty smile to Park Jung-ah from behind my back, but she didn't go any further.

The new tutorial the challengers were moved to was inside Yongyong's Tower.

It was so spacious that it was enough to use some of it as a training place.

Yong-yong decided to take care of the training process and the challengers.

Yong-Yong completed my education from start to finish, and since he is such a sweet child, I thought he would be suitable for tutorial management.

Yong-yong liked it because he thought it would be fun.

Yong-yong will probably do it better than me.

* * *

Time passed quickly.

Looking back now, the days on the 60th floor have passed really slowly.

Hochi, who had never done anything ambitious in his life, felt that the days of managing the church were really flying by.

The church was quickly normalized.

Even Hochi himself was surprised.

People were more careful of their actions.

Public value was a really comprehensive concept.

People who knew about their behavior, the atmosphere within the church, and rumors were also affected, always tried to say good words and do good things.

He wondered if it would be a little hypocritical atmosphere.

As the church was founded by a group of pseudo scammers, Hochi thought that such an atmosphere was also needed for a while.

Contrary to Lee Ho-jae's wishes, the priests who were former scammers were no longer available.

What Lee Ho-jae overlooked was the fundamental difference between Hochi and the priests.

Hochi was able to endure the pain from the curse stigma behind his neck and grew.

However, the priests could not bear the pain.

They just struggled and died.

But they didn't really die.

The power contained in the curse will automatically heal when the subject suffers serious damage.

Because of the healing, their senses were always clear and even their minds remained intact.

Eventually, the priests were suffering endless pain without dying or losing their senses.

While slowly paying off their negative public value.

Their presence was a warning to the people of the church.

You can end up just like them, so don't act rashly.

As a result of their suffering, they were earning the church's merit value little by little and canceling their negative scores.

It was expected that within half a year all the priests would be free from suffering.

Of course, even if you were free from pain, there was a high possibility of going crazy or becoming crippled.

Hochi would not worry about that until after the punishment of the criminals.

As all the priests who were in charge of management were out of power, Hochi couldn't leave the church and was forced to sit tight.

No matter how much time passed, it was natural that the work he had to do would increase rather than decrease.

The church was expanding rapidly.

Apparently, Hochi's method was peculiar.

Instead of a mystical and great god, it made people believe in a clearly visible reward.

Maybe the believers worship Hochi's rewards more than Lee Ho-jae.

But as a result, they came to worship Lee Ho-jae, the owner of the reward.

In order to reward him, he began to suggest to himself to increase his faith.

In fact, the faith of believers compiled through the faith window was increasing explosively.

It was not only the faith, but also the merit value of the church.

Whenever they had time, they visited hospitals or nursing homes, gathered people, presented potions obtained as rewards to patients, and advertised the church.

Although using rewards for others could have been considered a loss.

That action resulted in more public value.

Each time, dozens or hundreds of new members were created.

In fact, the easiest way to get public value was to buy them with money.

The believers who had the money to spare from their own assets, gave a large donation to the church and established denomination branches across the country.

Thus, the church spread rapidly throughout the country.

“We need more publicity.”

“But there are no places in the country that have not already been disseminated with church leaflets. There are limitations in general promotion.”

It was safe to assume that there was no place in Korea where church leaflets were not spread because of the believers who competitively spread leaflets even if no one told them to.

Probably, the whole nation at least once received a leaflet from the church or saw a leaflet that fell on the street.

“In fact, with this level of publicity, more people should have turned to the church. But I think that’s not the case because of our church’s bad image.”

People were active in the meeting.

They have no choice but to be.

Just giving a good opinion at a meeting increases your merit value.

Everyone wanted to attend this conference.

If they couldn't participate, they even asked the other participant to give their opinion on their behalf.

Hochi felt satisfied and proud.

The idea he came up with was great.

'Am I a genius or what?'

Hochi, sitting at the head of the conference hall, was happy with such thoughts.

"I think it's time to change people's perceptions about us rather than letting more people know about our faith."

The meeting ended with a goal to change the public perception of the Lee Ho Jae Faith, who had a negative image of pseudo, scamming, and multi-level marketing.

* * *

Recently, similar comments were also seen on the web.

-Believe in the Lee Ho-Jae Faith!

-Believe in the Lee Ho-Jae Faith!

-Weight loss pills, hair growth pills, height growth pills, panacea, you can have anything you want! http://www.leehojaeeeee.com/mainpage/hj11111... ..

No matter what news comment window you see, the best comment that always received the most recommendations were comments about the Lee Ho Jae Faith.

It was a systematic comment work by the members of Lee Ho Jae Faith, who learned that even if they constantly commented, the public value was gradually rising.

Of course, there were many people who didn't like those comments.

In fact, there were far more people who looked down on it than those who didn't.

☐ Those Ho-Jae bastards are here too.

☐ I don't want to see them, really.

☐ Wherever you go, those guys are everywhere. I just have to ban all IPs.

☐ Do not go on the link to their address by any chance. It will catch the LAN line virus.

Days later, a briefing session was held on the dimension gate under the joint leadership of Kim Minhyuk and the Korean government. Its purpose was for Kim Minhyuk to explain exactly what a dimension gate was.

It was an event to inform the public about the expeditions between dimensions that will be possible in the future due to the dimension gate and the enormous benefits that the expedition will bring.

High-ranking officials of the Korean government as well as foreign governments sent agents to express their interest.

A large number of high-ranking Awakened were also invited.

The event was broadcast live on TV and on the Internet.

It was supposed to be known only as an article, but it was due to the Korean government's insistence that they should inform more people about the Dimension Gate and deliver hopeful stories to the people quickly.

Recently, the issues related to the Awakened were treated like entertainment, so it was not that awkward.

In an unusual move, Lee Ho-jae also participated in the event and showed up.

Kim Minhyuk was in charge of all the explanations, but just having his face on the TV screen was significant.

“It’s still annoying.”

It’s still annoying to be bothered like this.

Lee Ho-jae frowned while breathing the air inside the cloudy event hall.

“You should come and see us. This is also important. Do you know how much the church is looking forward to this?”

Hochi carefully persuaded Lee Ho-jae.

In fact, the biggest reason Lee Ho-jae attended the presentation today was because Hochi asked him to.

Lee Ho-jae couldn’t refuse Hochi’s request, who was really passionate about the church work.

Originally, the appearance of a god on TV itself would degrade the mystery and damage the authority.

On TV, Lee Ho-jae will look just like a normal human being.

However, thanks to the way Hochi operated the church, there was no need to adhere to mysticism anymore.

People will probably pray and devote their faith to Lee Ho-jae even if he appears on comedy programs.

“Hey, look over there. All those holding up placards are our members.”

The general public was also invited to the presentation.

Since Hochi also asked Kim Min-hyun to invite them, the general public audience present were all members of the Lee Ho Jae Faith.

“Ahhhhhhh!”

“Ho-jae looked here!”

“Lee Ho-jae! Lee Ho-jae! Lee Ho-jae!”

It was a mess.

The people who were preparing for the event looked back in surprise at the screams and shouts from the crowd.

Even the invitees who were entering the room glanced at them, wondering what was going on.

Lee Ho Jae naturally turned his back as if he had never heard the uproar.

He called Hochi.

“Hey.”

“Hmm?”

“It’s embarrassing, so please tell them not to do that.”

Chapter 339

Seoul (23)

“Why? They came for you.”

“It’s still embarrassing.”

I don’t know if this is a concert hall or a church.

Why are you doing that at a serious briefing session?

“Are you embarrassed?”

“Where is the mantis?”

I changed the subject.

Once you give Hochi something to play with, he’ll be doing it for days and days.

“In the church. It was more popular than I thought.”

It’s good.

The mantis had already mixed in with the people.

Of course, it won’t be very good at dealing with people.

However, its lack of social skills can be filled with excellent abilities.

Considering that the awakened who gather believers can become gods, it is a more standard route.

“It’s perfect to use as a denomination mascot.”

It had enough power and suspense to become a symbolic being.

When I used a frog as a mascot on the stage when making a sect.....

Well.....

I made a mistake in thinking.

I wasn't going to think of it here.

“Hahaha, nice to meet you.”

There was a person with a Korean textbook accent who interrupted the awkward air just in time.

It was a voice trying to forcefully show off its superiority, but I heard a slight tremor at the end of each word.

“Oh, yes.”

He suddenly reached out his hand, so I reached out and shook his hand.

He was a very old man.

A hearty one.

To the point where the term ‘honorable old man’ is appropriate.

The man shakes hands with one hand, tapping my arm lightly with his left hand.

And pop, I heard a sound.

The flash went off and a picture was taken.

When I looked at the man again, I could see the flowing sweat on his open forehead.

The human body, swamped with excessive excitement and anxiety, releases sweat to maintain body temperature and relieve tension.

“...Hahaha.....”

The meaning of what just happened was obvious.

Shaking hands and striking the arm with the other hand is a gesture of an upper person encouraging a lower person.

Promoting such an appearance and taking a picture at the right time.

And to promote to the public with the photo.

That's probably the purpose of this old man.

“I'm sorry, that wasn't bad by any chance, was it?”

There was still a light of fear in the eyes of the man who spoke in a friendly manner.

Oh my God, I can't believe I shook hands like this.

Who do you think I am?

Apart from that, the man felt bold.

Fear is a realm that belongs to nature, not reason.

It wasn't easy to suppress that and compose a photograph to use for promotional purposes.

“Cute!”

Yong-Yong's face popped out from behind the trembling man's back.

Yong-Yong, who was looking around, seems to hang on the man's back.

“Ahaha, it’s cute!”

“Uh, what... What!”

The man was embarrassed when something hung behind his back and tried to turn away.

Yong-Yong didn’t even care and climbed over his shoulders.

“Cute! Cute!”

Yong-Yong exclaimed, hitting the man’s wide forehead with a thud.

I understand.

How funny does that man look in Yong-Yong’s eyes?

It’s just ridiculous to me.

He was ignorant of the knowledge of the earth, such as courtesy, social status, and respect according to age.

Instead, what would this situation look like to Yong-Yong, who only sees its essence?

I wanted to be in Yong-Yong’s position.

The man who was in trouble with his blushing face soon began to laugh.

He looked at Yong-Yong and thought of his cute grandson, and he was happy to see Yong-Yong hanging onto him.

Yong-Yong’s consideration seems to free him out of pressure.

“Hey.”

I said, tapping Hochi’s shoulder.

“What?”

“You, your strength is overflowing again.”

“Huh? Is that so?”

This half penny guy.

I have to catch him and train him some time.

Hochi still has no power control.

As usual, it was more so when he was with me.

He was mistaken.

When I and an ordinary human are in the same space, Hochi becomes unable to recognize human power and his own power ends up leaking out.

Still, though, he has become much better than when he first came out.

It was a level that could still feel overwhelming to the general public, but not to the Awakened.

It's been like that for a long time.

Anyway, if you are an Awakened, you can manage to withstand it.

If you are not with me, the general public will just become nervous without even knowing it, and it will stop at the level where the presence becomes clear.

The photographer who came with the man pressed the shutter of the camera towards the man and Yong-Yong playing around.

Are you going to use that as publicity?

I was thinking about sanctioning him, but Kim Min-hyuk came over.

“Hey, who is that?”

“...It’s the President.”

Kim Minhyuk, who told me by whispering, approached the man.

President?

What should I do?

Kim Min-hyuk talked politely to the president.

In the news, Kim Min-hyuk seemed to be treated as a public figure by the government.

They seemed to have met and talked a few times.

Then it turned out that there were people who seemed to be attendants and bodyguards camped out a little further away.

There are also a few Awakened.

I didn’t notice at all.

But does that mean anything?

* * *

Kim Ui-seok entered the break room and pulled his tie.

“Hoo.”

He exhaled heavily, but his lungs still felt tight.

The tension didn’t go away.

“Are you okay?”

After waving his hand at the aide who asked about his condition, he slowly drank the prepared cold water.

Even this country’s president couldn’t withstand it.

In the past, the president was the highest and most honorable of all.

He had that much power.

But he didn’t these days.

These days when the operation of the state itself has become in jeopardy, the president has become a job that is shunned.

He bowed his head frequently to others rather than talked down to them.

There were more days spent in front of his desk at night than laughing and spending time drinking wine.

There were several accidents a day he could not handle, and he had to bear the full responsibility for it.

‘What did I do so wrong? Did I sell my country in my past life?’

He sometimes thought so.

President Kim Ui-seok had a hard and difficult daily life.

It was like that today.

The Dimensional Gate’s briefing session will be the starting point for completely handing over the leadership of Korea to the guild.

From the government’s point of view, the installation and management of dimensional gates led by the guild should not have been done.

But what if there was no way to stop it?

However, the lawmakers who opened their mouths condemned his judgment.

So instead of sanctioning the guild, Kim Eui-seok decided to put out a spoon for them.

The government would be stuck in the guild and become parasitic, but in reality, the guild had more power than the government.

It was the government that ran the state, but there was a huge difference in practical force.

Years ago, when guilds were established in Korea and left to settle, the power game between the government and the guild was already over.

Even the Association of Awakened, which was an independent armed group, was absorbed into the guild.

Now, even if Kim Minhyuk entered the Blue House* and sat in the presidential seat, there was no way to stop it.

Their superpowers made it possible.

In fact, there are some countries where dictatorship by the Awakened people is taking place.

What happened today was a show to get a little breathing room in such a situation.

It was the photo showing his initiative by gently shaking hands and taking advantage of him as an elderly person.

That was all Kim Ui-seok could do.

“Your Excellency... Are you really okay?”

The aide asked again.

His hands were swollen.

The awakened Lee Ho-jae just pretended to hold his hand.

But Kim Minhyuk didn't.

He didn't let go during the conversation, squeezing his hand.

Kim Minhyuk used his own strength.

It was a warning.

Don't waste your time with Lee Ho-jae.

This has never happened before while facing Kim Min-hyuk

Probably so.

After some time, the bruises were coming up black and blue.

Along with the stiff pain.

When he reached out to his aide, he applied the medicine to his hand.

Kim Eui-seok was sad about his situation.

He tried to suppress his sorrow, quietly gave his hand over, and remained silent.

The aide was also moved to tears seeing the emotions rising and he cleared his throat.

His most reliable man.

He was an old friend.

The memories of the day he promised to become president when they hit the soju glass and burned it together are still good.

The conclusion was drawing such a shabby ending for them.

“Sir, the photos taken were posted as breaking news in the press.”

“...Did it go well?”

“Yes. The composition came out really beautifully. It’s good news to the media.”

The attendant explained whether he noticed the gloomy atmosphere, and explained the progress in a brighter voice than usual.

But it was a relief.

At the very least, the people will think that the world is leading a remarkable event, such as the establishment of a dimension gate, where the state and the guild are on an equal footing.

It was a relief too.

It was a relief, as Kim Eui-seok kept repeating when he was alone.

[You have obtained a large amount of merit value.]

[You have obtained a merit value of 12,200pt.]

[Acquired the title ‘The Church’s Most Contributor’.]

[Additional points of 2,000pt were obtained due to the title.]

[Acquired the title ‘Most Contributor of the Month’.]

[You have acquired 500pt of additional points due to the title.]

[Acquired the title ‘People who may be the political supporter of the church.’]

[Additional score of 200pt was acquired due to the title.]

[It greatly changed the perception of the church.]

[The public perception of the church will change from ‘multi-level pseudo- church’ to ‘multi-level pseudo-church that also shakes hands with the head of state’.]

[Because you are not a believer, you cannot use the points obtained through the church’s merit value.]

[In order to use points to obtain rewards, you must become an official member of the church.]

[The nearest branch of the church is located in 224, Iseong-ro, Gangnam-gu, Seoul...]

Kim Eui-seok was so surprised that he had to stand still for a while.

He heard this message appear in front of the Awakened people in the Tutorial.

He didn’t know that would also happen to him.

After trying to understand the situation for a while, he was able to recognize what “church” the message was referring to.

“Your Excellency?”

“...Assistant Kim.”

“Yes, what’s wrong?”

“How much do you know about the Lee Ho Jae Faith?”

* * *

“Where is Hochi?”

“Well, I wonder if he went to the church members.”

Is that so?

Hochi that naughty kid.

He told me to come.

I don't know where he went after throwing me away.

Yong-Yong, who was sitting on my lap, yawned.

Waiting for the briefing session to begin seems boring.

By the way, why is my son's yawning so pleasing to hear?

"Okay, before the briefing session! There will be a congratulatory performance from the girl group, Unnamed!"

The voice of the moderator ringing over the microphone rang in the presentation hall.

I was kind of puzzled.

"What is the big celebration?"

What is the relationship between the Dimension Gate and the girl group?

The Gate's briefing session is an event that the world is paying attention to.

There's no need to refresh the atmosphere, and everyone who is invited to this place or who will be watching TV will focus on the explanation.

"Hochi asked me to do it."

"Hochi?"

Hochi, why are there so many orders?

It was Hochi who asked me to attend.

It was Hochi who invited the congregation to the event.

It was also Hochi who told me to keep Yong-Yong on my lap.

“Where is this guy?”

I tried to find Hochi’s energy, but I felt a fake energy in all directions.

Although Hochi may not know anything else, he’s really good at hiding.

I used to train Hochi, but I still find it hard to find him.

You can’t completely hide from me.

Instead, Hochi artificially spreads his energy and escapes from my gaze.

If this guy is determined to hide, it’ll take some time to find out where he is.

“I’m a little nervous about this.”

I couldn’t figure out what kind of nonsense Hochi was doing.

Translator’s Notes:

Blue House – is the Korean President’s executive office and official residence.*

Chapter 340

Seoul (24)

“There are no rules?”

“Yes.”

In response to the aide’s answer, Kim Eui-seok felt embarrassed.

“You don’t have to pray, keep any religious items, or pay contributions like tithing either.”

“...Then how does this hold up as a religion?”

It was Kim’s honest feelings.

The most essential thing to religion is the god who is idolized and the people who idolize it.

But for that, practical rules were needed to bind people; thereby making themselves feel subordinated to God.

And...

“Why is there no compulsory donation? How is the church running?”

“It is said that it runs from the voluntary donations to the church.”

‘What nonsense is that... ’

Of course, there are religious people who donate money.

They are enthusiastic believers who pour out their personal savings for all kinds of religions and make donations.

But running a denomination on that alone?

If the Lee Ho-jae Faith was a small religious group buried in a rural corner, it would have made sense.

However, the Lee Ho-jae Faith was a large-scale denomination that had recently expanded its status nationwide.

Can the operation of such a denomination be supported by only donations?

“That... It is said that the donations collected are substantial. Sir, first you need to know, there is a unique system of faith and merit value in the Lee Ho-jae Faith.”

Kim Eui-seok listened to the aide's explanation for a while.

It wasn't a difficult story to understand in general, but it was difficult to understand with Kim's way of thinking.

Religion usually promises miracles, and in return, forces believers to believe.

However, the Lee Ho-jae Faith was at the level of bringing miracles to the believers.

Who wouldn't pay attention to such a thing?

It was also understood why the church operated solely on donations.

Probably, the level of donations overflowed to the extent of being difficult to handle.

Who in this world was not desperate for something?

After all, everyone wishes for a miracle.

“About those miracles... Did you find out what it was?”

“Yes, I did... In fact, there was a member of the church among my staff. It was thanks to him that I was able to get a list of miracles. Here you are.”

Kim Eui-seok received the file handed over by Assistant Kim,

“Thank you for preparing this right away. Yes, I’ll talk to a friend of that congregation, so get ready.”

Then, he opened the document file.

A list of miracles was written on more than a few documents.

Reading those miracles, Kim Eui-seok began to feel dizzy.

[Potion-Lowest Healing: 50pt]

-Although it is the lowest level, it is known to show excellent effects on wound healing.

It was the potion the Awakened used the most in the Tutorial.

Not long ago, this potion was the ultimate goal of the prototype that the scientists were furiously researching in the United States.

[Potion-Low Level Disease Healing: 400pt]

-Similarly, it is a low-grade potion but is known to have a better performance than the basic potion.

According to the testimony of the Awakened, this could be used to cure early-stage cancer without any side-effects.

...

“Then all hospitals would be closed...”

It was a ridiculous reward.

Meanwhile, according to the data, the Intermediate Potion and Healing Miracles could be used to cure most of the incurable diseases on Earth.

There was no sense of what would be possible at the higher grades.

And beyond the healing aspect...

[Miracle-Intermediate Shield Generation: 4000pt] (lasts for 600 minutes.)

[Miracle-Summon the Supreme Guardian: 50000000pt] (may fail depending on the circumstances of the guardian.)

[Food-Cheese pork cutlet set: 2pt]

[Food-Rice 2kg: 1pt]

There was really nothing special.

Kim Eui-seok focused on the food items next.

If that was really possible, then they could get around the food shortage somewhat.

[Miracle-Revival: 100000000pt]

[Miracle-Resurrection: 8000000000pt]

“...Is he really a god?”

If not, then the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple must be backing him.

Otherwise, these miracles couldn't be explained.

-Miracles that require more than a million points are likely to be false products.

Kim Eui-seok was of the opinion that the Awakened Lee Ho-jae was using the potions he obtained as a reward for clearing the Tutorial to scam people.

However, assistant Kim's further explanation also made sense.

Low scores can only be used to claim potions and other small items, and no one had high enough points to be able to claim the high-tier rewards.

There aren't many people who can achieve that score anyway, so it won't be a problem.

'But... '

[Kim Eui-seok]

Age: 72

Status: A person who may be a political patron of the denomination, an informal believer

- Produces 11pt of faith every month.

-Witnessed the existence of miracles and began to have faith.
However, they are not yet registered as an official member, thus they cannot get rewards.

-Has accumulated enormous achievements in improving the awareness of the church.

-Cumulative faith: 11pt

-Cumulative merit value: 14900pt

-Total score: 14911pt

Kim Eui-seok himself quickly collected 15,000 points.

But one thing that bothered him was faith.

After listening to the explanation from his aide, he knew what faith meant.

Just hearing about the church and miracles gave him a sense of faith... If not... ’

It was because of his 15,000 points.

He looked at a list of miracles, and contemplated what he could buy with his score.

He started thinking unwittingly.

Then he started to feel excited.

[Ability-Strength 1: 100pt]

[Skill Ability-Flame Radiance: 1500pt]

Was there anyone on Earth who had never thought of wanting to be an Awakened?

Flying between buildings and defeating monsters with all sorts of brilliant abilities.

However, in order to become an Awakened, it was necessary to clear the randomly summoned Tutorial.

Even that opportunity disappeared as the summoning from the Tutorial stopped completely.

Kim Eui-seok looked down at his swollen hands.

He honestly admitted that he wanted to try it.

He had 15,000 points.

His heart fluttered and his stomach turned from the excessive excitement.

[Faith is greatly increased.]

[Produces 22pt of faith every month.]

Assistant Kim, who had been out for a while, came in and said,

“Your Excellency, there is someone who came to see you.”

When Kim Eui-seok, who was in distress, raised his head, he saw Assistant Kim’s nervous expression.

“Lee Hochi, the clone of the Awakened Lee Ho-jae...”

Kim Eui-seok interrupted his aide mid-sentence and said,

“Let him in.”

He had heard the story of Lee Ho-jae and his clone several times.

It was difficult to understand with his own common sense, and only after hearing it several times was he able to understand.

However, what was important now was not the concept of a clone, but that a man named Lee Hochi was the manager and head of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

“Hello?”

Hochi came into the breakroom and greeted him calmly as if he were greeting the owner of a local convenience store.

Kim Eui-seok was a little surprised.

Even though he had the same face as Lee Ho-jae who he encountered earlier, the impression was completely different.

Hochi, who had a clear, somewhat humorous smile on his mouth, said,

“I came to preach the word of god.”

* * *

“I really can’t find him.”

Hochi was very determined.

“Shall I look for him?”

Asked Yong-Yong, who was sitting on my lap.

He looked at me with his bright, blue eyes.

It was cute.

“No, I will do it myself.”

I sent a message asking to not find him and leave him alone.

I didn’t want to waste his hard work by looking for him.

I can just ask him what happened later.

After their first performance, the girl group started singing a second song.

I thought they would go down after only one song.

“How many songs are they singing?”

“Five songs.”

“...What? Why five songs?”

“Hochi told me to let them sing as many songs as possible.”

What?

Did Hochi become a fan of that girl group or something?

I couldn't understand it.

I saw huge screens on both sides of the stage.

The faces of the girl group members were shown on the screen, but it occasionally showed the faces of the special guests among the audience.

Most of the people invited were either Awakened or politicians, and they wore tired expressions whenever their faces were shown on the screen.

It was obvious they were bored.

It was a natural reaction since they were expecting the explanation of the Dimension Gate, and not an idol group performance.

The cameras focused on the audience again.

And among the audience... were my followers.

Some put on T-shirts with my face printed on them and displayed strange placards such as ‘The great Lee Ho-jae uses teleportation’ and waved the flags in a lemniscatic pattern, which seemed to be the symbol of the church.

The believers also shouted when they knew they were being projected on the camera and fluttered their flags more excitedly.

A shout of ‘whoa!’ rang from behind my back.

The camera movement was strange.

Usually, when shooting a place other than the stage, it only illuminates a short moment, about a second or two.

However, it zoomed in on my believers.

Meanwhile, the girl group's song ended and silence came for a while.

In between those short silences, a loud voice shouted.

“Cool-headed charisma, Lee Ho-jae, fighting!”

It was so loud, and the scream was enough to be heard right in front of the stage.

I reflexively covered my eyes with my hands and ducked my head.

The camera was pointing towards me.

What was this damn Hochi up to?

I thought he was going to do something, but I wouldn't have prepared for this kind of operation.

“Hey, tell them to put the cameras away.”

I told Kim Minhyuk while keeping my head down. Shrugging, Kim Minhyuk replied,

“But how do I get rid of those?”

The camera, which zoomed in on me for about 3 seconds, focused on the stage as the girl group's next song began.

“Lee Hochi, this guy...”

“Hey, but what was that? What was with the cool-headed something?”

“...It was my nickname when I was a pro gamer.”

The Dimensional Gate's briefing session was held successfully.

There was a comment that the unexpected appearance of the girl group was suspicious, but it was generally positive.

The Dimensional Gate that will present a new paradigm to the chaotic government is created in Korea, and is also created by a Korean Awakened.

The news that it will be run by the Korean government and the guild brought great excitement to Koreans.

Even on the Internet, it became a hot topic.

However, there was another topic that was as controversial as the Dimension Gate.

[Dimensional gate briefing session. Strange audiences appearing there.]

[Wow, those Ho-Jae guys go all the way over there, so extreme.]

[Isn't that a problem? It's annoying at national events.]

[A pseudo-religion extreme enough to be out in real life...]

[They're a cult who believes in Lee Ho-jae as a god. Wasn't Lee Ho-jae invited?]

It was natural.

It was because of Hochi that they got invited in the first place.

[But isn't that a pseudo-religion? Or is it just an ensemble group?]

[It's a pseudo-religion. It has been a famous pseudo-religion in

Gangwon-do since several years ago.]

[They look like Lee Ho-jae's fan club instead of a religion. Only crazy guys would see him as a god and make a slogan like 'The great Lee Ho-jae uses teleportation'.]

[Admit it. The funniest part of yesterday's briefing was Lee Ho-jae getting embarrassed.]

[They're having fun with each other.]

[I know. It's just like a fan club meet. Besides, it's an event that Lee Ho-jae organized anyway, so he can invite his fans.]

Public opinion on the Internet was going toward Lee Ho-jae Faith being a fan club wearing a religious mask rather than a pseudo-religion.

[It is also a good fit.]

[It sounds like a fan club. What kind of fans does he have?]

[Are you ignoring our brother Ho-Jae? He used to have so many fans.]

[I also cheered for Brother Ho-jae in high school, but it was a shock when Ho-jae lost to Kim Sung-hwan and announced his retirement.]

[By the way, look at how Lee Ho-jae is still embarrassed by his fans hahahaha.]

[Even when he was active, he told his fans to be quiet because he felt embarrassed when they cheered for him.]

[Even so, when I saw him, he gave me an autograph, and he talked to me kindly. I had the autograph before, but I lost it while evacuating to Seoul.]

I remember I had a lot of female fans too.

[It was really awesome then. Right now, it's a glimpse of the past, but at that time, it was really cool. I watched the video of the contest in a PC room with my friend.]

[What kind of person likes esports but doesn't know Lee Ho-jae? Even foreigners would know about Lee Ho-jae.]

[When was this old esports. Is it a true story?]

└ [Link] A collection of Lee Ho-jae's dark history as a pro gamer. "Utube"

[Lee Ho-jae Faith necklace from the President. What is the relationship between Lee Ho-jae Faith and President Kim Eui-seok?]

[Girl group Unnamed leader Lee Ye-i, and her family are all members of the Lee Ho-jae pseudo-religion.]

It's a mess.

One thing is for certain, the talk of being a pseudo-religion was not seen.

It was covered with more stimulating content.

Occasionally, I saw comments saying that the opinions of the pseudo-religion were being erased, but even that soon disappeared.

It will definitely help improve the image.

It will be a bit funny, but if you remove the pseudo image and absorb people, the game is over.

Once you soak your feet in Lee Ho-jae Faith and learn about miracles, it will be difficult to get out of it.

In addition, the president and girl group members who were invited to the event added support to the church.

Honestly, I had to admit that Hochi was doing well.

But.

What was embarrassing was embarrassing.

“Yong-yong. No, old man.”

“Huh? What’s wrong?”

“Catch Hochi for me.”

This naughty boy. Where the hell are you hiding? Just get caught. See if I let you go.

Translator’s Notes:

‘The great Lee Ho-jae uses teleportation’ : Is a parody of 장군님
축지법 쓰신다(The Great General uses teleportation) which is a North
Korean song praising Kim Jong-il.

Chapter 341

Seoul (25)

Once again, the times were changing.

As the Gate and the Awakened began to move away from life, something new appeared.

The Lee Ho-jae Faith, which first appeared in front of the public at the Dimension Gate briefing session, was expanding its influence surprisingly quickly.

In a way, it was natural.

The characteristics of the Lee Ho-jae Faith embraced not only existing religious people but also atheists.

It presented miracles that could be seen and experienced within a short period of time to each believer.

There were many believers who didn't even care about the miracles offered yet gave their faith.

However, in the case of believers who were really desperate for the miracles offered, they began to convert to the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Atheists were also quickly absorbed.

The atheists long-standing claim that an unproven god is no different from a flying spaghetti monster did not apply to the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Lee Ho-jae Faith showcased the existence of miracles as well as the existence of god.

Because of that, there were some questions floating around regarding the lack of mystique in the religion and how Lee Ho-jae, a human, was a god.

Hochi, the operator of the church, did not care.

In the first place, Hochi did not value the depth of faith.

He thought it didn't matter whether the congregation regarded Lee Ho-jae as a god, an idol, or like a neighborhood brother.

They entered the Lee Ho-jae Faith anyway.

As they build merit value for miracles, they will realize that at some point they must raise their level of faith, not merit value.

Once they compare those with high faith and those with low faith, they will naturally realize the difference.

In fact, there were many believers who did not consider Lee Ho-jae a god.

Yet despite their beliefs, a certain amount of faith and merit value were still steadily coming in.

[Jehovah is our Savior. Trust in Jehovah and go to Heaven.]

At the entrance of the station, next to an aunt holding a picket, a member of Lee Ho-jae Faith stood with the same picket.

[Lee Ho-jae Faith is free from the constraints of a church]

It was too rude to push against their god, but the members of the Lee Ho-jae Faith didn't care.

If that picket is really blasphemous, just holding that picket will hurt your merit score.

Just by standing in a crowded place with a picket, they could see that the church member was gaining merit value, and that was an act that helped the church.

The same was true in the web.

Those whose faith was not even visible were commenting eagerly for the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

☐ Only two hours if you work hard. One point in two hours. And one point is a good meal. Honestly, this is better than having a job.

☐ Really. Even if you post comments while watching a video, your merit value goes up.

☐ It's too sweet to comment while playing mobile games.

☐ Who would choose not to suck this honey, kekeke. Do you still think it's a multi-level business?

There was a boasting post in the Internet community saying that writing comments gave merit value.

Of course, just posting such a boastful article raised the public score.

☐ [Link] How to sign up for Lee Ho-jae School online. <http://www.blog.never.com/dd11233...>

☐ Because it is organized, let's go in and join. In particular, the unemployed people in the corners of the room, who have nothing to do, can manage to live by just doing this. If you collect enough merit points, you can be prepared for a big illness later or get things like abilities.

They were advertising very excitedly.

Some people felt anxious about the spreading day by day.

Isn't that a new type of voice phishing scam?

Are their families and relatives who joined the Lee Ho-Jae Faith really all right?

The government's press conference was held at the petition of the people.

As a spokesman for the Blue House, a government official in front of reporters was wearing a Lee Ho-jae Faith necklace.

As the spokesman entered the conference hall, he was extremely anxious.

He was a devout religious person.

Since he was a child, he went to church every weekend, and he was proud of it.

But he was a public official who only represented the position of the government.

He was the husband of a wife who was undergoing chemotherapy for stomach cancer.

The spokesman kept his mouth shut and made his resolution.

He said to the reporters that the Lee Ho-jae Faith was a formal religion with no problems and Korea was a country that allowed religious freedom.

Finally, it was notarized in the name of the government that there was no illegal activity happening in the faith, including its missionary work.

The spokesman learned why the president made him do that and looked at him with regret and envy.

[You have obtained a large amount of merit value.]

[You have acquired 33,302 pt.]

[Acquired the title ‘Top Contributor of the Month’.]

[You have acquired 500 additional points due to the title.]

[Advanced healing potion can heal even terminal cancer cells. In addition, it also provides excellent nourishment and tonic effects to the disease tolerance of the body...]

The spokesman briefly forgot his words at the amazing sight that appeared before his eyes.

He even forgot that beyond the message, reporters were pushing cameras and microphones towards him.

He muttered quietly.

“33,000 points...”

And the Republic of Korea turned upside down.

That the spokesman muttered 33,000 points.

It must have been the official value of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

People checked the list of miracles.

The list of miracles is already widely known, and anyone on the Internet could find it by simply searching.

What stood out most was ability.

It takes 100 points to increase 1 point of strength.

How about putting all 33,000 points on your strength stats?

Strength ability alone becomes 330 points.

The Awakened believers said that the strength stats showcased on the shop were about a tenth of the efficiency compared to the strength stats in the status window obtained by the Awakened in the Tutorial.

In other words, the strength of 330 points reached 33 for the Awakened.

When Lee Ho-jae reached level 40 on the 19th floor, his strength was just 40.

Having only 33 strength stats was enough to be recognized as an A-class Awakened.

People who were quietly joining the Lee Ho-jae Faith and drinking its honey began to openly reveal that they were members of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Politicians whose positions were at stake, chairmen with little to no time left, as well as foreign leaders.

They tried to obtain merit value in the Lee Ho-jae Faith by mobilizing all their influence, including wealth, manpower, and power.

It wasn't just those with power.

The same was true of self-employed people, like those who owned small supermarkets.

'Believers of the Lee Ho-jae Faith get to shop free of charge.'

All items were provided for free as long as they showed the symbol of the Lee Ho-jae Faith and proved that they were members of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

So instead of money, they earned merit value.

It wasn't too bad.

Most of what could be obtained with money could also be obtained using the points system.

However, most of what could be obtained using the points system was not available to purchase with money.

Soon, the Lee Ho-jae Faith's official currency began to overtake as a new key currency.

Thus, the Lee Ho-jae Faith did nothing, and the tax was being multiplied several times a day.

President Kim Eui-seok was openly saying that he would surely complete the Lee Ho-jae Faith's designation of diplomatic relations within his term of office.

It wasn't because of his devout faith, but because of his strong will to achieve the public value he would get from the designation of diplomatic relations.

"You did a good job."

"Right?"

Hochi smiled.

Was this within this guy's calculations?

Or maybe it just happened, like a cow catching a rat while walking backwards[1]?

In any case, the fact that the result was a jackpot did not change.

Hochi eventually got caught by the old man.

Hochi, who was grabbed by the back of his neck due to the old man[2], was hanging quietly like a cat being carried by the nape of his neck, looking quite confident.

"But my image is a little..."

"Well, that's good enough"

...There was nothing to say.

In the first place, it was me who said that if the results are good, it was okay to ignore the small things.

Surely, the religion spread quickly.

Hochi had overperformed.

He did so well for what he had as a test before entrusting the believers he had collected from the God of Hope.

I didn't have to open the Religion Window I made to check it.

The Religion Window was just a device to make Hochi feel interested and intuitively see the situation.

Even if I closed my eyes, I could feel the faith of humans from Korea and all over the world being sent to me.

I was in a good mood.

Earth is the land that I took over from the Hundred Gods Temple.

So I became the owner of Earth, but if asked if Earth was my sanctuary, I had to answer no.

I didn't have my faith in the land.

Simply garnering faith from the land did not mean it was my sanctuary.

It meant that my laws were the first priority on the land.

The most significant difference between a god and a non-god is that he manipulates the laws of the world at will.

No matter how much power a non-god wields, even if it were comparable to a god, they would be turned into a frog at the word of the god.

Such was possible in the physical world.

But it wasn't without any price.

In order to tweak the law, one had to pay a price.

However, there wasn't such a consumption value in the sanctuary.

Because I am not breaking the law, but realizing my will exists above the law.

My sanctuary had that meaning.

So, if I encountered the gods of the Pantheon on the 61st floor, and collided with them, as if without any concern, I would be able to win.

And before I started work, I was trying to connect Earth and the 61st floor.

Lastly, it was also the reason for not putting much effort into Earth.

However, Hochi has laid the groundwork for turning the planet into my sanctuary in a short period of time.

It won't be long before I completely sanctify Earth.

"Yes, good job. Would you like to go to the apartment and take a break?"

"No, I have to go to the church."

I was very proud of him.

I sent Hochi and sat down and closed my eyes again.

"Is it good?"

Asked the old man.

It must be good.

It was the same on the 61st floor, but this feeling was always good.

I saw the faith I received from my believers.

Most of them were living a normal life.

In the corner of the room, on the street, and at work.

Through them, I could see and experience the world.

It felt different from the world of the 61st floor, which blindly pursued only battle and victory.

From time to time, I was able to recognize where the believers were.

I also sympathized with the topic of the conversation the believers were talking about.

[Sorry.]

A voice came in quietly.

It wasn't someone's voice.

It was the voice of this planet, Earth.

[Sorry.]

Earth was apologizing to me.

It wasn't just me.

It was apologizing to everything that was alive and breathing in this world.

I was the only one that could understand it.

[Sorry.]

Now, no one cares about it, but it has always been the home of the people and everything in the world.

Since the birth of man, it received the faith of humans.

Unable to wield one's faith in one's own self.

[Sorry.]

So, the one god in the human world, who could not save anyone and just listened to the prayers of numerous existences was endlessly apologizing.

“That’s interesting.”

“What is it?”

The Awakened extracted Earth's source to the limit.

There is a little left, but it won't be that much.

Kirikiri predicted that this planet would soon be destroyed.

If you think so, maybe.

[Sorry.]

Wouldn't that apology be considered the last will of Earth?

How would it feel to be an incompetent god, who had to watch their believers die in vain, just for the hope of salvation for so long.

I didn't know.

I didn't even want to imagine.

[Sorry.]

I replied to the voice.

“Stop it, I understand.”

Earth was annoying.

* * *

[Pros: 100 votes, Disagree: 0 votes]

[The voting ends.]

“Ho-a-am.”

Kirikiri yawned loudly.

It was a very long voting session.

It wasn't unusual for the Hundred Gods Temple where a single agenda could produce dozens or hundreds of votes.

But this agenda was really, really long.

It was difficult to achieve a unanimous agreement because of the complex interests involved.

In any case, the voting went as intended.

As a result, the Hundred Gods Temple was completely removed from Lee Ho-jae.

After clearing the Tutorial, they agreed to completely ignore his status as a challenger and to treat him as a separate entity.

What will happen...

“You’re finally going to live.”

“God of Hope?”

A fluttering fly flew over Kirikiri’s face lying in the field.

“It’s me. Who could it be?”

“Hi-hing, you have become so weak that I did not recognize you as the God of Hope.”

“...”

The God of Hope was quietly silenced by Kirikiri’s words, as he was offended.

The God of Hope, who flew around for a while, soon left Kirikiri’s room.

She knew what he came to say, but she wasn’t in the mood to accept it now.

The God of Hope will start moving again.

The God of Hope was relatively free from restrictions, but that did not mean complete freedom.

Now that Lee Ho-jae has completely disappeared from the axis of constraints, the God of Hope would finally resume his activities.

And now he would approach Ho-Jae not as an individual, but as a member of the Pantheon.

The relationship between the Pantheon and Lee Ho-jae could not be said to be friendly, no matter how it seemed.

The protection period was over and now...

The die was cast.

It was unclear whether this would end up beneficial for them... or if this was equivalent to poking a beehive.

Translator's Notes:

[1] A cow catches a rat while walking backwards

Chapter 342

Seoul (26)

“Wow... really, Wow...”

She heard a murmuring voice next to her.

He seemed to be admiring something, but in reality he was lamenting.

“Ha... This... Such a dick.”

Park Jung-ah had no choice but to lower her head without realizing.

It was a murmur in the air, but it was meant to be heard by Park Jung-ah.

Still, she couldn't say anything.

Because she sympathized with his feelings.

[You have cleared the mission. (Mission Level: 10)]

[You will be moved to the next mission area]

[Remaining break time: 300 seconds]

“...Wow, really crazy... absolutely crazy.”

A new message window announced the remaining break time.

Right after the battle was over and she had barely put her butt on the ground.

But the next mission was after only a 300 second break.

This wasn't just harsh, it was cruel.

“Fuck! I want to get out of here! Let me out, motherfucker! You bitch!”

A man's half-sad voice rang.

Maybe it's the feelings of everyone here.

However, few people raised their voices like him.

Most of them were exhausted and tired, so they had no energy to do so.

Park Jung-ah quietly inhaled the potion.

It was a really dirty and tasteless potion, but it seemed that she couldn't bear it if she didn't dampen her throat with it.

There was a person approaching Park Jung-ah, who was drinking her potion as if drinking beer.

She had a familiar face.

She was a female challenger who, not long ago, stayed on the 90th floor.

“Sister.”

She was an attractive challenger with cute, elongated limbs.

When she cleared the Tutorial and returned to Earth, she said she wanted to be a celebrity and that she didn't want to be an Awakened.

Listening to her words, Park Jung-ah also thought it was a good dream.

However, at the moment, her appearance was so shabby that it was almost pathetic.

Her sweaty hair was clinging to her cheeks and to the back of her neck.

Her sloppy eyes seemed somehow out of focus.

“Help me.”

What she said was a spectacle.

However, Park Jung-ah could relate.

Sadly.

Unlike in the original Tutorial, in Lee Ho-jae’s Tutorial, one did not have to worry about losing their life.

However, it was so difficult that they felt that they could die.

The challengers cried out that it would be better to risk their lives.

Missions usually consist of battles.

About a hundred people teamed up to fight in things such as raids, sieges, pursuits, and all-out wars.

It was a repetitive cycle.

An endless one.

After a mission that lasts for a couple of hours if it is short and a few days if it is long, the next mission begins after only 300 seconds of rest.

From the challenger’s point of view, it feels as if there is no such thing as a break.

The designer’s intention seemed to be stuck in her ear.

‘You’re going to automatically recover anyway. No fatigue remains. You don’t need to rest, Right? You’re not hungry and or sleepy here either. Hahaha.’

But, damn it, her mental exhaustion continued to accumulate.

Even the difficulty of the mission was of a heinous level.

Though It wasn’t unreasonably difficult.

He maintained the level of difficulty that would be enough to always be struggling, and that if she did her best, she would be able to always achieve breathtaking success.

[Mission Level: Level C-10]

It was Park Jung-ah’s level.

She was 10 levels into the C grade.

Like Park Jung-ah, the top challengers of the easy difficulty and medium difficulty, were in this C-grade section.

Level C consists of 20 levels.

At the end of each mission, the system equates each individual’s performance.

The mission level changes according to the individual’s rank, and the challenger is sent to a mission with a difficulty level suitable for them.

[1st place-Park Jung-ah]

[2nd place- Jang Chae-in]

[3rd place- Carl Bora]

.

.

.

[Mission level changes.]

[Mission level: 10 -> 12]

[Congratulations! You have been promoted two levels due to your outstanding performance.]

Seeing that made her sick.

The next mission would be more difficult as the level had risen by two levels.

But she couldn't even complain.

“...Sister, I've been placed into Level 7. Help me...”

She patted the back of a female challenger who was breaking down and was starting to cry.

When they first started getting a feel for the system, several challengers deliberately failed the mission and tried to descend to a lower level.

Of course, low-level missions would be much less difficult.

It was an accurate prediction.

As the mission level fell, so did the difficulty.

However, the missions got messier.

Not only was there a lot of dirt and smelly filth, but devices that triggered horrors were hiding everywhere.

A dark enclosed space that seemed to choke the air out of you, a magic that reminded you of past nightmares.

Grotesque screams rang around, and images of ghosts covered in blood were seen.

From the mission to rescue your companions among hundreds of thousands of doppelgangers, to the mission to escape the endless maze.

The missions below Level 10 were obviously neither difficult nor dangerous.

However, it threatened mental health to a serious level.

Thanks to this, all the challengers who were down there were desperately trying to climb up.

But that wasn't easy.

It wasn't easy to stand out and get a high rank among the other desperate challengers.

In addition, if they did not correctly manage their concentration and mental state from endless battles, they would make mistakes.

Everyone did.

Park Jung-ah had gone up to Level 19 before.

However, she made a big mistake in Level 19. She could have been promoted to B class, but instead fell to Level 15.

After that, her concentration fell and she fell to Level 6.

In the Level 6 mission, after being isolated in a sewer with dung lying around accompanied by giant rats for about two days, her concentration and motivation had returned.

She was crawling back up.

[Personal mission has been assigned.]

[Miracle-Summon Lesser Guardian]

“Huh?”

A new message appeared in front of Park Jung-ah, who was preparing to move to the next mission location.

[Condition of Dispatch Challenger]

1. Suitable for suppressing non-Awakened criminals.
1. High possibility of cooperation in suppressing criminals.
1. No possibility of escape attempt.
1. There is a willingness to protect the guardian.
1. More than 80% confidence in Lee Ho-jae.
1. [All dispatched challenger requirements are met.]

[Would you like to accept the dispatch?]

“...Yes.”

Park Jung-ah tried to accept the request of the message.

She had no idea what it was.

She thought the situation would never get worse than here.

[GM Benedictus Lericia Piacan Raucones Naupolion Nice Tiamat Carcearin Balakas Shanso Gardandes Nessario III confirms your suitability]

[The challenger dispatch has been approved by GM.]

[(Special) dispatch mission is granted.]

Description: On the way home from school and part-time work, there was a girl who was attacked by gangsters.

Crimes such as kidnapping and human trafficking have occurred frequently in the area.

The gangsters who attacked the girl are also believed to be of that kind.

The girl, who is the target of the guardian, is a child of the devout Lee Ho-jae Faith family, and she herself is a faithful believer who consistently produces faith every month.

The girl who encountered the assailants quickly opened a religious window and asked for help from Lee Ho-jae.

Lee Ho-jae decided to dispatch a guardian at the request of the girl.

[You can go right away.]

[Would you like to go?]

“Yes.”

Park Jung-ah replied immediately.

The question that had been there a second ago had disappeared.

She quickly figured out what she had to do.

The surrounding environment changed rapidly.

Her vision rapidly darkened, but thanks to her 15 years of staying in the Tutorial, Park Jung-ah possessed all the stellar miscellaneous skills.

Her vision in dark spaces was ridiculous.

“What.”

“Who do you think is there?”

Streetlights stood sparsely around, but the streetlights were broken in this place.

In this dark space, it was difficult to distinguish anything other than the walls blocking both sides of the street.

In the dark, the guys with iron clubs and baseball bats moved busily.

In between them, Park Jung-ah saw a girl being held by them.

“What, is that a girl?”

“Let’s catch her too.”

The big guys who found Park Jung-ah chatted.

It was a tone that seemed to be collecting garbage, not people.

Park Jung-ah opened her inventory and found a suitable weapon.

The cutlery was not appropriate.

In these situations, she always preferred heavy blunt force.

The big guys approached Park Jung-ah, who didn’t run away.

He seemed to be approaching and trying to surprise her.

The big guys moved as if they had one mind without discussing anything.

She could see that those guys had done these things at least once or twice.

“Bring it on!”

The big guys rushed with someone’s call.

Park Jung-ah just swung her club and struck the top of his head.

Along with the sound of cracking, a large body slumped on the floor.

The other big guys who tried to rush in, flinched and stopped moving.

Park Jung-ah rotated her club in a big circle.

If it had been a while ago, it would have been really awkward.

But now, she has been fighting for a long time and practiced moving her body.

Perhaps, because she had tangoed with death numerous times in the new Tutorial, the long-time use of her club was very familiar.

“You know what? I really hate people like you.”

Park Jung-ah said so.

She flinched and turned back towards the big guys wondering whether or not to run away.

* * *

One thing that worried her was how to deal with those bulky trash.

In the Tutorial, Park Jung-ah sentenced all criminals who committed violent crimes to death.

The situations where the victims were continuously hurt were common, as repeat crimes were very likely, according to the statistics in the Tutorial.

Through unusually harsh punishment, crimes were prevented from happening in the first place.

But what to do outside of the Tutorial.

Park Jung-ah thought of this out of nowhere, and she wondered what kind of judgment she should make.

She wondered if the system would replace the ruling through a message, but that never happened.

In the end, Park Jung-ah decided to end the punishment by giving the men a silent beating until they passed out and were broken in a few places.

Those big guys won't be able to eat nor be able to live by doing physical work in the future.

“...I, I..... Shall I call the po- police?”

Asked the girl, trembling.

Even though it was late at night, she was wearing a school uniform.

The schoolgirl was knocked on the head by the big guys, but she was able to wake up quickly thanks to the potion Park Jung-ah had.

But the shock remained.

Seeing the girl trembling greatly, Park Jung-ah felt a corner of her heart becoming sore.

“No.”

If she does that, then things get complicated.

In addition, she did not want this schoolgirl to go to the police station as a victim and suffer stress and mental pain.

After she returned, she may be caught up in a secondary crime of retaliation.

It was also important to find out all the criminals, but she judged that the first thing to do was not to harm this child.

She thought it would be better to just leave those guys unattended.

Park Jung-ah felt uncomfortable with her own judgment.

She said so and moved on.

The days of her crying out for her principles were long gone.

After a long period, the girl looked a little calmer.

She said she was still a student and that she felt dizzy.

She was exhausted.

“Well... When the request has been completed, it asks me to click Done. That’s how you’ll be called back..... Would you like me to press it?”

“No! Don’t press it yet!”

Park Jung-ah shouted reflexively.

As soon as she was summoned back, she could feel the intuition that she would be participating in a new mission.

“I’ll take you home. Then press it.”

“Yes... thank you so much.”

“Thank you.”

Park Jung-ah grabbed the girl's hand and walked.

The schoolgirl did not have much strength in her legs, thus she walked slowly.

However, she did not support the girl.

This seemed meaningless, but this trivial act of returning home on one's own feet was a mentally significant act that helped to brush off bad memories.

She simply held the hand of the schoolgirl, grabbing her hand, and supporting her from time to time when she staggered.

It was a rare type of back alley.

You had to climb a steep uphill road.

It was such a neighborhood that is usually called “Sandongne”.

(T/N: Sandongne, where the neighborhood is located on an uphill area, google image 산동네 for reference)

The dim streetlights and the stale night air.

The moon, floating alone in the night sky where a single star was not visible.

And the sound of a car that came in clumsily mixed with the sound of the wind.

This felt surreal for Park Jung-ah.

She was now on Earth and back in Seoul.

She was in her hometown, that she had imagined in her mind for so long.

She was in a good mood.

There was one thing that was definitely good.

‘I wonder if they’re watching?’

She looked up at the night sky where nothing could be seen, thinking so.

* * *

Of course I’m watching.

I thought of going to see Park Jung-ah in person, but I didn’t do that.

I thought it was still time to wait.

I prepared a message for her while lying on the sofa armrest.

It was a message to a girl named Choi Yoo-jung, who had just been saved by Park Jung-ah.

[You used ‘Miracle-Summon Lesser Guardian’.]

[There are not enough points for ‘Miracle-Summon Lesser Guardian’.]

[Current total score: 84 points]

[The points for the ‘Miracle-Summon Lesser Guardian’ are 100 points.]

[With Lee Ho-jae’s authority, a Miracle-Summon Lesser Guardian is forcibly used.]

[The guardian is being summoned. Be prepared for their arrival.]

These are the messages that appeared before Choi Yoo-jung's eyes.

With Park Jung-ah's farewell, I sent new messages to her who arrived safely.

[It is a secret that only we know that a miracle was used even though the points were insufficient. You can't tell other people.]

I was going to send a message in a systematic way, but I just sent it my way.

I thought it would be better.

The stiff tone of the system could be seen as crass.

In fact, the fact that God saved a believer in danger was something to be advertised.

However, Lee Ho-jae Faith was a special case because it was not unusual.

Lee Ho-jae Faith's system should always be fair.

If you could get a miracle regardless of the score, who would be willing to sacrifice anything to earn points in it?

Fortunately, Choi Yoo-jung prayed with her hands together and replied that she would.

[In return for the promise of secrecy, 10,000 additional points will be paid.]

Choi Yoo-jung was delighted and informed her family about this.

She said, of course, that she kept a secret, she prayed, and she suddenly scored.

Her family was greatly pleased.

They looked happy, saying that a score of 10,000 points would be enough to move to a house in the city.

They took out a chunk of pork that had been frozen in the corner of the freezer as I watched them, excitedly eating.

It felt good.

I honestly admitted it.

I started acting as the god of the Earth.

It was more fun than I thought.

Chapter 343

Seoul (27)

People were starting to get used to the temple building that popped up from the former soccer stadium.

Those who condemned the existence of the temple quickly disappeared, instead claiming that the excessively high building threatened flight safety over Seoul.

It was natural.

The government remained silent no matter what the people said about the temple.

The people wondered how they would demolish a building that had been created overnight, and whether it was possible in the first place.

Even those who raised their voices against the temple said that they would rather impose a fine or tax on me rather than demolish the temple.

But now, their voices were also disappearing.

After the Lee Ho-jae Faith began to spread in earnest, there was an atmosphere that bore down on people like them.

I looked out at downtown Seoul from the temple.

Thanks to its high location, the entire city could be seen at a glance.

To be honest, it wasn't such a good sight.

“Oh, look at the air.”

This is a city where people live.

In the Tutorial, I've been to many places, but I've never seen a city with such serious air pollution.

I went to a place filled with all kinds of odors and toxic gases, but it was not a place where people lived.

"It smells bad too."

[Sorry.]

Earth, which had been quiet for a while, apologized again.

Well, I wasn't talking to you.

No, looking at it, I was right about what I said to Earth.

[Sorry.]

I said yes.

Earth talked from time to time.

Usually when I think of Earth, I think of the environment including the earth or the sky of this planet, or I think of the world as a whole; it was like that.

Maybe it has always been like that.

Every time people think of Earth, their faith builds up little by little.

Just like how I respond with a system message whenever I gain faith from believers.

Earth would have only apologized every time.

That would have been all it would do.

Even if it could do more, only I could hear its words.

The wind blew out the murky air in Seoul.

At the same time, I wanted to create a strong wind, but if I did, those who walked the streets in broad daylight would be mutilated.

A lot of time was wasted trying to move the wind at the right intensity.

It was a temporary measure, but a little bit of contaminated air went away.

It will be better for a while.

Let's seriously think about purifying Earth's environment later.

I can ask Kim Min-hyuk to figure out how.

Recently, he moved to the temple and lived there.

It was almost completed so there was no inconvenience in life.

Rather, the accommodation was uncomfortable due to how "perfect" it was.

As Yong-yong's decorations have not yet been completed, it can't be opened.

In the near future, believers will also be able to visit the temple.

On the lower floors of the temple, there was plenty of space for the members who visited the temple.

From a distance, Hochi was holding his cell phone and talking on the phone.

Hochi was more and more frequently talking to humans.

It was unavoidable because he was busy taking care of the Lee Ho-jae Faith every day.

The Lee Ho-jae Faith, which seemed to only grow, was experiencing some ups and downs recently.

There have been several incidents in which believers who have secured a large amount of public value by pouring capital money in the early stage have used the score to play foul.

Of course, as soon as they did such an act, the public value was reduced.

Because of such actions, the church's image was deteriorating.

Negative behavior of individual members of the congregation immediately affected the score, and these events could have become even more serious if it were not for a system that others could check.

There were also conflicts with existing religions.

Existing religions that have been rooted in Earth before the introduction of tutorials and the Hundred Gods Temple.

Most of those religions either partially admitted tutorials and Gods Temples, or distorted them all as being part of the religion.

From the standpoint of existing religions, they would have wanted to completely deny the Hundred Gods Temple and Tutorial.

They couldn't pretend to know the monsters that appeared in front of their eyes and the rise of the Awakened who fought against them.

Because of this, they had to go back and forth through their old doctrines to find clues and connect stories.

From the standpoint of such religions, the rise of the Lee Ho-jae Faith was inevitably threatening.

It was just a simple thought.

In the case of the Hundred Gods Temple, even if the facts were distorted and related to existing religions, there was no response.

However, when they say that they have a religious connection with Lee Ho-Jae, a protest from my denomination immediately rushes out, demanding them not to speak nonsense.

Every time they protest, they will get public value, so the believers will protest more confidently and stubbornly.

Moreover, the system Hochi devised was overly lethal.

Beyond religion, it was shaking the existing economic and social systems themselves.

The theocratic state theory is already spreading in Korea.

Eventually, the existing major religions identified us as pseudo-religion and began a campaign against us, unlike when the Hundred Gods and the Tutorial appeared.

While considering dropping a bolt of lightning on top of the protest site, Hochi argued that it would be better to overcome and solve the problem with the believers at the religious level.

The operation of the denomination was completely left to Hochi, so I decided to follow Hochi's opinion.

Thanks to that, Hochi, who was already busy, became more busy.

Well I didn't want to stop him even though he said he would volunteer to work hard.

It wasn't just bad news.

As the number of businesses incorporated under Lee Ho-jae Faith increased, Hochi added the option to add the products of those businesses to the system.

I had to store the business's products in my subspace and distribute them to the system, so I was able to run them immediately.

Thanks to this, the list of rewards had increased significantly.

All kinds of businesses were incorporated into the system, starting with hospitals and pharmaceutical companies whose institutions were in jeopardy due to the Lee Ho-jae Faith's compensation system.

So, the number of members who spent both daily life and work at the Lee Ho-jae Faith increased.

It had a good effect on both the growth of the denomination and the increase of faith.

Thus, the Korean economy itself was being absorbed by the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Won is now used only when using vending machines or products and services that are not handled by Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Not long ago, Hochi said he was preparing a plan to include the credit card companies in the system, so that would soon disappear.

Naturally, the value of the won plummeted.

Originally, it was a situation that would have a devastating negative impact on exchange rates and trade.

Fortunately, after the cataclysm of the monsters, the trade routes between countries were greatly reduced.

The global trend was economy centered on the domestic market or neighboring countries.

In the case of Korea, most of the trading came down to Japan and China.

At the very least, it was to export the Awakened to earn foreign currency and to bring in some food or industrial products.

In the case of food, both Japan and China were in short supply, so it was not necessary.

“But who is Nakamura?”

Before I knew it, Hochi came back from the phone call and I asked,

“A cabinet member I met when I went to Japan.”

It was an unexpected person.

I thought it would be a Japanese cartoonist or novelist.

“This time, they helped establish Lee Ho-jae Faith’s Japanese branch. They also promised to cooperate with the denomination in the future.”

What, really?

Hey, why are you so competent?

At this point, it feels a little strange.

Hochi was smiling confidently.

When he first took over the job, he completely disappeared as he was somewhat anxious or unconfident.

Now Hochi himself was sure he was doing well.

“Ha!”

Instead, his nose was rising with a momentum to pierce the sky.

Hochi returned from the phone call, so I sat on the couch again.

“By the way, the mantis doesn’t think about coming out of the church.”

Kim Min-hyuk said.

The mantis was becoming the leader of the Gangwon-do denomination.

Well, it wasn’t very different from the truth.

In fact, it was emerging as some kind of guardian.

It was the mascot of the denomination, and it was taking in a little bit of faith.

If it continued like this, I thought that sooner or later it would easily gain godhood.

There was also the power it regularly received from Yong-yong, so it was almost definitely going to happen.

“What is it?”

Kim Min-hyuk had been taking a break since earlier.

That’d been the case even before Hochi got up to speak on the phone.

I don’t know what he wanted to say, to call me and Hochi, but he wanted to tell the matter as soon as possible.

To be honest.

Waiting for someone who feels like they can talk, is quite a pain, from the standpoint of being able to read other people’s thoughts at any time.

“Oh, well, I got a call from the United States.”

“United States?”

“Huh. Some of the Awakened people in the US lab are from Korea. I got a call through them, but.....”

Well, good.

I’ve decided.

Let’s seriously think about hitting Kim Min-hyuk later.

“They say it seems like a meteorite is flying to Earth?”

“Huh?”

A very strange story popped out of Kim Min-hyuk’s mouth.

What meteorite?

“It was observed yesterday. There seems to be a giant meteorite flying towards Earth.”

It was definitely an unexpected issue.

“Oh really?”

“Huh.”

There are really special things in life.

What crime did the earth commit that only bad news kept popping up since the beginning of the 21st century?

[Sorry.]

I ignored the earth’s apology and asked Kim Min-hyuk.

There was one questionable thing.

“But if it’s flying in, what else is there? You’re not sure are you?”

“Because I hadn’t observed it at all until a while ago, I found out about it out of the blue. I don’t think we have confirmed it yet. Still, the contact sounded almost certain.”

Well, I see.

“So I mean.....”

Kim Min-hyuk dragged his words again.

I was urged to feed him honey chestnuts so at least he wouldn’t get hurt.

I thought about it for a while, but eventually decided to quit.

Kim Min-hyuk was too weak to hit with his light heart.

I thought that I should put this guy in the Tutorial and train him.

“That... What you did... It’s not you right?”

Kim Min-hyuk asked, looking at my eyes.

“Huh? What?”

“You mean that meteorite, isn’t that something you made or dragged here?”

“...not really.”

Kim Min-hyuk threw off his hesitant attitude and smiled broadly.

“Yes! As expected! I believed in you, man. No matter what you’ve done, I don’t think you would drag a meteorite to Earth.”

Then, he sighed for a long time.

When I looked at his face, it looked like he had lost ten years.

This motherfucker, you doubted me, you're suspicious of me.

What do you usually think of me?

Recently, I was annoyed due to seeing people who were working against Lee Ho-jae Faith.

I left it to Hochi, but I still didn't like it.

Kim Min-hyuk also knew that.

Then, when he heard that a meteorite was flying in the car, I guess he thought I was trying to drop a meteor over the heads of the opposing activists or religious groups.

I understood.

That's understandable.

Still, I didn't feel good.

“Get some athlete's foot.”

Kim Min-hyuk trembled.

“Suddenly, my foot seems to be itchy, but is it just my imagination.....?”

Why blame your imagination?

To heal that, you'll need potions, not regular athlete's foot medicine.

Originally, I tried to give him circular hair loss rather than athlete's foot, but it seemed too severe, so I compromised with athlete's foot.

“Anyway... So, a request for cooperation came from the US' side. It is impossible to stop meteorites with only technology. Can you stop it?”

Kim Min-hyuk asked.

It was much more comfortable than when he asked if I was dragging a meteorite.

“Of course.”

In fact, I can do anything with inanimate objects.

Whatever it really is.

“Can you make the meteorite stop without any damage?”

It’s easy.

I just need to erase the kinetic energy.

“Is it possible to make the meteorite into Kim Min-hyuk?”

Hochi intervened from the side and asked.

“It is possible. It’s like pouring out my power into useless places.”

I could have done it.

After the meteorite is reduced, it could be transformed into a human body, and Kim Min-hyuk’s memory, personality, and soul could be injected into the body.

It wasn’t easy.

It was a meaningless waste of power.

“Why is that an example...”

“It would be best to just blow it up in the atmosphere in moderation. I think that will be the least troublesome.”

When a meteorite approaches Earth enough, it just bursts.

Like a fireworks display.

“Then would there be additional damage from the fragments?”

“That’s something I can handle easily.”

In fact, if Earth had been sanctified, a much more colorful and fun way could have been used.

There was a lot of faith in my religion on Earth, but it wasn’t enough to make it my sanctuary.

A sanctuary has great significance to its God.

The biggest difference between a deity and a non-deity is that they can twist the laws of the world.

The divine power, which begins with the power to interfere with others, changes the world itself.

Individuals who have full control over themselves will be able to interfere with other microcosms outside through divine power.

And the individual who is able to interfere with another microcosm soon reaches the level of interfering with the grand universe.

A god can use its divine power to modify the laws of the world in the direction he wants.

And the god who is united with the world through a sanctuary becomes another being.

It is the same in that it modifies the laws of the world.

However, the cost of the modification disappears.

Therefore, the power that a god exercises in his sanctuary is not a twisting of the law.

It's the redefining of the law.

I explained it to Kim Min-hyuk and Hochi.

Both of them have recently had a growing interest in Godhood.

"Something just doesn't come across."

Kim Min-hyuk said.

It's a story too far from himself.

Hochi looked similar.

I decided to give an example that touched a little.

"If Earth was my sanctuary, I could explode a meteorite and change all the fragments that fall into pieces and fall into Kim Min-hyuk. Let thousands of Kim Min-hyuk fall from the sky like hail. At no cost. Or you can make Kim Min-hyuk fall from the sky instead of rain. Not once, but every time. Until the end of the world."

"Ah, I get it."

"...It's a clear explanation, but why is that the example..."

The theology class stopped right there.

Although both are showing interest.

Actually, it's going too far.

Kim Min-hyuk was natural, and even Hochi was.

"Returning to the previous story, Can I ask you if you could come to the US the day after tomorrow. Oh, and the story about the meteorite is absolutely secret.”

“US? It’s annoying.”

Can’t I just tell them to come here?

Meteorites will be handled roughly.

In Korea, there are people who believe in me and support me.

In America... it was an annoying situation, they’d be asking questions.

I wanted to send someone else as my agent.

Everyone was busy now.

It will be a little hard, but I’m just thinking of asking Hochi.

I suddenly saw Hochi sitting next to me staring at me.

“What is wrong with you.”

“Hey hey hey.”

“What, why.”

“Can we spill the information that the meteorite is flying in?”

Hochi’s eyes were twinkling.

Chapter 344

Seoul (28)

“Dr. Han!”

“How did this happen..... Please say something! Wait...!”

Dr. Han Myeong-ho got up while avoiding his clamoring colleagues.

He strode to remove those who followed.

There were some who followed, but no one was able to keep up with the alarming speed of the top Awakened, Han Myeong-ho.

Han Myeong-ho was able to get rid of them in no time.

Han Myeong-ho, hiding between the emergency exit stairs, wiped off his cold sweat.

It wasn't sweat from exercise.

In order for Han Myeong-ho, one of America's greatest Awakened, to sweat from a workout, he had to run a marathon.

It was a cold sweat caused by mental stress.

Han Myeong-ho was recruited to the US after clearing the Tutorial.

And he had never been dissatisfied with that fact.

The United States maintained its position as the world's most powerful country even after the cataclysm.

Although the sea routes in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans were blocked, the North American continent had abundant resources to survive.

America's influence over South America was still there.

The Awakening Force, the Navy, and Air Force were cut in half, but in return, they defeated the G-class beasts that appeared on the coast near New York, and have not suffered serious damage from the beasts since then.

Above all, there was too much piled up before the cataclysm.

Therefore, Han Myeong-ho chose the United States.

Han Myeong-ho, who was one of the few Awakened who studied magic itself, was recruited to the United States as an Awakened and a researcher, and since then, he has been receiving good treatment and continuing his research.

Not long ago, he even made tangible results as he began clinical trials of drugs that had an effect similar to the lowest potion in the Tutorial.

But that was the story until yesterday.

Han Myeong-ho sat down on the stairs of the emergency exit and picked up his cell phone.

As soon as he opened his portal site, he noticed a provocative phrase.

[A real version of Armageddon. An asteroid impact is imminent.]

[The diameter of the asteroid 'X' is 33 km. Three times the size of the asteroid that fell in the Cretaceous Period 6 million years ago.]

[Experts say "There is really no way to prevent destruction."]

[99% of life on Earth's surface will go extinct.....]

It was a topic that was currently covered throughout the world.

Of course it had to be.

Who wouldn't be shaken when the Earth was about to perish.

Astronomers around the world continued to prove that the asteroid's approach was true.

Now people weren't wondering if the asteroid's approach was real, they were worried about how to survive.

"Sigh. I'm going crazy, really."

The problem was that this information was from Korea.

Asteroid related information was delivered from the United States to Korea, and within 10 minutes of requesting cooperation, all Korean media outlets began reporting on the asteroid.

All at once, fiercely as if bombarding.

Anyone could have guessed that the information was leaked from the Korean side.

Whether that was intentional or not, however, could not be said.

The biggest problem in this messy situation was Dr. Han Myeong-ho was the liaison between the United States and Korea.

This caused Dr. Han Myung-ho to be blamed for the leak of information regarding the asteroid.

Such a thing had to be stopped no matter what.

He was still being questioned by his colleagues, but practical reprimanding would come soon.

It wasn't about being dismissed, but he couldn't rebut if he were to be punished.

[There was a riot in California. Many police officers have died due to the unrest.....]

[Empty convenience stores. Increased violence during shopping.....]

“Uh.....”

Han Myeong-ho held his cell phone and bowed his head.

The situation was a bit serious.

When a huge natural disaster is foretold, society falls into chaos.

It always happened.

However, what made this incident different from before was that it was complete destruction, not just something on the level of a natural disaster.

And the fact of the matter is that the citizens have already experienced the monstrous cataclysms, so they are now ready to do anything to survive.

Finally, there was a mixture of Awakened people among such citizens.

Far from the government's efforts, there was a row of unrest that required the police to be dispatched.

This is why the US government tried to control the information.

However, the US government had not been able to prevent information that had been spread widely from Korea.

He was so distracted that he couldn't even prevent scientists from other countries from making follow-up announcements, so people thought that the cause of the incident was Han Myeong-ho himself.

Han Myeong-ho grabbed his cell phone tightly and sat down on the floor.

He was confused because he thought that he was the starting point of all this havoc.

It was a little cool as the cold floor touched his hips.

He looked for a name in his cell phone directory and called him.

Fortunately, the other person answered the phone this time.

The person Han Myeong-ho called was Kim Min-hyuk.

Vice-manager of the Tutorial's Korean server vigilante.

Korean guild leader.

And not so long ago, he was the person who he had informed of the asteroid and asked for cooperation.

“Oh, brother!”

[Uh, is it Myeong-ho?]

“No, what happened!”

Han Myeong-ho cried out without knowing.

So he emphasized the confidentiality of the government, and the information spread to the media in just 10 minutes.

Han Myeong-ho shouted with resentment, anger, regret and disappointment.

“Brother! Please say something!”

* * *

“Uh... Well... That... Sorry! I'll call you back later!”

Kim Min-hyuk hung up the phone.

Then, he pulled out the battery of his cell phone.

“Well done.”

Kim Min-hyuk looked at me with a strange look, but I ignored it.

What am I supposed to do?

“How is the situation?”

“It’s crazy. It’s not just an uproar. It’s almost like a war.”

I had guessed so.

With his head bowed, he looked at Hochi, who looked dead.

“You made a mistake this time?”

Hochi nodded.

I could understand.

Hochi understood humans.

He understood most of the emotion and behavior that humans possessed.

However, there were often exceptions.

The biggest among them was survival instinct.

Hochi had no idea what a desire to survive was like in the first place.

Hochi was not to blame.

I made it that way.

However, it was true that Hochi was impatient, not aware of the difference between humans and himself.

In fact, it was of no harm for me to let Hochi experience small failures.

“For now, we are protecting all our believers.”

Whenever something happened to the believers, they called in the challengers training in Yong-yong’s Tutorial to protect the believers one by one...

The challengers protected the believers with all their might.

This was due to the fact that the performance in the trip as well as the satisfaction of the believer and the rating given by the believer directly related to the rise of the level.

And everybody was eager because they were given a break according to the score once a week.

Faith was no problem.

Rather, it was soaring.

The believers, who seemed to not even feel the fear of death, were going out on the streets and preaching.

There were also many people who earned faith by selling ramen and canned food.

It was a wise choice.

It was more advantageous to secure food to hold public value than ramen or canned food.

As it turned out, the whole country was offering everything it had to earn public value.

Even the President and the National Assembly did the same.

‘I declare that the amendment favoring the Lee Ho-jae Faith has now been passed.’

The National Assembly was trying to make Lee Ho-jae Faith the state religion by revising the constitution.

And through such actions, he tried to collect a little more public value.

All the police officers who went out to quell the unrest were wearing the symbol of Lee Ho-jae Faith around their bodies.

There were overwhelming amounts of people praising Lee Ho-jae Faith with microphones in every square crowded with people, and when the live broadcast started, some of the performers, whether it was an anchor, an announcer, a singer, or an actor, suddenly shouted Lee Ho-jae cheer.

When considering the gains and losses of the church, the turmoil that was taking place was obviously a gain.

It was regrettable that Lee Ho-jae Faith had not yet spread to foreign countries and was limited to Korea.

However, the external damage was too great.

Too many people were dead and injured.

My believers are being protected, but I can't help people who have no relationship with us.

The relationship between God and believer must be in an unfair trade relationship.

It cannot exist in the first place.

“By the way, the damage is a bit serious. More than expected.”

Korea is very good.

In foreign countries, there were frequent conflicts of warlords, coups, etc., rather than civil violence.

“Because I’ve already gone through something similar once.”

When the monsters and tutorials first appeared.

Both Kim Min-hyuk and I were the first challengers, so I heard about those days.

I wondered what happened at that time and what kind of atmosphere the world had.

“What are you going to do in the future?”

“Let’s start the public debate.”

Of course.

It was like a war between the media and information.

It was a game that was ultimately won when all the information on despair and the end of times was pushed out and instead replaced by Lee Ho-jae Faith’s theory of hope.

“Then you’d better go out. It’s hard to get people to believe it right away, but it’s going to work if you do an interview saying that you can step out and stop the asteroid.”

“Well. Do I really need to do that?”

It was clearly wrong that people were hurt by the unrest, but Hochi’s idea of raising interest and dependence on Lee Ho-jae Faith through people’s sense of crisis was wonderful.

It was not yet the right time to completely eliminate the asteroid apocalypse.

It was time to use it to expand.

“The biggest problem is that there is no time for issues related to Lee Ho-jae Faith. Even if I don’t know it in Korea, it is difficult to achieve tangible results by promoting it to foreign countries.”

Kim Min-hyuk replied.

Of course, it would be through the media.

“You can throw a stronger issue.”

“What issue is bigger than the end of times?”

Kim Minhyuk asked.

There was.

“There is survival. We could look at the two together, but separately, people will care more about survival than the end itself.”

“Is there a way?”

“Let’s do an event.”

“Event?”

“Hmm. An event to commemorate the imminent end.”

* * *

Han Myeong-ho was looking at Yahoo, squatting on the stairs.

Every news outlet relayed just how desperate the situation was.

He immediately felt skeptical.

Han Myeong-ho was also a wizard and scientist at the same time, and he received detailed information about the asteroid from the US government.

In his opinion, they could not overcome this by combining the techniques of modern civilization with the power of the Awakened.

The only way to survive was to enter an underground bunker and survive.

He himself, is of course, an important resource, so he will be able to live well in a bunker prepared by the US government.

However, most people will not enter the bunker and will explode at the same time as an asteroid impact on Earth's surface.

It has been a problem since then.

A collision with an asteroid will completely reverse the Earth's environment.

To the extent that humans can hardly live.

In that situation, he wondered if the bunker would remain safe, and he was worried that even if it was safe, he would have to live in the bunker for the rest of his life.

“Sigh.”

After all that he went through.

All the fierce and eventful past days he had to clear the Tutorial and fight the monsters felt pointless.

In the end, it was all in vain.

Han Myeong-ho checked all the news and tried to get up from his seat, but found a strange word mixed in the search query rankings.

Apocalypse, Asteroid X, Asteroid Crash Timer, New York Times,

Wholesale Mart, etc. In the window where search terms were lined up, Korean words suddenly rose to number one.

Trending Now.

1. Lee Ho-jae Faith

1. The New York Times

1. Apocalypse timer

.

.

And it was the moment when he saw that unexpected search term.

[Recognized the existence of Lee Ho-jae Faith.]

[Registered as a temporary member of Lee Ho-jae Faith]

[A limited number of rewards can be obtained.]

[You can obtain a limited amount of official value.]

[The production of faith is completely limited.]

[In order to produce faith, it is necessary to be recognized as an official member of Lee Ho-jae Faith, or reflect on Lee Ho-jae's existence deeply and sincerely.]

[30pt are obtained as a new registration privilege.]

[30pt will be obtained as a bonus at the end of the day.]

[There is no referral. You get 0pt.]

[When you recommend Lee Ho-jae Faith to someone, both the recommender and the recommended can get 15pt.]

[The list of recommended rewards is listed preferentially.]

[As the end is imminent, we recommend food reward.]

[Rice 3kg-1pt]

[Cheese pork cutlet-2pt]

[Potato 4kg-1pt]

[2 cans of tomatoes (0.8kg)-1pt]

[There is also a survival kit on the list of miscellaneous goods that can survive an asteroid impact.]

[You don't have a bunker in your basement? Do not worry.]

[Capsule type survival small pot-30000pt]

[Do you remember the small, round spaceship in Dragon Ball X? Yes. This is.]

[A miracle survival capsule that can survive for ten thousand years if there is enough food!]

[You don't have food? You can click 'here' to see detailed instructions on how to produce faith.]

[An opportunity not to be missed! Start right now!]

“This... What...”

* * *

“Did you see it? The greatness of this body?”

Ha.

Why am I so great?

Through the religious window, public value and faith were soaring like crazy, and the number of believers was soaring around the world.

It was an achievement only with the ease of membership registration process, free point event, and a little friendly explanation.

Now, if Lee Ho-jae Faith is recognized and cooperates with foreign governments, it will spread faster.

Major foreign media outlets have already confirmed the existence of Lee Ho-jae Faith and began to talk about the rewards of Lee Ho-jae Faith and how it will help them survive in the future.

Everything was a matter of time.

“...Isn’t this a scam? It’s too much of a cheat.”

It’s all thanks to me.

Chapter 345

Earth (1)

“It’s serious.”

“What?”

The deficit.

I am not doing business by digging myself into a hole.

In order to receive faith from the believers, I had to bear a similar expenditure.

But in the current situation, my expenditures were far exceeding my income.

But it was necessary.

In Korea, it’s a bit better.

Foreign believers rarely produce faith.

They don’t even know much about the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

However, in the face of a meteorite collision, Lee Ho-jae Faith was able to help.

Anytime, anywhere, you can get fresh food with only a score.

And it helps even when you are seriously injured or in danger.

Before the end, the Lee Ho-jae Faith became a very valuable commodity.

Of course, as soon as people encountered the Lee Ho-jae Faith, they tried to collect points.

They didn't ignore system messages while worrying about fraud.

Now, whether it was a sturdy string or a rotten string, they had to grab it.

It was good to increase the number of believers and to spread the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

It was also okay to show the rewards to the congregation as an event.

The problem was that my strength and supplies were leaking out.

Another problem was that the supply and demand of faith could not keep up with the expenditure now that most of the believers are earning points based on public value rather than faith.

“In the future, it will all come back as faith. I think it's an investment.”

Kim Min-hyuk said.

I thought so too.

In fact, the deficit was not enough to have a big impact on my strength.

But... It is a little dangerous.

Basically, I wouldn't like any more disadvantages that come from others.

Of course, I am confident that it will be profitable in the future, but if things go wrong, it will be quite annoying.

“Turn it off.....”

I checked the phone.

From riots to light crimes such as theft and assault.

The Internet news section, which was reminiscent of a post-apocalyptic worldview, was filled with stories about the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

People who had been turning away from the Lee Ho-jae Faith in the meantime, were urgently looking for relevant information.

My believers did not miss the opportunity to earn merit and spread information widely.

The same was true of foreign internet forums.

So, starting with what the hell is the Lee Ho-jae Faith?

Information on how to get the most important points and how to earn rewards.

At first, the translations of Korean believers passed, and at some point, foreigners who became new believers began to produce their own promotional materials.

-the Lee Ho-jae Faith Compensation List

-How to survive the apocalypse through the Lee Ho-jae Faith

All those who have confirmed the Lee Ho-jae Faith will see the Lee Ho-jae Faith system window.

If you accidentally turn it off and have not been able to check it, you can check it again from the link below.

The Lee Ho-jae Faith supplies a variety of things through 'faith'.

The main ones are food and survival capsules.

If you collect achievements and purchase survival capsules, you can be guaranteed survival even in meteorites.

Food can be obtained in capsules with a constant gathering of faith every month.

And...

-Real purchase video of Lee Ho-jae Faith survival capsule

-[Subtitle] How to gain faith in the Lee Ho-jae Faith

☐Thank you for the kind video. No matter how much I searched, I could only find explanations in Korean, but thanks to that, I understood.

☐So, you have to join as a believer to gain faith, right? Should I find a flight ticket to Korea even now?

☐Because there are Lee Ho-jae Faith branches all over the world right now, there's no need to do that. Of course it depends a little on where you live now.

-[Subtitle] How to obtain the Lee Ho-jae Faith official value

-The most effective ways to earn public value

-[Q&A] I am teaching English in Korea, and I became a member of the Lee Ho-jae Faith last week. If you have any questions, I'll explain.

There was a news article about the Lee Ho-jae Faith on the main portal site.

Related content was also spread to the webpages of game enthusiasts and small communities.

Videos explaining how to use the Lee Ho-jae Faith's system were also uploaded on video sites such as Youtube.

The speed of the spread was a bit weird.

It was almost like some kind of virus.

Evangelism was conducted at a rapid pace in Korea, but not this much.

There were so many desperate people.

Before the meteorite hits Earth, people who were eager to get as many points as possible used various methods that I never thought of to promote the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

And I earned points as well.

“You, can you read English? Isn’t it only possible to speak with your skill?”

Asked Kim Min-hyuk.

Of course I can read it.

As I am a god, how could I not read foreign languages?

And even before I went into the Tutorial, I spoke English.

Kim Min-hyuk asked as I nodded my head.

“By the way... These people are going to buy those capsules for survival now.”

Kim Min-hyuk said, pointing to the numerous promotional posts that appeared on his cell phone.

It was.

It was to get points, and to get food and survival capsules with those points.

Survival capsules preceded food.

Food could be obtained somehow, but a survival capsule that was safe even if a meteorite fell could not be obtained without the reward of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

“But aren’t you going to stop the meteorite?”

“Mhm.”

“Then this... Isn’t that a real scam? It’s a survival capsule you don’t need.”

“Well... yes.”

That doesn’t mean you can’t sell the capsules.

That capsule and food are the biggest factors that are now attracting people to the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

At first, after urgently changing the points to food, they confirmed that they can really get rewards through the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

After finding out it was true, they became more involved in the religion for the capsule.

Well... If I had to explain it, it was like a scam to trick people by showing samples and examples of multi-level scammers first, and then showing multi-level vision and future income.

Well, I couldn’t even say no.

Anyway, it was true that this method was effective.

You should paddle when the water comes in.

The believers who bought the survival capsule might be a little dissatisfied.

We can do a refund event later.

And those who buy survival capsules can earn significant public value just by showing or notifying others.

There will be no damage.

I left my phone for a while and looked around the globe.

It was still in an uproar.

There were people running sweatily on the soles of their feet to get the Lee Ho-jae Faith's score, but there were too many people in an urgent situation that couldn't even care about it.

There are two reasons for most of the unrest in the news of a meteorite impact.

To ensure survival.

Or because they can't guarantee survival.

In order to somehow survive the meteorite collision, people stole by breaking the windows of supermarkets to secure even a little bit of food.

They went to safe houses of people they didn't know, tried to get inside.

While protesting the government to make a way to survive, they couldn't stand the anxiety and fear and tried to bring down the police or the other leaders.

They attack others first, fearing that the power to protect themselves will disappear or be stolen.

Some gave up on their hope for survival and recklessly destroyed what they saw around them for a moment of liberation and self-destructive pleasure.

Attacking others, taking in the sense of superiority of that moment, degrading themselves and overcoming the fear of death.

I looked at Kim Min-hyuk.

This guy was reading the latest news without hesitation, then he put his laptop and mobile phone on the table and turned the windows off and on.

He was nervous.

His legs were trembling.

Considering that he was extremely timid.

I could see how much Kim Min-hyuk is shaking right now.

It wasn't the fear of the meteorite colliding.

Kim Min-hyuk believed that I was going to get rid of the meteorite.

He's a guy who doesn't know anything about my strength.

Rather, it was the fundamental anxiety and excitement of the person watching the whole world overturned by an event.

Somehow I felt a sense of wit.

When I did something grand, these people were the ones I saw often in the Tutorial stage before.

Due to the nature of the Tutorial Hell difficulty, I have often seen the end of the world and the people living in it.

Perhaps that's why this was nothing new or surprising.

People who usually cower behind their backs in fear usually have a similar reaction.

[Breaking News] Emergency Summit held. The venue is Korea.

Breaking news came up.

It wasn't on the Internet, it was news that came via text message on the phone.

Similar to the event of an earthquake, the cell phone vibrated for a long time to notify the news as if it were a disaster warning.

When I turned on the news, an elderly man was making a presentation with a firm expression.

The summit was held in Korea, and he said that he will do his best to resolve this crisis as wisely and peacefully as possible.

Hochi stood behind him.

Why is he there again?

He seems to be working hard to make up for his mistakes.

“But who is that uncle?”

“...He is the President.”

Oh, I remember.

I know he's been getting along with Hochi recently.

“Through this meeting, we will work with the leaders of each country to resolve negative perceptions of the Lee Ho-jae Faith so that more people can survive the crisis through the Lee Ho-jae Faith.....”

* * *

So a day passed.

“Brother... Should we... Really do something like this...?”

Asked the younger brother.

The older brother, who was holding the baseball bat next to his younger brother, answered.

“...I can’t help it. The nearby supermarkets have already been robbed. I can’t go any further because the gas station is out of oil. If we’re going to live... I have to do it for our family.”

His older brother had a wife and two young daughters.

The younger brother, who lived in his older brother’s house, knew how much his brother loved his family.

So he couldn’t stop him.

“Near here... The only place where you can get more food is in other people’s homes.”

It was a very remote place.

Thanks to this, he was not caught up in the raging protesters or bikers. However, it was difficult to get food, and eventually they decided to invade others’ homes on their own.

The two held the baseball bat tight and leaned against the wall.

Just go over the fence, break the window, and break into the house like that.

The people living in this house were old couples.

They will not be able to defeat the strong brothers.

But.

“Brother.....”

The younger brother kept crying and hesitating.

Even though he knew that this was the only way he could survive, even though he knew he had to do it not only for himself, but also for his family members.

Still, he couldn't make this tough decision.

"Brother, can we just get food with points.....?"

"...You idiot. That's not enough."

The brothers also knew about the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

All of the family members received the Lee Ho-jae Faith's event privileges, and they even registered as recommendations for each other to get as many points as possible.

And all those points were converted to food.

But it was still lacking.

There was a disaster shelter in the basement, but there was barely enough food to eat for a few dozens of days.

The younger brother wasn't comfortable with this.

He had lived a life where he had never harmed anyone.

This kind of thing was neither familiar nor pleasant.

But the brothers could not back down.

"Let's go."

The older brother said again, and his younger brother could not refuse.

It was then when the two put their hands on the wall.

[Warning!]

[If you commit a criminal act, your official value may be deducted.]

[If your official value becomes negative, you cannot obtain new rewards until all negative points are paid.]

[If the public value falls below a certain level, you may be subject to penalties and sanctions.]

“...Brother.”

“...Uh.”

The brothers had to pause for a moment with their hands on the wall.

They were embarrassed, but they were also a little creeped out.

A message that appeared immediately after committing a crime.

Someone was watching them.

[It is recommended to purchase additional food with more public value and faith.]

[How to get public value is well explained on the needle portal site. Check it out, you punks. Don't you know Google, Yahoo or Wiki?]

[The faith comes in steadily every month like saving money, so if you stack it once, you will be able to secure food regularly for a long time.]

“...Let's go home first.”

The brothers hurriedly fell off the wall and started running to their homes.

And a message appeared to them again.

[You have made the right choice.]

[Acquired 20pt as a reward.]

[Don't tell others that you got points for trying to steal.]

Chapter 346

Earth (2)

[Crime rates are declining. Is the Lee Ho-jae Faith really the answer?]

After the meteorite was announced, crime rates across the country began to drop sharply.

The day after the meteorite was announced, the Lee Ho-jae Faith announced the sale of survival capsules and food that could survive the meteorite crash, and accordingly, crimes such as theft and residential intrusion, which were spreading like flames, quickly disappeared.

It's not just a story of Korea.

In most of the areas where the Lee Ho-jae Faith had spread, the crime rate had plummeted.....

-Isn't that natural? In the midst of this, the only ones who break through the door of a convenience store are real criminals. Just sitting still, writing a comment, and praying, you can solve the problem of what to eat. So let's trust the Lee Ho-jae Faith. Cold-hearted and charismatic, Lee Ho-jae is awesome.

-If I knew it would be like this, I would have joined the Lee Ho-jae Faith in advance and earned some public value... Fuck. I wrote comments all day and I've only earned 3000 points.

-I have already secured a survival capsule because my mother was an early believer in the Lee Ho-jae Faith. Haha

-Wow, congratulations. But what's your address?

-Why are you asking for my address?

A few more days passed.

The time until the predicted meteor crash was decreasing.

But Earth was quickly regaining its tranquility.

This was usually the case in areas where the Lee Ho-jae Faith was spread.

The crimes committed to gain food in a time of crisis were completely resolved.

Rather than breaking into an already empty convenience store or factory warehouse, or breaking into someone else's house to get food, it was much better to get the Lee Ho-jae Faith's rewards.

The quantity was higher, it was much safer, and the freshness of the food was guaranteed at the time of purchase.

Above all, it wasn't that difficult to get a reward.

[New sign-up event!]

[As soon as you join as a regular member, you can get an additional 150pt.]

[Please visit the nearest government office or the Lee Ho-jae Faith branch!]

Honestly, it was a beneficial event.

Those who confirmed that the rewards of this system were genuine became members of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

If there was no Lee Ho-jae Faith in their area, they even opened a branch themselves.

If one put a sign saying the Lee Ho-jae Faith XX branch in front of one's gate and sketched the mark of the Lee Ho-jae Faith, it was also a kind of branch and temple.

Once they became a member of the Lee Ho-jae Faith, they could not commit crime.

If a crime was committed, the content of the crime would be shown in the religious window.

And it could be easily checked by others.

It was the same as walking around with the stigma of a crime stamped on their forehead.

In fact, police now started checking people's religious windows instead of ID cards.

In some areas, in order to lower the crime rate (and to gain public value for local leaders), all citizens were forced to join the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

People who became enthusiastic about public value actively reported criminals when they found them, and even caught them and handed them over to the police.

In this situation, the criminals had no choice but to repent for forgiveness or hide in a place out of sight.

It became an environment where people could not commit crimes because they were scared of human eyes.

However, there were some places where criminals were not afraid of being seen.

Usually, this was the case in areas where gangs expelled public power and created lawless zones when the unrest had just occurred, areas occupied by criminal or terrorist groups, and areas where the regime was reversed by coups by the military or awakened.

In Egypt, a group of awakened people who occupied the region forced local residents to join the Lee Ho-jae Faith and confiscated the food obtained as compensation.

Then, they tried to get their own survival capsules using the public value of the local people.

Of course, there was no way for public value to accumulate.

So instead of rewards, the challengers of the Tutorial were dispatched.

* * *

Muhammed, who had illegally occupied the province of Luxor in Egypt, was struck by an unexpected raid.

An unidentified enemy who unexpectedly struck government offices instantly annihilated his colleagues.

They couldn't even resist.

Muhammed was a bold Awakened who cleared the Tutorial's hard difficulty and accumulated various majors on Earth.

However, even in his eyes, the attacker's skills were extraordinary.

His own colleagues were wiped out before they could even resist properly.

Muhammed gave up his resistance and escaped, trying to talk his way out.

Then he noticed that the attacker's face was familiar.

"Khalik! You're Khalik!?"

He found a challenger of hard difficulty like himself, Khalik.

"You saw me in competition! We used to talk about it in the community!"

A man called Khalik replied after tilting his head for a moment.

“Ah... I did. Are you Muhammed?”

“Right! Yes, I am Muhammed.”

Muhammed answered back even though he felt suspicious.

That Khalik was stuck in the Tutorial.

How is he on Earth?

And for what reason was Khalik attacking him?

Above all else, how did he become so strong?

Rather than immediately asking questions, Muhammed began talking to divert Khalik's attention and gain favor.

“You said that your family is in Rousseau, right?”

“No.”

“Huh...? I'm sure you...”

“My family is being protected elsewhere.”

Khalik, who responded frankly, frowned.

It was because of the message that appeared before his eyes.

[Warning! GM has confirmed your negligent attitude.]

[Spending time meaninglessly during a mission may be subject to discipline]

[GM demands that the mission be completed immediately.]

“Ha... I wanted to rest a little more.”

“What...?”

Khalik swung his sword at Muhammed, who expressed doubt.

After killing him neatly, Khalik threw his sword into his inventory and checked the settlement message.

[Special Quest – Defeat the hordes of awakened criminals who occupy Luxor.]

[The special dispatch mission has been successfully accomplished.]

[Reward 1732pt.]

[The dispatch mission ends.]

[Return to the Tutorial. Be prepared for the move.]

Khalik felt gloomy.

He will surely start a mission as soon as he returns to the Tutorial.

“...The mission is over, can I take a break?”

[GM denies your request. You still need more training.]

“Ha.....”

Khalik was summoned to the Tutorial with a sigh.

* * *

“It’s empty.”

Said Seregia.

I agree.

Everyone got busy, so I was left alone at the temple.

Hochi and Kim Min-hyuk were really busy.

In particular, Hochi wanted to make up for his mistake, attending the summit meeting to inform the Lee Ho-jae Faith and preaching in remote areas where the Lee Ho-jae Faith could not be spread.

Hochi knew the timing. He introduced new features to the believers.

It was a joint purchase.

[The joint purchase function will be activated from today onwards.]

[With the consent of multiple people, joint purchase of rewards is possible.]

[Joint purchase event begins!]

[When purchasing for more than 100 people, the price of the item will be discounted by 10%.]

[[When purchasing for more than 10,000 people, the price of the item will be discounted by 20%.]

[When purchasing for more than 1,000,000 people, the price of the item will be discounted by 30%.]

It is now possible to collect all of the family's scores and purchase survival capsules one by one.

Of course, it was not a function for selling capsules.

[Superior Miracle-Outer Space Confrontation:
10,000,000,000,000pt]

[You can protect the planet from threats from space.]

[For example, a meteorite.]

[Co-purchase is in progress.]

[You can participate in joint purchase after consent.]

[Current Purchase Achievement-Outer Space Confrontation: (814,332/10,000,000,000,000)]

It was for this.

Honestly, there was a lot of skepticism.

Obviously, a conspiracy theory will emerge that the meteorite was manipulated to crash on Earth for the expansion of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

It was questionable whether the score of 10 trillion would be gathered.

Would people spontaneously try to score those astronomical figures?

It was unlikely.

First, I decided to leave it to Hochi, so I didn't stop him.

“Why aren't you doing anything by yourself? Why are you the only one lazing around?”

It was shocking.

I can't believe Seregia asked me why I'm so lazy.

“Because I have nothing to do.”

“Isn't there a quest for the Hundred Gods Temple?”

“No.”

“Yes?”

There really wasn't.

A few days ago, the quest window of the Hundred Gods Temple went blank.

[God of Light-(Completed)]

[God of Light-(NEW!)]

[God of Light-(NEW!)]

[God of Remorse-Dialogue with the God of Duel (Completed)]

[God of Origin-Dialogue with the God of Duel (Completed)]

[God of Commitment-Dialogue with the God of Duel (Completed)]

[God of Hope-Truce (Completed)]

[God of Death-Purification of Thanatos (in progress)]

[God of Heaven-?]

[God of Adventure-?]

[God of Pain-?]

[God of Nature-?]

.

.

.

If it wasn't an already completed quest, it was all question marks.

Kirikiri said that the question mark means that they have not yet decided on a quest.

All of the quests that weren't question marks were either already completed or in progress, so there was nothing I could do.

There was a quest from the God of Light, but I decided to ignore that.

"That's weird."

"Right?"

Although there wasn't a question mark before.

Not all remaining gods have question marks.

Something is coming.

I had to think so.

Since it was on the verge of an event, I decided to finish the quest and watch the result.

To be able to reset the quest according to the result.

"Is that really just a meteorite?"

"Maybe not. If it isn't, you can use it to decorate a different story."

In any case, I had to remain still on Earth in order to be prepared for an emergency.

At least until I know what's going on.

“How about the rabbit?”

Seregia asked about Kirikiri.

“I do not know.”

After the quest window was flooded with question marks, she couldn't be contacted.

I then realized that previously I was too dependent on Kirikiri.

Most of the information I knew came from Kirikiri.

“Have you thought about the possibility of turning around?”

“What are you talking about?”

“When the Hundred Gods Temple quests are all completed, they promised to transfer the Tutorial to you. If you do not complete the quests, it cannot be transferred. They may deliberately not present a quest in order to not give the Tutorial.”

Things like that were possible too.

In fact, it is very likely.

It isn't only one god who doesn't want to pass the Tutorial to me.

There must be at least four or five.

And such gods can use the very simple method of not giving me a quest.

I was expecting it from before.

The God of Hope did that.

There has been a story that they have been taking advantage of the system loopholes, and even within the Tutorial.

Even if I recall the words they said to me in the past, the God of Hope was a god that would think negatively of the Tutorial transfer.

Although the God of Hope attacked first, the fight began.

If not, someday I would have attacked the God of Hope first.

From the beginning, I tried to clear the quest as much as possible, but I was thinking of obtaining permission even for the gods who gave impossible quests with effort.

“What if all the remaining gods reject the system?”

Asked Seregia.

There was nothing to worry about.

The answer was set a long time ago.

“We have to follow the original plan.”

Before making a deal with Kirikiri to transfer the Tutorial in exchange for the quests.

As I promised when I was trapped on the 60th floor.

“I have to beat them all down.”

Chapter 347

Earth (3)

The new function of the miracle co-purchase gave people another means of survival.

Instead of surviving the meteorite crash, it's blocking the meteorite.

The media talked about joint purchases all day long.

It was a fairy tale story that everyone could join forces to prevent the end of the world.

A discount was applied to the total score for purchasing the highest quality miracle, Outer Space Confrontation.

It also calculated the number of points that must be paid per person by dividing by the number of members.

“It's definitely not a few points.”

The news anchor across the screen said.

“Although viewers who are watching TV may be able to check it, my faith score is 29pt every month.”

The anchor was also a member of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Now, most of the people in the profession who appeared on TV believed in the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

It was because of the religious window that could be checked over the screen through Hochi's updates.

The believers weren't happy to see actors belonging to other religions than the Lee Ho-jae Faith appear on TV.

The broadcasting station sent out a performer from the Lee Ho-jae Faith that viewers liked.

Now, rather than how attractive and capable celebrities are, it has become a world that considers how faithful they are.

"It's a very small score compared to the 10 trillion points needed to stop a meteorite."

The anchor talked about his merit value.

He had a fairly high merit value because he was able to express his opinions in front of the public.

However, compared to the 10 trillion points, it was too small, like the Faith.

"Experts have affirmed that we cannot collect 10 trillion points with public value. There is a limit to the number of points that can be obtained with money and social status, so it is not finite, but raising faith is the answer to securing 10 trillion points."

It was the opinion of experts, but at the same time,

"There is enough time left for the meteorite to hit the Earth. Obviously, 10 trillion points is a lot, but we will build our faith higher. It is time to evangelize to those who are still turning away from the Lee Ho-jae Faith."

The anchor said, staring straight ahead.

"We must work together to protect ourselves, our families, and even all of us and our world. That's it from 9 o'clock news..."

The anchor's comment was too inflammatory.

But the viewers cheered.

[Co-purchase is in progress.]

[You can participate in joint purchase after consent.]

[Current Purchase Achievement-Outer Space Confrontation: (22,314,332/10,000,000,000,000)]

In fact, since broadcasting companies started talking about joint purchases day after day, there had been tangible results.

Many people poured out their faith and achievements in joint purchases.

Because people would save each other's scores, the opinion that no one would participate in the joint purchase was bleak.

If a meteorite collided because they did not reach 10 trillion points, people would lose everything.

Their lives and the world they lived in.

They were thrilled by the solution that appeared before the crisis.

They felt a sense of unity and belonging from the fact that so many people were sharing their will.

And through it, people were able to find a sense of stability from anxiety and fear.

The movement to collect gold on religious plates had spread all over the world, and people worked hard to evangelize and gather public value while desperately studying ways to increase their faith.

Faith was not something that could be gathered through any methodology. But through the process of immersion, faith naturally deepened.

The people who had already purchased survival capsules started to make a sound.

It was buried in the voices of many who could not find a survival capsule.

Even for those with survival capsules, since the meteorite had not fallen yet, no one made a big commotion about it.

* * *

“Can you really collect 10 trillion points?”

Asked Kim Min-hyuk.

I was skeptical.

No matter how much there is a discount for joint purchases, 10 trillion points is not a small number.

“Well.”

“How about lowering the price? As an event.”

I didn’t know if they would give me more points, but I couldn’t lower the price here.

The miracle of the highest grade is very different from the miracle of the lower grade.

All of the top miracles on my list of religious windows are divine powers.

Another special thing is this power.

It is the power of a god who can really do ‘all things’ against an ungodly person if there is enough divine power.

Naturally, the divine power is not infinite.

Unless it is a holy place of his own, a God can only perform miracles with limited power.

Even the divine power is not recovered just by resting like magic power.

Unlike ordinary miracles, power is connected to the foundation of divinity.

The consumption of divine power is extremely small, and utilization is much more free.

Seregia defined power as a miracle of using only faith in oneself.

Of course, not all gods became gods with just their own faith, but there will be no gods whose faith toward themselves does not even exist.

Power played a similar role to divinity to explain the identity of God.

Therefore, most gods had only a small number of powers.

The reason I have a variety of powers enough to fill the list of religious windows is because in the past, Hochi had cheated the gods of the Pantheon and received numerous powers.

While I interpreted those powers, I made them mine by remodeling and modifying them.

Because of the nature of my divinity, the powers of other gods never conflicted with my essence, so I was able to handle all of them fully.

However, having many powers does not mean that the value of each power is lowered.....

“Anyway, power is good because it costs less. It’s a grand explanation.”

Hochi, who was listening to the explanation, took a different approach.

Hochi tends to treat power too insignificantly.

It was natural because he had so easily obtained many powers and was neglecting it because he did not know how to use them properly.

“...I can’t lower the price of a super powerful miracle.”

“What if they can’t collect 10 trillion points in the end?”

“I’ll just stop it, well. They haven’t collected enough points, but I am impressed by the sincerity and I will write a miracle for free! You can publish it like this. The collected scores are just distributed again.”

Their benefit was also my benefit.

Of course, I am not unilaterally losing money.

My good will to the believers and stopping the meteorite will help to establish a vertical relationship between God and them.

If they witness the splendid effect of me destroying the meteorite and even returning their points, people’s faith will skyrocket.

Of course it would be a loss though.

“Is that okay?”

“It’s all right.”

The meteorite must be stopped anyway.

Unless I’m giving up on Earth.

Obviously, the loss was a loss, but it wasn’t something I couldn’t afford.

“You can think of it as an investment for the future.”

* * *

People were gathered in front of the temple.

Since it was a renovated temple that was originally a World Cup stadium, there was a large vacant lot and parking lot in front of the temple.

People filled the spot, and because that wasn't enough, they took over the surrounding roadways.

The police were working hard to block the roads to keep cars out of the way, while controlling the countless people gathering in front of the temple.

Not long ago, people gathered in front of the temple and spent time singing songs and shouting slogans.

What started out with dozens of people first appeared in the news, and it grew to about a thousand.

And when it was revealed that the people's faith was increasing as the time spent in front of the temple increased day by day, the number of people gathered in front of the temple began to exceed 10,000 units.

In fact, having been in front of the temple for a long time did not have the effect of increasing faith.

It was just because they had endured the discomfort and looked at the temple, prayed for a miracle for a long time, and because my presence in their hearts grew that much, it naturally increased.

Anyway, people said they found a way to increase their faith, and they began to gather in front of the temple.

It wasn't just Korea.

In foreign countries, pilgrims came to Korea saying that they had to go to the Holy Land and pray in person rather than the temple of a foreign branch.

So, an unprecedented crowd gathered.

From the temple, I could see crowds of people on the road and on the roof of the building.

No matter where I look, I can't see the asphalt on the road.

“Ahaha! That's cute!”

Yong-yong said, looking through the window of the temple.

Is that cute?

I had a strange feeling because the people looked like a swarm of ants.

Maybe Yong-yong found interest in that.

“Not much time is left.”

[Co-purchase is in progress.]

[You can participate in joint purchase after consent.]

[Current Purchase Achievement-Outer Space Confrontation: (459,237,143,832/10,000,000,000,000)]

Kim Min-hyuk said.

There is not much time left before the meteorite hits Earth's surface.

People didn't know yet.

Governments of each country have manipulated the time remaining until the meteorite impact to prevent confusion as much as possible.

People believed that there were still a few days left for the meteorite to crash.

“We have to start.”

I used my power to make white magic linger around the temple.

People started to cheer at the sudden change.

The loud shouts were transmitted to the temple.

“You know what it is and you like it.”

“What?”

“It’s just a light.”

It is literally white light.

It is a performance light that is clearly visible even in broad daylight by mixing magical power.

[Warning! The meteorite is approaching Earth.]

[Co-purchase is in progress.]

[You can participate in joint purchase after consent.]

[Current Purchase Achievement-Outer Space Confrontation:
(459,237,143,832/10,000,000,000)]

[Superior miracle-There is not enough accumulated points to use the outer space battle system.]

[Superior miracle-4592 billion pt has been accumulated for joint purchase of the outer space confrontation.]

[Superior Miracle-The joint purchase of the outer space matchup has been canceled.]

People in front of the temple began to tremble when they saw the message.

I like this.

Since there are believers in front of me, it was easy to see the reaction.

[Scores consumed for joint purchase will be returned.]

[Although it is a religion that is not yet mature, many believers have shown dedication for themselves and for all.]

[1% of the points spent for the top-level miracle joint purchase are paid as additional points.]

In addition to returning the spent points as they were, I put in 1% interest.

It was a huge loss to the point that it was painful.

It was necessary.

When another crisis came one day, the believers shouldn't have let go of their hands, thinking that I would save it on my own.

The believers had to actively participate and devote themselves to compensation.

[In the face of a global crisis, a single, top-notch miracle is used at no cost.]

[Prepare to be amazed]

Along with the roar, the white magic that circulated around the temple soared into the sky.

As the cloudy air of Seoul and the dark clouds above the sky were pushed away, a pillar of light stretched out beyond it.

A bright white pillar of light that penetrated the atmosphere from the surface.

It was large and bright enough to be seen outside of Seoul as well as in foreign countries depending on their locations.

No scene would look more sacred than this.

“Oh, cool, cool.”

Said Hochi from the side.

The pillar of light reached the end of the atmosphere, the outer atmosphere, and formed a huge circular barrier.

Now, when the meteorite hits that barrier, it only needs to burst splendidly with a wonderful effect.

The appearance of the barrier cannot be seen with the naked eye...

“Huh? What’s that.”

“What?”

There was something strange about the meteorite.

I’m sure...

“It was just a stone block before.”

Suddenly, a powerful divine power began to be felt in the meteorite.

“Dad.”

Yong-yong also felt the strength and called me by holding my sleeve.

If that was God's plan and they intended to attack me and the Earth, then I should get my hands on it right now.

So that the impact on Earth wouldn't be as bad.

However, I had to hesitate for a moment because of an unexpected voice.

[Hi buddy! Long time no see.]

The voice that penetrated my head was that of a very familiar god.

It was the God of Hope.

Chapter 348

God of Hope (5)

[Hi buddy!]

No matter how much I thought about it, that was the God of Hope.

[Hahaha, what are you so surprised about?]

It was surprising.

In many ways.

Secondly, it was a mystery how he was able to get here while going under my radar.

Why did the God of Hope come here?

“Did you come here because you want to be wiped out?”

While running away from me, he was desperate to see the Holy Land and the believers I robbed.

You may have run away with the feeling that you have nothing to lose.

No, it can't be.

This is the human point of view.

If you are the God of Hope, you will appreciate the fact that you survived in the midst of that, and that fact will give you the strength to withstand the future.

[I'm sorry about that. I'm here to make a deal.]

A deal.

I wondered what the God of Hope could give me.

Even during this conversation, the meteorite was approaching Earth.

To reduce the damage even a little, I had to attack now.

[Haha, let's finish our play first.]

With the words of the God of Hope, the meteorite dramatically slowed down.

It stopped as if parked in front of the barrier.

A heavy roar rang out everywhere.

A huge and intense light spread out near the barriers and meteorites.

However, it was light enough to not blind the human eyes.

It was such a light that anyone would have thought that the barrier and meteorite collided.

The meteorite stopped in front of the barrier, and the noise and light was artificially created by the God of Hope.

People who were silent about the meteorite's approach began to murmur.

[The meteorite approaching Earth was blocked by the top-level miracle- Outer Space Confrontation.]

People began to cheer with confidence at the system message that appeared in front of them.

Just before, a shout as much as the roar from the sky echoed from the surface.

* * *

[That was very innovative. How can you use the system window like that?]

The God of Hope whispered.

[But why don't you give me a loan? If you get a little interest, you will be able to produce great results for you and for the believers.]

It wasn't fair.

A miracle loan without collateral will ignite human desires.

And bound by the shackles of that desire, I'll live my whole life struggling.

The human society of the present Earth is highly dependent on the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

However, it was not enough to destroy even the core of that basic society.

They worked for Lee Ho-jae Faith's score, worked hard, and obtained what they wanted in return, but in the end, it was an extension of the marketist society.

However, if anyone could borrow miracles at no cost, and if coercion and interest were added to repay them, only life to earn religious points would remain.

Labor for repayment, not for purchase, becomes exploitation.

[I learned something really good. I want to apply it to my believers right now.]

"Are there any believers left?"

[Sure.]

The God of Hope said, licking his lips.

He wasn't like the flying bug you usually saw.

He was in the form of a human girl.

Although he was good looking and had pretty eyes, he looked like an ordinary child who could be seen anywhere else in the neighborhood.

I was invited by the God of Hope to enter the meteorite.

And in that space was the God of Hope, two chairs, and a table in between.

It was a space where only those existed.

[Sit down.]

The God of Hope said, pointing to the chair in front of him.

I sat in one of the chairs and asked,

“What's with that?”

[My original look?]

“That's awful.”

There is no way the God of Hope originally looked like that.

And even if his original appearance remained, it couldn't be that way.

The God of Hope is a god who moves according to the idea of 'hope' that he has set and makes it his identity.

I know most gods do.

Because of that, it is impossible to confine self-consciousness to such a weak and ordinary body.

“It must be a look to show me.”

[I did some research on you. I referred to your dragon son. I mean, dragons are a great race.]

The God of Hope smiled.

“If you uselessly raise my family, the ceasefire agreement that protected you will disappear.”

Rude remarks about the family can be perceived as aggressive remarks that violate the agreement.

According to my arbitrary interpretation.

[Why are you so angry? Thanks to me, you could also earn faith.]

“Well, you also gathered your faith, right?”

If the meteorite was not a natural disaster, but a device by the God of Hope.

The God of Hope would also have gained faith from the people of Earth.

People who recognized the meteorite felt despair and fear as they recalled the meteorite that was flying to Earth.

And hope too.

Whenever that hope gathered through the central point of Lee Ho-jae Faith and headed for a meteorite, the God of Hope would have rejoiced and accepted the power.

You probably earned more faith than me.

Unlike simply worshipping me as their savior, people would have conjured up the clear notion of despair as they saw a meteorite.

“If it’s this way, you can rake your faith anywhere.”

Dropping a meteorite into any world, or causing any disaster even if it is not a meteorite.

You don’t need the name of God of Hope.

Just as I pretended to be the God of Hope, the God of Hope only borrows a shell called a meteorite.

Faith in meteorites goes to the God of Hope.

[It’s the classic method. If you don’t intend to spread your name and just want to gather faith in the short term, there is no other way. Haha, don’t look so sorry. The faith I gained from Earth wasn’t much.]

The God of Hope said with a real smile.

That was true.

The power the God of Hope had gathered on Earth was of little significance.

Like I don’t care much about the faith I’ve gathered on Earth.

Compared to the power of the God of Hope, the faith of the Earth was too small.

In other words, it was also said that the God of Hope was that huge.

The Earth’s faith is meaningless.

“I heard that you’re struggling and losing your strength.”

Kirikiri had spoken as if the God of Hope’s strength had been extremely weakened by the blow he suffered from me.

But the God of Hope right in front of me didn't look like that at all.

He just received my power with his body and didn't show much.

It was just the power I could sense right away.

[Who? Oh, Kirikiri? It looks like the rabbit is on the verge of getting weaker and not breathing. haha.]

The God of Hope laughed and cried.

It was really annoying to see him laughing in that body as if he were a real child.

[Before, I offered you a deal. I came for that deal.]

"According to the conditions at that time?"

[Yes. Without any change, according to the conditions at that time.]

The God of Hope had offered me a deal.

The condition of the God of Hope was simple cooperation.

My condition was how to get out of the system's constraints.

The God of Hope was an unusual god.

In a way, he was unusual in that he often showed freedom from the system.

Kirikiri also said something that hinted at that point.

I thought the strange position that the God of Hope occupied in the Hundred Gods Temple was also related to it.

He was neither affiliated with the Hundred Gods Temple nor tied to the system.

But I really wanted to know the information if there was a way to get around the system constraints.

The reason why the Gods of the Pantheon sent apostles to the 61st floor was to know how I made the 60th and 61st floors independent from the system.

Then I thought of what Kirikiri or the God of Slowness said.

The gods were overly bound by system constraints.

And most of the gods were hoping to be free from those constraints.

[I would like you to ask a few questions before making the deal. And in turn, I'll also answer your questions as much as I can.]

The God of Hope said with a smile.

I replied after thinking for a while.

“Good.”

* * *

“No, my question comes first.”

It was natural.

It was the God of Hope that I was disappointed in.

[If you make any concessions, where does it go?]

The God of Hope asked with a pointed voice.

I ignored it without giving an answer.

Answering that question was also my answer and providing information.

[Haha, it looks like it is.]

“If you keep talking that way, there will be no deal.”

[All right, all right. Don't be angry and ask a question.]

The God of Hope kept smiling.

It was a smile that looked really pure like a girl of that age, just like the girl on the spirit of the God of Hope.

“Tell me about the God of Slowness.”

Now that it's become like this, I have to ask the questions that Kirikiri didn't answer or skipped.

The most questionable of all was the God of Slowness.

The subtle reaction that other gods showed when referring to the God of Slowness caught my mind.

[The God of Slowness. I think this will be a boring history lecture, will you be okay with that?]

Asked the God of Hope.

“Sure.”

Any lectures with substantial content were welcome.

In fact, the longer the content, the better.

[But I'll explain it briefly. If I explain too much, it's going to be my loss.]

Said the God of Hope.

[There are so many words that describe the God of Slowness, so it's hard to tell them all. This is the most intuitive modifier you can find. The greatest god, and the second most powerful.]

“Who is the first powerful god?”

[Beep! That’s outside the question.]

The God of Hope refused to explain, making an X with his hand.

[It was in the early days when the God of Slowness first appeared. It was also called Genesis. When new gods began to emerge from all over the world, when those gods recognized each other’s existence and expanded the scope of the world, the God of Slowness appeared before them. No, it is true to say that they have finally found the God of Slowness.]

It was a pretty sincere explanation.

More than I thought.

[As it is now, it was a really big shock back then. The God of Slowness was difficult to reach even with the perception of the gods. The gods honored the God of Slowness as the god of the gods, and the God of Slowness was revered and tried to achieve the unity of the grand universe.]

“...What unity?”

[Well... Should I explain this first? Ordinary people can’t interfere with other people. Because they are the same as non-gods. However, it is possible for a god to interfere with non-gods through divine power.]

It was the basic concept of godhood.

[Similarly, the godhood cannot interfere with the same godhood. But what if there were higher levels of godhood? Then those beings could intervene even with the godhood and implement what they wanted.]

I pondered for a moment at the words of the God of Hope.

Even God cannot resist interference.

Hell will unfold wherever any god rises to that position.

[The God of Slowness tried to achieve it. The unification of the universe.]

I thought about the current God of Slowness.

If the universe were unified by the God of Slowness, then there would be neither life nor death and time would just flow infinitely.

[The God of Slowness and some of the gods who were trying to ascend to that position collided. As a result, the ambitions of the great high-ranking fighters were destroyed, and the Hundred Gods' Temple and Pantheon were born.]

For a moment, I reflected on the story told by the God of Hope.

It was information that seemed to have nothing to do with me and it was a story that seemed to have happened a long time ago.

“And is this information relevant?”

[Of course it is. There are not many gods in the universe who know this story. At that time, most of them disappeared.]

“What kind of gods have remained from then to now?”

[Ask that as the next question. Now it's my turn.]

The God of Hope refused.

[I have sincerely answered your questions. I will also do the same with the next question. So I want you to answer honestly.]

“Is this an important question?”

I couldn't predict what the God of Hope would ask.

I couldn't even know why the God of Hope was trying to get something out of the information only I knew.

[Of course. I have to make sure that the line I'm holding is strong or not.]

It was a statement whose meaning could not be determined.

The God of Hope, staring at me for a moment, suddenly asked me.

[You, did you touch causality?]

It was definitely an unexpected question.

I hesitated for a moment, but I replied soon.

“...yes.”

[I thought so. You disgusting swindler.]

Chapter 349

God of Hope (6)

[Ahh! Save me, save me!]

Damn it, really.

Ignoring the words of the God of Hope, I swung the chair again.

Even ordinary furniture, if infused with divine power, can have higher strength than many weapons.

This chair was uncomfortable to hold, but there was no problem with using it to swing and attack.

Bang!

There was a shock wave that was hard to believe was caused by swinging a chair.

It was natural because I was swinging it with that much power.

[Ah, it hurts!]

It doesn't hurt.

I put down the chair I was swinging excitedly on the floor and sat down.

Damn, one of its legs creaked.

[You are too much! Can't you see my poor appearance!]

The God of Hope shouted.

Little by little, his tone changed.

He's testing out several tones.

Like his appearance.

The God of Hope sat down on his chair, organizing the scattered bob hair.

It was the appearance of a person experiencing discomfort in their legs while climbing a high place with only arm strength and having some difficulty to move the body.

Bluffing... No, it was acting.

[I might really disappear.]

“Yes, if you keep making fun of me, I'll destroy you here.”

A disgusting scammer.

Even if I just listened, I would always hear something unpleasant from the God of Hope.

It was twice as unpleasant.

[Did you hit me enough?]

I nodded.

Then the God of Hope nodded.

The God of Hope said in a lighthearted manner, as if he had been beaten.

[You are also human. In some ways, it is because the point of view is unclear.]

I got up again and lifted the chair.

[Oh! Why are you doing that again?! This is an objective fact!]

Sounds like an objective fact.

Tsk, I clicked my tongue and sat down again.

[If I had a figure that could be identified as an ‘enemy’, I would have lost a couple of limbs.]

I would have plucked his head.

Of course, the God of Hope does not die when his head is pulled out.

Just as a warning.

I don’t like the God of Hope, but as he said, it was also an objective fact.

[Only such irrational aspects are human.]

“Say it’s the emotional side.”

The God of Hope thought deeply about something alone, as if he couldn’t even hear me.

He is a god who is very interested in principles.

I don’t know what it has to do with hope, but that’s what the God of Hope shows.

It was my turn to ask again.

“How did you know I touched causality?”

[How did I know? Haha, you really didn’t know that?]

I didn't know, so I asked.

I have several guesses.

It is possible that the gods noticed when they attacked the barriers on the 60th and 61st floors.

In particular, since the God of Remorse destroyed most of the barriers, he may have seen what is hidden under the barriers.

He may have seen and speculated in the aftermath of the explosion in Antarctica.

However, it is never impossible to turn time under restrictive conditions.

It is the essence of magic to trick the laws and twist the phenomenon, and the higher concept is a miracle performed under the will of God.

If you want to deceive the law of the passage of time, you can deceive it any number of times.

So even if I look at my time regression, I cannot guarantee that my abilities are in the essence of causality.

[Didn't you win?]

“What?”

[You have beaten your alter ego that had my strength.]

I did.

In Japan.

“But?”

[But. It was a battle you couldn't win. It had tens, hundreds of times more power, and the battle aspect was a simple tug of war that poured out all the power at once. It was even a perfect alter ego with the same potential as you.]

“Same thing, difference in experience.”

[How do you know that the alter ego has no experience? I bet it had more experience than you, not less. The only difference was the presence or absence of divinity, and at the last minute it accepted my power and evened out the difference. It was a fight that it could not lose.]

But the winner was me.

[At first, I thought I was wrong. I thought your strength was so powerful that I could not even recognize it. So I abandoned the holy land and ran away.]

He was the God of Hope who spoke quietly and calmly, but his voice began to contain anger.

[But it wasn't even that. So I thought, it must be connected with your divinity.]

I was curious about the feeling of the God of Hope.

With a simple illusion, he escaped from an opponent worth fighting, and as a result, he lost his whole holy place and believers.

If the God of Hope had fought against me in the Holy Land, it would have been difficult for me to guarantee victory in full force.

Most of the power was exhausted, but in the Holy Land, miracles can be carried out without the use of power.

It was not for no reason that Seregia had advised us to return to Earth and recover with full care.

[You are a consequential god. Gaining strength through results and proving yourself. If you bring the result of a victory that has not yet occurred, even a battle that seems impossible to win can lead to victory. By completing the process through results.]

Hmm.

[So I guess. You have brought the results of the future to the present.]

It was a pretty accurate reasoning.

One question.

“The foundation is a bit poor, isn’t it?”

[In fact, I was just poking it. Thank you for being honest.]

Damn it.

* * *

[After all, you’re a swindler]

“Well, let’s say so.”

[Well, you’re shameless]

I’m originally shameless.

[If you abuse it, you will one day be squeezed into a twist of causality and die. Be careful, I’m in trouble if you die now.]

Thank you too.

If you can complete the result entirely through the causality that has been dragged out, it will not happen.

If it failed to do so, it would be a problem, but in that case it would be destroyed by the disappearance of divine nature anyway.

“But why are you in trouble when I die?”

Is it because he couldn’t retrieve the believers in my subspace?

Looking at it, the God of Hope said something about the rope he was going to catch.

[This part needs an explanation.]

“Explanation?”

[It's time for the lecture again. Are you okay?]

I decided to listen first.

I was reluctant to know that I was associated with the God of Hope, but I didn't want to refuse the information that he would let me know.

[First of all, you have to understand that our world is very far away.]

“Our world?”

[The realm of the Hundred Gods Temple.]

It was an unexpected story.

[It is not a local story. The Hundred Gods Temple has long since been pushed out of the world's mainstream. To be precise, it is isolated. Anyway, the mainstream of the world now is the Pantheon and the vassals under it.]

There was one thing to check and move on.

“Why were the Hundred Gods pushed back?”

I didn't understand.

Most of the gods of the Hundred Gods were powerful.

The only gods I've seen face to face were the God of Slowness, the God of Hope, and the God of Sacrifice.

Each one was a difficult opponent.

[Why are we pushed back? Isn't it natural that they get isolated without being able to expand, grow, or exchange due to system constraints.]

“Are there any restrictions in the Hundred Gods Temple?”

[Of course there are. But it's different from the Hundred Gods. If the restrictions of the Pantheon are legal restrictions that prevent them from crossing each other, the restrictions of the Hundred Gods are to detain and confine prisoners.]

Having heard this, it was understood that the Hundred Gods were struggling to get out of the system.

In particular, Kirikiri's behavior, hoping to get out of the constraints but maintain the system itself.

Now, it seems that she is trying to ease the restrictions of the Hundred Gods Temple.

“Why are the constraints different?”

[Because of the characteristics of the gods of the Hundred Gods. Most of the gods in the Hundred Gods participated in or opposed the unification of the universe led by the God of Slowness. The system was originally created to prevent such gods, so there is bound to be a difference in restrictions.]

Among the numerous gods, my speculation that the Hundred Gods Temple had collected the troubled children was somewhat correct.

It was different that most of the gods were involved in an incident in the distant past, but it wasn't fundamentally wrong.

[Anyway, the gods of the Pantheon and the vassals beneath them have been in territorial disputes in all universes and dimensions. We rarely face each other head on.]

“Why?”

[...Can't you just listen to the explanation? The reason is that there are enemies everywhere. If you use too much power, you can lose everything to a third enemy.]

The God of Hope explained eagerly.

When he talked about the invasion of the Holy Land, he stared at me and said, pressing one word by one.

I ignored it.

[Such disputes are also entering a standstill. There is still a lot of conflict, but it is almost gone compared to the past. This is because a certain composition of power has been established.]

It was interesting.

But it wasn't a story that touched me very much.

[In such a situation, you were exposed to the Pantheon. Does the situation make sense?]

I'm not going.

[You were not related to, and even deviated from the rules of the Pantheon system. The gods, who were relatively weak in power, were thinking that you, or they by gaining your strength, could get a chance for a new leap forward. The mighty gods also intervened under the guise of preventing confusion, and they were thinking of taking over you.]

Hmm.

First of all, the idea that they could have me as they wish was unpleasant.

Putting that point apart.

Is it a disturbance to the extent that a low-cost weapon without an owner appeared in the Murim River?

[You have even annihilated the apostles of the Pantheon who visited you.

On the 61st floor. You wouldn't say you don't remember.]

Of course I remembered.

The apostles who joined Lee Yeon-hee and entered the 61st floor.

The 61st floor was my holy place.

It was not the body of the gods, but an apostle connected through a contract, so it was easy to devour.

[The violent treatment was an excuse. You and the Pantheon have definitely formed a hostile relationship. Contrary to the expectations of the Pantheon, you have become a complete deity, and your level is increasing rapidly, but rather, the gods of the Pantheon have joined forces to separate you and make you easier to devour.]

I need to revise my thoughts.

The river will be stained with blood.

“So what does it have to do with you?”

[In fact, I also have a bad relationship with the Pantheon.]

I thought so.

The God of Hope is a god who will not get along with everyone in the world.

He smirked and laughed.

[...Not like that! We were in a trade relationship.]

“Trade relationship?”

[There is a system in the Pantheon, and it is essentially the same as that of the Hundred Gods. And I have a way to avoid the limitations of the system a bit.]

Again this is the point.

[Supply and Demand. There are many gods who want to expand their power with an expedient way to avoid restrictions, and that expedient can only be supplied to this universe by me.]

If so, you must have been aiming for a profit.

[The position of a monopolist was used to arouse desperation from the gods, fueling desire and controlling supply. Most of the faith I get comes from them. Wouldn't it be good to get along?]

The God of Hope pointed to me and continued talking.

[The problem is that thanks to someone, my holy land was blown away, my strength was reduced, and supplying them was difficult. I was on the verge of being attacked by the tributes, who gave me faith.]

That's a fun situation.

Since the target of faith is a God, when their power is weak, they are sometimes attacked instead.

I did not hide my feelings and showed them to the God of Hope.

Clap clap clap.

“Great, perfect ending. That's why you have to live nicely as usual.”

He said with a loud applause.

When I heard that the work of the God of Hope was ruined because of me, he really accused me.

The God of Hope said to me again and again while swaying with my sarcasm.

[...Anyway, you are the only one to cooperate with the gods of the pantheon.]

Chapter 350

God of Hope (7)

[So what's your answer?]

“If the price is sufficient.”

I answered the God of Hope.

If the price was sufficient, I had no reason to refuse to cooperate with the God of Hope.

It's only the physiological reluctance to hold hands with the God of Hope.

In this case, I cannot refuse.

It was in itself dangerous to turn a blind eye to a means that would certainly benefit me because of unfounded embarrassment.

It means that I have neglected to prepare for a crisis in the future, and in the future it could be an excuse to justify my defeat.

You shouldn't have thoughts such as 'Ah, I lost because I wasn't good enough' or because I didn't work that much at that time'.

As long as the God of Hope was showing himself and was giving adequate compensation, I could not reject him recklessly.

It's a thought I sometimes get after becoming a god.

I feel that the identity I have decided is not binding myself, making me feel like I'm making parts of the world.

There was a time when I thought that the subject, God, was above the concept of the divinity, and that it dominated the concept.

But in reality, even God is dominated by his own divinity.

All gods are.

There aren't many gods with extreme penalties like me, but there will be no God without any penalties.

If you are careful about penalties and limit your actions, all of the gods' actions and thoughts will soon become obsessed with one identity.

I did not become the god of that identity because I was immersed in an identity.

Identity is what forces God to look like that.

Therefore, the more intuitive the god is, the stronger and greater he is bound to be.

The fact that I remained a god even with a clear divinity border proved itself.

Slowness, light, commitment, balance, nature, hope.

These are the divinities of the major gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

The weight of the word itself was different from the Ruler gods.

I didn't even know how restricted such gods would be.

And what kind of choices have they made to exist for such a long time under these restrictions?

If I have the opportunity, I'll want to ask them directly about those experiences.

“Prepayment.”

Cooperation versus information, the offer could not be rejected.

However, the offer could be beneficial.

I had to use it.

[Prepayment?]

“Yes, throw out all the information I need.”

[...Then, what if you break your promise?]

“I will keep my promise.”

The God of Hope looked at me as if it were absurd.

[The words themselves give me disbelief. Did you know that there is no limit to telling lies?]

Oh, I got caught.

After becoming a god, it was easy to deceive because everyone guessed I couldn't lie.

The God of Hope was also a god who could partially lie, so he did not fall for it.

[Well, good. Not only information but also cooperation will benefit you, but it won't do me any harm. I will take it as collateral.]

It was a pretty heavy collateral.

It was not known whether the God of Hope knew this but still said it.

[Do you know the God of Order?]

“I know, the outsider god.”

Looking back on my experience in the tutorial, I did remember seeing messages about the God of Order a few times.

Three or four times.

Even that was when almost all gods showed interest.

By himself, he gave no noticeable responses.

He is not interested in me.

He was a god I didn't care much about.

In the first place, I didn't even want to make friends with the gods who had a strong divinity of order.

[No!]

The God of Hope sprang up and refuted with a fit of passion.

[Go ahead and cancel those words!]

“No, I don't want to?”

I don't know what it is, but I refused.

The God of Hope was resentful for a moment and muttered something, then gave up and said.

[The God of Order is the most powerful god at this time.]

“In the Hundred Gods Temple?”

[All over the universe.]

It was unexpected.

He's a god that I've never thought deeply about.

[What kind of entity do you think the God of Order is?]

Well.

I do not know.

[Think about it.]

Um.

Can't you just let me know?

Even when I first met the God of Hope in the past, the God of Hope asked me the reverse question and made me infer the answer.

At that time, I thought it was to make a desired conversation within a limited amount of information.

But now, I wondered if it was a characteristic of the God of Hope.

[Ah come on!]

The God of Hope struck me.

I got up quietly and grabbed the armrests of the chair.

The God of Hope shouted because he was beaten with the chair earlier.

[Why, why do you have to solve everything that you can figure out with only a little bit of thinking, by using violence!?!]

"You just need to tell me. Why would I waste my energy? What is the God of Order?"

It was like that before.

As long as the information is important, the God of Hope had to answer my words.

I had asked the God of Hope's question without much anxiety.

[...The God of Order now has the greatest power in the universe and exerts the greatest influence.]

After speaking, the God of Hope noticed me for a moment.

It seems that he wants me to guess the answer after hearing it, but I have no intention of acting as the God of Hope had wanted.

I waited for the God of Hope to give the answer.

[...System. Isn't it obvious?]

System.

It was an unexpected answer, but it wasn't surprising.

It was an answer that could be guessed if I had thought as the God of Hope told me to.

Even the earth, which does not have a mature self, and can't even be defined as a single creature or individual, has received the faith of people for a long time and made its own voice.

Furthermore, there were some Rulers who were forced to extract the roots and faiths gathered on Earth.

The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple and Pantheon are under the system.

Divinity accumulates whenever the gods recognize the existence of a system that restrains them.

No matter how intangible the system was, it would still have been enough to become a god.

The faith produced by mortals and the faith produced by beings who set foot in the divine nature are on completely different levels.

Moreover, if the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon that gathered all the mighty gods of the world are indirect believers, it was natural that the system would become the most powerful god in the universe.

[I am also an apostle of the God of Order.]

“Ah, I see.”

From the short words of the God of Hope, I can see how the system’s limitations were avoided.

In the first place, being an apostle itself was intended to allow gods to exert limited influence outside of their realm, avoiding the limitations of the system.

Something seemed contradictory, but it didn’t seem impossible in theory.

He is an apostle of the God of Order, which is the system itself, and of the God of Order, who makes expedients by using the gaps in that system.

There was something to consider before laughing at this though.

There was one thing that caught me.

[Quest Window]

[God of Order-???)

Description: The God of Order has nothing to do with you yet.

This is the God of Order item displayed in the quest window created by Kirikiri.

The God of Order has nothing for me.

I asked this to the God of Hope.

[Of course. Tutorials are also part of the system. The other gods may not know, but the God of Order will not agree with the transfer of the Tutorial.]

Damn it.

Things went wrong again.

* * *

The God of Order is a god with self and reason.

No matter how little he showed himself through messages, he wasn't absent.

If the God of Order is the existence of the system and the Tutorial itself, there is something to point out.

When we cleared the 59th floor, where we first achieved the source of the power.

There was a time when the power of the source collected in the stage was deprived by a certain entity.

That's probably the God of Order.

Damn, I have to get that power back someday.

Even when I cleared the 100th floor, I could feel a certain god watching me.

After all the Tutorial stages were over, the only god who would directly watch me as I was preparing to go to Earth was the God of Order no matter how much I thought about it.

If the God of Order can act and judge like other gods, it is impossible that it would transfer the Tutorial voluntarily.

The God of Order will not give me a part of himself.

Never.

I didn't think I could get all the divine consent through Kirikiri's quest window.

She thought there must be a god against it.

And in the case of such gods, I was thinking of obtaining the consent of the Tutorial transfer through force demonstrations, not quests.

But the case of the God of Order was a little different.

The Tutorial transfer itself violates the identity of the God of Order, and it will not be possible to obtain consent through appropriate force demonstrations.

There is no other way but to take it by force.

Against the most powerful god in this universe.

Damn it.

It was something that I should not have only heard about now.

It was information that I should have known about and prepared for a long time ago.

"The back of my head is tingling."

Let's think about what Kirikiri's purpose was.

She wanted to weaken the system.

She wanted to take advantage of the gaps in the system and impose sanctions on the God of Hope that would harm him.

The weakening of the system itself, the God of Order, and the sanctions of the apostle, the God of Hope.

We can organize it like this.

Kirikiri also cooperated with me until sanctioning the God of Hope.

What about after that?

Will she cooperate in conflict with the God of Order?

Kirikiri argued that she should obviously weaken the constraints of the system, while saying she still needed the system.

Perhaps the transfer of the Tutorial is a check against the God of Order.

Maybe there is a way to hand over the Tutorial to me without conflicting with the God of Order.

She hasn't told me yet, but when the time comes, she can give information about the God of Order and suggest new ways.

Kirikiri has always been like that.

She didn't give out any information that was not needed right away.

The problem was that the list in the quest window recently changed to question marks, and that Kirikiri was not responding to my contact.

[Adventure and Slowness made everyone stand by for a temporary truce and expelled me, but the God of Order will be a little different.]

The God of Hope added words as if he were reading my heart out.

[No matter how much you have touched causality, that alone cannot deal with both Slowness and Adventure. Those who swim forever and those who block their destiny, themselves symbolize a part of causality.]

Then again, the God of Hope, who changed his tone, began to whisper.

It was a God of Hope, sitting deep in the back of a chair, but the voice sounded like a whisper in my ear.

The thin eyes, as if they were almost closed, made me feel ominous just by looking at them.

[The two gods are gods that collide even though they cooperate. In the meantime, only a few have survived. The few are all imprisoned before the Hundred Gods Temple.]

It was like a snake.

It was a little messy.

As soon as I smelled that confusion, I saw the sudden change in the God of Hope, and my agitated mind calmed down.

[They said you turned down an offer to join the Hundred Gods Temple?]

The God of Hope said with a giggle.

It was a disgusting laugh.

It was an evil, mean, and nasty laugh.

The God of Hope did not hide that point and showed it.

I felt instinctively rejected by that appearance.

I had never felt negative emotions so directly after attaining full godhood.

It was like when I was human, when I felt disgust or fear that my reason could not handle.

When a frog sees a snake, it's the kind of primitive feeling that an animal might feel when it faces its natural enemy.

Various negative emotions blended together to create a mixture of pressure and fear.

It was interesting.

I was able to guess how the god of hope played with the gods of the Pantheon.

[I will ask again. Now cooperate with me.....]

“Hey.”

[...Huh?]

“Don’t you look tired?”

Chapter 351

God of Hope (8)

[Kaak!]

The God of Hope vomited something.

It was reddish.

It looked like blood.

“Amazing.”

He’s throwing up blood like a real human.

No matter how human he looks, it’s essentially still a substitute.

He couldn’t vomit blood after being beaten.

The God of Hope was still in human form.

The limbs are broken.

The skin is burnt.

The hair is burnt out.

He had a human form, but it did not look like a human.

Rather, it seemed like something in the process of becoming a human.

It seemed more disgusting to have the intention to maintain that form.

[Isn't this too much!]

The God of Hope cried out.

I was at loss for words.

“So who wants to do it in vain?”

[So did I not apologize?! I have promised to make amends already.]

As soon as the God of Hope made sure that I would not be affected by the trick, he immediately surrendered.

Of course, I attacked the God of Hope and he surrendered.

Practical gains were also important, but emotional relief was more important than that.

[It can't be like this.....]

There's no way it can't be.

The skill of the God of Hope was certainly amazing.

He used the gap in the mind to encourage some emotions and used them as material to create a sense of pressure.

A feeling of pressure created by my own emotions, not by the power of the God of Hope.

It was a kind of pressure that could not be easily shaken even by a god.

Rather, it was done more easily because I was a god.

Because a god is bound to be trapped by himself all the time.

However, my case was a bit special.

I am very sensitive to sensations such as pressure.

I immediately focus and get excited at the other person who exudes pressure like a dog facing its prey, especially if I feel great pressure.

“Ehhyo.”

I set up the fallen chair and sat down.

That’s good.

As the excitement cooled down, the mood became despondent.

[...If you’re done hitting me, would you do something about this sword?]

The God of Hope said, pointing to Seregia, which was stuck in his heart.

I thought about it again.

Had I hit the God of Hope enough?

I decided that it was enough.

“Seregia, good job. You can go back and rest.”

I didn’t even have to pull her out.

Seregia, on her own, was pulled out of the heart of the God of Hope.

And she flew in the form of a sword, tore the space, and returned to Earth.

[...What on earth did you do to that sword?]

The God of Hope, looking at the place where Seregia tore apart space and disappeared, asked in a desperate voice.

What did I do?

Yeah, of course, I did a lot of things.

I had tried so many things.

[Have you ever been stabbed by that sword? If not, you will be stabbed sooner or later. It must be full of hatred and vengeance, and it must be looking for an opportunity to stab you.]

Said the God of Hope.

I just laughed.

There is no such thing.

I could affirm.

On the 60th floor, I had tried so many things with Seregia.

Countless experiments that had tried to go further, to get stronger.

They were bizarre and cruel experiments that I tried in order to challenge the limits of my imagination, and now it was disgusting to look back on them.

I was always suffering from shortages there.

The samples were too few.

Only myself and Seregia had no objection to experimenting.

In the end, about half of the experiments were conducted on Seregia.

Most of them were meaningless experiments, but sometimes they had significant results.

What I mainly studied at the time was divine power.

It was because the clash with the gods seemed inevitable for my goal of getting a Tutorial.

How can I get the power of God?

How can I amplify it further?

On the contrary, how can I counter the divine power?

I always thought about it and found a solution.

The divine power was, in the end, a power that was supplied from the outside through connection.

That connection was key.

It was the identity and divinity of the god that connected the god who received strength and the believer who gave strength.

I had heard the explanation of the incarnation from Kirikiri.

The incarnations used by the gods in their activities were by no means all of them.

There couldn't be a concept such as 'the gods' true body is damaged when their incarnation is hurt' for gods that symbolizes an idea or image.

God was immortal and perpetuated as long as there was his divinity and the believers who supported him.

In the course of making a body, I experimented with assimilating Seregia with a replica.

When I tried to assimilate Seregia, who had already been in the ranks of the gods at that time, with a replica, I discovered a surprising phenomenon.

Seregia and some of the assimilated replicas were no longer powered by the God of Heaven.

It was an amazing phenomenon.

I defined the phenomenon as divine pollution.

The identity of one deity is altered just by attaching another deity to it.

Eventually, the incarnations, gods, and apostles of the god whose identity has been altered due to contamination cannot be supplied with power from the original divinity.

It was a temporary phenomenon.

However, it was also a surprising phenomenon that, even temporarily, could completely prevent the supply of divine power between incarnations or apostles and their original deity.

Although it cannot completely annihilate the existence of a god, it was excellent at subduing the incarnations of the other gods.

The supply of divine power can be prevented by injecting Seregia into the incarnation of the opponent's deity.

It is possible to invade the realm of other gods by tearing the barriers created by the divine power like paper sheets.

I could have destroyed an attack with divine power.

It was something we could do because it was Seregia.

Seregia herself acted as a catalyst for pollution.

It was possible because she was maintaining her character as a god.

If Seregia was a god who achieved the deity through faith gained from other believers.

Immediately after attempting to assimilate with another god, both the god and Seregia would have been neutralized.

However, Seregia, who does not possess the faith of others in the first place, is not neutralized by the contamination of the divine.

Her connection with others does not exist.

It was something I couldn't even try.

Even if I risk being neutralized and try to assimilate with other gods, there is a high possibility that I and the other god will be destroyed instead of being neutralized.

Right now, for example, look at the God of Hope wriggling like a worm.

To be arbitrarily assimilated like that, his divinity collapses in on itself.

Divinity cannot mix harmoniously with other divinities.

No matter how harmonious the concept of divinity, it is impossible.

I could be sure.

Quite meaningful experimental results existed.

In any case, the presence of Seregia is a great force in the battle against the gods.

I use all kinds of miracles.

In the end, since the essence of gods can not mix, the significance of Seregia in the battle between the gods in a simple firepower battle was enormous.

I felt like I was the only one holding a weapon in the middle of the battlefield.

It can block the opponent's attack or break through their defense.

A powerful weapon that through just swinging it at them, would leave them breathless.

It was one of the reasons for my confidence in victory.

The reason was the God of Hope, murmuring in front of me.

[It was an elaborate avatar.....]

The God of Hope took out a hand mirror from somewhere and looked at himself.

His hair was all burnt up, but his hair regrew when he touched his bare head. The features that had melted down were reborn when he touched his crushed and stuck face.

The appearance of restoring the incarnate body that had become rags seemed pitiful.

It was a battle that occurred because of the manipulation of the God of Hope.

However, thanks to that, meaningful experimental results were obtained.

First of all, even to the God of Hope, Seregia's powers worked without any doubts.

The God of Hope also recognized Seregia as a weapon of extraordinary power.

It was very valuable information.

* * *

“Okay, let's work together.”

There was enough information.

The value of the God of Hope was sufficient.

Cooperation itself didn't look bad either.

In the meantime, there was a possibility that the God of Hope would aim for the back of my head.

That was also something I had to bear and overcome.

For fear of the consequences of failure, the means of cooperation could not be ignored.

Instead.

[Then I'll go back now.]

"Where?"

[Huh?]

The God of Hope asked again.

"There's no holy ground anyway. Why don't you stay here?"

[...That's a bit difficult. I wouldn't be able to live forever in a space made like an asteroid.]

It was a lame excuse.

It didn't matter.

Anyway, I had no intention of letting the God of Hope continue on this asteroid.

"I have prepared a place for you to stay."

[What.....?]

I took out what I had prepared in the subspace.

[What is that ugly barrier?]

Yong-yong was a special collector.

Again, if you don't want to get hit in the back, this method is the best.

I should hit him first.

“What is it? This is where you will be staying for the time being.”

[That's impossible!]

Where is the impossibility in this?

The God of Hope was not in a position to reject my words.

The terms of the transaction were cooperation and exchange of information.

But I had already received enough information.

It's cooperation, or whatever you can get out of this.

Besides, if there is no condition for future cooperation, I can attack the God of Hope again at any time.

In the petty name of rejecting my offer.

[How can confining a partner be called cooperation!]

It could be.

If you are a partner who is likely to cause a fall out by hitting the back of my head, it was the right decision for each other's cooperation.

[Forced!]

“Yes, it’s forced, correct. So, do you want to go in nicely or go in roughly?”

[I’ll go in nicely!]

It was a quick judgment, a good judgment.

The God of Hope went into the collection bin on his own.

The space readjusted the size by itself.

Soon, the collection bin was reduced to the size of a table tennis ball.

As the collection bin narrowed, the God of Hope, which had maintained the form of a human girl, finally returned to the form of a flying insect.

It was like a firefly, a flying bug that gave off a small light from its body, but it looked really good when it was trapped in a small collection bin.

[Will you release me someday? You will right?]

“Well, I’m not sure either. Someday, if I feel good, I can release you, so wait with hope.”

[.....]

I got this good faith battery.

[...I have one more thing to tell you.]

“What.”

Is there any way to escape?

The God of Hope paused for a while and said.

[Some time ago, the Hundred Gods Temple defined you as a god, one not affiliated with them.]

It was information I knew.

I heard it from Kirikiri.

After hearing the information, I was somewhat embarrassed because I lost contact with Kirikiri.

I was anxious about whether the Tutorial transfer and the quest would happen.

If so, I really had to fight the Hundred Gods Temple gods and get consent.

[That means the name of the Hundred Gods Temple no longer protects you. For the time being, you will have to pay more attention to the Pantheon than the Hundred Gods Temple. The time left until the clash is not long.]

The God of Hope said calmly.

He was thinking that a dispute would come from the Pantheon.

The problem was why the God of Hope told me this at this point.

The God of Hope will not get along with the gods of the Pantheon.

They will also covet the power and information of the God of Hope.

Now, the God of Hope is telling me to pay attention to the Pantheon.

He was worried that I would pass him over to the Pantheon.

In other words, it also meant that when I and the Pantheon collided, my win rate was not high.

“Hey, but why tell me that now. You should have told me earlier.”

[Ah... I was going to tell you soon!]

Bullshit.

You were planning to show up and try again when I faced a crisis.

After a few encounters, the behavior patterns of the God of Hope were clearly visible.

I thought I shouldn't release him anymore.

* * *

[Hey, come down slowly! Slowly!]

As soon as I exited the space of the God of Hope that had been formed inside the asteroid, the telepathy from Hochi rang in my head.

As Hochi said, I slowly descended.

Very slow, slowly.

Slowly descending from the asteroid to the surface, looking around, I noticed several changes.

First, it was the number of people who gathered near the temple in Seoul.

I remember that there was a crowd of over ten million people

But the number of humans I could see right now was a number that couldn't be called only ten million.

It was tens of millions.

A crowd that could exceed even the current population of South Korea gathered in Seoul.

Humans were filling downtown Seoul centering on the temple.

The situation of the religious window was also very different.

Newly constructed temples were exceeding the existing wanted list, and the number of renewed members was to the extent that made me wonder if this was correct.

It was a level of change that couldn't happen in just a few hours when I had a conversation with the God of Hope.

[The inside of the asteroid was a space with a slightly twisted time axis.]

Said the God of Hope.

Why did you only say that now.....

[It was a policy prepared in case our conversation leaked to other gods. It didn't twist much. At best, it would be about three days here.]

I slowly descended toward the temple balcony.

As if it was ready, there was a broadcast helicopter floating nearby and taking pictures of me descending.

The humans who gathered on the street and found me were screaming without hesitation.

It was such a thoughtless roar that I couldn't even understand what they were saying.

And I could feel a great deal of faith being absorbed into me.

It was certainly a fair amount.

It was a level of faith that was different from what had been obtained from Earth before.

During the three days wasted because of the God of Hope, I couldn't know what had happened to Earth.

When I got off the balcony, Hochi, Kim Min-hyuk, and the others came out to meet me.

After being conscious of the helicopter filming us from a distance, Hochi and Kim Min-hyuk put their hands together and prayed.

“Homen.”

“Homen~”

...Are these things crazy in pairs?

* * *

“Please explain to me.”

I told Hochi as I entered the temple building so that we could not be seen from outside.

I don't understand this situation right now.

Over three days, the size of the denomination expanded by hundreds of times beyond dozens of times.

What about Homen? People are thrilled and crying and praying.

Of course, the approach of the meteorite and the manifestation of the miracle that prevented it was a good event to raise faith.

But I didn't think it would show this level of gain.

Even though I was absent for 3 days.

“I've been studying some indigenous religions here.”

Hochi said.

Did you study? You? I managed to endure what I wanted to ask.

“All of these religions were completed by death.”

“Death?”

I don't know what you're talking about.

I was not very familiar with Earth's religions.

I wasn't majoring in theology and I wasn't interested.

I wasn't even a religious person.

“Yes, death.”

“...So?”

Something felt chilly.

I had a feeling that this guy might have had an absurd accident.

“So I told people you were dead. In exchange for using excessive force while blocking meteorites.”

“...I am still alive and well.”

“No, you were dead and then resurrected.”

Oh my god.

Have you ever seen this crazy idiot?

Chapter 352

Earth (4)

“Oh! Hey, that hurts!”

“I’ll slap you till it hurts, you bastard.”

I said, striking Hochi in the back.

Even though I beat him, I was still disappointed.

I have to hit harder.

I have to make it more painful.

It was a shame that I couldn’t do more than this.

“Hey, you’re evil! Hey, it really hurts!”

Hochi screaming in pain was consolation.

Hochi is good at lying.

I don’t know what kind of character he is, but he has been like that for a long time.

He hates training and experimentation, so he avoided me with excuses like this.

He also did the same when he scammed powers from all the gods on the 61st floor.

He always did.

It was not a deliberate, insidious lie designed to trick someone, but rather a lie of a young child who wanted to escape the situation at hand.

So I never pointed them out loudly.

There were many times when I was fooled.

However, this lie couldn't be dismissed as a mere lie.

The lie that I ended up 'dead' by using excessive force to stop a meteorite could collide head-on with my divinity.

My divinity itself is shaken if my death is made true by the believers.

By nature, my divinity can be completely destroyed by a very small shake.

Unless most of the faith I'm gaining comes from the 61st floor believers.

If I had been greatly influenced by the followers of Earth, I would certainly have been weakened.

In fact, I was still wondering why I was fine.

No matter how limited the story is to the members of Earth, it is a situation that can cause some damage.

"If it weren't for you, I would have pulled something out."

Kim Min-hyuk, who had been a little farther away, was seen flinching.

He seems to have been fully cooperating with Hochi because he wasn't stopping him from doing anything strange.

If it weren't for Hochi, it would have been alright.

I can't let this naughty boy who has caused me harm go.

It was not my will, but my divine will.

Just because Hochi was my family doesn't mean that I could overlook his faults.

It was because of Hochi's characteristics.

"Hey, isn't this too much!? There is Yong-yong here too!"

"This time uncle was wrong."

Yong-yong neatly gave up.

Hochi looked at Yong-yong with a shocked face, but Yong-yong gently turned his head and looked away.

It serves you right.

How dare you feel shunned when you get turned away by your nephew?

* * *

"I looked it up."

"What the hell did you find out, you turned me into an undead?"

"Oh, you're not an undead. Rather, you're a spirit."

This kid mixed the increasingly difficult words and made nonsense.

I guess he's adapted to Earth too quickly.

"The completion of all religions is death."

"Why did you come to such a conclusion?"

I believe that the essential purpose of religion is for a better life.

“No. At least it wasn’t the purpose of Earth’s religions. What matters is whether you’re born again in the next life or in a nice place after death; that’s the greatest strength of religion here.”

There are other points.

Clearly.

“Think about it. What would people think if the religious window was still visible after you died?”

“Oh, I can see this even though Lee Ho-jae died. So, this is not from Lee Ho-jae’s ability, but from the Tutorial. He wasn’t God. They will think like this.”

“No. They think you exist after death.”

Does that make sense, you f*ck?

I can’t stop swearing.

“It shows you overcoming the fear of death that people most want to shake off. Obviously, the human body died, but your strength remained. You were even resurrected.”

I didn’t resurrect.

“Now, all you have to do is create a doctrine, show people it, and then disappear again. People will believe in the existence of the afterlife when they see you once and then come back, and they will become believers to overcome death.”

[Oh my god, you’re smart.]

The God of Hope, who had been trapped in the collection bin, whispered.

[I better thank you!]

“Shut up, before I pull your wing.”

A short warning blocked the mouth of the God of Hope.

I was not going to inform the party that I had captured the God of Hope.

He is the God of Hope that penetrates even if there is a small gap.

It would be better for everyone in the party to not even recognize the existence of the God of Hope.

“Think about it. In Earth’s religions, have religious leaders never died? And the death event has never been simple. The revival of religion always took place only after the death of the leader.”

“It’s just those people’s end of life.....”

“Hey! You can’t say that! What if the believers hear it? You have to be careful about your words as well.”

Hochi shouted.

Damn you... I managed to pull down the sound that had risen to the end of my throat.

Ugh.

What, what can I do?

Now I can’t kick him back to the 60th floor.

[If you’re going to kick him out, how about giving it to me?]

The God of Hope added more nonsense.

Later, when the party can’t see me, I’ll have to take him out and grab a wing.

“Okay. Well, as you said, my faith has risen dramatically.”

There were certain achievements made, so I decided to skip it without further criticism.

For some reason, there was no damage to my divinity.

Perhaps, as Hochi said, it may be because of the advantage of being known to overcome death rather than being known to be dead.

My believers on Earth, especially those who are fanatical, would believe this.

No matter what, I can't be defeated or die.

I'm already dead.

And then I came back from that death.

It was interesting.

Can this be connected to my divinity?

The afterlife does not exist.

Death can be avoided by overcoming the limitations of the human body and breaking out of that frame.

However, even the deities who reached the peak could not escape the final death if their divinity collapsed and deviated from the perception of their believers.

In this situation, how does the fact that believers think that their god will come back even if he dies, work?

Let's find out more later.

It was worth researching.

I checked the religious window again.

Certainly, the faith received has increased tremendously.

Until before, it was mostly churches that recouped their merit expenses.

Merit value was not directly related to faith because it was a score based on achievements for religion.

Because of this, when calculating the resources and power consumed for compensation, the Lee Ho-jae Faith was always seeing a deficit.

But now, even taking into account the rewards consumed across the planet, they were seeing a surplus.

I was earning faith.

The biggest advantage I got this time wasn't simply that I was seeing a surplus.

People started to believe in me.

Not the religious system and the rewards of that system pulled by a strong challenger in the Tutorial.

They were devoting their faith to Lee Ho-jae.

Because I heard about the God of Order from the God of Hope, I learned that the system was born from faith.

It felt pretty encouraging.

Maybe when the Lee Ho-jae Faith grows up, the Lee Ho-jae system can also gain credibility.

Perhaps the mantis, who plays the role of the mascot of Lee Ho-jae Faith's Hongcheon main school, will gradually become the deity.

“One more positive thing is that conflicts with existing religions have disappeared.”

Hochi said again.

It was an idea that I couldn't understand without explanation.

“It happened because I can attach it to the doctrines of other religions. Someone's reincarnation, somebody's second coming, the third prophet who came down to Earth.....”

Somehow, if explained in detail, they were words that seemed like a big deal.

“After the Hundred Gods and the Tutorial appeared, the position of religions was shaken, and I was trying to make a change in my own way. It was easy to absorb them. Rather, it made them choose the Lee Ho-jae Faith as the end point of all the paths while maintaining all the frameworks of the existing religions.”

Oh my, I don't even know anymore.

“Not only the dispute within Lee Ho-jae Faith, but also the disputes between other religions will disappear. At least among the religions who have chosen to be in solidarity with the Lee Ho-jae Faith.”

“What religions are those?”

“I have absorbed most of Earth's major religions.”

It was a ridiculous speed.

The upright religious community should reform their doctrine and choose to absorb it as the subordinate force of other religions.

They even took the risk of going under one roof with other religions, even those that they swore and quarreled with, calling them pagans.

Even that in just a few days.

Is it possible?

“Of course I did a little trick.”

Yes, I suppose so.

There were countless ways you could do it if you wanted to.

This side can manipulate any number of divine phenomena.

Existing religious circles can simply ignore such a phenomenon.

As long as the believers are not agitated by that fact.

“Not bad, huh?”

Hochi said with a smile.

Obviously, Hochi did well.

Since coming to Earth and starting to do this and that, Hochi has always outperformed my expectations.

It was the same this time.

Even though the expectations had risen quite a bit, it produced surprising results that were unexpected for me.

The problem was that my social death was the opposite.

“You were too lazy to be in front of people anyway.”

“...Yes, well.”

* * *

“I brought sweets, Homen.”

Three days have passed since the meteorite was destroyed and I returned to Earth.

But I couldn't get used to that bloody greeting.

"Whose idea was that?"

"Well, since everyone started doing it, no one would say they were first."

They use the word "Homen" at any time.

They use it when they say hello, they use it when they pray.

If you feel good, use it, and if you feel bad, use it.

They were using it meaninglessly as if saying something in a dialect.

"Isn't this completely blasphemy?"

"How is that blasphemy?"

"If I'm offended, it's blasphemy."

Hochi didn't answer.

The whole party was gathered in front of the TV.

Today is the day I go back as a mystery.

What kind of nonsense is this?

It is the day when the god Lee Ho-jae, who died from stopping a meteorite, resurrects and returns after three days, tells his disciples the doctrine to follow, and then returns to the heavenly world.

"Homen."

Hochi said, opening a bag of cookies.

Do you have to say that before getting a snack?

“Homen.”

Seregia, who had approached, took a snack from Hochi’s hand and said the prayer, then ate the cookie.

“Homen. Haha.”

Yong-yong, who was sitting on my lap, shouted Homen, smiled a little, and picked up a snack.

...Ugh.

On TV, an anchor shedding tears was speaking enthusiastically.

It was overwhelmingly emotional.

The screen returned to downtown Seoul in front of the temple in an anchor’s solo scene.

As if the anchor we saw just before was weak, there were several humans who were crying all over with their whole bodies.

It was clearly distressing.

“Hey, all of those people are filling your faith. You should be thankful.”

Well, that’s true.

But I couldn’t sympathize with how close they were or how sad they were.

As we waited for a while, a bright light began to shoot high from the ceiling of the temple where we were now gathering and eating snacks.

As part of it, I used the same visual effect that I used when the meteorite appeared.

People began to cry more and more at the sight.

The sound of them saying, Homen, Homen, rang up to the inside of the temple.

Riding on a bright pillar of light, a fake image that resembled me began to fly above the sky.

The brightness of the light pole was properly adjusted so that it could be captured on the camera screen.

It was solemn and gracious.

Nevertheless, because I had to maintain the original shape of my face, it was an illusion that I had elaborately created by inviting plastic surgeons to the hospital.

“That, it would have been better if you just did it yourself.”

“I would have died from embarrassment if I did.”

Really.

I may have died of shame on my way up to heaven.

Neither I nor my divinity could have survived that embarrassment.

Chapter 353

Pantheon (1)

Somehow, I became a deceased person.

There was no inconvenience in being one.

Well, I don't have to go out and do any jobs.

I don't have to go shopping at the supermarket.

There is nothing uncomfortable in my life even though I was killed socially.

The church's operation is managed well by Hochi.

Other small things are handled by Kim Min-hyuk.

When armed intervention was required, the challengers who were training in the Tutorial were sent to take care of it.

Then, I had nothing to do.

All I was doing was lying around the couch with Seregia and watching the humans.

The human I'm looking at right now is an ordinary student.

In a way, it was a common event. Even though the test was just around the corner, he was watching cartoons instead of studying.

I remember when he opened a comic book, he promised to study for 10 minutes.

But that student didn't let go of the comic book even after a while.

After waiting a little longer, the student covered up as he had finished reading the comic book and pushed it to one side of the desk.

And he pulled out another comic book from the bookshelf.

It was the next volume.

I decided after watching for a while.

I'll send a message.

[Lee Ho-jae is watching you.]

I don't like this very much.

To let them know through a message that I am watching the believers.

It was because I remembered the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

The images of the gods I had in my mortal days were largely derived from the messages of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple...

To be honest, the messages of the gods only caused irritation.

While others were struggling, they were sitting down while watching, cheering, or even complaining.

The presence of the gods I felt from the messages only annoyed me.

So I tried to avoid contacting the believers through messages as much as possible.

I thought it would be enough to only do so to prevent the church from making wrong choices or to warn them of a critical situation.

However, in the situation when I had died socially, I was only able to contact the believers in this way.

The student who received my message became fussed.

He was praying, and he was just looking around.

He also seemed to think about something by opening his religious window.

No matter how much I looked at him, it didn't seem like he was going to study.

[I hope you will keep your promise.]

The student who received the second message pondered again.

Soon, he sat at his desk and started studying.

Well, I can't concentrate.

How will that student accept my message?

Obviously, it just wasn't pleasant.

No matter how much of a believer you are.

However, you study a little harder because of my message.

So the result is a better school, a better job, and help in life.

Whenever that student realizes that, it will benefit me too.

On the contrary, it may be misunderstood because of the feeling of skepticism towards me and the inconvenience of someone watching you.

Let's see.

Certainly, I was like a beginner god.

As a god of mortals who live with different purposes.

* * *

[Did you know that the God of Adventure was a mortal?]

I didn't know.

In the first place, we had no idea that some gods were of mortal origin and some were not of mortal origin.

[There are not as many gods that were former mortals as I thought. At least in the Hundred Gods Temple. Most of the gods of the Hundred Gods are those from the time when the God of Slowness and the God of Adventure collided. At that time, there were many beings who were gods from the beginning, like the God of Slowness.]

It was an interesting story.

Surely.

[The biggest reason why the gods were mass produced and the world became a god is the existence of the source. Do you know what the characteristics of the source are?]

There are several characteristics of the source.

Among them, there are specific characteristics suitable for the flow of this conversation.

“Even an unbeatable being can accept the power of others. Like faith.”

It usually occurs when the grand hero of a certain nation or race accepts people's aspirations in a crisis.

This power, which is not much different from faith, is called the source when accepted by beings without godhood.

In this case, the individual who accepts the source is eaten by the absence of divinity and thus loses their reason and becomes a monster of the source.

Those monsters regain their reason over time, become rulers, and finally gods.

Or there is a source that civilized people dedicate to their world, which they have built up for a long time.

The emotions of hundreds of millions of civilized people that they feel towards their world for thousands of years are no different from faith.

It was this kind of source from which the rulers stole and pulled out using extractors on the planet.

Perhaps the system itself is the same as the God of Order, which gained godhood by gathering the faith offered by the gods.

[Isn't it surprising that a mortal has prevented the unification of the universe led by the God of Slowness?]

It wasn't surprising.

It was heard before that the God of Slowness attempted to unify the universe, and that the Hundred Gods Temple was created as a result of the conflict at the time.

And from that fact, I could fully understand that the God of Slowness' plan was blocked.

The question is how the God of Adventure, who was once a mortal, was able to stop the God of Slowness.

Likewise, it could be inferred.

I have two powers presented by the God of Adventure.

I knew very well how those powers worked and what results they could produce.

Rather, I asked again about the relationship between the God of Order and the God of Adventure.

[There was no problem until the God of Order became powerful. But when the God of Order began to gain ambition, a problem arose.]

Ambition.

So I was curious about their ambition.

[The God of Order slowly expanded the authority of the system. They thickened the constraints, making it increasingly difficult to escape them.]

The system is the power of the God of Order, and the God of Order is the system.

It seemed obvious at first glance that a person with godhood would carry out their divinity and increase their influence.

[Well, that was the reason.]

However, is it a problem that the level of the God of Adventure is exceeding the level of constraints that he originally hoped for in the system?

In addition to that, there were also beings like the God of Hope who volunteered to be an apostle of the God of Order in order to abuse the position.

Again, the God of Hope was the biggest problem.

“Who is the God of Light?”

[It is better to ignore him.]

This was a consistent answer.

The God of Hope replied that it is better to simply ignore the God of Light.

Everyone who knows the God of Light gave the same answer.

After that, the God of Hope continued to answer my questions.

The information was valuable. Then, it became a bit burdensome because it was uninteresting.

I have realized one thing.

I have been very dependent on information from Kirikiri.

Most of the information I know is her information or my guesses based on that information.

I didn't know anything about what she didn't tell me or what she hid.

Conversely, now I was reliant on too much information from the God of Hope.

There were no other sources of information to determine the authenticity of the information.

The only information I had came from the mouth of the God of Hope.

How far away is the truth?

The God of Hope is a god who is good at twisting truth and making lies.

What is the ultimate desire of the God of Hope?

What has the God of Hope been preparing to achieve his goals?

It was a question that could not be resolved.

[What are you thinking?]

“The idea of just destroying you.”

[I am faithfully answering your demands. As long as cooperation continues, I will continue.]

The problem is where the cooperation ends.

I had the same worries every day.

Should I just destroy him?

But I made the same judgment every day.

He was a very valuable resource.

[It won't be long now.]

The God of Hope whispered.

I already knew what it meant.

Now it's time.

The Hundred Gods Temple informed me that they had no intention of protecting me.

In the eyes of the other gods, I would be a more delicious prey than anything else.

As the God of Hope warned, the gods of the Pantheon would come.

* * *

“Where is Yong-yong?”

“Waiting in his room.”

That's right.

Since Yong-yong is so sensitive to privacy, it was difficult to know where he was unless he said it himself.

“Why don't you stay too?”

Hochi is not a combat resource.

He wasn't lacking in abilities, but apart from that, his fighting power was poor.

Rather than bring this guy into battle, I'm better off bringing Lee Jun-seok or the challengers from the Tutorial.

Of course, they were all useless.

The role they have to play is obviously big.

I was hoping for them to develop further.

But they won't play a big role in this battle.

Regardless of how it proceeds, it is almost impossible for non-gods to influence the battle between gods.

“I'll just be here.”

“Why?”

“You never know. There may be damage to the church, so you should be prepared in advance.”

Honestly, it was amazing.

Hochi's change.

The change in attitude and ability was also amazing.

It was even more surprising that he had a strong sense of responsibility for his believers and his church work.

“Yes, do it.”

I don’t know how the meeting with the gods of the Pantheon will proceed.

It could be solved by dialogue, but it seemed more likely that a battle would occur.

They may want to retaliate for what happened on the 61st floor.

Due to the nature of godhood, I would not go beyond it without any price.

And when the battle occurred.

I couldn’t guarantee that there would be no harm or effect to Earth and to humans.

Still.

It will be my job to minimize that.

Through an assured victory.

[Here it is.]

The God of Hope whispered.

I could tell without whispering.

I could feel many different deities approaching my powers surrounding Earth.

Kwoo-woong-

A long sound rang.

I thought it was the sound that occurred in the process of the gods moving to Earth, and I prepared for the battle to begin immediately.

But it was a mistake.

The sound, which began ringing all over Earth, was not caused by the movement of the gods.

The space was opening up.

In the sky of Earth, in the middle of the city, in the middle of the road, in the rugged mountains, in the depths of the sea, space opened and connected with the beyond.

It was like the gate used by the rulers.

Creating a gap in space, and pouring out troops through the gap.

If there is one difference, it was the sacred place of other gods that existed beyond the opening of that space.

[It's a classic and standard way. It is a method used when attacking the realm of another god that has not been completely sanctified.]

The God of Hope explained.

[It is to connect with one's holy land by force.]

And the enemy's troops began to pour out from the holy land.

Literally poured out.

Through the window of the temple, I saw a gate open over Seoul.

The open space above the building looked like a faucet hole.

Enemies were pouring down through the hole.

The problem was the troops.

They were mortal.

They weren't even superhuman.

They even looked like they didn't have the ability to fly.

They looked no different than a well-trained human soldier.

[And they are putting the members of the holy land in the enemy territory.]

Those mortals were falling from the gates created higher than the building.

Like water.

[Ahhhhhh!]

[Ahh! @$#@!]

Each of them shouted and fell, and they soon crashed into the road on the ground.

It became blood stained, and the people died immediately.

People on the roadside were frightened and ran away.

It was inevitable.

Seeing the scene of thousands and tens of thousands of creatures falling and dying from the sky, who could keep calm?

Tens of thousands soon became hundreds of thousands, then millions.

Even at this moment, there were endless mortals pouring down from the gate.

They were meaningless deaths.

Too much.

[It is not meaningless. What if I poured about 1 billion corpses over there? The volume itself is an interference. It's not just there. Troops are being sent across the planet. Can you stop it with the power of humans here?]

It's impossible.

There may be troops and Awakened from each country.

But they couldn't handle the attacks that poured out indefinitely.

Moreover, among the troops being transmitted, there was a sparse mixture of superhumans at a level that Earth's Awakened could not handle.

But I am different.

No matter how many there are, when and where they appear, I can instantly bring death to them all.

[The purpose of this attack is simply to eat away at your power.]

However, such behavior comes at a cost.

Unless Earth is my holy place.

While the gods of Pantheon pour out their believers and consume my power.

They are buried in their holy land and are watching the situation.

The only way to prevent this situation is to attack the holy land and defeat the gods.

[A lot came. There are over a thousand gods. It's obvious that you won't be able to win unless you dealt with them all in their holy lands.]

Indefinite use of divine power, and in addition to that, combat in a holy place that is thoroughly prepared for attacks is extremely disadvantageous.

[Or maybe we could keep this planet to the end.]

The God of Hope smiled a little.

[No matter how easy it is to kill a worm, it still takes energy, but what if that number exceeds a trillion units? Your power will eventually be exhausted.]

The God of Hope who whispered, declared.

[It's a fight you can't win.]

Chapter 354

Pantheon (2)

My senses seemed paralyzed.

There was too much death.

Summoned from the sky, summoned from the sea floor.

There were a lot of mortals dying like that.

Even though the summoning position was good, they died.

In the midst of being summoned as if poured out, they were pushed by each other and crushed to death.

There were those who were lucky enough to survive the riots.

Some were faithful to their original mission of invading Earth, but most of those who survived were looking for somewhere to hide, or fleeing without hesitation.

Pantheon.

I heard that there are no gods that can reach ten thousand literally.

(T/N: Pantheon can also be translated as Ten Thousand Gods Temple.)

There are certainly thousands of gods belonging to it.

If such gods have sacrificed some of their many worlds.

And even if the population of those living in those worlds is only half of earth's.

It is easy to mobilize trillions of lives.

Perhaps human beings were created to be used in this way.

Those spaces connected to Earth are sacred places for the gods of the Pantheon.

But those mortals that are pouring out now will not be the most faithful and capable believers of the Pantheon.

Useless surplus resources.

Having been termed such, they are poured out as if they were okay with death, or rather, as if they were told to die at this time.

[What will you do? This planet is not your holy land.]

It was as the God of Hope said.

Earth was not my holy land.

This is the case even now, when the Lee Ho-jae Faith emerged as the world's largest religion.

A holy land is not easily created.

The world is assimilated with God.

Those who live in that world believe that the will of God is the law of the world, and their values must be established.

When I absorbed the believers of the Holy Land of the God of Hope.

I was not impersonating the God of Hope for nothing.

Their situation was the same, but they are members of the world who believe that hope, the light of salvation, is the absolute good of the world apart from escaping their situation.

Earth's humans didn't do that.

[What are you going to do?]

It wasn't the God of Hope.

It was Seregia's question.

She always followed my choice.

But that doesn't mean she always agreed with my choice.

Rather, she had more opposing opinions than agreeing ones.

[Let's abandon Earth. If you go back to the 60th floor and solidify your defense, and defeat each god one by one, you will be able to even the odds.]

She was right.

[Abandon Earth. And come with me. I will make you a winner.]

Said the God of Hope.

It was wrong.

Winner is not something someone else makes.

Two suggestions.

Both the right and the wrong suggestions recommend giving up the planet.

[Sorry.]

After a long time, the voice of Earth was heard.

It wasn't an offer.

It wasn't a favor either.

It was close to a calm confession.

[Sorry.]

Stop apologizing.

You bother me.

I clicked my tongue.

Hochi was looking at me.

“Are you going?”

As soon as I heard that voice, I knew it.

Hochi was thinking of staying here.

“Yes, I have to go.”

[It is a wise judgment.]

The God of Hope whispered.

Somehow it felt as if there was a little ridicule in it.

“In the meantime, I need you to protect this place until I come back.”

Hochi quietly nodded his head.

[You are crazy.]

Said the God of Hope.

[You want to go to the gods of Pantheon? They live in their holy land with perfect defenses. Don't talk nonsense. You may be a little victorious. Maybe you can kill some gods. But that will be your limit.]

The God of Hope explained in resentment.

It was surprising.

The God of Hope was sincerely mad at my decision.

What is the reason for his anger?

[In the meantime, this planet will become a sea of fire. As you lose your power in the outside world, the defenses of your holy land will become weak. Even that holy land would be open to invasion. In the end there will be nothing left.]

Is this a warning or a curse?

[Don't be reckless, go back to the four holy places you made on the 60th floor of the Tutorial. No god escapes his holy land and fights in another god's holy land alone.]

I will.

Because in his own holy land, the deity is literally omnipotent.

[Have I done you wrong? The result is your absolute good.]

The God of Hope spoke full of energy.

It was just as he said.

The result was everything for me.

Obviously, it would be right to give up the planet.

I knew it too.

In this situation where I was confronted with the gods of the Pantheon, Earth and Earth's believers were forced into an even more unfavorable condition.

It was right to give up if the burden would give me a chance to lose.

[Are you okay? I know that not only the results, but also the best choice for the result is important.]

I have little attachment to Earth.

It was the same for the people of Earth.

It is not that I have opened my eyes to the sense of responsibility as a new god.

There is a famous saying that with great power comes great responsibility, but I disagree.

Abandoning the notions of good and evil and morality, I became a god by making my divinity the highest value of my values.

A believer was just the main source of income that provided me with faith.

And in order to win, I have to know how to give up my precious resources.

[Sorry.]

But I couldn't just abandon it.

I didn't want to spill it as a stepping stone for victory or as a means.

[Sorry.]

I could understand why Earth repeats only apologies.

I was feeling the same way.

The outcome of victory was more important than anything else.

But what the results looked like was also important to me.

“I can handle it.”

I can handle it.

Great power makes it possible to take on great responsibilities.

[Is that so.]

Seregia replied quietly.

The God of Hope shut his mouth.

I felt a wriggling movement in the barrier where the God of Hope was locked up.

Are you thinking of escaping now?

“Old man, grandmother.”

[I was waiting.]

[Have I not told you, King. Someday that indecisiveness will be poison.]

Unlike the grandmother, who responded calmly to her call, the old man spoke out.

It was a firm and stern voice that seemed like a sentence.

As usual.

[But that's our king.]

[I'm ready. Call it.]

I heard two answers.

“Yong-yong.”

[Huh.]

“Send the kids down this way.”

There should be no accidents during the summoning process, but I sent Yong-yong to be sure.

Even if the divine spirit intervenes during the summoning, Yong-yong will perform the summon stably.

“When the summons are over, protect the planet.”

[How?]

Yong-yong asked how, not whether to do it or not.

“Minimize human damage as much as possible.”

Yong-yong was silent for a moment.

I didn’t talk about the treatment of my enemies.

The only thing I asked Yong-yong to do was control the situation.

[Then it will be more damaging, Dad.]

I guess so.

Those mortals who are being summoned to Earth indefinitely will inflict more than a certain amount of damage on the earthlings.

If I wanted effective defense, it was much better to just destroy them.

Even right now, with effort, I can turn tens or millions of mortals into a handful of dust.

The Pantheon chose this method in the first place because they hope that my power will be exhausted in that way.

But I couldn't see them as enemies.

There was a feeling of desperation.

Aueo Island.

It is still an unforgettable place name.

An island in heaven where people who wish for peace and harmony came and became one with each other while drinking the emotion sharing facilitator called Paramal.

The ending I encountered there was terrible.

The images of those who were mobilized in unwanted battles by someone's control and were dying in despair, suffering and dying still remain clearly in my memory.

Those mortals pouring out onto the earth were hardly seen as enemies.

They weren't the enemy.

There will be nothing I gain by killing them.

My divinity didn't respond to opposing them.

They weren't the targets of confrontation, they were just victims who were being sacrificed by others.

"Hochi, you too, help Yong-yong."

I asked Hochi.

He is a younger brother who is lacking in many ways, but unless he faces divinity, there will be no limit to his ability.

There could be no shortage in protecting and evacuating the people.

“I should. That’s what I’m going to do.”

Hochi replied coolly.

“I won’t be able to withstand it for a long time.”

“I suppose so.”

Apart from the question of how good Hochi and Yong-yong are.

Their strength is limited.

No matter how transcendent it is, there will come a time when their power will be exhausted.

“I’ll come back before that.”

[Crazy guy.]

The God of Hope cursed.

Rather than being offended, it was fun.

A pillar of light was coming down from the sky.

It wasn’t just one.

A total of five hundred pillars of light.

It was exactly the same as the number of believers on the 61st floor.

The light that disturbed the eyes disappeared, and the appearances of the giants hiding in the pillars of light were revealed.

Lava and ice giants.

They were enemies who blocked the challengers on the 61st floor of the Hell difficulty Tutorial.

The challengers of the Hell difficulty, who have already passed the threshold of a superhuman, are powerful beings who can barely be dealt with using parties of at least 50 people, and even then they had to sacrifice themselves to weaken them.

They are desperate because they have died once a long time ago, and have become an accessory to the tutorials since then, endlessly dying and reviving.

They are the ones who choose to abandon the gods and trade with me in order to escape from that self-loathing.

Each one was cursing their fate, bound by the gods.

They were ready to do anything for liberation and freedom.

Their leader, the old man and grandmother, gave me the status of 'king'.

They devoted themselves to further my growth.

They pushed and devoted themselves according to my reckless plan.

I also paid them for their choice.

The giants used their power as soon as they were summoned.

Likewise, huge wings of light sprouted from the backs of giants.

Talaria's Wings.

The power that the God of Adventure gave me.

There were various powers, but the most powerful of them was to give all allies a powerful combat power amplification effect proportional to their ability.

Even if only one person owned it, it was a power that gave all of their colleagues immense power.

Hundreds of people use it at the same time, and when the effect is applied and stacks, it literally becomes a cheat of a power.

I interpreted Talaria's wing and duplicated it in my own way.

And I shared it with all the giants.

In addition to the Talaria's wings, I gave away numerous powers that I made.

And unlike Hochi, the giants used all of their powers to the limit of their potential.

As the giants stood side by side with the building, appearing one by one, the downtown of Seoul seen from the temple seemed more cluttered.

There was no fuss.

The earthlings who were hiding in the building to watch the situation, and those summoned by the gods of the Pantheon all stopped moving and watched the giants.

Keeping silent and barely breathing.

It was a force that could paralyze all reason and judgment of the mortals it encountered.

No, it won't be just mortals.

[What is this.....]

The voice of the God of Hope seemed embarrassed.

The gods of the Pantheon who will be watching Earth will feel so too.

I was confident early on.

I'm going to get the Tutorial from the Hundred Gods.

In the process, I would endure any conflict with the gods.

And I will not hide myself.

It wasn't arrogance.

I was sure.

That we will finally be able to win.

And that was the basis of confidence in that victory.

Those giants were my most powerful force and my colleagues.

They were my priests who would prove my will and spread the doctrine of divinity to the world.

[Please say a word.]

The old man said.

I tried to refute what he was saying, but I decided to just say a word.

Unlike for me, it will be a moment that really means a lot to them.

"I had promised that I would make you real. I will make you, the ones who are already dead and gone, appear in order to destroy the will of the gods that trapped you into that eternal world. I will make you into what you want."

The start wasn't much.

There was no other answer, so it was a promise.

For the giants, and for me.

But in the end, it came to this point.

“It’s time for us to prove that my words weren’t just nonsense.”

[This is a great speech, which is nothing like the usual king.]

[Do it as usual. The kids are getting confused.]

The old man and grandmother said.

“...It’s time to smash the heads of the gods.”

Only then did the giants begin to scream and burn their fighting spirit.

...Damn them.

It is obviously disadvantageous to attack and fight in the sanctuary of another god.

But it’s not without any advantages.

All the gods will try to be in their own sanctuary.

There is only one god living in each holy land.

You just need to break each of them one by one.

It was a time attack.

The question is whether or not a decision can be made before Earth is captured and the holy lands on the 60th and 61st floors are invaded.

There was a chance of winning.

I don't know exactly how many gods of the Pantheon participated this time.

This was the united deity of over five hundred.

"We only need to destroy roughly 10 gods' heads per person. Anyone who dies before destroying 10 will be damned by me."

It was ridiculous, but the giants chuckled.

These guys like this.

"Come on, let's break the heads of the gods."

Chapter 355

Pantheon (3)

I thought that there would be only one divine being in each holy land.

It wasn't really like that.

Although the gods of the Pantheon did not live and cooperate in the holy lands of other gods.

Other subordinate gods belonging to the gods of the Pantheon were gathered.

[...Didn't I say it? The Pantheon is a major force that occupies most of the universe and dimensions known to date. It will be difficult if you think about their holy land and if they put all their strength there.]

It is.

About ten gods were gathered in the holy land of the god we first arrived at.

Among them, one of the gods who seemed to be the owner of the holy land seemed quite powerful.

The remaining nine gods were just as threatening.

The God of Gochang I met when pursuing the God of Hope.

And the God of Horror from the Ruler I ate in Antarctica.

That was it.

Although I certainly encountered more gods than I had thought.

The power difference remained the same.

We were overwhelmingly superior.

[Stay away.]

The main deity here declared.

The enormous body of the deity, leaning on the holy ground, looked like a mountain range.

Huge pressure poured over me and the giants who were flying with Talaria's wings spread out.

I endured it without falling.

There is a difference.

We have to use our strength to endure this pressure, but the god of the Holy Land can pressure us without any consumption.

There is only one answer.

Quick decision.

I prepared a technique that I felt familiar and comfortable.

A red sphere was formed in the front.

It was only a small object, but no one would look down on it.

If they could recognize the power in there.

It wasn't only one.

The giants, who I gave all my skills to, also formed red spheres.

Soon, hundreds of spheres were engraved in the air.

After all preparations were completed, the sphere's power was released.

“Zit pop.”

I didn't know that I would continue to use the technique with this ridiculous name even after I became a god.

Along with the roaring sound of heaven and earth, the giants, the gods of the other side, and the holy land were all engulfed in flames.

Zit pop's violent power exploding from close range was strong enough to turn everything into nothing, but none of the giants I brought fell to that power.

[The quest window is updated.]

[You have completed the quest of the God of Light.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[The God of Light proposes a new quest.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[You have completed the quest of the God of Light.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[Quest of the God of Light.....]

The message appeared dizzy with the update of the quest.

I ignored it.

It was clear that Busan was trembling because the God of Light was excited anyway.

Zit pop's firepower covered the whole world.

It is a technique that I used frequently before reaching the 60th floor and even right before I gained divinity.

Of course, even after being trapped on the 60th floor, I continued to improve it again and again.

Although it was a powerful technique that could damage the gods with only the physical force and firepower of the explosion.

There was one more advantage.

The true value of this technique is revealed when using divine power, not magic, as a material.

The firepower generated through zit pop does not disappear immediately after the explosion, but encroaches on the space.

You can gain many advantages simply by spreading firepower filled with divine power to the whole world.

Especially in other gods' holy lands.

No matter how sacred it is, it cannot be used directly against other gods.

The fundamental difference between divine and magical power lies in the dominance that can be applied directly to others.

The power to make a fire inside the enemy's body, instead of making a fireball and sending it out.

That was the ability of divine power.

However, it is not possible to exert such dominance against the same deity.

The same was true for gods' power.

The flames of the zit pop, which spread widely in this holy place, hindered the other gods' exercising dominance.

The only way to counter this technique is to prevent the spread of firepower that is thrown out through the zit pop.

However, it will not be easy to suppress hundreds of explosions of zit pop with simple physical force.

Impossible.

I said it because it was a technique I created.

I was pretty confident.

When it comes to physical power alone, there will be no other technique like this.

Giants flooded toward the gods of the Pantheon who were flustered in the flames of zit pop.

There was a god who had a huge figure like a mountain range, but he didn't even look very big because so many giants were sticking to him.

It felt like a group of elementary school students sticking to the body of an adult male.

But those giants couldn't be seen as children.

Sticking to it, wounding the body of the gods, and persistently hindering the exercise of power.

Normally, the gods are weak in a battle of the flesh.

I didn't face many gods, but I was able to affirm this.

There is no way that a godlike being who can play with others freely through dominance can conceive such an ugly and barbaric fight.

It was said that there were sometimes territorial disputes between the gods of the Pantheon, but there were no direct conflicts between the gods.

It's got to be so.

Because the risk is too great.

It is as primitive as if the heads of the warring nations gathered together to decide the victory or defeat of a war by boxing each other.

However, we have honed that primitive method.

Thinking of what was already stolen rather than what we lost.

It was possible because we prioritized the defeat of our enemy and the victory against them, over safety and security.

The god of the Pantheon fell to the giants who had been preparing nonstop only for this moment to kill the gods.

The limbs were broken to pieces.

After being picked up, the head was crushed.

The chest was revealed, and the organs that were filling it were scattered on the floor.

The incarnation that died in a brutal manner disappeared into the air without even leaving a handful of dust as the power of the Holy Land faded.

Listening to the shouts of the giants, I called in the flames that were filling the Holy Land.

It interfered with my vision.

The fire that was filling the world gathered in my hand.

It was only then that I could see clearly the image of the Holy Land that had been smashed in an instant.

[...It's a really cursed skill.]

Said the God of Hope.

It seemed to overlap with the appearance of his own holy land on fire.

There were two surprising things.

The first is that the god here that was a part of the Pantheon died too easily.

The existence of a god is not limited to a single incarnation.

I didn't know that if I killed a single incarnate, it would disappear as it is.

[Isn't it a holy place? Think about what that means. If the incarnation was killed by force in the Holy Land, and the divine nature remains intact, that would be a miracle.]

It made sense.

There may be a reason why the God of Hope escaped the conflict in the Holy Land and escaped.

If I could completely destroy the god by just killing the incarnation in the holy land, it would be easier than I thought.

“Or it will get rather tricky.”

Like the God of Hope, all other gods abandoned the holy land and ran away.

It will take a long time to chase after them.

And we are running out of time now.

The enemies had to be put to an end before Earth and the holy lands of the 60th and 61st floors were completely destroyed.

[No way. What kind of god would leave their holy land and run away.]

“You are.”

[I am special, but the case of ordinary gods is different. For the god to abandon their Holy Land, they must be prepared for extinction.]

It's always like that.

When the power of God becomes one's strength, it becomes a new weakness when looked at from another point of view.

The end result is always redemption.

One interesting fact is that the main god here from the Pantheon was extinguished while trying to resist, but all the lower gods fled.

Oh, not everyone.

Two lower gods were dead in the corner.

Little by little, the figures were disappearing, but the cause could be guessed from the remaining parts.

They were hit hard by zit pop and were horribly killed by the giants.

“What about those?”

This is not a holy land for those lower gods.

Their incarnations died in the holy land of another god, so the gods perished

[But, they're garbage. It is a waste to call them gods because their incarnation is dead, and they perished.]

The God of Hope spit out venomous words.

It seems to me that they were unfit to be called gods.

They would be more of a Ruler than a god.

They were tied to the body, and when that body died, they died together.

“Grandmother.”

[Whoo, I can’t believe I have to endure that boiling heat all the time.]

As I called the grandmother, she came up with a grunt.

For grandmother or other ice giants with the properties of ice, it would be more difficult to endure the firepower of the zit pop.

However, there was nothing like an explosion in the expansion of power.

The characteristics of grandmother and ice giants were resistances to freezing rather than expansion.

[Do you have anything you want me to do?]

If 500 people do everything together, the risk will be lower.

But we didn’t have enough time.

I had to split up my team to get things done.

“Follow those who have run away from here.”

The low-ranking gods who abandoned the main god here and ran away using a quick judgment of the situation.

I had no intention of letting them go.

[How should we treat them?]

“The guys who were hostile to us, pull out all their heads.”

There is no negotiation or compromise anymore.

We must show the world the price for their hostility.

Grandmother said she knew, and gathered some of the giants.

Each of the lower gods made a portal and escaped somewhere.

I had to pursue them before the coordinates of the portal disappeared.

I confirmed that grandmother and several giants were moving through the portal.

After waiting a little longer, the power of the dead god from the Pantheon was completely lifted.

Now this place was not a holy place for any god.

It could be called blank.

I attempted to communicate with Earth.

It was possible to connect directly to Hochi without any interference.

[Some of the holes that were pouring into the earth have just disappeared.]

Hochi spoke as soon as communication arrived.

A few.

Was the god of this holy land connecting several gates?

Or, have other gods who have peeked at the end of this holy land removed their hands.

I didn't know.

[The quest window is updated.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[Quest window.....]

The messages appeared loudly because of the quest window.

As I thought it was because of the God of Light, so I opened the quest window annoyingly.

[Quest Window]

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (Complete)]

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (Complete)]

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (Complete)]

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (Complete)]

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (Complete)]

.

.

[God of Light – Zit Pop! (New!)]

All those who knew about the God of Light agreed on the same advice.

Just ignore it.

I decided to follow that advice.

Let's just skip this.

[God of Destruction – ??? (Complete)]

Explanation: ???

[God of Forest – ??? (Complete)]

[God of Pain – ??? (Complete)]

[God of Deception – ??? (Complete)]

[God of Chaos – ??? (Complete)]

The items in the quest window were filled with '???'.

However, some of the gods' quests were marked as complete.

Even if I clicked to see the detailed explanation, the window only displayed '???'.

[It's a mess.]

Said the God of Hope.

“What. Explain.”

[It means there was an uproar in the Hundred Gods Temple.]

God of Hope belonged to the Hundred Gods Temple.

All the gods belonging to the origin war should have one incarnation in the space called the 'Hundred Gods Temple'.

There seems to be something happening there.

[This is because your power exceeds everyone's expectations.]

“Give me more details.”

[The moderate gods are taking their hands off, saying they don't want to be related to you anymore.]

Is it?

There was nothing bad right now.

As the God of Hope said before, it was a time when we had to pay attention to the Pantheon rather than the Hundred Gods Temple.

By the way.

Those are moderate gods?

Moderate gods are in a state of deity.....

It wasn't something I could care about right now.

First, let's finish what I need to do.

Now it was time to invade the holy land of the next Pantheon god.

There were still plenty of enemies to kill.

I couldn't fail by wasting time.

Originally, it was necessary to trace back the coordinates of the sacred places connected to Earth.

“Hey, do you know where they are, the holy lands of the gods of the Pantheon? Give me the coordinates.”

[...I know.]

Fortunately, there was a good navigator.

Chapter 356

Pantheon (4)

[Quest will be updated.]

[Quest will be updated.]

After settling one of the holy lands, the quest window was updated again.

The further I went, the more gods I killed, the more frequent it became.

The Hundred Gods Temple is saying they don't want to be associated with me.

"I'm getting used to doing this as well."

I said after settling the ruins.

As time went by, the time it took to complete each one decreased.

There was no god running away from their holy land.

The number of gods who came to help other people's holy land declined.

Even those gods fled faster.

In a way, it was natural.

It would be better for the god to not help others' holy lands and to prioritize their own safety.

It was a situation where they couldn't focus on faithfulness and loyalty.

The lower gods who had gathered in the sacred place of each god of the Pantheon ran away at the start of the battles.

As if they were just waiting for the opportunity to do so.

Thanks to this, work was getting easier.

[All gates connected to Earth are closed.]

Hochi told us of the situation on Earth.

The chicken race seems to be over at this point.

It was a relief that the damage to Earth didn't get bigger.

Of course, even if all the gates for the air raid were closed, the disorder would remain the same.

I asked Hochi to take care of it and ended the communication.

There may be two reasons for the gates being closed.

The gates were cut off when the gods who connected the gates to Earth were destroyed by us.

If that's not the case, did they pull their feet out of the raid?

If it's the former case, it does not matter.

However, in the latter case, I was thinking of catching them by tracking the gate that was connected to it.

I don't want to set a precedent that I had been hostile and gone overboard.

Now that I have pulled out the sword, I will inform everyone who is watching this event or who will hear it later.

Once they bet against me, they will have to see the end.

I intend to make it so that they don't think of me being hostile in the first place, so that there is nothing to be hostile to.

[Are you going to attack all the gods in the Pantheon? If you do, the story will be different again.]

Said the God of Hope.

[It is quiet now that your retaliation is limited to the gods who have invaded Earth. If it targets all the gods of the Pantheon, they will unite again.]

That was good advice.

There were not many gods who attempted to invade Earth directly.

It wasn't a small number, but considering the scale of the Pantheon, it wasn't too many.

The invasion of Earth was clearly a Pantheon scale event.

There was no direct intervention, but there would be far more intertwined gods.

I feel like I want to take care of them all, but I can't.

The next place I visited was a place I had visited before.

When pursuing the God of Hope in the past, I had traveled around the realms of the gods from various rulers.

Then, I met a god from the rulers called the God of Gochang.

The God of Gochang once told the God of Hope that there would be no holy land left, and that further pursuit would be meaningless.

Some miscellaneous information was a bonus.

He was a peculiar god who had no hesitation in telling me the information I wanted, unlike a certain god who was stuck with his ego and stubbornness.

So I remembered it well.

“Wow, it’s been a long time.”

[...Please save me.]

Look at this

If you’re a god, you can’t easily say that.

They shout words like the God of Hope or surrender, but usually it was hard to even mention.

But the God of Gochang did.

Far from being defeated, he did it before the battle even started.

“I only know what’s long and short, but why don’t you try a fight?”

[Around you and the giants? No. Please save me.]

The God of Gochang mentioned the giants behind me.

There were twenty or so giants behind me.

Five hundred departed together, but as we continued to share our troops, it became like this.

Anyway, as long as I was there, I didn’t need a lot of them.

[I have no intention of fighting.]

The God of Gochang who I just met before I was killing the unknown god of the Pantheon.

The God of Gochang, who was in the sanctuary of the god of the Pantheon, ran away at the beginning of the battle, so I came after him.

“Okay, why are you struggling to become my enemy again?”

[I was called in by my master, the old god.]

So, by being there himself, he has become my enemy.

Because he was at the wrong place at the wrong time.

[But the old god is dead! So now I am free!]

With that tone, I remembered the house elf who shouted ‘Dobby is free now!’.

Maybe it’s an inappropriate comparison.

“So?”

[I will give you some helpful information. Please save me.]

It was the correct judgment.

The God of Gochang was once captured by me, but he was released in exchange for information.

Remembering that, it was natural that he once again offered to trade information.

But.

“Will you be okay? It would be a traitorous act.”

The fact that he was called a god of the Pantheon meant that he belonged to the Pantheon.

He might be a lower god.

[Because I am now free!]

As expected, I remembered the house elf.

There was no justification or reason to refuse.

[Did you have any more questions?]

Asked the God of Hope.

He was asking because he has been answering questions for me so far.

“No, I don’t really want to know more.”

[If so, what is the reason? Is there any reason to save that god?]

It wasn’t like that either.

I will again ask the God of Gochang for the information the God of Hope told me.

To collate information.

“Maybe there is distorted information.”

How to distort the information and what to gain through it was the choice of the God of Hope.

But the price will also be up to the God of Hope.

[...I don’t know everything perfectly. There may be some errors due to mistakes.....]

It was a lame excuse.

In order to contrast the stories I had heard from the God of Hope, I grabbed the God of Gochang and started asking questions.

In the midst of asking questions, the God of Gochang suddenly looked upset.

“What?”

[That... The gods of the Pantheon contacted me.....]

Saying that you are now free.

It seems that there wasn't only one god that was entangled.

[The gods of the Pantheon are asking me to arrange a conversation.]

“With me?”

[Yes.]

The Pantheon wants to have a conversation with me.

Do they want to discuss how to end this incident?

There was nothing bad.

I also needed it.

“Good.”

* * *

The god of the Pantheon, who came to the realm of the God of Gochang, was a god with an ambiguous divine name called the God of Flexibility.

As soon as I faced him, I was bound to be surprised.

[Hey, does that count?]

[Of course.]

It was surprising.

Of course, it was natural for the gods of the Pantheon to play a part.

All of the gods who were choked by me and the giants were like that.

There was a marked difference from the subordinate gods, such as the God of Gochang.

However, there was a marked difference even compared to the other gods of the Pantheon who had their necks pulled out by me so far.

[The God of Flexibility has one of the best forces in the Pantheon. Considering that the entire universe is under the influence of the Pantheon, it is in fact one of the beings that can be called a master of this world.]

Is it that important?

Looking at this point, you could clearly see the difference between the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

Whatever the divine nature, no matter how powerful it was, the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple could not escape the treatment as confined sinners.

[Would you like to fight?]

I would not.

If there is no reason.

[I know your struggles.]

Said the God of Hope.

It was because it was the God of Hope who remembered my appearance in the Tutorial.

I had no intention of fighting.

Of course, in the Tutorial, I tried to fight somehow when I saw a person stronger than me, but it was because of the longing for growth and greater power.

I did not enjoy fighting without reason.

I was neither a God of Battle nor a God of Challenge.

If the result was meaningless, I wouldn't do it.

[Is the consultation finished?]

The God of Flexibility, who was watching me quietly, spoke.

After seeing me in silence for a moment, he seems to have noticed that I was talking to the God of Hope separately.

[I believe the God of Hope has surely provided you with helpful counseling, but I advise you not to rely on those words. He is a god who seems to represent the ugliness of the world. The closer you get, the more you will get used to the filth.]

It was indeed an accurate review of his character.

No, should I say that it was not a review of his character, but an evaluation of his divine nature?

[What is the mouth of that pig, who gained power because of me.....]

The God of Hope spit out harsh words.

Of course, it was only to me, so the God of Flexibility couldn't hear it.

It wasn't a curse for the emotional exhaustion.

It was a word that was told to me.

Words that seemed to look down on even the God of Flexibility where you could feel the mighty power, and words that imply that he has contributed to the accumulation of that power.

It was very consistent.

“Continue with the story. So what's your suggestion?”

The God of Flexibility said that he had come to me for a suggestion, representing the opinions of the gods of the Pantheon.

[It is an agreement. I acknowledge you and your realm, and I will pay you a secondary price. In return, stop the indiscriminate air raids. Is there a price you want?]

The price.

Of course, all the gods who invaded Earth will have to pay the price.

It might be a problem because there are no other measures other than getting their neck in return.

“I can't do it.”

[Well, I suppose so.]

The God of Flexibility conceded.

He didn't dare try to persuade me with a different offer or force me back to the offer.

[If so, I should check one thing.]

The God of Flexibility said so and declared.

[The invasion of your realm was not the will of all the gods of the Pantheon, and other gods of the Pantheon were not related to the series of events. And the events between you and the related gods that will happen in the future are only a matter of you and those gods, and are not related to the Pantheon.]

Drawing a line.

Between the gods who directly invaded Earth and the entire Pantheon.

As long as the God of Flexibility said that, I had to acknowledge the line.

There was no need for proof of the declaration.

Because it was a god's word.

It was a big concession.

Although the gods who invaded Earth were not all of the Pantheon.

It was by no means a small number.

I cut them all off.

There was nothing bad.

Although it was impossible to ask all of the members of the Pantheon for the price of the invasion of Earth.

On the contrary, the gods who directly intervened in the invasion could be defeated without any hesitation.

As feared by the God of Hope, all the gods of the Pantheon intervened, and there was no possibility of an all-out war.

I accepted the God of Flexibility's agreement and the concession of the Pantheon.

This work was also showing an end.

The God of Flexibility limited the range of enemies.

Thousands of the gods of the Pantheon had to be beaten to end it, but it stopped at only a few dozens.

Should I say that it was good or was it futile?

Anyway, I got everything I intended.

[...It's a way of thinking that's not sane.]

Leaving the realm of the God of Gochang, I came to a planet that looked plain and peaceful.

I could easily notice the appearance.

This planet is not a single realm or a holy land of any god.

In places where the influence of a deity is strong, the everyday appearance does not appear so prominently.

Rather, it seems at first glance that it is engulfed in madness and absurdity.

I visited the holy lands of various gods, but I was able to consistently find them.

The place I came to was the coordinates where the subordinate gods summoned by the gods of the Pantheon, like the God of Gochang, fled.

If so, it means that the subordinate deity has fled to a place other than his own realm.

[Nothing to be surprised by. There are places where the religions of these different gods are in more balance than on any kind of sanctified planet. If you are a subordinate god, you may not possess any holy lands.]

It made sense.

[Most of the members of the Hundred Gods Temple are like this. There are not many holy places. Because of restrictions.]

I remembered the worlds I had gone through in the past when I was in the Tutorial.

Certainly, most of them had a polytheistic worldview.

[There are places where the religions of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon are mixed. Like this place.]

“What?”

[Maybe he knows and ran away here.]

After hearing the words of the God of Hope, I could notice it.

The power of a god approaching me quickly.

It wasn't a godhood.

Of course it wouldn't be.

The Hundred Gods Temple usually cannot move directly due to restrictions.

And what is there is an apostle.

The apostle of a god I had known a long time ago was flying to me.

And I could face it soon.

“It has been a long time.”

[Yes. Indeed.]

It was a voice I had not heard in a long time.

The God of the Sky and his apostle.

It was the voice of the egotistical sword Aubutz.

Chapter 357

God of the Sky (1)

“Ahbooboo.”

It was an unexpected meeting.

I thought we could meet again someday, but I didn't know it would be today.

[Yes, warrior. Go ahead.]

There were a lot of things I wanted to say.

But when I looked at him, I couldn't say anything.

It was not because our relationship was shallow, but rather because it had a great meaning.

His original name was Aubutz.

An apostle of the God of the Sky.

When an emperor of a former human empire was drunk with arrogance, the God of the Sky sent him down to punish the emperor.

As a result, four generations of imperial emperors were killed and sealed under the imperial castle.

Until the empire summoned the warriors of the other world to defeat the demon king summoned by the demons.

It was a holy sword to combat the demon king, the goal of the tutorial stage, and at the same time, it was a sword to test the challenger's mentality and willpower.

And it was a reward I received as a reward for clearing the 26th floor stage, and he was also a companion who traveled with me up to the 60th floor.

Although I did not actively use Ahbooboo as a weapon.

He was a friend who could always share opinions and exchanges. He has been of great significance to me.

Ahbooboo's appearance was the same.

What I mean is.

It was exactly what I first saw on the 26th floor.

An excessively thin and long sword that clearly shows that it is a ceremonial sword.

Jewels with colorful decorations.

His handles are pure white, without a single blemish from the passage of time.

He was in his original form.

Although his appearance had changed as a result of the experiments conducted on the 60th floor, there was no trace of them at all.

So my question was right.

Is that Ahbooboo the Ahbooboo I know?

Most of the characters appearing on the stages were those who have already died in the past.

However, there are exceptions.

Like the godmother on the 19th floor.

The godmother is the past persona of God of Sacrifice, a god of the Hundred Gods Temple.

The godmother, in her past form, is trapped in the tutorial stage, but the original God of Sacrifice still exists outside the Tutorial.

If so, the apostle of the God of the Sky, Aubutz, may still remain somewhere.

Is that the Ahbooboo who was with me in the Tutorial?

Or maybe it's Aubutz, the apostle of the God of the Sky outside the Tutorial.

[You came all the way here to see me. Did you miss me? You missed me, didn't you? Right? Kyung~?]

Of course, if you listen to that insane aegyo, he's the Ahbooboo I know.

Still, I couldn't help but raise my doubts.

It was because Ahbooboo felt different from before.

Of course, it would be obvious as time has passed.

[What?]

"Shut up, please."

[Haha.]

I couldn't maintain a serious atmosphere.

Even if I heard that strange aegyo constantly, I couldn't get used to it.

That unique low-pitched voice made his aegyo even more disgusting.

I felt annoyance and longing at the same time.

It was a strangely unpleasant experience.

[Thank you for coming to see me, but I'm in trouble now. I'm on duty.]

“As an apostle of the God of Heaven?”

[Yes, I am.]

The gods who belonged to the Hundred Gods Temple are bound by restrictions and cannot be free from responsibility.

Due to his nature, it was a particularly fatal restriction for the God of the Sky, who would have a vast amount of believers.

The apostles were the method of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple to overcome such limitations.

The apostles who act on behalf of their will and abilities take care of their territory and believers.

This was also the ultimate goal for the Hundred Gods Temple: to train their challengers through tutorials.

When I was clearing the Tutorial stages, the God of the Sky made his son and his wife his apostles.

And he tried to interact directly with me through them.

Actually, we had a relationship that wasn't too bad.

Until the God of Heaven recovered Ahbooboo.

[It's been a long time since I've seen the giant friends over there.]

Ahbooboo said to the giants behind me.

However, the giants were confused.

“They can’t remember you.”

The time when the God of the Sky recovered Ahbooboo was in the early 60th floor.

It was before I found a way to stop the giants’ memories from resetting each time the tutorial stage was repeated.

[Ah, that’s right. I was there. We all did it.]

Everyone did.

Everyone I met there.

Suddenly a question came up.

How did Ahbooboo feel when he climbed the stage with me and encountered them?

He sees those who remind him of his situation, who had been trapped without even realizing it a while ago.

I can not know.

I have never asked.

In Iddy’s case, she was desperate.

Although she tried not to express it.

She eventually couldn’t hide it completely.

Because she is no different from a buoy floating in the sea.

No, she probably is not as meaningful as a buoy.

That's probably why.

That's why she was obsessed with the narrow, dark tunnels on the 12th floor.

She said that she was so sad when the tunnels disappeared due to a fire.

She made her own meaning.

Giving up the remaining summoning opportunities.

In return, by presenting me an impossible goal.

What about Ahbooboo?

Could he have found his own meaning?

Ahbooboo was a sword that wasn't corrupted.

He was the opposite of Seregia.

She always tried to wield herself as a sword.

She prefers to fly and fight on her own, rather than fight in my hand.

She was feeling bored and discomforted in her sword life.

She spoke like a person and acted like a person.

"Is the work worth doing?"

[Yes, look. Is it beautiful?]

Ahbooboo asked.

Under my feet, and under the clouds, a wide continent could be seen.

As we were high up, I could see the cities sparsely.

It was not a civilization as advanced as Earth, but it looked quite busy.

And the overall quality of life and the level of satisfaction also seemed to be quite high.

It was not that there were no unfortunate people and poor people at all, but they were living without despair in their circumstances.

It was a healthy society.

[It's a really cool place.]

I was able to understand the warm affection contained in the voice of Ahbooboo.

It was a voice that contained pride, a sense of accomplishment, and all kinds of positive emotions.

[Many worlds are managed, but there are few places better than this. It's probably so throughout the entire universe.]

“What is the share of the believer?”

I was also in the position of running a church, so I was most curious about that.

[11% of the population belongs to the Church of the Sky.]

That's not a lot.

11% of the planet's total population.

Obviously not a small number, but it was unreasonable to call it a planetary religion.

Of course, even so, the God of the Sky will not give up.

[In that sense, I don't want any uproar happening here.]

Ahbooboo said as if requesting me.

“Do you know why I came here?”

No, of course you do.

The clash between the Pantheon and me was a universal event that all the gods of this world would be watching.

If you are a god that is directly or indirectly related to me, you will be keen on your senses and gather information.

On the contrary, if you are a god who has nothing to do with it, you're probably chewing popcorn.

Ahbooboo and the God of the Sky are very closely related to me.

Of course they would have been watching my steps.

They may also know that I am pursuing the lower-level gods who joined the gods of the Pantheon.

At least, they know for sure that I am in the process of colliding with the Pantheon.

Ahbooboo thinks that if I attack a god hiding on this planet, it will damage the surroundings, so he asked me to step down from here.

It wasn't that I didn't understand his position.

But.

“If I can't do that.”

[If that's the case, well, I can't help it. I have no choice but to do what I have to do.]

Then the conclusion would be simple.

The sky began to move.

The temple that was hidden from the empty sky was revealed.

An aerial temple of the God of the Sky floats outside the atmosphere.

Its appearance looked more like an artificial satellite than a general temple.

So what was the actual use?

“It's a little disappointing that we had to fight as soon as we met again.”

[Really. Couldn't warrior just give up?]

Unfortunately, surrender was impossible.

The same will be true of the God of the Sky and Ahbooboo.

He is unlike the gods that can pour out his own believers like expendable supplies as needed.

The God of the Sky is different.

The divinity of the God of the Sky is uniquely related with his relationships with others.

He may seem more authoritative and overbearing than anyone else, but on the contrary, he is more dependent on his followers than any other god.

Even in his own sanctuary.

Although he only occupies 11% of the planet.

He is a god who cannot go beyond the situation where his own believers are threatened by other gods.

The temple of the God of the Sky over there began to shine brightly.

[Be careful. The God of the Sky is a very powerful god.]

The quiet God of Hope whispered.

[When the God of Slowness attempted to unify the universe, the God of the Sky.....]

The words of the God of Hope who was trying to explain something were cut off.

I couldn't feel the God of Hope.

The next moment, I was standing on my feet on the ground, not in the sky.

*

“Seregia?”

I tried calling Seregia, but there was no response.

The fact that she was disconnected from me proved the seriousness of the situation.

“Did Miss Seregia also come with you?”

“Yes.”

“Oh, let me say hello.”

I thought that too, but Seregia refused to greet him.

Even by my standards, Seregia has a very cold personality.

“It’s a little disappointing.”

Yeah.

It would have been nice if she had a short greeting.

I don’t know why she hates him so much.

“It’s amazing, this one.”

The world was turned upside down.

As we were flying in the sky before, we now stood in a desolate wasteland.

“Right?”

Ahbooboo asked again.

When I looked up to the side where I heard the voice, there was Ahbooboo who looked nothing like what I had seen before.

Ahbooboo looked like a human, not an egotistical sword.

With a thick lined face.

A tall height.

Somehow I felt bad because he was uselessly handsome.

He appeared like a mid boss in a cartoon, but he looked like a character who finally became a companion of the main character.

I have traveled around the world and encountered all kinds of beings, but his unrealistically handsome appearance is rare.

It was unfamiliar.

“Are you confused? I’m Ahbooboo. Kyung~?”

Ahbooboo frowned in one eye.

Face-to-face and hearing that aegyo, the destructive power doubled.

I felt like I wanted to hit him as quickly as possible and very passionately.

“How do you feel? As a mortal, returning to a human body?”

It was weird.

The body of a mortal, not a god.

I thought it made sense in the past.

It feels like a part of the body that has been degenerated and disappeared has been created.

I couldn’t feel my divine power or even my divinity.

Even the power of the God of the Sky was not felt.

The most basic fact that can be inferred is that there is no divine power in this wasteland.

“It’s the technique we were experimenting with. Right?”

“Yes.”

We tried several things to find a way to restrain divine power to counter the gods.

As a result, it was possible to complete Seregia’s ability to block divine power.

But that was the limit.

“How is this possible?”

“It was completed by the God of the Sky. When you look down from high above, everything looks alike. Distance also means loss of personality.”

It was an interesting point of view.

But this was an unfinished technique.

It was certainly surprising that my power had been blown away, but likewise the power of the God of the Sky has disappeared.

The biggest reason we studied the blocking of divine power on the 60th floor was my existence.

In those days, I was confident that if my divine power had vanished, I would not lose against any being.

That’s why it was the technique I studied.

If the God of the Sky wanted to use this technique, he should have hid other devices that would overpower the opponent in the midst of suppressing divine power.

“Why don’t you have me instead?”

Ahbooboo said.

I did not understand the meaning for a while.

“Huh?”

“Warrior, if you don’t have divine power, I can’t lose to you.”

“What?”

“I am a swordsman who overcame the limitations of mortals without any miracles. Isn’t it natural?”

Ahbooboo said, pulling a sword from his waist.

I finally understood the action.

What Ahbooboo was saying.

“It’s been a long time since we met, and it’s so sad to have to fight. Don’t worry too much. I will do it in moderation and return you to your home planet.

“No, isn’t this crazy?”

Chapter 358

God of the Sky (2)

“Hahahaha!”

I couldn’t stop laughing.

Looking at me like that, Ahbooboo asked while sulking.

“Are you mad?”

“As mad as a hatter, you ask?”

I laughed again.

Ahbooboo now spoke with a completely sarcastic voice.

“No matter how confident you are, isn’t that too much of an attitude? You underestimate me too much.”

I’m sorry he felt that way.

At first, I laughed because it was ridiculous, but soon it became very pleasant.

It’s a confrontation with Ahbooboo in a state where divine power was sealed.

It was a thrill and tension that I had never felt after becoming a god.

There will be few opportunities to feel these feelings in the future.

Even if I face a god that is much stronger than me.

So, even if my odds of victory are really less than this fight, I won't be able to feel this childish and trivial stimulation.

It felt like playing a fun sport for inspiration.

Okay.

I had been chasing this inspiration and burning myself.

In the end, I thought it didn't matter if I ended up dead.

I was addicted to the stimulation that much.

Like someone addicted to alcohol, drugs, and gambling.

I was crazy about the hormones secreted during tension.

So, after retirement, I wasn't interested in anything, and I was desperate.

Coming into the Tutorial.

Even when I realized the reality of that place.

I was afraid of the crisis of death, so I suffered from pain, while rejoicing.

About the stimulus that I found again after a long time.

I only knew I would die like that while living the life of an addict.

But I was able to find meaning in the end.

Now I can maintain my goals and life without stimulation.

When I became a god and escaped my body's confines, I was not affected by hormones at all.

Only then could I be freed from the pleasures that had bound me for almost half of my life.

I could understand why my sister withdrew from me.

Why my father told me to quit being a pro gamer with its low probability of success.

My behavior when I was wrapped up in the name of passion would have been nothing more than madness in my family's eyes.

I got away from such stimulus.

That didn't mean I started thinking negatively about the stimulus.

As always, the stimulus that I encountered again thanks to Ahbooboo was the best.

This stimulus was my foundation and source.

"Somehow you look like how you used to be. Is it because you became human?"

"Yes?"

My body trembled with joy.

It was an uncontrolled pleasure.

It was powerful but volatile.

It is a feeling of satisfaction that never lasts long.

It will take effort to keep this up for long.

"Gather together."

A bunch of sand gathered in front of my open palm.

The sand turned into a long spear.

To start the battle, you must have a weapon first.

If sand is given a little moisture and magical power, it becomes a deadly weapon in itself.

“Would you be able to fight me with such a crude weapon? May I lend you a dagger?”

Ahbooboo asked, pulling out a small dagger that he was wearing behind his waist.

It's a dagger.

It was really useful in the beginning.

When the Tutorial started, I had picked a dagger and a shield.

The reason was very disturbing.

At that time, I passed the sword and the spear, concerned about my weak muscles, the difficulty of using them, and their range.

I reasoned that my odds weren't high when facing an enemy faster, stronger, and more seasoned than me, if I used those difficult weapons.

Instead, I chose a dagger and a shield.

But in fact, even if I chose a dagger and shield, the odds were still not high against an enemy that was far stronger than me.

This is what I thought at the time.

Depending on the shield to somehow narrow the distance to the opponent.

Then, dig into the enemy's vital spot with the dagger at close range.

In the process, there would be damage to me as well, but it was a mindset that if I was losing a battle, I'd die with my opponent anyway.

“Bastard.”

When I recalled it, it was so ridiculous.

It was an idea that the owner of a convenience store, who only drank alcohol in the corner of the room, could think of.

It was a really pure dorkiness that made me laugh from the perspective of others.

“...If you keep doing that, I will feel a little offended, warrior.”

Ahbooboo grunted.

He thought I was cursing him.

That's all I need to think about.

“Shall we start then?”

“...Yes. Well, don't worry. I'll finish it quickly.”

* * *

“Keuk!”

Ahbooboo rushed back, spurting a bucket of blood.

“Heuk heuk, keugh.”

Blood and gastric juice were mixed.

I watched Ahbooboo vomit for a moment.

I didn't want to attack him right now.

It wasn't manners, he was just a little dirty.

After a while, Ahbooboo who had calmed down a little, wiped his mouth roughly and asked.

"...Wasn't that poison a skill?"

Of course, it is a skill.

I got it as a reward for clearing the 12th floor.

I grew up through labor within the Tutorial.

By administering it to myself, I developed extreme poison tolerance.

As a result, a grotesque biochemical weapon was completed that would even look ridiculous by the standards of radioactive contamination.

This ability belongs to the Tutorial.

This is space prepared by the God of Sky to destroy everything related to divine power.

The Tutorial was eventually made by the God of Order, the system, and the other gods of the Hundred Gods Temple who were involved in the design.

"It was, but not anymore."

How long has it been?

It was enough time to analyze the poisoning skills and make them completely mine.

Actually, what could be difficult about it?

It was all about poisoning the magical power.

Compared to dissecting power, which also symbolizes the identity of God, it could be said to be a very basic skill.

“Ahhh!”

Ahbooboo hurriedly covered his arms and screamed.

The poison was making his skin crack like the ground of a wasteland.

“This is so absurd!”

“So what.”

Sorry, but I am very fond of irrational fights.

If I have the upper hand.

Ahbooboo wondered what was so unfair.

I was honestly surprised at the sight.

He was vomiting blood and his skin was burning, but considering the power of my poison, it was very minor damage.

It would be common for humans to turn into a handful of poison as soon as they come into contact with my poison.

“He’s definitely not an average human being.”

“Not an average human being? Haha, that’s a funny word.”

Ahbooboo said cheerfully.

But you won’t be able to endure the poison forever.

The ideal of the human body.

“What are you doing, will you stand still and die?”

“Then I’ll go again. As you wish.”

Ahbooboo said so and lifted the sword again.

Seeing it, I lifted my magical power.

He seems to be aiming the sword from a distance, but the story is different if the opponent is Ahbooboo.

As soon as the tip of Ahbooboo’s sword pointed at me, an invisible blow came.

I could recognize it at a glance.

A space-warp.

It is Ahbooboo’s main technique.

It was not a skill at the level of catching floating clouds like a natural sword or a sword of the mind.

It was just a technique to shoot aura compressed to the limit with a sword as a medium.

The technique of mind slash was just a trick using auras that were invisible to the naked eye.

The problem was its power.

As the technique that became the birthplace of the zit pop I use, its power and cutting power were unmatched.

Kwang!

My pre-deployed magic and the blow collided.

The blow broke my defenses, and it hit me exactly on my forehead.

The impact sent my head sharply back.

Fortunately, my head was not split by the attack, but my vision was shaken.

The sand raised by the blow filled the area.

I missed Ahbooboo's appearance.

There was no need to spread my aura and find Ahbooboo's location.

The action taken by Ahbooboo who was intoxicated was obvious.

The sand in front of me cracked and Ahbooboo popped out.

As long as I was waiting, I was able to blow away the sand dunes immediately.

Without delay, Ahbooboo shook his sword and cut off the sand spears.

And apart from the swinging of the sword, the attack was fired again.

I couldn't get close.

I moved my body quickly and avoided it.

It was a little embarrassing.

The strike was far beyond the power I assumed.

Ahbooboo, who came close, tried to stab deep.

I turned around and avoided it again.

The attack was shot again from the sword passing by me.

It was the extreme of the sword.

It was like a new sword springing out of the sword.

I kept blocking and avoiding them, but the attacks continued without a break.

Bang!

I was struck again by the blow.

Again, my body did not split by the blow, but in return I had to lie on the wasteland for a long time.

“Wow, that’s very strong.”

It’s my greatest strength.

That I am good quality.

“Woohoo, how is it, you can’t win in close combat, right?”

It was definitely difficult.

This dimension was different in the first place.

Ahbooboo used the space more three-dimensionally than I did, and endlessly intermingled attacks between attacks.

When I use one turn, my opponent is using three or four turns.

I had to admit it.

Ahbooboo had an upper hand over me.

However, the sword wasn’t everything.

If it is difficult to win with detailed techniques, you can just hit the opponent with destructive power.

“Light.”

Light was created in the air.

The light changed into the shape of a sword.

Light allows sight to see the world.

However, excessive light rather makes it impossible to see any aspect of the world.

In a world dyed completely white, I swung the sword of light.

“Lightsword.”

I didn’t even care about Ahbooboo’s location.

Wherever you are in the world, you will burn away.

* * *

“I didn’t expect this.”

The light faded.

It was a surprising result.

It was not the result I would have ever expected.

I expected that the light would burn Ahbooboo together with the world and would form a black hole, that the space would collapse and return to where it was.

However, rather than burning the world, the light was sealed and disappearing.

“You must be ignorant too. What if I really died?”

One of the many Ahbooboo in front of me said.

Thousands of Ahbooboo stood on the wasteland burning by the heat.

No, tens of thousands... There were more than that.

No matter how much I count, there is no end to them.

It was an unrealistic sight.

“...Who is real.”

“All of us are real. All of us are fake too.”

Countless numbers of Ahbooboo said the same thing at the same time.

Even the cadence and pitch matched perfectly.

There wasn't even a slight disharmony that appeared when several people spoke at the same time.

“How is this possible?”

I couldn't help but ask.

How could beings who had not reached godhood maintain multiple selves?

It's something I couldn't do either.

On the 60th floor, I made Hochi, but Hochi was born and grew as a completely separate entity from me.

“We're the collection of Aubutz that existed in the tutorial stage and were recovered by the God of the Sky.”

“...What?”

I didn't understand that for a moment.

Recovered Ahbooboo in the Tutorial and collected him here?

That couldn't be the answer.

There are many Ahbooboo in the Tutorial, although they may be similar.

He wasn't one thing.

Like Iddy, the boss mob on the 5th floor, was different from the Iddy with me.

"It's simple. It is possible by combining once and then dividing again."

"...Combined and then divided?"

In the Tutorial, all Ahbooboo who had different egos and experienced different times became one?

And then split back into multiple pieces?

"Oh, warrior, you don't have to be so shocked because of me."

Ahbooboo said, as if it were nothing special.

But it was a big deal.

Someone's ego was like that of clay, and it was not something that could be shared.

"Shall we finish this? Do not worry. As I said before, I will return you to your home planet without any damage."

Ahbooboo said so.

And he raised his power.

It is the power of countless Ahbooboo.

Surely its power will be transcendent.

I could be sure.

Ahbooboo would be the most powerful in all universes.

Among the beings who could not ascend to godhood.

I didn't have that.

Take your breath slowly.

I asked the world.

“Stop.”

The flames that were swaying while burning the wasteland stopped like a scene in a photo.

The sand that had risen in a gust was captured in the air.

Ahbooboo who tried to overcome me by raising his strength was also trapped in a paused time and stopped.

It was definitely great.

This space.

It blew away my divine power.

This space that degraded a deity to a non-deity.

But there was one flaw.

“If you have lost your divinity and have been downgraded to a non-godly spirit, you will still be able to regain your godhood from the beginning.”

The basis of my godhood was, after all, my belief in myself.

That I will win.

As long as I have that belief and the subject of myself, I can again achieve godhood and attain divinity anytime, anywhere.

It didn't take too long.

The time spent talking with Ahbooboo and babbling.

Just that time was enough.

Chapter 359

God of the Sky (3)

It was not a bad experience.

To lose one's godhood.

I could have looked back on the past.

“Well, it wasn't bad.”

I muttered alone, but many of the stiffened Abubus couldn't even say a word.

This couldn't be compared to freezing others by using magic.

The time in this virtual world itself had stopped.

I was able to relax and prepare for the next move.

It was okay to put aside the worries that Abubu might get out of the restrictions.

“This is good, isn't it?”

Let's take some time and do some research.

I was curious about how the God of the Sky completed this space.

Even if it wasn't right now, I could save this space and use it later.

The space where time is still was useful in many ways.

It is never easy to stop the time of one world like this.

Never.

Even if I think about the case of Earth right now, it was so.

There were numerous humans and other living things there.

Stopping time in a place where numerous beings live was possible only by engaging with each of the beings.

Moreover, when Earth's time stops, only Earth shifts from the time axis of the universe.

I would have to deal with that twist, but it would be a ridiculous penalty to destroy a few planets.

However, in this case, it was a bit special.

First of all, the main point was that it was a virtual world with limited space.

There was only me and Abubu.

Of course, Abubu's numbers were enormous, but as Abubu himself said, those many Abubus are all one entity.

There is a final reason.

There are no other gods in this world.

It was only me.

Therefore, I was able to engage in the world and express my will to my heart's content.

The cost of consumption was still there, but it wasn't as limiting.

In other worlds, for example, Abubu's realm, which was a multi-religious society, the scenario is different.

There are temples of various gods, and some apostles manage the realm.

Some gods that do not belong to the Hundred Gods Temple may be directly involved in the territory.

In this case, apart from the consumption value, it was impossible to beat the laws of the whole world.

There is a unique realm of another god.

Suddenly, the God of Slowness came to mind.

This image of everything stopped reminded me of the time when I used the power of time confinement of the God of Slowness in the past.

Kirikiri had said that the deity of the God of Slowness was more of an error.

In fact, the God of Slowness was not a god that simply referred to speed.

Time imprisonment slows down time to the limit, making it possible to experience a world where time has stopped.

However, on the contrary, warping was the power to move a distance faster than others through the accelerated time.

What the God of Slowness represents is just the passage of time.

That was all.

I am well aware of what it means to unify the universe, which the God of Hope carries around in his mouth.

If the God of Slowness is the god above the gods.

If he had become a higher level god, he would surely have imposed his divinity on the entire universe.

It wasn't because of the nature of the God of Slowness.

Of course, if you are a god that is the natural thing to do.

And the world that the God of Slowness would have established would have only flowed infinitely.

No life, no death.

There may be turbulence in the flowing process, but it won't get stuck.

Like a river that flows forever.

I got little goosebumps.

I looked at the frozen world and the Abubus again.

Do they want a world like this?

Could this world be someone's utopia?

I could understand, but I didn't understand at the same time.

I also fell in love with this still world.

It was just that I was delighted that I had the opportunity to use my time efficiently.

But the God of Slowness didn't have it.

For other purposes.

I remembered the advice Kirikiri gave me a long time ago.

The God of Slowness is not a god that humans can trust.

The advice came once again.

[Can you hear me?]

It was Seregia.

It seems that she was reconnected when the godhood was restored.

I heard the voice of the God of Hope.

“Uh, I can hear you.”

After answering without thinking, a question arose.

How can we communicate?

The time in this space has stopped.

Seregia, which exists outside of space, must have spoken in flowing time.

Wow-

The world was collapsing.

The space was literally collapsing with a heavy vibration.

The reason was obvious.

It seemed that the cause and effect of the world were being distorted as a new deity appeared in a world where no god exists.

In fact, it was natural if I thought about it.

If only I had been able to keep my godhood in this space.

The God of the Sky must have found a way to somehow pass on his power to Abubu.

The vain expectation of having a space where time had stopped disappeared.

In any case, the initial purpose was roughly achieved.

It was over if Abubu was put down neatly and safely escaped without getting caught up in this collapsing world.

[Mayday, Mayday.]

Huh?

Sounds like a signal I've been hearing a lot from somewhere.

I remembered it.

It was Seregia.

[Mayday, Mayday.]

Ah, no!

No, it works, but wait a bit before coming in!

Kuaoang!

Smashing the sky of the collapsing world, a huge sword fell.

*

“Wow, it was really cool.”

I almost made it to the goal.

It's also not easy to avoid Seregia falling unprotected.

In the meantime, I had to escape from the collapsing space with Seregia.

In fact, this was the most dangerous case.

I will not be destroyed by the enemy.

I believe so.

However, it was different when people were caught up in an accident like this.

Even Seregia wasn't my enemy, so I couldn't even imagine her as part of the struggle.

"Seregia, wait for a while and then come in."

Had even a few minutes passed, I would have prepared to escape in a stable manner.

In fact, it didn't even take a few minutes.

It depends on when I decide.

[Why did you ignore me like that?]

"When did I ignore you? I said I can hear you."

[I didn't hear it.]

Seregia replied confidently.

Even though she was connected to me, it seemed as if the answer didn't come back and she immediately rushed in.

[I couldn't hear it either.]

Said the God of Hope.

Yes, I didn't tell you, so you wouldn't have heard it.

What are you hoping for?

That's probably the reason why my voice didn't reach Seregia.

A tremendous amount of energy was pouring down from the temple of the God of the Sky located high above.

It is a summoning process to manifest here.

When Abubu who was acting on his behalf was hit, he seemed to have come to settle the situation by himself.

Then the will of the God of the Sky will be important.

What does he want?

[Let him out]

The God of the Sky said as soon as he revealed himself.

There's no room for negotiation.

[He is my apostle.]

The incarnation of the God of the Sky, manifested through the energy of the temple, was enormous.

Like the usual way of the gods.

His body looked white like a cloud.

Sometimes there was a part that looked dark like a dark cloud, but it was usually white.

His eyes, located near his face, were shining red like a fiery sun.

It was such a figure that fit the concept of the God of the Sky.

“He’s also the sword I had before that.”

I was the real owner of Abubu.

Until the God of the Sky recovered him.

And I never agreed to the recall.

Never.

[The child who was with you is now only a part.]

Yes.

You gathered and merged many Abubu who existed on the stages.

The Abubu who shared the same time with me is now part of the greater Abubu.

“Don’t worry, I’ll take him out again. I’ll return the rest.”

[Do you think the child will want that?]

I was silent for a moment.

I could not give a definite answer.

I do not know.

Whether he will be happy.

Rather, I would be pessimistic about his situation of continuing to merge and divide like a test subject.

Or maybe he will despair for another reason.

But I will do it.

It was selfish and for myself.

And for the Abubu who was with me.

The Abubu who had been with me would certainly have rejected it.

Even if he hadn't rejected it, he would never have liked it.

So, as I promised the giants.

And as it will be for all beings in the tutorial stage in the future.

I will also give Abubu his true self.

That was my will.

[It's terribly selfish. Are you trying to resolve the gap you had through others!?!]

The God of the Sky came to his senses.

The God of the Sky would do so.

To protect the believers, send Abubu to fight me.

If you are the God of the Sky who can come directly to protect Abubu, you can ignore the restrictions.

I understood.

And on the one hand, I acknowledged the words.

The enormous body of the God of the Sky shook.

The God of the Sky, with a lumpy human upper body, stretched out his huge arm.

Then a huge window appeared at the end.

It also looked like a harpoon.

Like that body, the power contained in the white window was recognizable at a glance.

“Seregia.”

The God of the Sky chose to solve the problem through force.

It was a good choice for me too.

Seregia reduced her size from the form of a giant sword.

Seregia had turned into a size that was easy to hold, so I took care of her and held her in my hand.

[Be careful, the God of the Sky.....]

I ignored the voice of the God of Hope, saying, to be careful.

“My King.”

Two giants who were far away approached.

“Yes, he is our enemy. Go.”

As soon as they heard me, the giants flew toward the God of the Sky.

There was a good reason for bringing only the two of them.

Not because of optimism.

It was because the power of those two giants was so great.

For a long time, they were warriors who sharpened themselves only to catch and kill the gods.

But I couldn't leave everything to them.

Even without the warning of the God of Hope, I knew that the God of the Sky is a strong enemy that I should be wary of.

As the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were confined, they couldn't exert influence on the world.

I heard that it is difficult to grow.

The God of the Sky played a pivotal role in an event that once almost devoured the entire universe.

For a clean victory, it's best to end the battle with the best blow without taking measurements back and forth.

While the giants grasped the God of the Sky, I prepared an attack.

A big one.

[The quest window is updated.]

[The God of Light proposes a new quest.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[The God of Light proposes a new quest.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[The God of Light proposes a new quest.]

[The quest window is updated.]

[The God of Light proposes a new quest.]

.

.

[Warning!]

[Please leave quickly.]

The quest window message appeared unexpectedly and stopped moving for a while.

This quest window message has no function other than to deliver the quests of the Hundred Gods.

Kirikiri, who made the quest window, said so.

But what is this warning?

Should it be interpreted as Kirikiri's personal warning?

After a moment of doubt.

I could see the meaning of the warning.

[Kwaaa!]

A space opened behind the sky, and a strange creature appeared.

I wondered if it should be called a living thing.

It was clearly moving, but it looked like a metal device.

It was sparkling golden and had sharp nails.

It was divided into thousands of branches and tied the body of the God of the Sky.

The sharp golden blade at the end of a branch penetrated through the incarnation of the God of Heaven easily.

It was so absurd that I was just staring blankly for a moment.

It was an unrealistic show of power.

I realized when I was trying to ask the God of Hope what the hell was that.

What would the God of Hope, who loves to talk, look at with fear in silence?

“The God of Order.”

Chapter 360

God of the Sky (4)

It was unrealistic.

That expression was perfect.

That power felt so transcendent.

A golden metal device.

I watched from a distance as the God of Order binded the God of the Sky.

As if watching a scene in a movie blankly.

It was like a screen full of very colorful CG spreading out, like watching a blockbuster movie that took away your sense of reality.

Dazed.

And feeling a little ridiculous.

Sharp nails penetrated the body of the God of the Sky.

The continually expanding branches sticking one by one into the body of the God of the Sky reminded me of a plant taking root in the soil.

The God of the Sky could not even rebel.

His body was being eaten, but I did not see him struggle, let alone rebel.

[Let's run away.]

The God of Hope whispered.

It was truly a God of Hope-esque desire.

I ignored it.

I couldn't take my eyes off the sight.

I couldn't let go of such an interesting sight.

The scene where the God of the Sky was being overwhelmed helplessly.

The difference between the God of the Sky and the God of Order does not seem to be a simple difference of power.

The problem was the ability of that metal device's sharp nails.

After digging into the body, it was possible to paralyze even the nerves, so the body was stiffened and could not move.

No, this was a nonsensical comparison.

Because there can be no such thing as a nervous system in the incarnation of a god.

It must be the suppression of one's divine power.

Other explanations were impossible.

In fact, after the God of the Sky came into contact with the metal device, not only did he not move his body, but I did not see any movement using divine powers either.

However, it was not a convincing assumption.

It was the same even when I saw Seregia in my hand right now.

She also had the ability to suppress divine power.

With that power, I was convinced that we would have the upper hand no matter what god we would collide with.

And I never thought that other gods would have this ability too.

Blocking other gods' powers was no different from giving up one's own powers as well.

Had it not been for Seregia's use limited to weapons, it would have been impossible to even try.

"You said you were a believer of the God of Order."

[Apostle.]

There is no way that a god who has apostles as well as believers can use the same method as Seregia.

In addition, that golden mechanical device was not a weapon or something of the God of Order's, but the God of Order itself.

[Just because I am an apostle of the God of Order, does not mean I can escape this situation. Come on, you have to run away while that monster has his eyes on the God of the Sky.]

It was a whispering voice, but this time it was too much.

He was straining his voice so much that it sounded like gasping rather than speaking.

It was strangely unpleasant.

[Let's run away.]

Somehow, the God of Hope seemed certain that the God of Order would attack him.

Despite the fact that he was an apostle of the God of Order.

Rather than keeping order, he is a God of Hope who uses the gaps in the system to do business with all gods.

There must be a lot of things.

“I’m sorry.”

I had no intention of running away.

Actually, I couldn’t.

The God of Order seemed to be focusing all his attention on overpowering the God of the Sky.

It seemed that he wasn’t even interested in us.

This is worth a closer look.

[Stop! Why are you flying over there!?!]

“I need to take a look.”

I couldn’t see everything from a distance.

Having pushed the two giants away, I approached the God of the Sky and the God of Order.

[Stop it! We should run away, so why are we going in the opposite direction!?! Hey!]

The God of Hope shouted.

This guy, he’s in a hurry, so he’s talking again.

[You’re crazy!]

Uh.

He even swore.

“He’s not responding to us.”

The God of Hope said he was distracted by overpowering the God of the Sky.

However, the God of Order was overpowering the God of the Sky too leisurely.

It wasn’t that he couldn’t pay attention to us, he wasn’t.

He was just ignoring us.

With such an opponent in front, I couldn’t turn around and run away just because he looked strong.

[.....]

Even the God of Hope was silent for a moment, wondering why the God of Order did not show interest in us.

The golden metal blades were still digging deeper and deeper into the body of the God of the Sky.

I went closer, and closer.

The method Seregia and I discovered to cut off the circulation of divine power was through the contamination of the divine power.

When the two divinities are mixed together, the divinity loses its original meaning and cannot supply any more divine power.

That was our way.

But if it was not this way...

How does the God of Order block the divine power of the God of the Sky?

The God of the Sky also found a way to block divine power through Ahbooboo, but in the end, it wound up freezing both of our divine powers.

It was a technique that came from our experiment.

There was nothing different besides using a space called a virtual world as a medium instead of Seregia.

After all, it is impossible to unilaterally ignore only one divine power.

That's what I know so far.

I got closer and closer.

Stretching my arm, reaching through the distance.

Like an incarnation, even though there were holes here and there, no bloodstains or stiffness occurred.

It was natural.

Blood, nerves, muscles, and bones do not exist.

Only divine power flows in there.

I looked closely, but still couldn't find any clues.

It was a sight that seemed impossible the more I thought about it.

Considering the nature of the divine power.

Divinity is power after all.

Dominance is not defined by the dominance of other beings.

The power to ignore the dominance of other beings and exercise your own dominance is.....

Ah.

I could finally understand.

A God above God.

There was the God of Slowness who tried to be reborn as a being higher than a god by taking countless gods of the world as believers.

The God of Slowness wanted to spread his own meaning all over the world.

It is impossible to even try if one is a general god.

Apart from the consumption value.

I couldn't stop the world's time even if I ignored the cost of using divine power.

It was impossible as long as there were gods other than myself in this world.

Because their territory cannot be invaded.

The gods were playing the role of the axis that supported the world from going to extremes, using only their existence.

But if the God of Order is beyond the standards of a deity.

Just as a deity can ignore the dominance of a non-deity and carry out their will.

He will be able to carry out his will.

Like the past God of Slowness had tried.

[There is fear in your heart. Haven't you thought of running away? Don't be too discouraged. Shouldn't we live first?]

But not yet.

The God of Order has not yet been reborn as a completely superior being.

I could be sure.

Seeing that he is overpowering the God of the Sky, it seems that he has stepped closer to some extent.

He wasn't perfect.

If he was, there would be no confusion left in this world.

The world would already be changed into the way the God of Order wants and thinks.

The God of Hope, who is whispering to my ear to run away right now, should have disappeared.

By the fact that the God of Hope, who loves confusion and extreme emotions more than anyone else, and causes confusion by using the gaps in the system, is still alive and his normal sense, I could know that the God of Order has not been able to impose his will on the whole world.

[The God of Order is such a god. Do you know how many gods want to get out of the system's constraints? The most powerful gods of the Hundred Gods Temple and the great forces of the Pantheon. He is a god who is binding them altogether alone.]

He was indeed worthy of it.

[It is difficult to even call him a god. As we call it, he is a system that encompasses all of the world. Now do you understand how reckless you are?]

“Okay. I understand.”

[Good. Then let's go back quickly.]

Instead of preparing to go back like the God of Hope said, I called the giants.

“Old Man, Grandmother. Bring the kids to where I am now. Right now.”

[...What?]

The Old Man and Grandmother replied that they would come straight away.

It won't take long.

[What are you trying to do! Stop! Don't do it!]

Then, let's start the outpost until the Old Man and Grandmother come.

[No, you're crazy!]

“Zit pop.”

* * *

[King. What is that?]

Asked the grandmother.

Grandmother was a little late to bring all the giants scattered in small groups.

So I explained it again.

“The God of Order. The System. And the true owner of the Tutorial. It's our main enemy.”

[It looks quite different from what I expected.]

Grandmother said with curiosity.

It was a different response from the old man.

The Old Man was agitated after listening to my explanation, and he ran straight to the God of Order with his subordinates.

And attacked again and again.

Of course it was pointless.

Like the zit pop I used.

No attack could damage the God of Order.

It was so hard and sturdy that it ignored all attacks.

Rather, no attack went in at all.

As if it doesn't exist in this world.

Like an illusion that exists only as a hologram, it was impossible to exercise physical force on the golden metal blades of the God of Order.

The God of Order still only restrained the God of the Sky.

I asked the God of Hope for an explanation.

[Ha! That stupid piece of gold!]

The God of Hope shouted triumphantly.

His attitude changed.

Is he okay with that?

He said he was an apostle.

[It doesn't matter if you are outside of the target of that execution. That thin god is basically harmless. Unless you are subject to sanctions.]

And the God of Hope, he was convinced that he was definitely the target of sanctions and was scared in advance.

He was quite a bit of a guy.

Really.

“Oh my.”

It became embarrassing.

I called out to the old man and grandmother and everyone else.

I thought that if I could win against the God of Order at this opportunity, I would be able to achieve my goal immediately.

But it doesn't even fight me at all.

This made my position quite miserable.

I might not be more than the God of the Sky.

The intertwining of the God of the Sky was a sight to behold.

He was overpowered by the God of Order and couldn't even say a word.

In that state, he was attacked directly by the zit pop defenselessly.

Since then, he has been exposed to the angry attacks from the old man and the giants.

Looking at that form, I was convinced.

The God of Order appeared here only because of the God of the Sky.

Because of the fact that the God of the Sky ignored the rules and tried to act directly, he was arrested.

Well.

So what about this one?

“Old man. Stop for a second.”

I approached the God of the Sky.

The God of the Sky was still grasping a huge spear.

Although he couldn't lift a single one of his fingers.

I put my face to the front of the huge spear.

What if I was cut by this spear?

The God of the Sky was subdued just by trying to act on his own.

If someone is harmed by that action.

Will he be subject to more sanctions?

Chapter 361

God of the Sky (5)

“Oh, the God of the Sky is beating a man. Oh, it stings.”

I wandered around the God of Order with my face flowing with blood.

Of course, I wouldn't bleed just because my face was stabbed.

It was the blood I made for a more colorful presentation.

The God of the Sky did not respond.

He didn't even budge as he was bound by the God of Order.

[Mad lad.]

The scornful curse of the God of Hope flowed in.

[Do you know that the intelligence of the God of Order is at the level of a monkey? How about you stop using that appearance because I'm embarrassed to look at you.]

When I listened to the God of Hope, I became a little bit embarrassed myself.

I stopped the blood that was flowing like a waterfall and returned to the front of the God of the Sky.

So self-harm blackmail didn't work.

Too bad.

I wanted to find out how the God of Order would move after the God of the Sky attacked me.

Would the sanctions be strengthened, or would he take action?

If not, would he judge me as an attack against the God of the Sky under his jurisdiction and try to intervene against me?

Whatever I did, I thought I could test the behavior of the God of Order through that action.

It was really worth trying.

Above all, I thought it would really work.

If the God of Order is as the God of Hope had explained.

If it exists as the system itself.

If he's a self-less mechanical god.

I thought he could act with the fact that I had been injured by the spear of the God of the Sky.

Or maybe he wasn't aware that I was attacked.

Because the damage was too minor?

Will it change if I take a little more lethal damage?

For the sake of experimentation, one or two arms could be cut off by the spear blade of the God of the Sky.

It's easy to recover anyway.

This time, before implementing the idea, I sought advice from the God of Hope.

[...How could it be? The God of Order would have already recognized it. It is not a wound according to the will of the God of the Sky. And that you're trying to blackmail him.]

The God of Hope said in a low voice and swallowed his sigh.

Somehow, it was a voice that was filled with pathetic feelings.

Even a little regret.

What are you regretting?

[Would you like to stop doing this and return to your planet?]

The God of Hope keeps whining.

It was no different from a child who whined to his parents to return home.

Anyway.

The purpose is to understand the God of Order.

It's a matter of course.

I underestimated the intelligence level of the God of Order.

I thought that artificial intelligence that would become the most powerful god in the world is an artificial intelligence of the level that Earth's science could achieve.

"Then how about cutting myself on the blade of the God of Order?"

[...Please stop.....]

The God of Hope groaned.

To begin with, it failed.

Attempting to blackmail the God of Order by self-harm.

“Did you know?”

[...Of course I didn't know. You were the first to come up with the idea of approaching the God of Order and attacking yourself.]

Surely.

There must have been a few people who thought the same thing as me before.

[There wasn't.]

Just because the God of Hope doesn't know, doesn't mean there weren't any.

At least one.

[I'm sure, there wasn't. And if there were any beings who tried to do such crazy things to the God of Order, how would I have no idea? I am an apostle of the God of Order.]

He boasted.

He was so scared of the God of Order that he couldn't wait to run away.

[Usually, when facing the God of Order, it is common to try to escape the situation, to be discouraged, or to run away. There has never been a case where someone attempted a stupid experiment like you did.]

Well.

I could understand.

In the first place, in front of the God of Order, there will be only a few beings who can fully maintain reason.

Between all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon, there would not even be a hundred.

Anything less than that would not even be able to touch it in the first place.

I told my thoughts to the God of Hope.

[A hundred? It's not even ten.]

“What ten, there’s the old man and the giants…….”

Without much thought, I looked back at the old man and giants.

And I could see them frozen in tension.

[I don't know when the excitement of the battle paralyzed their reason, but there aren't many beings who can face that with a calm head.]

I think so.

The emotions on the faces of the giants were not fear.

Fortunately.

Rather, it was closer to the tension and pressure felt by the warriors facing the bloodiest battle of their lifetime.

It was amazing.

Even though it is clear that the God of Order has no intention of harming us, they have such feelings.

That’s why the God of Order has a great presence.

Just being there is enough to press their minds.

“Old man.”

[King, we are ready.]

Ready for what?

All of a sudden.

[We will not back down. We will fight together!]

“Okay, just go somewhere else.”

[King!]

“Noisy.”

I sent the old man and the crowd of giants to another place.

At this time, I also sent Grandmother and the other giants.

I sent a message to continue the pursuit of the remnants of the Pantheon gods before the summons.

Grandmother answered affirmatively, but the old man did not.

The attack on the God of Order seems to have inflicted mental damage one way or another.

After all this work is over, I think he will need separate care.

“It’s hard to reach a fight.”

I grumbled for nothing.

Then I reached out my hand toward the blade of the God of Order again.

[Can you stop doing this and go back?]

I can't.

I ignored the words of the God of Hope.

Reaching out my hand, I tried to touch the golden blade.

Naturally, the cold and sharp texture peculiar to refined metal was expected.

But my fingertips just passed through the golden blade.

Like holding air.

Like trying to touch a hologram projected by light.

It was also fun.

After becoming a god, I believed that there would be no unknown realms to me.

I thought that even though there are stories of the past that I do not know, there are no unknown abilities that I do not know.

I thought I understood and mastered all the powers in the world.

The fact that an unknown realm did not exist gave me a strange emotional sense of stability.

But on the other hand, it was a little sad.

The fact that there was no longer something to be discovered.

And today.

Contrary to my expectations, I was facing a number of abilities that touched the unknown.

The golden blade of the God of Order was still embedded in the incarnation of the God of the Sky.

But if I try to touch it.

My fingertips once again shook the air.

It is an illusion.

Is this possible?

It's a real blade for the God of the Sky.

To me, it was just an illusion that was visible to the naked eye and did not exist materially.

This may be the reason why it did not suffer any damage from my Zit Pop, from the Old Man, and from the attacks of giants.

It's an attack that can't reach it in the first place.

Only the God of the Sky, who had been arrested, suffered damage, but he could not attack the God of Order.

It was mysterious.

In the midst of this, the God of the Sky was bound by the blades piercing his incarnation.

It was absurd.

Existence to one deity, and illusion to the other deity.

I tried a few things, but I couldn't find a way to physically contact the blade of the God of Order.

If it were in my days when I was human, I would have skipped it and moved on.

Because the other person is God.

But now that I have become a god, I can clearly see how ridiculous it is.

It is applied to one deity and at the same time exists as an illusion to another.

[Why do you do that?]

Asked Seregia.

No, just.

Somehow it felt similar to Seregia.

The God of Order.

[It's unpleasant.]

...What the hell

All of a sudden.

“Too bad.”

Somehow I wanted to find out the behavior of the God of Order.

It was a little far-fetched and foolish.

That's because a certain deity's behavioral style is valuable information.

The divinity of order explains some of its behavior.

Indeed, the concept of the order was very vague.

“I’ll take Ahbooboo with me.”

I approached the face of the Heavenly God and said.

He was in a terrible situation, but his two eyes were still shining like the sun.

I looked at his eyes that were flickering quietly.

His eyes seemed to send a meaningless meaning.

Sorry I couldn’t read anything.

“As I said before, I’ll return the rest.”

I didn’t have to keep the God of the Sky’s new Aubutz, as it was not the Ahbooboo I knew.

I didn’t even want to.

I will separate it and return it.

I looked around.

It was full of energy and heat generated when the giants and I attacked the God of Order.

This may be the reason the God of the Sky is still holding on so far.

It was clear why the God of Order appeared here.

To stop the God of the Sky who tried to act directly by ignoring the rules.

That was all.

It was correct to think that he was not punishing the God of the Sky for trying to violate the rules, but that he was preventing the act of breaking the rules itself.

If so, how long will this state last?

For the purpose of deterrence, not punishment.

It would be reasonable to keep the constraints until the God of the Sky gave up his willingness to act directly.

I think so.

I raised my head and looked up there.

The temple of the God of the Sky was still shining.

It wasn't just shining.

The power of that temple formed a barrier, preventing the full heat near me and the God of the Sky from escaping outside.

Enough heat to burn this planet.

"Come here."

I gathered and absorbed the dense heat around it.

It was a little tricky to absorb the energy of the giants, but it was not impossible.

Their foundation was, in the end, my existence.

After absorbing all the heat, I spoke to the God of the Sky again.

"I'm sorry, but I have to see what was going on on this planet."

The God of the Sky sent his apostle Ahbooboo down.

He talked about the fundamental reasons for his own appearance here.

“But I will try not to damage the planet’s believers as much as possible. I promise.”

I could have done that much.

Neither did I want to disturb mortals and hurt those who had nothing to do with the gods.

The God of the Sky stared at me for a moment, then slowly turned to light and began to disappear.

As expected, the God of Order did not even prevent the retreat of the God of the Sky.

It is just preventing behavior that violates the rules.

The God of the Sky was just holding on because he was worried about the believers of the planet.

Soon, the enormous incarnation of the God of the Sky disappeared completely.

The God of Order began to crawl back into the black space where he came out.

[Unexpected]

“What?”

[Because you had the upper hand, I thought you would try to tear off more from the God of the Sky.]

I would have done that normally.

But not now.

Then, if the God of the Sky weakens further, and if the god becomes unstable, it can be an excuse.

“Then, if the God of Order eats the God of the Sky, it will be troublesome.”

He is already a God of Order that seems to go beyond a usual deity.

I couldn't know how far he would go if he had eaten the God of the Sky.

It would become very difficult if the God of Order became something similar to the God of Slowness in the past, a god above a god, a god of transcendence.

[Is there any way to do that? The God of Order cannot do anything else unless it is his mission. In the first place, his ego doesn't exist entirely, so there's no way he can act according to his arbitrary judgment. You can't say that.]

The God of Hope spoke of the God of Order.

He has no ego.

He can't speak.

I am sure about that.

The God of Order would have tried to eat the God of the Sky without hesitation if he had a chance.

[It's ridiculous. There is no personal desire in the first place for that mechanical god.]

It's something that I've already experienced.

On the 59th floor, with the help of the God of the Sky, I achieved a small source and divine power.

And after clearing the stage, before moving to the fields of Kirikiri, I was summoned into a dark space.

And all the power accumulated on the 59th floor was deprived by an unknown entity.

Now I know.

That existence was the God of Order.

I told the God of Hope about my experiences.

And then.

[It was mine.]

Said the God of Order.

The God of Order was creeping into the black space.

The God of Order, who had never spoken a single sentence let alone a word, rebelled against my words.

This is nonsense.

“It was the power that I achieved and gathered with my abilities. How is that yours?”

You’re like a robber.

[It is my strength. It is the power you have achieved in my world. The enemies you met there and the humans who gave your strength are all mine.]

Because the world in the Tutorial is part of him.

It was the claim of the God of Order that the source and the divinity, completed by receiving the faith of the people in the world, also belonged to him.

[The world is a part of me, and I am the world.]

“It won’t be soon.”

[That won’t happen.]

Fking bastard.

It’s been a while, but when I heard that voice, I felt like a bug in the past.

“I’ve said it before. I’ll visit you someday. And I’ll let you pay the price for taking my power.”

[Well, come and see, challenger.]

The God of Order finally completely entered the black space.

And the black space was immediately closed and cut off.

Son of a b*.

I can’t stop swearing.

Come and see, you know I can’t go.

“Tsk.”

I clicked my tongue once.

Then I asked the dumb God of Hope.

“Who has no ego again?”

[...That can’t be true.]

Chapter 362

God of the Sky (6)

[Are you going back now?]

Asked the God of Hope.

“Don’t talk to me.”

The God of Hope bit his lip again.

The more I saw it, the more strange it was.

[...What do you want me to do?]

What can you do?

You need to explain.

In the deal with the God of Hope, there was also the requirement of giving information.

I wanted to receive information from the God of Hope.

However, if the information of the God of Hope is wrong, what kind of damage will be done?

[The God of Order... He shouldn’t have an ego]

The God of Hope explained.

[It is too great of a power to be given to beings with ego. When the Hundred Gods Temple was first created, the system existed only as a system. It gained divinity over time, but that was all.]

The divinity acquisition of beings without an ego is understandable.

It is more common than you think.

In ancient beliefs such as totemism, things were often sanctified.

Stones, skulls, jewelry, as well as civilizations and artworks from the previous era can be sanctified.

What comes to mind right now is Earth.

Although it has no ego, it has acquired divinity through the indirect faith of humans for a long time.

Then, the power was extracted by the rulers.

Probably not just Earth, but countless planets.

However, Earth did not acquire ego until the end.

The only intention that Earth could express was an apology for all beings that gave their divinity meaninglessly.

On the contrary, the system, the God of Order has transcended those limits and has a self.

He has realized his desires and is expected to be able to act arbitrarily.

[If the God of Order had a high level of intelligence, he would have been hiding that fact. Isn't that natural?]

“Why?”

[That's because the gods will change the system.]

Replace.

It is the role of the God of Order to keep the Hundred Gods Temple and Pantheon gods from getting out of the system.

But if they replace the system with a new system instead of editing the system.

It could be an action within the order that is allowed for them.

“Then it has come to light now.”

[Well.]

To the gods.

The God of Order was even hiding the fact from its apostle, the God of Hope.

I didn't think that he had shown that he had an ego by my provocation.

Rather, it is more correct to say that he had announced himself.

[I don't know if he has self-assurance.]

“What kind of self-assurance.”

[Assurance to not to be replaced.]

He was to not be replaced.

It was ambiguous.

“How would the other gods react if they realized that the God of Order has an ego?”

[It will be crazy. Gods usually hate someone above them. Even the system was like that, but if the system was a god with reason, it would cause madness.]

It was.

I think so too.

So it will be possible to replace it as well.

If most of the gods reject the God of Order with an ego, the system will be replaced or renovated through the voting of the entire Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

Suppose he is confident to stop it.

How is it possible?

[First of all, it is impossible to block voting through politics and power wars.]

“Why?”

[How is it possible? The God of Order has no power. Right now, you don't have to see the Pantheon, where several forces are intricately entangled, just by looking inside the Hundred Gods Temple. The Sky that formed one axis will be weakened by this event, but Adventure and Slowness are still there, and I am too.]

The end is a little weird.

Maybe the God of Hope overestimates himself too much.

Showing off?

[...no.]

“What about using the loopholes of the system?”

[Impossible. The gods of the Pantheon were too much for me. As soon as I got weak, they ended up talking to each other. Apart from the discipline of the system, new rules arose between them.]

He is showing off.

[More than anything else, the God of Order cannot do such a thing. Opening the loopholes of the system itself is contrary to the divinity of the God of Order, and just supporting that fact will weaken its power... Hmm.]

“Why again.”

The God of Hope was silent while talking.

When I asked why, the God of Hope replied with an unpleasant voice.

[I wondered if this was the reason why the God of Adventure made me an apostle of the God of Order.]

* * *

[Should I go catch the little punk here?]

Asked the God of Hope.

I have to go catch it.

That’s why we set foot on this planet in the first place.

Pursuing a sub-god who was called by the god of the Pantheon and tried to rebel against me.

[Should.....]

I should go.

I.

We were now down to the planet’s ground.

To be precise, on the streets of a bustling city.

I had to go back a bit because I promised the God of the Sky that I would try to avoid damaging the planet and the believers as much as possible.

The place where I could feel the energy of the lower god was the hillside that I looked up at from my distance away.

An unusual building was built on the hillside.

It seems to be a temple of a lower god.

It was not a high mountain, but it could be seen from anywhere in the city.

It was a good location.

There was a needlessly powerful barrier.

In order to invade from the outside, you would need a pretty big impact to spread to the surrounding area.

However, if you follow the road through the city to the main gate of the temple, you are not caught in the barrier.

It is probably the way believers come and go there.

The streets were lively.

It was a good place, as Ahbooboo who was sealed in the subspace said.

There seemed to be a lot of food.

“I want to eat that one.”

As I was looking around the street, Seregia’s voice interrupted me.

When she changed to human form again, she stood next to me and pointed to a kiosk stand.

“I have no money.”

“Shall I steal?”

Seregia asked naturally.

She had a voice full of confidence, as if she was going to take care of it on her own.

Good people walking through the streets approached the stall before experiencing the rare event of being pickpocketed by a god who wanted to eat grilled skewers.

Seregia picked up a skewer from the kiosk and started eating it before ordering anything.

Fortunately, the stall owner didn't pay much attention.

I asked while checking the look of the currency used by people on the street.

“How much?”

The owner simply answered four.

The currency here is divided into coins of various colors, such as white, yellow, and red.

The problem was that I couldn't figure out which four coins to give.

[You can pay for it with yellow coins.]

There was advice from the God of Hope.

I pretended to take it out of my pocket, made four yellow coins in my hand and handed it to the owner.

It was an illegal act equivalent to counterfeiting currency, but it was made so elaborate that it would not be noticed, so there will be no problem.

“How did you know he was asking for yellow coins?”

[Of course I should know. Hope can be presented only when people understand their most basic desires. In a world where the market economy is active, capital always stimulates people's desires, and the basis of which is always money.]

I don't know what you mean.

“Come to think of it.”

The stall owner, quietly grilling skewers, said abruptly.

“Are you faithless?”

Not really.

I have a religion.

Even I am the god of that religion.

“Would you like to believe in the God of Earth? Then I'll give you a few skewers for free.”

Although Seregia almost became a believer of the God of Earth, I managed to get her out of it.

* * *

“You were born~ to be loved~”

It was definitely a song I heard from somewhere.

It was a song with beautiful lyrics with an upbeat pitch.

“And you are receiving that love through your life now~ God of Calmness~”

“Yes, get off.”

If it weren't a song for missionary work, I would have listened to it without much thought.

[T/N: Yes, it is a real contemporary Christian song in Korea! Titled ‘당신은 사랑받기 위해 태어난 사람’ or ‘You Were Born To Be Loved’.]

And if they hadn't been singing while holding hands around me, I wouldn't have gone so far as to tell them to shut it off.

No, why are they doing this in the middle of the street?

Is it a type of shame play?

Is it a new type of bullying?

It can't be.

People were trying to preach to us with all their heart.

“Seregia!”

In the distance, Seregia was being tempted by an uncle chef with food that looked like kebabs.

I don't know what kind of god the kebab uncle believes in.

The start of the incident was that uncle grilling skewers made a fuss.

From then on, everyone on the streets realized that we were faithless.

And the endless missionary work began.

The way of preaching was not unpleasant or dangerous.

It was like giving food for free, trying to give a bouquet or candy, or singing a song like they just did.

The problem was that I had no intention of turning to another religion.

Seregia seemed a little different.

Eventually, I had to take Seregia off the street.

I climbed onto the roof of the visible building.

People started to murmur because of us who suddenly disappeared, but they decided to just ignore it.

“Why are they doing that?”

The God of Hope, who was giggling at me in trouble, explained.

[Because you are faithless. People here distinguish religion with a badge on their chest. For reference, the ratio of religious persons on this planet is over 99%. It's a social structure where you can't help but have a religion until your adult age.]

Looks like so.

Everyone will have a religion if they are shamed on the streets whenever they are found to be faithless.

[That's not it. The gods here are actively giving out to the believers. It is a competitive field where various religions are mixed, and because the population of this planet is so large, it is a market with fierce competition.]

So naturally, they give as many benefits as possible to the believers.

As a result, there is no reason for people to be non-religious.

It's a bountiful market.

[If an adult is not wearing a badge, it may have been accidentally left behind.]

“Left behind?”

[It means you have recently abandoned your religion.]

Abandoning religion?

What does that mean?

[Whether you had discord with the priest in charge, or are looking for a different religion that gives you better benefits.]

It was a more trivial reason than I thought.

[Therefore, everyone has embraced their religion.]

It was a bizarre society.

It was somehow a worrisome experience.

[There are several places like this. Where competition among the gods is overheating. Excessive benefits are poured out to the believers, and the priests try to attract even one more believer.]

At first glance, this may be the reason why this planet has too high a happiness index compared to its development level and is bustling.

The gods and temples will be in charge of their lives.

When I thought about it, I thought it would be comfortable for the people here to live.

A life in which the gods take care of both safety and food, clothing, and shelter.

You won't be desperate, and you will be able to pursue what you want with your extra effort.

There will be no utopia.

It would be frustrating because their share of gods rarely increases.

It would be a very desirable social system for believers.

“It’s okay.”

[Do you really think so?]

I really thought so.

I have seen many worlds.

In tutorials and outside.

In the tutorial, I have seen worlds where no god saves anyone.

Some people struggled and tried to survive on their own in the pit of doom.

In front of overwhelming despair, we could see even humans losing hope and despair.

It was a dead world.

Conversely, after the Tutorial, I have seen worlds ruled by only one god.

These were mainly the holy lands of the gods.

It was the same even when I thought of the God of the Sky.

He is a God of the Sky who treats believers well and has a good management system and doctrine.

But what about in the holy place?

Everyone will be equal under the God of the Sky.

It may be the ideal form of socialism and egalitarianism.

However, in that world, the desire to go to a higher place through development and achievement will be intensified.

Equality, but everyone is always everyone.

You can be the same self as everyone else in the world, but you won't be respected for your own personality that is different from anyone else.

From a point of view, it was also hell.

The holy land of the God of Hope was a shock to me.

They were confining believers in glass tubes, forcing them to live and die, and exploiting the hope arising in the process.

I wasn't shocked and angry because I felt rejected by the inhumane treatment.

My shock was that I was reminded of my holy land in the holy land of the God of Hope.

For victory.

The world of giants who struggle and overcome themselves only for victory.

The giants had to endure the harsh and cruel acts repeatedly to the point that victory over themselves would be established.

Of course, it was what the giants wanted themselves.

Like I did in the past.

But that wasn't what a normal world looked like.

Chapter 363

God of the Sky (7)

[Let's go to my temple.]

Said the God of Hope.

Out of the blue.

“Why your temple?”

[Don't you need time anyways?]

“What time.”

The God of Hope made a giggling sound.

I had heard it many times already, but each time I heard it it was a fresh, irritable laugh.

[If you are crushed because you need time to clear up your confused mind, is there a need to shiver on a cold roof like this? If you need guidance and rest, let's go to my temple.]

Even the roof is not bad because I can think quietly by myself.

And I haven't even caught the lower god who has fled here yet.

I have no intention of leaving this planet before then.

[It's not far from here.]

“Huh? Here?”

[If you turn to the left in the direction you are looking at, it will be quick.]

Looking at the direction the God of Hope said, I saw the roof of a temple building.

The temple was easy to recognize.

Because there needs to be symbolism.

Temples are always designed with the feeling of ‘oh, this building is a temple”.

“That’s your temple?”

[Yes.]

It was surprising.

Truly.

I couldn’t easily accept the fact that there was a temple of the God of Hope in the middle of the city.

No, its existence on the planet itself was strange.

The reason was obvious.

It was because of the grotesque ideals of the God of Hope.

The God of Hope believes that the most desperate moment is the moment when hope shines the most.

And there was no urgency on this planet.

They couldn’t get desperate.

It is a planet where many gods are competing for benefits.

In the midst of this, if a person's life is to become desperate, they would need a very elaborate and complex story.

Even if the God of Hope encouraged such a situation to his believers, it would not be easy to maintain it.

It was only if the believers abandoned the God of Hope and returned to other gods.

So I did not expect that there would be a temple of the God of Hope on this planet.

However, the God of Hope introduced the temple in the middle of the city as his own temple.

Oh, that's it.

Something like the hidden dark forces of the continent.

A social group that is intriguingly conspiring to destroy the peace in the world.

As I recalled, it was plausible.

[That is a false preconceived notion.]

What false preconceived notion.

I think it fits within the probability of his behaviors.

[If you go, you will know.]

"If I go, I feel like I'm going to feel uncomfortable."

He must have hidden something like a torture chamber in the basement of the temple.

It was clear.

First, I headed to the temple as the God of Hope said.

In fact, the God of Hope was right.

I needed time to organize my thoughts.

There was also a need for planning to catch the lower god.

Most of all, I wanted to see the temple of the God of Hope, which stimulated my curiosity.

*

“What, this is.....”

The temple of the God of Hope was unexpectedly bright and lively.

The believers wandering around looked relaxed and clear, as if they came out of a neighborhood drinking party rather than a temple.

Priestesses were serving people with smiles like salespeople.

People looked peaceful.

I got little goosebumps.

[What was that you were saying earlier?]

The God of Hope said in an elated voice as if he had won.

“What.....”

Is it such a level of mental pollution that I can’t even notice?

Otherwise, it couldn’t be explained.

[Don’t keep saying nonsense.]

As I was blankly looking at the people around me, a priestess came to me.

The priestess was wearing a robe uniform with a sprout drawn on it.

Is that sprout a symbol of the Church of Hope?

It's ridiculous.

[That is the case here.]

Oh my gosh.

It's the end, it's the end.

That kind of society is using a hopeful symbol like a sprout.

It was a Church of Hope without even a minimum of conscience.

[Would you stop being so sarcastic?]

"Brother, is this your first time here?"

The God of Hope and the priestess asked at the same time.

I nodded.

*

The priestess guided me to a private parlor.

As soon as I entered the parlor where I was guided, I patted various places on the wall.

There seems to be no hidden room.

"Why are you knocking on the wall?"

“I was wondering if there was a trap installed.”

Like sleeping gas.

Like paralyzing poison.

Or just poisons.

Like curse magic.

Or just an arrow.

“No such thing, brother.”

The priestess said with a smile.

As she said, there was no such thing as a trap.

That’s why.

I wonder if there is a trap that even tricks my senses.

That was more rational.

Rather than accepting the fact that the temple of the God of Hope is really a normal temple, it’s better to think that there’s some terrible trap hiding.

“You can write simple personal information here.”

The priestess handed out a piece of paper.

Oh, is this a trap too?

Are you trying to take advantage of other people’s personal information?

[This is a guestbook. Just roughly write something down.]

It wasn't.

As I drew graffiti in the guestbook, the priestess asked me about my visit.

[You can say you need guidance.]

As he said, I stated I needed guidance.

Then the priestess was greatly pleased.

"If you have any thoughts of returning--"

"Nope."

I said in a nutshell.

"Yes?"

"No."

"Ah... Yes."

The priestess was visibly disappointed.

But she didn't do missionary work any more than that.

Instead, she asked again about the business.

"Then what kind of guidance would you like?"

I said that I would like to ask the priestess to guide me to the temple of the lower god I saw earlier.

"Ah, it was a guide! Please wait here for a moment. I'll be ready soon."

The priestess said so and left her parlor.

I don't know what she's going to prepare.

[Simple. She's just changing into outdoor clothes and coming.]

Is that so?

Well.

[What, if there is anything you want to ask, ask.]

Said the God of Hope.

As he said, there was something I wanted to ask.

"Why is that priestess trying to guide my way? We are not from the same church."

[That is the role of my priests. To guide.]

It doesn't suit you.

[Hope is a vague expectation.]

The God of Hope explained.

[The role of my priests is to be a light that illuminates when people are lost and wandering, or when they are unable to go on their own. As a result, people give hope to me, and in addition, even if there is a problem in the future, they can ask for help from the nearby Temple of Hope.]

It was a very different story from the view of hope of the God of Hope that I had known before.

The God of Hope is not satisfied with the meaning of a light that marks milestones on the road or a degree of prevention that can overcome anxiety about the future.

[So my priests show people the way. They guide you through the streets and provide directions to people who are mentally wandering. The answer is not always correct, but it is my priests who will walk together.]

I couldn't take it anymore and asked.

That isn't like his ideal.

Does he not believe that hope in despair is the brightest hope?

[Of course it is.]

The God of Hope replied.

[But is there any reason to ask for only the strongest hope? Weak hope is also hope. Of course, from my point of view, it would be nice to receive strong hope with faith, but if the situation doesn't work, I have to pursue other methods.]

Is it different depending on the situation?

When I think about it, it was.

If you think of the sanctuaries of the God of Hope who were in an extreme situation like hell.

They were all sacred sites of the God of Hope or areas exclusively owned by the God of Hope.

It was the same on the 49th floor of the Tutorial when I first encountered the God of Hope.

It was a world of mixed religions.

All denominations fell and only the sanctuary of the God of Hope remained.

The reason the God of Hope established a truly hopeful denomination on this planet was not for good or evil and not for morality.

It was just a management strategy according to the conditions.

When I thought so, I finally understood.

*

Following the priestess, I went back to the streets.

There was one obvious advantage.

Since there was a priestess attached to me as a guide, there were no people who bothered me for missionary work.

There was also one drawback.

Seregia was eating too much from the priestess.

It's a bit embarrassing as a party.

"He said that if we believed in the God of the Earth, he would give grilled skewers for free."

"I'll buy it instead!"

Like an idiot, the priestess kept buying food for Seregia.

It was already the fourth time I saw it.

Perhaps the priestess seemed to be still open to the possibility of us returning to the Temple of Hope.

Unfortunately, she was unable to give up her vain hope.

[All my priestesses are underpaid. Stop.]

The God of Hope said this.

After taking Seregia who was trying to eat all the street foods, I headed to a place where I felt the energy of the lower god.

A long, long staircase stretched from the street to the building on the hillside.

It wasn't a very high mountain by my standards, but it seemed too difficult for an average person to walk up.

The stairs were steep and too high.

No matter how much I looked at it, it wasn't a stairway to be climbed.

"Let's go."

The priestess spoke briskly and began to climb the stairs in the lead.

As she climbed the stairs she asked me.

"Seeing you go to the sage, do you have any concerns?"

"Sage?"

"Yes, the sage over there."

The priestess said, pointing to the shrine on the hillside.

Sage.

Was the lower god serving as a sage here?

It was surprising.

I asked about the sage.

As the priestess headed to the sage, I questioned her about the sage, but she answered me sincerely.

"He is a wise person. If there is a major disaster or crisis on the continent, he'll tell us. He thinks deeply about even the smallest issues between people and makes wise judgments."

Listening to the priestess' words, the sage did not seem to be regarded as a god.

Could he maintain faith through mere respect?

It seemed to be possible if he was not a definite god but a lower god of an ambiguous level.

Pretending to be a sage may be his strategy in order to receive faith on this planet where several gods coexist.

“Then there must be many people visiting.”

“Well, as you can see.”

The priestess said.

There were not a few people climbing the stairs.

“But there aren't many people who meet the sage.”

“Why?”

“If you walk this staircase while thinking about your worries, your worries are solved.”

*

It was literally like so.

People who have started climbing the stairs with their own problems stopped step by step.

Then they turned around and started going down the stairs.

There was no magic staircase that solved people's concerns.

“Heuk, heuk... keuhk.”

The priestess was breathing heavily.

It was a natural reaction.

As such, this staircase was a structure that was difficult for ordinary people to climb.

It was so steep that you can't stop to rest.

The slope gets worse, and it becomes almost the level of rock climbing.

If you miss your step, you would fall right away.

It was a staircase that instilled not only physical suffering but also mental horror.

As you climb stairs like this, minor worries will naturally disappear from your mind.

It was natural.

Even the worries that were not there will disappear.

Chapter 364

God of the Sky (8)

“Heuk, haah, haah.”

The priestess gasped wildly.

After taking a breath, the priestess shouted:

“You’re very strong-willed to come up here!”

That is what I want to say.

The priestess, who I thought would go back after getting separated far away, was still chasing me.

The priestess was trembling in her arms and legs and she was far behind but she was still chasing me.

“It’s okay, you can go back now.”

The priestess’s job was finished by guiding me to get out of the crowded streets easily and explaining the Church of Hope.

It was enough.

But that priestess didn’t seem to think so.

“You can’t do that!”

She cried out.

It’s a bitter voice.

It was understandable.

The stairs to the sage's shrine were now becoming like rock cliffs.

Honestly, it was too weird to call it a staircase.

Is there a stairway where one hangs on a rope and climbs up against it like a cliff?

As you climb higher, the wind gets stronger.

Naturally, we couldn't even hear each other's voices well.

It was an irrelevant problem for me, but the priestess was screaming loudly.

Of course, her throat was as hoarse as it could be.

"As a guide, I have an obligation to accompany you to the end.....!"

Be nice, be nice.

I felt like I was looking at someone in the past.

"She's gonna die like that."

Seregia muttered from the side.

It wasn't a very sad voice.

She was just muttering about what would happen soon.

I couldn't help but ask the God of Hope.

What are you doing to foster such a Spartan priestess on such a peaceful planet?

[That's the doctrine.]

“To accompany me to the end?”

It was an absurd doctrine.

[No, to survive until the end.]

To survive.

She'll be short-lived keeping that doctrine.

[I'm not talking about her life.]

Tsk, and I had no choice but to click my tongue.

The priestess was now at her limit.

Her trembling lips were telling me that her body was exhausted.

She stopped occasionally and didn't make any movements, indicating that her body was preparing.

That wasn't a pause for a break.

Because of excessive pain, fatigue, and fear, her brain is eagerly secreting hormones.

When the human body faces a limit, it does not squeeze the last force to overcome it.

Instead, it anesthetizes itself as if preparing for death.

I watched her for a while and reached out to the priestess.

Even after seeing my extended hand, the priestess did not react for a while.

It was only after I waved my hand like a float in front of a fish, and then the priestess' eyes accurately recognized my hand.

“Grab on. I’ll pull you up.”

“...Thank you!”

In the meantime, the priestess tried to express her gratitude with a bright smile.

Then she raised her hand and held mine.

There was no strength in her grasp.

She was moist with sweat.

I was a little uncomfortable.

I grabbed her hand and raised it.

Halfway.

The priestess’ hand was held forward.

Naturally, the priestess moved away from the ropes and from the sides of the cliffs.

She was just stuck in my hand.

“Ex, excu.....”

The priestess looked at me with confused eyes.

Her black pupils spoke of many feelings.

I’m a little sorry.

Even so, I hoped she learned from this opportunity.

Her own plight.

I let go of my hand.

The priestess, who had no strength in her grasp already, began to fall.

The priestess could not even scream properly.

She just kept looking at me as she fell.

There would have been nothing to look at other than me.

She kept falling, focusing on the hand that let go of her.

Tak.

By flicking a finger, I moved the priestess in front of the temple of the God of Hope.

The priestess rolled over on the street in front of the temple and looked around in confusion.

After a while, she figured out where she was, and she lost strength and laid down on the street.

People wandering around the temple recognized her and began to support her.

She will be fine.

Although her muscle pain would be serious.

After drinking a potion and resting for a few days she would probably be healthy again.

[Hehehehe, very good.]

And the God of Hope was happy.

Extremely so.

It was enough that I could feel his emotions.

“What? The fear and despair that the priestess felt while falling, and your existence that came to mind at that moment?”

[Yes, it would have been nice if she fell to the bottom.]

The bastard.

This guy's believers should also know this.

[The falling human is always conscious. Oh, I'm falling from this point. They had already foreseen death when they started to fall, but there is the illusion that comes to mind at the last minute of the end. Maybe they can survive this. Like this. Oh, that's really good.]

This is the problem.

God does not care about the well-being of each human being.

[If they only moved a little further away. A little bit more.....]

It wasn't even worth answering.

I ignored it and quietly started to climb the stairs again.

This path, which was called a stairway but should truthfully be called a murder rock climbing course, was entwined with magic.

It was much further than looking up from the street, and it was rough.

The sage up there was said to care about even the little things of each individual.

Of course.

If they can overcome this stairway, they will be one of the best superhumans on this planet.

I heard that the only things that the sage went ahead and solved were related to preventing a crisis or disaster on the continent, and so on.

Nevertheless, he was building a false reputation of treating all people equally and solving all worries.

He was at an ambiguous level of a deity standing at the boundary between a superhuman and a god.

I had a good understanding of the nature of gods.

Indeed, he deserved to be called a sage.

“In that sense, the God of Order is an ideal god.”

It is literally an ideal god.

While imposing minimal rules on the gods, it has little involvement in mortals.

No matter how much I thought about it, the farther away God was from humans, the better.

God is never beneficial.

Although it may seem indispensable for the world, God is absolutely not beneficial to ordinary intellectuals who make up the majority of the world.

At least it was the case for all the gods I saw and experienced in this world.

Deities are bound to be extreme, and the moment you force them on your own believers. The believers' lives begin to crumble.

It was a little bit better for a world where many gods were mixed like this planet so that God couldn't force anything on the believers.

“The God of Order will try to become a transcendent god.”

[Transcendent God? That's a plausible expression.]

The God of Order, who has nearly become a transcendent god, will surely impose his order on the world.

As the God of Slowness in the past tried.

[The God of Order has revealed that he has an ego.]

By my provocation.

No matter how much I thought about it, there was no reason to just let the provocation pass.

The God of Order deliberately showed the world that he had an ego.

That means he has confidence.

[That means there's not much time left.]

It was exciting.

It's a staircase that solves your worries.

As I climbed, I could clearly see what I had to do in the future.

Soon I was able to climb all the stairs.

There was no priestess who was delaying me, so it was very quick.

At the end of the stairs was a well-established shrine.

This is the Tower of Dragon Ball's Korin*.....

There were some strange things.

Of course, it was annoying that the interior and landscape conditions were like in a famous cartoon.

There was something more strange than that.

There were guards here, who made it ambiguous whether this was a temple or a storage warehouse.

And all the guards wearing strangely designed armor stood still.

I got closer and looked.

The guards were fine.

There was no sign of being enchanted, nor were they rigid.

They just stopped.

Soon I could see what had happened to the guards.

Time confinement.

They were stuck in time.

The power of the God of Slowness that slows down all worlds except his own self.

It was an overwhelming power to the extent that it seemed like the power of the God of Slowness almost devoured the world of the past.

These guards were overpowered by that power.

Even in a state of deformation.

Time confinement applies to all of the world, leaving only one's own self as an exception.

However, the time confinement unfolded here was only applied to the guards, not the world.

The guards were trapped in an infinitely slow world.

They were just looking ahead and standing on the lookout without thinking, but from the outside, the guards were completely stationary.

Of course, the guards were the hands of the sage.

They are the servants of a god.

The powers of other gods cannot be applied in this way to those under the power of a god.

They can't do that.....

“Things beyond common sense keep happening.”

It was already a few times today.

What day is it?

“Did the God of Slowness intervene?”

[No. Rather than being the God of Slowness, um.....]

The God of Hope stopped talking while trying to explain something.

The God of Hope did not open his mouth.

He flutters all day, but when it really matters, he doesn't help.

I ignored the guards and entered the temple.

And I could face the sage.

Like the guards outside, the sage looked bizarre.

He was turned into a stone.

That's absurd.

I came to this place by pursuing the power of the sage I encountered in the Pantheon.

So I could be sure.

That stone is the sage.

Should I say it is dead or alive?

It wasn't just the appearance of a stone.

The sage was literally a stone.

No reason, no self, nothing left.

It was the same as Earth, with divinity, but no ego.

“Huh.”

If it had been dead, I would have just let it go.

God wasn't completely immortal.

But for a god to be a stone.

Let's organize the thoughts.

The next question is how the sage ended up like that right now.

The purpose of the one who made the sage a stone was of utmost importance.

“It's probably because of me.”

[I think so.]

Rather than an unidentified being who suddenly had a grudge against the sage, he made the sage into stone today and enshrined it here.

It was better to think that it had something to do with me, who was pursuing the sage.

[Rather than someone turning the sage who fled to this place into a stone it was more correct to assume that the sage was brought here after getting turned into stone. As far as I know, that stone has a base on several planets. This place is rather small.]

I thought so too.

Originally, I thought that the sage, who became a stone, remembered the God of Sky, and fled here.

If someone intentionally put the sage here.

It can be said that it encouraged a collision between me and the God of Sky.

Inevitably, the conflict that the God of Order would respond to.

Who is it?

I understand the nature of the God of Sky and me.

A being who can intercept the sage by intervening between the Pantheon and my conflict.

In addition, being able to encourage this situation by using a technique that I do not understand.

Do you want me to notice?

Or did you think I wouldn't notice?

If so.

"You seem to be looking at me as an idiot."

“How are you?”

The answer did not come back.

There is just calm tranquility.

Kirikiri did not wait for an answer.

Answers that don't come back right away don't come back forever.

The god who proves time talks like that.

“I guess it's worth it. Good luck. Nice to see you after a long time, too.”

Kirikiri said 'hng' and sniffed.

The room of the God of Slowness was a strange place.

Even after visiting several times, she felt that way.

“It's time.”

[You came to steal my power again.]

Footnote:

*) So in Dragon Ball there was a wise cat living in the Korin Tower which is a tower that was built high up in the sky, so LHJ, like Goku has to continue to climb to meet Korin.

Chapter 365

Earth (5)

I stood still for a while.

Looking at the blood-red stones.

“Let’s go back and think about it. That would be good.”

It didn’t seem like something I could fix right away.

Although the shrines of the gods of the Pantheon were all destroyed, the problem of Earth will still remain.

Of course, I believed that Yong-yong and Hochi were coping well.

In the midst of this, it was not desirable to do something else.

Even more so if I don’t really know about the new problem.

[I agree.]

I decided to take care of the sage who became a stone.

The self was completely gone, and even when I held it in my hand, there was no response.

He had turned into something like an energy source that contained divine power.

There was no reason not to take it.

It was a treasure with condensed faith.

It was such an object that would surely have turned eyes if the gods who were sucking the source and putting a straw on the planet to gain more power had seen it.

It wasn't that great just because of the power it contained.

[Can you figure out how?]

The God of Hope muttered.

I was thinking similarly.

If it is possible.

If you can attack other gods, downgrade them to an energy source, and absorb them.

You can literally accumulate overwhelming power.

[I could make all the gods in the world kneel down and beg.]

The God of Hope's point of view seemed a little different.

It won't make a big difference.

"I have to do some research."

I said that, but I was skeptical.

It won't be easy.

A sub-space was opened and the sage stone was stored next to the sealed Abubu.

I closed the subspace again and prepared to return to Earth.

The war is over.

The first war since I came to Earth.

No, it was the first war I ever fought.

Until now, I fought countless times, but this was my first war.

I have always fought alone with nothing to protect.

But this time it was different.

There was something to protect, Earth and the believers.

Together with the giants, I formed a force and fought against the huge forces of the Pantheon.

I didn't feel any special feelings.

Of course, there was a difference from fighting alone.

Thinking that the war was over safely, I felt a sense of relief.

It was the opposite of the emptiness and regret that I felt every time a battle was over before.

“Warrior?”

After a while, Seregia called out to me.

“Nothing. Let's go back.”

* * *

Earth was still in chaos.

Contrary to what was feared, there was no direct invasion of Earth by the gods of the Pantheon.

However, the troops were a problem.

The unidentified force's number was too large.

Most of them were killed or crushed immediately after being summoned, but some survived, and some actively initiated destruction on Earth.

Fortunately, at some point, no additional summoning portals were created.

The situation was a little different from the beginning when the summoning portals appeared endlessly and even changed their locations randomly.

It was because the giants invaded the gods of the Pantheon in retaliation, and the gods of the Pantheon, who were quick to notice, just pulled out their feet.

However, the troops already put onto Earth were still there.

The troops were never repatriated back to their home.

Even before that, the summoning portal itself was closed as the gods of the Pantheon were extinguished by the giants.

The way to return had disappeared.

Some troops summoned by the gods of the Pantheon did not have the will to fight.

On the other hand, some were very belligerent.

This was the case with the Mahabaha tribe summoned to Australia.

This race, with dozens of black horns on their foreheads, did not fall to death during their summoning.

All the summoned members came safely to Earth and began to carry out their purpose.

“Kaaak! Kill it!”

“Smash and break it!”

“Burn them! Ka-Ak!”

“Our God is coming here!”

They shouted so and began to destroy everything they saw around them.

A group of people who were running away from the Mahabaha tribesmen screamed.

“It’s blocked!”

There was an invisible wall erected in the air.

People knocked on the transparent wall, but, of course, it was a wall that ordinary humans could not break.

In the sight of those who looked back in haste, the Mahabaha tribesmen who had been pursuing them were seen.

People had no intention of opposing them.

They are monsters who crush concrete walls and destroy skyscrapers with force.

An Awakened might be able to stop them.

However, the awakened people didn’t even see where they went.

Kang!

The people tried hitting the transparent wall with tools such as a wrench that people had, but that too was no use.

But people were desperate.

People hit the wall endlessly with the objects they were holding or with their bare fists.

The tools broke and blood splattered from their fists, but they couldn't stop.

Dozens of the Mahabaha tribesmen were running towards them.

Humans who were blocked in front had nothing to do other than bang on the wall.

A message appeared in front of them.

[Miracle- Summon Intermediate Guardian]

[11 intermediate guardian apprentices are summoned.]

Bang!

As a powerful explosion broke out, dozens of Mahabaha tribesmen, who were running toward the humans blocked by the wall, were pushed out.

When the dust generated by the explosion subsided, the seven summoned appeared.

Summoned, they were chatting.

“Damn, please let me take some time to rest.”

Someone complained that way.

“Where is this again? Is it New York?”

Someone looked around.

“No, it’s Sydney. I’ve been here before.”

They looked very relaxed.

They seemed to feel annoyed rather than fearful in this situation.

“The training is crap, but the practice is worse. At least give me time to breathe and pamper me. I will die of overwork.”

“Don’t say that. This is better than staying locked in Hell difficulty forever.”

The complaining person agreed with their words.

They were challengers who were stuck on the Tutorial’s Hell difficulty.

It wasn’t the low sections like the 1st and 2nd floors, but the challengers of the Hell difficulty of the United States, who were stagnant without exceeding the early 30th floor.

“Help me!”

Those who were smacking the wall when they saw them asked for help.

The challengers were bewildered and paused rather than seeing them and running to help.

“Eh. Why are there people left in the barrier?”

“Ah. The protected targets are neglected here.”

The challengers quickly reported the situation.

In the meantime, the Mahabaha tribesmen, who had collapsed due to the explosion, woke up.

Recalling the explosion that occurred at the same time as the challengers' appearance, the Mahabaha tribesmen quickly made a decision.

“Kaaak! It's the enemy!”

“A new enemy has appeared!”

The Mahabaha tribe shouted out loud, summoning their people scattered throughout the city.

The summoned challengers frowned at their appearances.

“I think I saw them on the 31st floor. Isn't that a demon?”

“I'm sick of seeing those with horns on their heads now.”

[Existing mission will be canceled.]

[A new mission has occurred.]

[Mission-Survivor protection.]

[For unknown reasons, protected areas remained within the restricted area. For unknown reasons, the safety of protected persons is at risk. Reinforcements will be dispatched to ensure the safe containment of protected persons. Protect those under protection until reinforcements arrive.]

[Time remaining until reinforcement: about 5 minutes]

A message appeared telling them what to do.

As they read the message, they smiled.

“It's okay if it's 50 minutes instead of 5 minutes. Let's take a rest here.”

“Yeah. Hahaha.”

They were confident.

Until the arrival of the Mahabaha reinforcements.

A terribly large number of Mahabaha tribesmen flocked to the outer walls of the building because they were unable to fill the roads.

“50 minutes?”

“5 minutes is just right.”

The Mahabaha tribesmen gathered in no time and ran toward the challengers without delay.

“Kaaak!”

“It’s the enemy! Kill them!”

“Burn them!”

“Rip and Tear!”

Dozens of Mahabaha tribesmen were bombarded at once by the magic of the challengers, but they did not stop.

“Soon our god is coming here!”

They were only moving forward, crying out for the existence of God.

* * *

Ka-Ak!

Several Mahabaha tribesmen attempted to jump over from the roof of a building.

It was to attack ordinary people who were protected by the challengers.

The Mahabaha were trying to attack the challengers, realizing that they were protecting the weak humans behind them.

Each time the challengers had to take a break to protect the weak.

There was an endless explosion.

The flame soared higher than the building.

A whirlwind blew, and the asphalt floor froze and melted.

Challengers were pouring out a variety of magic to deal with the large number of Mahabaha tribesmen.

They swung their fists at the stuck Mahabaha tribesmen.

The heads of the Mahabaha tribesmen who were beaten by a fierce punch fell under their shoulders.

Several Mahabaha tribesmen were swept away at the same time by each stroke of the sword that was released.

The exchange cost was overwhelming.

None of the challengers had died, but they already killed thousands of Mahabaha tribesmen.

They are not just superhumans, but challengers who have survived for a long time in the Hell difficulty level created by the gods to cultivate talents to be apostles, and have gained some achievements.

They were challengers who had been together for a long time and had been working together, as they overcame many enemies.

But this battle was overwhelming for them too.

It was because of the people behind them.

Even if your mission is to protect someone in the Tutorial, you don't have to worry too much about it.

If you failed, it was possible to challenge the floor again.

Your own life was the most important thing.

Then the life of a colleague.

Then the information about the stage.

But on Earth it was different.

The people behind them were real, living humans.

They couldn't leave them unattended or hurt them.

To protect them, they had to either continue to allow gaps or constrain their own strength.

“Damn it. I will die.”

The challenger, who was bleeding from his forehead, muttered.

“When are they coming?”

The five minutes that the message told them had already passed.

“Kaah! God is coming!”

“God is looking at us!”

“God is with us!”

The Mahabaha tribesmen were crying out to their god with great strength.

At that time, a space opened up in the air.

Seeing it, the Mahabaha burst into cheers.

The challengers also smiled quietly.

“You idiots. That’s our side.”

It was a human who came out of the cracked space.

No, although they were human, they were also inhuman.

[Reinforcement has arrived.]

[The mission has been completed successfully.]

[Until the arrival of the reinforcement, you have completely protected those behind you.]

[Reward will be paid according to future performance.]

[Reinforcement (1/1)]

[Lee Hochi]

Hochi walked out of the space, confirming the crowds and challengers gathered in the corner, and raised his hand toward the Mahabaha tribe.

Hochi didn’t really enjoy fighting with anyone.

He hated it very much.

Lee Ho-jae advised not to wipe out those summoned through the summoning portal indiscriminately.

Hochi agreed with his opinion.

They were victims.

However, seeing the Mahabaha tribesmen in front of him, he could see that they were not of that kind.

They were aggressively attacking and were attempting destructive acts.

The Mahabaha were not an object of mercy to Hochi, who protected Earth and its believers.

Lee Ho-jae once said that when the day came when Hochi had to put blood on his hands, he would regret not having experienced it beforehand.

It was tiring.

Hochi, who had something to protect, was willing to be cruel.

[Magic oppression]

[Absolute targeting]

[Generating ultra-small black hole]

A small black space opened above Hochi's hand.

“Activate.”

It was a short and simple starter word.

As Hochi spoke out the starter word, the nearby Mahabaha tribesmen began to be dragged into the space.

It was an invisible force.

And it was an overwhelming power.

The Mahabaha desperately resisted so as not to be dragged by force.

It was all pointless.

No matter how hard they tried to endure, the Mahabaha tribesmen were sucked into the space.

The power of the black hole was applied only to the Mahabaha and anything blocking them.

Therefore, there was no damage to the people or buildings around it.

The Mahabaha tribesmen were too strong to hold onto something properly.

Even if they tried to hold on to the streetlight next to them, they were already being sucked into a hole in space before reaching for the streetlight.

The Mahabaha tribesmen inside or behind the building were sucked into the building with the rubble of the collapsed building.

The Mahabaha became bloody and sucked into the space.

Just 1 second.

Shortly after the space opened and began to suck in the Mahabaha tribesmen.

There was not a single enemy left on the street.

Only the breath of the surviving humans panting in terror rang silently.

Chapter 366

Earth (6)

The Mahabaha tribe, which made a noise loud enough to deafen ears, was instantly annihilated.

In the deserted city, the sound of the wind and buildings and vehicles burning was heard.

And the sound of people breathing quietly

It wasn't a sigh of relief.

It was thin and intermittent.

It was a suppressed breath.

Hochi came to save them, but the humans who saw him felt horror.

It was difficult to blame them.

The unknown and death have always been a realm of fear for humans.

The sight that Hochi showed them was enough to remind them of both the unknown and death.

On the other hand, the challengers showed the opposite reaction.

They felt excitement and anticipation.

“Looking back at it again, it's a total hoax.”

“It said that what we're getting is minor, but depending on the combination, it might have a similar effect.”

They had seen this scene several times already.

When they first saw it, they were embarrassed.

They recalled the effort they put into training and were frustrated.

However, their attitude changed when they realized that all of the techniques Hochi used could be acquired.

Challengers who were trained in the new tutorials and given missions were promised a definite reward.

Just as the members of Earth are rewarded for their faith and achievements through the system.

The challengers were promised more rewards.

There was only one thing the challengers who were trapped in Hell difficulty wanted.

Even more powerful abilities.

And Ho-jae had the power to satisfy that desire.

The powers paid through their rewards were slightly downgraded compared to the originals, but the challengers from the Hell difficulty gladly accepted that.

The challengers were happily looking at the powers in the reward list, using them together in combination, or predicting the synergy with their current abilities.

This is why they remained cooperative despite sudden summons, hard training, and nonstop missions.

The frightened people and the challengers thrilled with anticipation.

Hochi had a completely different reaction from all of them.

It was right after he wiped out the Mahabaha, but he didn't relax.

On the contrary, he was more alert than when he first appeared.

"Yong-yong, I think I found it."

Hochi spoke quietly.

Obviously, all of the Mahabaha tribe were swept away by a small black hole and sucked out of space.

But now, there was a Mahabaha tribesman standing on the street.

On a deserted street where no one was there just before, a being stood peacefully, as if he had been there from the beginning,

"You are the guardian of this planet."

The Mahabaha tribesman opened its mouth and spoke first.

Guardian.

It was an unfamiliar name, but it wasn't wrong when it came to his consideration.

Hochi nodded his head to show affirmation.

"What do you want?"

Although they had already invaded Earth, Hochi was willing to listen to their stories as much as possible if he could solve it smoothly.

"You."

However, the Mahabaha tribesman said with a real smile, as if playing a joke.

"The God of Destruction is coming down here soon. Our mission is to keep things out of the way until then. The things that protect this planet like you.”

Hochi was silent for a moment.

The group of survivors remained unmoved in the restricted area.

Strangely, this area was difficult to communicate in and observe.

It was suspicious.

Hochi and Yong-yong thought there was something here that interfered with their observation.

Perhaps one of those invading this area had a special object interfering with the observation.

So rather than adding more challengers, Hochi came here.

But now, it seemed that the problem wasn't an object, but the ability of the Mahabaha tribesman.

“Your god will never appear on Earth.”

Hochi was sure.

From some point on, the summoning portals stopped appearing.

The summoning portals that were previously connected had also disappeared.

All of the remaining summoning portals were initially opened and left unattended.

“Tell your god who is hiding because he doesn't want to use his strength.”

The Mahabaha said so.

In fact, Lee Ho-jae was not hiding, but he was away from Earth to directly attack all the gods.

It seemed that he didn't know that much.

Hochi judged.

There seemed to be no room for negotiation, and there was no information he could find out through conversation.

And it was a bit burdensome to defeat him through battle.

“Yong-yong, help me.”

At Hochi's request, the space opened again.

Looking beyond the space, something inhuman walked out.

It was a huge eye.

The giant silver-lit thing moved slowly.

As if looking around, the pupils moved back and forth, and then fixed toward the Mahabaha tribesman.

The Mahabaha, who had just spoken to Hochi with a high-powered voice, couldn't even say a word and stiffened.

The same was true of the humans behind.

The survivors who managed to survive and maintain consciousness collapsed.

The challengers, who had just been admiring Hochi's abilities, were overwhelmed by embarrassment and fear.

‘...What, is that.’

‘I have to run away.’

‘Something seems to be wrong.’

‘Shall we surrender? Then can we live.’

They were confused.

They didn’t understand the silver eyes that appeared out of nowhere.

However, they could only vaguely feel the brutality in the eyes.

The eyes stimulated their survival instincts.

Apart from the situation, only ways to survive filled their minds.

However, it was not comparable to the Mahabaha tribe who were faced by the eyes.

The minds of the Mahabaha were completely empty.

From the moment of eye contact, the Mahabaha’s reason was blown away, and it was just a shell looking ahead in fear.

Hochi thought that he should deal with the Mahabaha as soon as possible and send Yong-yong’s eyes back, for the sake of the frightened humans.

He took out the most powerful and deadly means he knew.

Hochi approached the Mahabaha and used his power.

[Death]

Black energy was flowing over Hochi’s hand, and Hochi swung it and slightly cut the neck of the Mahabaha.

It was a small wound, but it was enough.

This power, with the grand name of Death, was actually the final evolution of the poison skill Lee Ho-jae was studying.

Even after becoming a god, he steadily improved it, and by mixing the existing poison with divine power, it gained a poisonous effect that can literally kill a god.

There was a disadvantage of having to penetrate the enemy to inject the poison through a direct attack, but there was no more lethal attack to an opponent whose movement was suppressed.

The body of the Mahabaha began to melt down.

It died too easily and vainly to a being who could no longer be considered a mortal beyond the category of a superhuman.

Watching the scene, Hochi thought.

He should be a god himself.

The difference between a non-deity and deity was too great.

Now that he had something he had to protect, Hochi began to feel the need and desire for a strong power he had previously avoided.

*

‘Clear the Paju area.’

“Get ready to go right away. There is still a lot left. No, I don’t have time to rest! Take care of it while you’re on the go. There will be reinforcement in the Gangwon area.”

Kim Min-hyuk sent telepathic messages and looked at the map again.

The map showed the number and status of invading beings on Earth in real time, and the status of the Awakened and troops scattered around the world.

Kim Min-hyuk, who received various help such as telepathy and mental response with Yong-yong's help, was in charge of commanding the Awakened who were reaching for him and advising the military unit.

Perhaps because of the long-lasting concentration, he felt a fever on his forehead.

If Kim Min-hyuk was not an Awakened who came out and cleared the Tutorial, he would have collapsed earlier.

Maintaining concentration isn't just something one can do.

Humans need calories, stamina, and mental power to focus on something and create enough ideas.

He looked at the situation around the world, and had to improvise to move the Awakened and troops to produce the best results.

In the meantime, he had to argue with the Awakened people who didn't listen.

He even had to negotiate to persuade those outside his control.

Sometimes, when his troops were lost, his heart was overwhelmed by the fact that people were sacrificed because of his own judgment.

Kim Min-hyuk raised his head for a while and looked ahead.

Yong-yong, sitting quietly, covering one of his eyes with his hand.

He felt in awe at the sight.

The child who loves to wear pretty clothes, and only rolls around in his room as if he is nothing special, was doing all this perfectly.

Many of the challengers in the Tutorial were assigned and sent to the battlefield in combinations that suit the circumstances.

And in every moment, he made the best judgments.

Even if it might be a little too much for Kim Min-hyuk from the side, the mission ended with success somehow through the combination of the challengers.

Yong-yong divided districts by establishing barriers across the globe.

He prevented intruders from gathering or dispersing.

While the intruders were cleared one area at a time, he moved the humans in the dangerous areas to the safe areas.

In the meantime, he even got involved in the battlefield at Hochi's request.

For Kim Min-hyuk, it was an ability that could not be imitated or understood.

Yong-yong, who was still concentrating, suddenly raised his head.

Kim Min-hyuk asked without realizing.

“What is it?”

Kim Min-hyuk felt his heart stiff again because he was wondering if there was a problem.

Fortunately, it wasn't bad news.

Yong-yong smiled brightly.

“Dad is back.”

Shortly after hearing Yong-yong's answer, Kim Min-hyuk could also recognize it.

In an instant, the air changed.

It became heavier.

Through the windows of the temple building, the giants were seen.

The giants who appeared immediately after the Pantheon gods invaded Earth and disappeared immediately.

Giants who had been sent out to directly attack the gods who invaded Earth reappeared back on Earth.

What that meant was clear.

Kim Min-hyuk asked Yong-yong.

“Then did we win?”

Yong-yong smiled at Kim Min-hyuk again when he heard him.

*

“It’s a mess, really.”

[This should be considered to be very good protection, King]

Grandmother said.

I also agreed with that.

Yong-yong and Hochi held back Earth’s invaders well.

The damage was less than I expected, and they were defending much more systematically and efficiently than I expected.

Still.

“A mess is a mess.”

The scene where the minions of the Pantheon gods were all over Earth was beyond description.

[What do I do?]

Old Man said.

The Old Man has been less talkative since facing the God of Order.

There is no big problem in sight.

After this work was over, in-depth consultation seemed necessary, but I thought it was not serious enough to become a problem right away.

“My gosh.”

Those who remain on Earth now are those who have been neglected by the gods.

Even the gods were torn apart by giants and died.

It was clear that all of the holy lands of the gods that connected the summoning portals to Earth had been dealt with without missing a single place.

“Hold them down. Wipe out those who resist.”

No need to attack those who had no will to resist.

They’re all resources.

“Let’s get this over with as soon as possible. It’s a war that has already finished. We won.”

Chapter 367

God of Victory (1)

“Yong-Yong did a good job.”

I could recognize it at a glance.

Barriers were spread across the globe.

Like lines drawn on a checkerboard, lines were drawn on the earth at regular intervals.

It was simply a barrier for dividing areas, but the effect was clear.

Enemies in one area were completely eradicated, and humans were evacuated to safe areas.

Not only was it easy to wipe out the enemies, but it was also possible to minimize the damage to humans.

It was the cleanest and most perfect response under the assumption that there would be no additional enemies summoned.

[What should I do?]

Grandmother asked.

She was not really asking for advice from me because she didn't know what to do, but rather to get directions.

I answered without a long pause.

“Take care of each area.”

No further instructions were needed.

The difference in power was overwhelming.

There must have been fierce battles on Earth as well, but the direction of the war was irrelevant to Earth.

The minions of the Pantheon gods that were summoned to Earth were only a force meant to drain our power.

Our side was similar.

Yong-yong, Hochi, and the challengers of the Tutorial were left behind, but they were only defensive forces to protect the humans of Earth.

The main force was me and the giants who went directly to attack the Pantheon gods.

The war was already over when the giants, who had gone out to attack the Pantheon gods away from Earth, appeared in the air above Earth.

Among the minions of the Pantheon gods, there was a rare mix of powerful men who could be called superhuman, but most were cleared up by Hochi.

There were some who were the apostles of the Pantheon gods, but now that their gods, the source of their power, are extinct, they will not be able to use much power.

When the giants were put into ranks, there were no enemies on Earth who could resist them.

The giants that were filling the sky began to descend.

* * *

As expected, the giants easily cleaned up the remaining forces on

Earth.

Enemies who encountered divine authority in front of them froze as they were, and managed to move the remaining pieces of their reason to surrender to the giants and save their lives.

Sometimes those who tried to resist were lightly burned or crushed.

The ones who surrendered were locked in a subspace as soon as possible.

When I came back to the temple after taking care of the remnants of the Pantheon forces on Earth with the giants, Yong-yong ran and greeted me.

“It was difficult! I had a hard time!”

Yong-yong shouted in my arms.

He whined that he was tired while protecting Earth.

This didn’t happen often.

Yong-yong, who had been following my training without much difficulty, whined like this, so I thought that the work on Earth must have been fierce.

“Yes, Yong-yong, you had a hard time.”

Yong-yong, who was hugging me and telling me about his hardships, fell asleep shortly afterward.

Although Yong-yong was outside the general category of life, he still sleeps regularly.

It was not known whether Yong-yong’s characteristic was unique to him, or whether it was a trait peculiar to the dragon race.

While holding Yong-yong, I also relaxed. When I returned to the temple building and laid down on the sofa, my body regained comfort, but my heart couldn't.

“Homen! Homen! Homen!”

The sound of that Homen that people were shouting from all over Earth stimulated my nerves.

This was something I couldn't stop listening to even though I didn't want to hear it.

The voices of the believers crying out with intense devotion flowed directly into my mind.

“They're just trying to embarrass me now.”

Every time I heard it, my face was burning.

My God, Homen.

As time passed, it became embarrassing.

“Hold it. I think you will hear it all your life.”

Hochi said, giggling.

All my life.

It was terrible.

I might have to listen to that forever.

Fortunately, Earth's believers were not hit hard in the midst of the invasion of the Pantheon.

It was a relief that there was not much damage. It was acceptable to the people on Earth, as they got used to misfortune since the creation of the gates

Lee Ho-jae Faith's system also played a big part in reducing the damage to the believers.

In the meantime, believers collected points with public merits and faith points. When the Pantheon's invasion arrived, the believers began to purchase abilities or items.

Depending on how it is used, it was possible to avoid dangerous situations by using rewards with powerful effects.

Since then, the damage was far better than expected because of the safe evacuation by Yong-yong and Hochi's quick response.

There were also believers who gained more faith points through this incident.

It was possible because I had already verified my abilities to the people of Earth.

Even in the midst of this crisis, there were believers who believed that I (someone seen as dead) would appear (again) to help them.

Such a belief was a meaningful faith to me.

Believing in my victory was more than just worshiping me as a god.

Just as the God of Hope wanted to have strong hope for the believers, I also wanted the believers to have faith in my victory.

As they believed, I appeared with the giants.

Faith soared accordingly with Yong-yong's and Hochi's leadership in response to the invasion of the Pantheon gods.

"Just looking at the results alone, the denomination itself has grown significantly. To the point where we can't grow anymore on Earth. Now, not quantitative growth, but qualitative growth remains."

Hochi said.

“I think it will not be long before we can make Earth your holy land.”

It wasn't very pleasant.

I didn't even need it much.

If Earth becomes my holy land, it will surely be a great power.

The basis of my divinity is the actual force of me and the giants.

The power through human faith was not desperately needed.

I made a decision.

“Let's change the name of our denomination. I will also announce my godhood.”

Until I couldn't hear the prayers of 'Homen' 'Homen' and it was not called Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Not only was it embarrassing to hear, but it wasn't the right expression.

When my denomination grew up and entered another world, I was worried about how the others would respond to the denomination's name.

It was easy to make a decision because I gave up the idea of forcing my divinity on the believers.

My divinity was absolutely indispensable to overcome the obstacles that seemed impossible to defeat and to achieve my ultimate goal, as it fits best with my ideals.

Sadly, however, it didn't mean that it had common sense and was a normal ideology.

It wasn't something that could be easily accepted by others.

I couldn't ask all believers to challenge themselves and march toward grand goals, like the giants and me.

Of course, that will be my greatest faith.

The extreme nature of divinity was only poison to the lives of mortals who had to walk many paths.

Of course, I couldn't tell the believers to live completely independent of my divinity.

However, if the believers believe and trust in my victory.

So, even when something like this happened again, I could be satisfied with that faith if they believed that in the end I would be victorious and overcome the crises with them.

“Godhood?”

“Yes, my godhood.”

I've been thinking for a long time.

I'm afraid it feels like too much to reveal my divinity to others and enforce the doctrines that follow.

Like the days when I was a challenger in the past tutorials when no one could sympathize with my steps.

However, when I gave up the idea of imposing my divinity and decided on an appropriate compromise, I was able to confidently announce my title.

“God of Victory.”

* * *

It took quite some time to return their lives back to before the Pantheon's invasion.

First of all, it was not easy to return the people who had been moved from place to place for evacuation, one by one.

Buildings and facilities that collapsed in the middle of the invasion were restored as much as possible, and in the case of human casualties, the families were compensated for the damage.

It was a minimal action, but even that took more time and labor than expected.

After taking care of the earthly believers, there are now the remnant people of the invasion.

Among them, those who gave up resistance and surrendered became a problem.

Few of those who had been put onto Earth could be called warriors.

Most of them surrendered as soon as they encountered giants.

Thanks to that, we were able to secure a number of survivors that easily surpassed Earth's population.

"It's much more than I thought."

An unexpected problem has arisen.

Even if there were many survivors, there were too many.

There was no space to collect them.

At least on Earth.

Most of the survivors were ordinary mortals, and they needed a minimum of food, clothing, and shelter to sustain their lives.

There was no way to provide them both living space and a living base.

"Let's put them in the subspace."

Hochi said.

Just as he said.

I had put the survivors in a subspace.

But that didn't solve all the problems.

"They won't endure it long.

A subspace is not a space where humans can live.

Although the people collected from the holy land of the God of Hope were placed in a subspace, that was possible because there were only a few of them.

It was possible because the time flow of the subspace was slowed, and the believers of the God of Hope were so familiar with the situation.

However, if the number of people entering the subspace exceeds billions, the story is different.

Slowing the flow of time for all of them is a heavy burden for me too.

Unless my divine power was infinite, I couldn't even try recklessly.

And if you can't delay the time, those who went there won't last long.

Even if there was enough food, I couldn't guarantee how much people could survive in a dark, gloomy, and nothing-to-do and nowhere-to-go world.

An ordinary person's spirit goes crazy after only a week of confinement in a solitary room.

It was said that if a large and overflowing number of people came together they would form a society, but that was not comforting.

Rather, it was more dangerous because it could induce collective madness.

“What about releasing them to the worlds of the gods of the Pantheon you’ve destroyed?”

Impossible.

It wasn’t practically possible yet.

There were several planets that became empty mountains without an owner after killing the gods of the Pantheon.

(T/N: Empty mountain without owner is self-explanatory, but it can also mean an ownerless land, or a place that can be easily occupied or settled.

I couldn’t call those planets my territory.

It was literally just blank space.

And in order to put people under my influence in such a world, it deservedly needed protective measures.

Probably, it would be in the form of sending giants to protect them, but that was impossible.

It wouldn’t be a problem to leave one or two worlds to be managed by the giants which became gods, but the powers of the giants should not be dispersed yet.

The assembled giants are one of the most powerful forces I have, and I can’t divide them when I haven’t achieved my goals.

“That doesn’t mean you can’t just throw them out.”

I couldn’t do that.

Even if they were thrown as victims by the gods of the Pantheon, I didn’t want to do that.

There was a way to solve this problem.

It's also very neat.

“When I get the Tutorial.”

All the problems will be solved.

Many tutorial stages have been destroyed by monsters or disasters.

Solving the problems there and resettling the survivors, everything will be solved neatly.

Easy, Normal, Hard, Hell.

There are over 100 worlds each on four difficulty levels.

There will be enough room to distribute and settle billions of survivors.

Taking ownership of the Tutorial was also my ultimate goal.

However,

I sighed without knowing.

It was because of the God of Order.

I was thinking that if there were any gods who opposed the transfer of the Tutorial, I was going to forcefully get consent through an armed demonstration.

However, the God of Order, encountered by chance in the realm of the God of Sky, shook such thoughts.

In the first place, it was questionable what significance an armed demonstration would be against the existence where a special attack did not even go through.

“The God of Order?”

Asked Hochi, who was quietly listening to my explanation.

First, I decided to explain the God of Order to Hochi.

* * *

“Then, you think that the God of Order will become a transcendent god?”

Hochi asked.

“Maybe.”

I don’t know if it really will, but the God of Order will be hoping for it.

[Maybe.]

The God of Hope has the same opinion as me.

It was inevitable.

To be reborn as a transcendent god means to paint the whole world with yourself.

And most gods won’t give up on that opportunity.

Looking at the self and the abnormal abilities displayed by the God of Order, it seems that the God of Order is already close to a transcendent god.

In the meantime, it would be strange if the God of Order has no intention to be reborn as a perfect transcendent god, who has the self to gather more power.

“Then.”

Hochi said again.

“What happens when the God of Order becomes a transcendent god?”

What will happen?

The whole world becomes a holy land for the God of Order.

“So what kind of world is that?”

I was speechless at Hochi’s question.

It becomes a holy land for the God of Order.

I knew that far.

However, I did not think about what the holy land of the God of Order would look like.

Chapter 368

God of Victory (2)

“It will be a world where everyone keeps order.”

It wasn't an exact expression.

In the world of the God of Order, order will not be something to be kept.

In that world, order will be as natural as breathing.

Order will be the world's most powerful law.

There is no possibility of breaking order.

In this world, there are cases where it is unavoidable to break the rules, but the world of the God of Order will be perfectly structured to prevent such accidents.

It would be like a factory.

Like a program, people digest a set schedule from birth to death without any errors.

People maintain the world and devote their faith.

In fact, it will be the same regardless of the holy place of any god.

From the perspective of believers, the holy land is nothing more than a factory of faith.

However, in the case of the God of Order, the expression of 'factory' came to mind.

Considering the propensity of the God of Order, all the established rules will be kept perfectly.

People will live within a set frame without any deviation.

At first glance, it felt similar to what I had expected of the holy land of the God of Sky.

On the other hand, the God of Sky will only force equality on all, but the God of Order will force more mediocrity.

“What kind of order is that?”

Hochi said.

It seems that his question has not been resolved since earlier

“What is considered natural order in some places can be treated as heresy in others. Does it exist in the first place, an order that can be applied equally to all worlds?”

Hmm.....

Hearing Hochi’s question, I scratched my chin.

It was a problem I hadn’t thought of.

“Is it similar to the tutorial system?”

He is the God of Order who claimed that the Tutorial was his own world.

It was possible that the holy land of the God of Order resembled a tutorial.

But when I recalled the Tutorial, I couldn’t tell for sure what kind of order it contained.

There was no social discipline.

Although there were days of dialogue agreement day or community, it was conditional, and it was always optional.

The only clear order in the Tutorial was a few unbreakable propositions.

You must clear the Tutorial before you can go outside.

If you die in the Tutorial, you really die.

The simple rules of that kind.

My thoughts became more complicated.

I decided to ask the God of Hope.

The former apostle of the God of Order will know of the ideal order pursued by the God of Order.

[I do not know.]

Damn it.

He doesn't know anything.

Oh, of course, if he knew so much, he wouldn't stop talking.

However, he did not know about the important and necessary information.

[How can I guess that there is an ideal for a machine god who doesn't even have an ego? I was just going to do that.]

It didn't help.

Really.

"Hmmhmm. There is a text from a book I read deeply."

Hochi coughed and said abruptly.

“Dragon Raja?”

“Oh, that! How did you know?”

How many books do you think Hochi will bring out, saying he read them deeply?

It was me who wrote the books in the first place.

“I read it there, and order is one aspect of chaos.”

Hochi said with a serious face as if saying something very important and meaningful.

“So?”

“Maybe the world of the God of Order is unexpectedly normal. Moderately harmonious, moderately confusing.”

Do you think so?

I disagree.

Although order may belong to chaos, it was unlikely that the God of Order would include chaos in order.

Again, the theme came to what the God of Order thinks is order.

Order is seen as an objective and public discipline.

However, that objectivity is inevitably diluted in the face of diversity.

In Korea, the sentence “people eat a lot of kimchi” can be an objective fact.

But in Wakanda, it’s not obvious.

Therefore, order can be regarded as subjective.

In the Holy Land of the God of Order, all rules will be established under the supervision of the God of Order, so this would be more correct.

[I can tell you that.]

The God of Hope whispered.

Suddenly I had doubts.

I doubted that the God of Hope would tell me something.

Maybe this guy is saying he knows something but he doesn't know it well.

[Really.]

The God of Hope grumbled and spoke as if it was unjust.

*[Aren't you curious about the order that the God of Order thinks about?
The subject of order and its ideals?]*

I nodded my head in affirmation.

[As I have said, the God of Order is a mechanical god without ego. If so, what is the subjectivity?]

I don't know that.

There were too few clues to speculate on the subjectivity of the God of Order.

[Simple.]

The God of Hope said calmly.

[The subjectivity of the God of Order is the subjectivity of the creator. The ideal of the God of Order will also be the ideal of its creator.]

*

-Homen.

It was the closing comment of the broadcast.

Damn it.

“Hey, you changed the name of our denomination, right?”

“Oh, that’s right.”

Replied Hochi, who was rummaging through the newspaper.

I was upset.

I announced my name as the God of Victory, and accordingly, the name of the denomination was announced again.

People were still saying Homen Homen.

“It sticks well to your mouth.”

Just say Homen and I won’t even talk to you.

People were also still using the name Lee Ho-jae Faith.

It wasn’t worth the trouble to tell them of my status as a deity.

“To be honest, the response is a little bad.”

“What.”

“The God of Victory. It’s kind of like something someone with second-year syndrome would say.”

...My world.

Second year syndrome.

(T/N: second year syndrome or more commonly known as 'chūnibyō' where early teens (middle school) convinced themselves they have hidden knowledge or powers.

“Oh sorry. But to be honest, it's kind of like that.”

Hochi apologized for being too harsh.

The truthful apology hurts even more.

“You have been associated with the gods in the Tutorial. But it's kind of unfamiliar to be accepted by ordinary people. Lee Ho-jae Faith is more comfortable.”

It was true.

Compared to the existing religions of Earth, I am clearly an unfamiliar new deity.

“What shall we do?”

Hochi asked.

I pondered for a while and answered.

“Leave it. Use whatever you are comfortable with.”

If it was simply because my reasoning wasn't spread, I could just skip it.

Although it's a little embarrassing every time I hear it.

As Hochi said before, it will become dull someday.

“Is that okay?”

Hochi asked.

Of course it wasn't okay.

The gods don't just put forth their deity name for no reason.

It is possible to receive faith by using a nickname other than the divine name, but then the quality of faith will deteriorate.

Just as the God of Hope gains more power of faith when believers think of themselves with intense hope, rather than just worshiping the name.

It was important to put up the concept of faith.

“If you lose something else, isn't it just a matter of losing your strength?”

Hochi asked without hesitation.

He did that because Hochi had no interest in divinity and did not study.

There was something I picked up, but I didn't know for sure.

“That's okay.”

It wasn't the best way to get power.

As much as the members of Earth give me faith, there is a perception that I must protect and take care of them with a minimum sense of responsibility.

There is no need to impose the best way to receive faith from believers.

However, it became necessary to devise the best way to protect the believers.

This was really annoying.

It doesn't matter if I can completely protect the believers.

If something like the last time, the invasion of the Pantheon happens, it will become quite difficult.

It was a reckless act to directly attack the giants and the Pantheon gods.

The decision was made by speculation without knowing the enemy's history.

It was also an unavoidable judgment.

To minimize damage to Earth and its people.

It wasn't the best judgment for an efficient victory.

But on the contrary, if I had to aim for a safe victory at the expense of Earth's people, the damage of Earth could be considered defeat to me.

"There are more losses than benefits anyway."

Overwhelmingly.

It was for this reason that the Old Man and Seregia have always warned me.

I smiled and moved on saying 'I knew it'.

Seregia was still concerned about the risk of my judgment.

Hochi got up from his seat saying he knew.

Somehow, as the work increased, it became more common for Hochi to go outside.

He just stopped by to watch the first broadcast of the newly created Lee Ho-jae Faith religious channel together, but he had to go back to work immediately.

I was alone again.

Yong-yong, Seregia, and the giants were back on the 61st floor.

Oh, I wasn't alone.

Because there was the God of Hope.

But the God of Hope was also strangely quiet.

It was a perfect situation to organize my thoughts calmly by myself.

I opened the quest window.

I didn't do much, but most of the quests were completed.

What stands out is the quest of the God of Order and the God of Adventure, which remains unfinished.

This is a quest window created by Kirikiri.

Its function is to display quests, but it is also possible to contact Kirikiri.

However, communication has been interrupted for a while.

I tried to contact Kirikiri again and again, but no answer came back.

I was always curious about her intentions.

It has been like that since I first saw her.

Anyone would have.

A bright field that appeared when I barely cleared that hellish stage.

The rabbit was happy jumping endlessly.

I was always curious about her goals and tried to find out.

Whenever that happened, Kirikiri gently shared her intentions.

One by one.

To fulfill one's responsibility and duties.

To support talented challengers.

For a friend who presents a cake every time we meet.

To properly grow a challenger who will be an outstanding apostle.

To grow him into a Joker card that will free her from the system's constraints.

To use the boundaries of the system to keep the Rulers and the God of Hope in check.

But I couldn't erase the feeling that she always had more motives.

It was like that every time.

Actually, Kirikiri always had more intentions than what she was telling me.

And now is really the time.

I have to figure out what Kirikiri's final goals are.

What is the ideal Kirikiri wishes for?

How much is the God of Order, which is gaining self and becoming a transcendent god in line with Kirikiri's ideals?

Are they contradicting again?

What is Kirikiri's intention?

I had to find out how far and what is it that the God of Adventure is looking towards, the God of Adventure that created the present system and won against the God of Slowness who was trying to swallow up the entire universe.

[I'm sorry you seem to be thinking about something important, but there is something you need to know right now.]

The God of Hope who had remained quiet said.

"What is it."

[Voting has begun.]

"Between the Hundred Gods Temple?"

[Yes.]

Hundred Gods Temple who are bound by many restrictions, as an exception can reset their boundary of behaviors by voting.

It was possible to reward the challenger beyond what was allowed, or force the challenger to move to the next stage.

From what I've seen and heard, I've known that voting happens very often and routinely.

[By the way, the subject of the voting is a little.....]

The God of Hope blurred the end of his words.

An embarrassment emerged from his voice.

“What kind of vote is it, is it?”

[A vote for a war against the Pantheon.]

Chapter 369

God of Victory (3)

“War?”

A war between the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

Could the two groups be divided that way in the first place?

It seems that the gods are controlled by a system, but I heard that the Hundred Gods Temple and other gods belonging to the Pantheon are specifically classified as management targets.

By the way, is a war between the two forces led by the Hundred Gods Temple possible?

Looking at the purpose of establishing the Hundred Gods Temple, it doesn't make sense.

[It is possible. It is also one of the loopholes in the system. A majority vote can overturn some of the system's limitations.]

Certainly, the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple have sometimes ignored the limitations of the system.

However, it was usually only for the intervention of a challenger in the Tutorial.

I've never heard of a vote on anything else, in other words, affecting other gods of the Hundred Gods Temple, not just challengers.

Oh, there was only one time.

It was the time when the God of Remorse, who presented me with a fragment of the source, was disciplined.

Kirikiri explained that the relationship between all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple was not good, and it was difficult to agree with each other due to the nature of each god.

Thus, it is unlikely that the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple would happily vote in favor of war.

[The new faction of adventure is actively advancing. I don't know what will happen yet.]

The God of Hope stopped talking, saying that he would also participate in the voting a little deeper.

He seemed to be intervening in the voting scene through his incarnation in the Hundred Gods Temple.

The faction of adventure is coming forward.

That means the mainstream forces in the Hundred Gods Temple are leading the way.

It was said that the Hundred Gods Temple was divided into several factions, but it was quite self-evident where the mainstream was.

The Hundred Gods Temple was born in the process of preventing the unification of the universe caused by the God of Slowness.

And the winner was the God of Adventure on the other side of the God of Slowness.

As a result, the unification of the universe has not been achieved until now, and most of the gods, including the God of Slowness, are restricted by being included in the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

So, even the surviving gods and the extremely influential gods can expect that the God of Adventure will dominate.

The God of Order seen in the realm of the God of the Sky

And the lower god, the sage, was used as a tool to guide me there.

The two seemed to be related in some way to the war being discussed through voting.

* * *

“I’m not crying anymore.”

Lee Yeon-hee glanced at me instead of eating soup.

It was a mixture of embarrassment, a bit of resentment, and criticism.

“You think I cry every time I eat something?”

Lee Yeon-hee asked sharply.

There was a feeling of desperation.

It was the same as the conversation we had before.

The other person wasn’t Lee Yeon-hee.

I raised my hand, saying that I knew, and Lee Yeon-hee again focused on soup.

In one way or another, Lee Yeon-hee ate joyfully whenever we brought soup.

Her state, which seemed confused, has also somewhat stabilized.

There was no problem with proceeding with the conversation.

It was a fast recovery.

I know from being in a similar state, but it was a really fast recovery rate.

In the past, I had expected that she would be in half-ruin.

Lee Yeon-hee's recovery could be seen just by looking around.

The scenery on the 60th floor has changed a lot.

It was thanks to Lee Yeon-hee's remodeling.

Lee Yeon-hee was redecorating the exterior of the 60th floor.

She rearranged the streets and placed the sculptures.

As if playing a city management game, she was managing the 60th floor where no one lives.

It's not bad.

This kind of hobby is helpful in many ways.

Since it is part of simple labor, it can be done without much thought.

It was great to concentrate on something while emptying your thoughts.

In the meantime, it also demanded creativity.

You can contemplate your own tastes and reflect on them.

It certainly helps to establish oneself.

I used to have similar hobbies.

[Hororong?]

The God of Hope, who was quiet, asked.

Ugh, coming back with the things I want to forget.

Why are you revealing other people's dark history?

[Because that scarf is famous even in the Hundred Gods Temple. At that time, there was a really long discussion about whether your actions were right or wrong. It is clear that the God of Devotion still remembers the color and texture of the scarf.]

Damn it. Damn it.

I can't believe there are hundreds of guys who have been watching my black history with interest.

I got goosebumps all of a sudden.

I felt sorry for Hororong too.

To me, he was a friend who meant much more than Wilson.

Still, I wanted to protect my dignity as a human being.

I'm going to build a shrine for you later.

"Is the voting over?"

[Not yet. But it is almost there. Wait a little more.]

Suddenly I spoke out, so Lee Yeon-hee looked at me again, wondering if I was calling her who was quietly eating soup.

I woke up while leaving a message to Lee Yeon-hee to eat.

* * *

[It seems like a war will happen anyway.]

The God of Hope said so.

With a troubled voice.

It was surprising.

If it were the God of Hope, I thought that he would happily accept the war.

[Most of the gods who are not a part of the God of Adventure's factions have passed. Due to long time constraints, there are many people in favor of the war just because they have been bound by restrictions for a long time.]

It was as exciting as when you heard about a reward vacation in the army.

I understand.

[The God of Slowness is silent as always, and the God of Devotion somehow agrees. The God of the Sky has not been able to properly express an opinion because of what happened a while ago.]

The God of Hope explained the state of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

There was one god missing from it.

“The God of Light?”

The God of Hope didn't answer right away but began to click his tongue as if he had no answer.

[...It's luminous.]

Well, that's it.

It must be radiating like crazy in an ambiguous sense.

[The cause of the war is that some Pantheon gods fluttered in Thanatos, the realm of the God of Death, and interfered with the responsibilities of the God of Death.]

I said yes and moved on.

I knew that the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were subject to stealth attacks from other gods because they were bound by constraints.

It was the same kind of attack as the one on Earth by the rulers.

Going to the 61st floor, I searched for Old Man who was lying in the depths of the volcano.

I came back into the Tutorial today to check his status.

“Old Man.”

The body of Old Man, which had been submerged under the lava, slowly emerged.

It passed my eye level and rose to a position where I could make eye contact only by raising my head.

That’s just standing up from where he was lying.

It was a size that I couldn’t adapt to even if I looked at it again.

[What’s the matter, King?]

“I just came to see you Old Man.”

After attempting an attack on the God of Order, the Old Man appeared to be depressed.

It wasn’t just a bit of heartbreak, it seemed to me that he was under mental pressure.

“Grandmother was worried a lot too.”

Old Man quietly nodded.

Usually, Old Man would laugh loudly even when I talked about Grandmother getting worried and yelled at her.

He looked a little bit sad.

It feels like seeing a close brother in the neighborhood lying tiredly because he is sick.

[I am fine but.....]

Old Man's voice still sounded weak.

The God of Order introduced itself as the system.

As for me, he was the main enemy to overcome for Old Man and the giants, and the main culprit behind their confinement.

The fact that he attempted an attack on the God of Order but did not do any damage, and eventually had to retire from being exhausted, will surely be enough to break his heart.

More than anything.....

“Old Man?”

While I was organizing my thoughts by myself, a question came up.

What did he feel in front of the unusual power of the God of Order?

“I'm just saying this”

[Right.]

The Old Man had lost his mind even before I started questioning.

I could feel strong frustration and depression from that short response.

[I lost my confidence. Whether we can beat that monster or not. Will we be able to achieve our dreams?]

Only then could I understand the Old Man's strange state.

It wasn't the strange power of the God of Order.

He was just really frustrated mentally.

Enough to weaken his divinity.

The belief that you will eventually win.

That was all we had.

I stood up with that faith, and I was able to come this far.

Conversely, without that belief, there was no difference from the time when I was imprisoned here helplessly.

Old Man apologized to me saying sorry.

I didn't accept the apology.

I was sad and angry.

For the last decade.

When we put all of our stagnant times together, we have been together for a time that we can't even measure ourselves.

But I was upset that he had lost faith enough to weaken his divinity by meeting the God of Order for a while.

[I'm sorry, King.]

Old Man apologized again.

He nodded with a crumpled expression and apologized.

He is my colleague, my subordinate, my apostle but also my family.

“It’s all right.”

So I could say.

“The lost faith can be recovered.”

[...yes. I will get up soon. Breaking through walls that seem insurmountable. That was our job. Wait for me King. I’ll catch up with you soon.]

Old Man said so.

I consoled him, saying that getting enough rest is the first step, and I left the 61st floor.

Old Man’s will was conveyed.

He faced an enemy powerful enough to feel frustrated, and he was constricted, but he was also willing to overcome it someday.

But I was skeptical.

He has lost faith.

The previously held faith that Old Man had before was powerful enough for him to become a divine being.

The power of the God of Order that broke his faith would also have been strongly imprinted.

You cannot regain your faith just by devoting yourself.

You can have the desire to win, but you won’t be sure of it.

Confidence is not something that can be obtained that way.

I gritted my teeth.

I could see the frustration that Old Man would have faced and the helplessness that he would have felt in front of it.

I was able to comprehend the feeling of Old Man facing the wall that blocked us in the past again.

It was harsh to want him to overcome everything on his own.

I will show you

That we will finally be able to win.

That the path that he walked with me is the path to victory.

I stood in front of the portal back to the 60th floor.

There was a faint voice.

[Come to me, challenger.]

It was a strange voice that felt like something inorganic, without elevation.

It was the God of Order.

Was he exerting influence at the door of my holy land?

In the first place, the Tutorial itself belongs to the God of Order. It could be said that it was part of the God of Order itself, so there was nothing strange.

Of course, that fact and the displeasure I felt were separate.

I could have guessed the purpose of the war the God of Adventure is trying to bring about.

Weakening of the system.

If the system that encompasses both the Hundred Gods Temple and Pantheon is part of the divine power of the God of Order.

The God of Order is weakened just by digging into its essence and becoming meaningless.

[Challenge me.]

The complex interests of the gods were irrelevant.

Whatever the purpose they are aiming for.

Among them, achieving my goal was the most important.

I ignored the voice of the God of Order.

Returning to the 60th floor and taking steps, the God of Hope spoke.

[The vote just ended. Soon a war will break out.]

The results came out faster than expected.

[Now I want to ask you what you're going to do. Are you going to join the war? Maybe both the Hundred Gods Temple and Pantheon will contact you.]

“I will participate.”

[Which side?]

Of course it's the winning side.

My choices are always set.

When I told the God of Hope my answer, he asked again.

[Which side do you think it is?]

“The side I chose.”

Still.

I was convinced.

I would win.

Chapter 370

God of Victory (4)

On the 60th floor, there was a sealed Ahbooboo.

There was no other place to put him other than this place.

It was also the best place for research and experimentation.

While watching Ahbooboo, who was bound by a clinging barrier, I asked Seregia, who was watching him.

“How is his condition?”

“Not good.”

Seregia replied with a serious face.

I don't like it.

Was the decision to get him too much?

“Honey was flirting with me to escape.”

“Crazy.....”

[No, it's a little embarrassing to say so plainly, Miss Seregia.]

It's a pity as soon as you wake up in a state of restraint.

Tsk tsk, she clicked her tongue.

[Haha, unlike in the past, when she was locked in the sword and didn't speak for several months, Miss Seregia has become a lot more active. I'm trying to seduce her with my brilliant charm and eloquence because I'm in a human form.....]

Ahbooboo who opened his mouth began to chat endlessly.

To put it nicely, It was pleasant, but if I expressed it honestly, then his words seemed cheap.

Of course, Ahbooboo is not really interested in Seregia.

I wouldn't have thought that Seregia would respond to the joke.

Basically, the two are swords.

A sword that can take the form of a human, not a human that can take the form of a sword.

The difference was great.

[What a shame! She almost fell for it! I wish Warrior came in a little late!]

He just has that kind of personality.

I laughed at the absurdity on one hand, but on the other hand, my heart became warm.

Due to the fact that the appearance of the Ahbooboo that I used to know remains unchanged.

"I wasn't disappointed, at all."

Seregia also refuted Ahbooboo's words as before.

It was a conversation that really reminded me of the past.

But that Ahbooboo doesn't exactly match the Ahbooboo I knew.

That is the result of fusion with the numerous Aubutz that appeared on the stage.

Of course, he also has the appearance and memory of the Ahbooboo I knew, but there will be more parts that I don't know.

The unanswerable delight seemed to be the personality that all Aubutz have in common.

[That's why, Warrior.]

Ahbooboo, who was babbling alone, called me.

And he naturally asked.

[Warrior, can you just send me back?]

To put it so politely, it sounded like a request, such as 'would you like to have a glass of water?'

Or something like 'can you turn off the lights before leaving?'

"Hmm, no."

[That's too bad! You almost fell for it!]

"I wasn't sorry for anything."

Ahbooboo cannot be released right away.

If so, I wouldn't even bring him in the first place.

Before I separate the Aubutz that are fused into one and bring out the Ahbooboo I know from them.

So, I had no intention of returning Ahbooboo until he was made to exist as a single entity.

[Then, will you send me back after that?]

“Well, it looks like the God of the Sky will put you back together again.”

The combined Ahbooboo is definitely useful.

I knew well because we had faced each other.

In the first place, the fact that a single apostle was able to confront a god proves Ahbooboo’s performance.

I have heard that the God of the Sky has an exceptionally large number of subjects and believers among the Hundred Gods Temple.

Ahbooboo’s combined abilities will be very necessary to manage the areas scattered around the world.

And knowing that, I’ll go find Ahbooboo again.

Like the repeat mark , the same thing will be repeated.

[Then, I will contact the God of the Sky before I go back. We can get a promise not to merge me back together. The God of the Sky keeps his promises very well.]

Ahbooboo spoke in a sly way.

He wasn’t daunted by my opposition and suggested a way back.

“Do you want to go back like that?”

[Yes.]

It was an immediate answer.

It’s a little disappointing.

Really.

I knew he would answer, even if it was an empty word.

[Warrior, I found meaning there.]

“From the God of the Sky?”

[No, from those believers.]

A couple words spoken in an unkind, serious voice.

It was a statement that was not like an apostle who worshiped God, but it was possible because of the significance of the apostle of the God of the Sky to the believers.

[Looking at the people who lived peacefully and serving them. Although I couldn't be like them, I was able to project their happiness onto me while protecting their lives.]

I understood.

Even at this moment, Hochi, who is working hard on Earth, is feeling the same thing.

In Hochi's case, there was a personal taste that was added in.

Even I felt a similar joy while watching Earth's believers.

It was also the satisfaction of self-consciousness filled with good intentions.

It was also a vicarious satisfaction that I felt when I saw others enjoy the kind of happiness I couldn't get.

[This will remain the same whether I get divided again or remain as I am now.]

It was a voice with strong determination.

[Of course, if you promise to send me back, it would be okay to stay here for a while, even for the sake of the future. I want to do that too. I have a lot of things I want to say.]

Ahbooboo said so as if he had read my heart.

A lot to say.

I wanted to know what happened after we separated, and I also wanted to tell him what I went through.

[Because of my long memories, the years I spent with Warrior were really meaningful. I was aware of the world outside the stage, and we went around many worlds together.....]

Following Ahbooboo's words, the memories of that time came to mind.

Certainly, the time I was with Ahbooboo could be called a decent memory in the Tutorial.

[Then are you sending me back?]

"No."

[Why!]

Why are you even asking?

"Not until I take out the abilities you used."

Did you think you showed me those abilities and thought that I would gently let you go?

I won't be satisfied until they are implemented and improved to a perfect level.

[Ahhh! Where is this!]

Where? You're here.

Leaving Ahbooboo to Seregia, I approached the portal to Earth.

[Ah, Warrior! You're not going to go like that, are you? No?! Oh, wait a minute! Wait a minute! Ah! Hey...!]

Leaving behind Ahbooboo's cries, I moved to Earth through the portal.

*

Earth was noisy.

To be exact, the area near the temple.

"What is going on?"

Even the interior of the temple was noisy.

"It's opening day today."

"Ah."

There was a space for believers in this temple.

There were also prayer rooms and exhibition halls or tourist attractions, event halls, and rest areas for those who come to play or visit lightheartedly.

"It's not perfect yet, because this and that happened. It opened a bit too early to change the atmosphere and draw attention from people."

"Yes, good job."

Since Hochi decided that way, I had no intention of making a fuss.

Rather, I should ask Hochi before doing anything.

“Dad, I did a good job too!”

Yong-yong, who was sitting on the sofa, raised his hand and shouted.

Yong-yong was in charge of the design and interior of the temple.

“Yong-yong did a good job too.”

After answering, Yong-yong tried to sit next to me, but I saw something strange.

Someone was lying on the sofa on Yong-yong’s lap.

It was the mantis.

It fell asleep on Yong-yong’s knees.

Compared to the small Yong-yong, the relatively large sized mantis was on his knee, so it looked somehow incongruous.

Anyway, that’s disgusting.

I haven’t even laid down on Yong-yong’s legs.

I lifted Yong-yong up and sat him in front of me.

When Yong-yong’s legs, which were supporting its head, disappeared, the mantis fell on the couch and smacked its head, but did not wake up.

“It sleeps often these days.”

Hochi said, pointing to the mantis.

“Often?”

“I’m putting it to sleep. The mantis is tired.”

Yong-yong said, waving his short legs in my arms.

Putting it to sleep.

There's no way that the mantis will be tired or sleepy.

The source was a crystal of power which accumulated power to the extreme and finally gained reason.

I looked at the mantis, which was still not waking up.

Soon I could see the reason.

It ate a lot too.

It was very full of faith.

And that faith was gathering and trying to form a new form.

It's a transitional period.

The stage of making the power of the gathered faith into one's own and to sprout divinity.

It seems that Yong-yong is putting it to sleep to stabilize the mantis that is going through that period.

I don't think I need to care about the mantis anymore.

Yong-yong was taking care of it better than expected.

It did not cause any problems even in the Hongcheon Church, and was quiet, only eating faith.

It was doing well when told to be the mascot and security guard there.

"Anything you want to say?"

Hochi asked.

The story between the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

This is also something that is not directly related to Earth.

It is a story that is difficult for ordinary humans to understand and interrupt, so I didn't call Kim Min-hyuk.

It seemed to be enough to tell him that this was happening later.

“...Another war.”

Hochi shook his head as if he was tired.

“Wow!”

Yong-yong was excited.

“...Yong-yong, war is not a good thing.”

“No?”

Hochi, who was shocked to see Yong-yong innocently asking him back, immediately stared at me.

Well, what did I do wrong?

I told him everything I heard from the God of Hope about the war.

Hochi, who was listening quietly, suddenly asked me with a surprised expression.

“The cause of the war is the place called Thanatos?”

“Hmm. It is said to be the estate of the God of Death where its territorial disputes lead to war.”

Of course, that's not the only reason for the war.

Now, it was strange that all of the Hundred Gods Temple was going out due to the problem of one god's area.

The timing was also strange.

No matter how hard I thought about it, it seemed to be a war related to the God of Order, who began to be reborn as a transcendent god.

Whether it is to give more power to the God of Order or to keep it in check, I will be sure to go and see it in person.

"If it's Thanatos, isn't it there?"

"Huh?"

Hochi said as if he knew a place called Thanatos.

Was there such a place on the Tutorial stage?

I don't think I've ever heard of a stage with such a name.

"No, it's not a tutorial, Lee Jun-seok."

"Lee Jun-seok?"

"Yes. In the past, you sent him to take care of an annoying quest instead of giving him an item. Wasn't that Thanatos?"

"...Huh?"

I hurriedly opened the quest window.

[God of Death-Purification of Thanatos (in progress)]

*In Thanatos, the realm of the God of Death, there are increasing numbers of regulars who refuse to comply with justice. Those who were once oppressed in the name of the specters are now being reborn as a new class, not marginalized, in their society.

The God of Death seeks to purify Thanatos and smoothen the flow of order before the whole society is taken over by the regulars.

*You sent Challenger Lee Jun-seok instead of going directly, and the God of Death is very anxious about your passive decision.

“...That’s right, Thanatos. The place where Lee Jun-seok was sent.”

I forgot.

At that time, I sent him without thinking.

As it turned out, it was the place where a massive war between the gods would take place.

Hey, is he still alive?

Chapter 371

Thanatos (1)

“Why did you forget that? You sent him.”

Hochi said, with a double candlewick in his eyes.

(T/N: ‘to have double candlewick in one’s eyes’ means to glare with anger. You know, when characters get super angry, their eyes light up with literal fire. Like so.)

I had nothing to say.

“Even if you forgot about other people, you should have remembered him.”

This was a very unusual experience.

I’ve never been scolded by Hochi.

I don’t know if it’s just anger or resentment.

“Hey, don’t think about anything else. I’m talking to you.”

“Yong-yong, Uncle is scolding Dad.”

I tried to ask for help from Yong-yong sitting on my lap, but Yong-yong looked at me and Hochi and just smiled.

Contrary to my wishes, Yong-yong did not take my side.

Yong-yong had a stricter side than expected in judging my wrongs.

“Hey! Focus on what I’m saying!”

Hochi screamed.

“No, how can I remember all that. I’ve had a lot of work to do these days.”

“You’re a god! How can a god forget about it?”

What do you think a god is capable of?

It’s unfair.

A person’s memory is very strange.

Obviously, I became a god and had a memory beyond the normal range.

I could remember each and every single dish served at my first birthday party.

If I tried to remember.

Conversely, if I don’t think about remembering it, it’s just buried in my memory.

“What will you do about Jun-seok?”

Hochi asked in an unpleasant voice.

He’s more angry than I thought.

When they went to Japan together in the past, it seems that they got closer to each other than I thought.

“I’ll go. Is it Thanatos or Tadatatos? We have to go and bring him to Earth before the war breaks out.”

“Yes, go right now while only the words have been spoken. Just in case.”

Hochi decided to start right away.

I was the opposite.

“Give me one day, no half a day. I’ll leave after half a day.”

“Why? Do you have anything to prepare?”

“Hmm. The item I decided to give him.”

I decided to make it for him next time, but I haven’t even touched it yet.

It had to be made in a hurry in half a day.

“...Yes, make it fast and go. It might be dangerous because it’s a war zone, you irresponsible bastard.”

* * *

Inside a dark abandoned building.

There was a man looking over a cracked window like a spider web and applying a potion to the wound on his shoulder.

It was Lee Jun-seok.

“Ah.....”

He was groaning a little because of the pain.

Lee Jun-seok, who applied the potion, wore a coat roughly.

There was no need to bandage or tighten the affected area.

Lee Jun-seok’s natural healing power was at the level of self-healing to where he could ignore wounds even if a hole was drilled into his internal organs.

Applying a potion to speed up healing, and taking a break for a while was enough.

“Sigh.”

He sighed.

In fact, he was more cold and hungry than pained from the injury he felt on his shoulder.

And the fact that there was no way to overcome this cramped situation made Lee Jun-seok even more distressed.

Sunlight began to appear through the window.

He couldn't see the sun when he tried to go to the city center full of skyscrapers, but he could see that morning was coming.

Like this, another day began.

According to Lee Jun-seok's standards, the day has ended again.

Lee Jun-seok, who is in the position of a fugitive, was able to move only after the sun fell.

That wasn't easy for him, but it was better than moving in broad daylight.

On the planetary system of Thanatos, which was more developed than Earth, he could not attempt to assassinate enemies in bright daylight with a wanted criminal status.

Even ordinary people across the country and on the streets recognized him.

Specifying the target of the assassination, and even wandering around to obtain information about the target had to be done at the risk of his life.

The assassination itself was also very difficult, but it took a really long period to plan one assassination.

At this rate, he wasn't sure how many months or years it would take to complete the mission.

It was questionable whether he would be able to successfully complete his mission in the first place.

He tried to sleep in his sleeping bag, sighing once more in his tight heart.

Bang!

At that time, an explosion occurred in front of the main entrance of the abandoned building.

Lee Jun-seok, who was lying in his sleeping bag, got up again and looked at the situation.

In his senses, no animals such as wild cats were detected, let alone people approaching the abandoned building.

Pazizik!

However, in front of the front door of the abandoned building, the trap he had installed was triggered, and it was pouring lightning on someone.

The person's figure, seen through the dazzling sparks, stood still in the midst of the lightning strike.

No matter how much he looked at it, the person wasn't affected by the surprise lightning.

Considering the power of the lightning that turned ordinary humans into human-sized chunks of charcoal at once, it was a truly unrealistic sight.

Lee Jun-seok was convinced that his enemies had found the location of his hideout and attacked him.

“Heeeeeeeeyy.”

Standing in the middle of the trap, the man caught in the blitz, even opened his mouth and tried to speak to him.

“Itttttssssssmmmmmmeeeeeee.”

It was a word that Lee Jun-seok could not understand.

Lee Jun-seok prepared for an attack before the enemy who appeared out of nowhere escaped from the trap.

“Ah, aaaaaa. Thiiiiissss. Leeeee, shi.”

Along with the man’s yelling, a loud bang rang and the trap collapsed.

Just before Lee Jun-seok had finished preparing to attack, he had to stop his movements.

It was because the man’s face, who appeared in the lightning spark, belonged to someone he knew.

“Shit. You got all these different traps.”

“...Hojae-hyung?”

When Lee Ho-jae appeared at an unexpected point in time, Lee Jun-seok approached him confused.

* * *

“Hyung, what are you doing here?”

Asked Lee Jun-seok.

How should I answer here?

“I’m worried about you. It seems like the work is taking longer than I expected, so I came here.”

“Hyung.....”

It’s a lie.

Now, I don’t feel guilty about lying now.

My conscience was too strong for that.

Lee Jun-seok looked at me with his moist eyes, as if he was moved.

He’s become more sensitive than before.

I understood.

Originally, rolling alone in a place like this without something to rely on, it is a great mental comfort when you meet someone who treats you well.

Especially since Lee Jun-seok before this was sitting comfortably on Earth, so he must have been under greater pressure than in the Tutorial.

Following Lee Jun-seok’s guidance, I entered the abandoned building.

It looked like an old abandoned factory.

It was bad, but I could see Lee Jun-seok had used it as a base for a long time. The traces of cleaning all over the place were visible.

“Don’t mind the explosion earlier. I have a barrier so that no sound can be heard outside.”

“Ah, that’s fortunate. I was worried about having to move my hideout.”

Lee Jun-seok laughed a little as if he was relieved.

I said I had a barrier, but he's still speaking his words softly.

It may be a temporary habit caused by hiding for too long.

I asked Lee Jun-seok about the progress of the quest.

As I remember, Lee Jun-seok showed confidence in the quest of the God of Death.

He even talked about it as if he had already gone through this place on the Tutorial's hard difficulty.

This was also a reason for sending Lee Jun-seok alone to another world without much thought.

However, contrary to expectations, Lee Jun-seok had not been able to clear the quest for a long time.

Even looking at this abandoned building and his slightly limping movement, he seemed to be struggling.

"You said you've been here once in the Tutorial."

"Yes. I did....."

"And you said you caught a ghost or something."

"Yeah....."

Lee Jun-seok replied without energy.

"I've caught them before. The situation has changed a lot between then and now."

"Then and now?"

“Yes, about 3,000 years.....”

Lee Jun-seok briefly explained the difference.

“I mean, those who used to carry swords and shields now shoot laser guns.”

“Yeah. Well, putting it simply it’s like that.”

According to Lee Jun-seok’s explanation, the technology of this place called Thanatos seems to be considerable.

The level of advancing into the satellite system of another planet and building a space colony was a level far beyond that of Earth.

“Besides, the social position of the ghosts has changed so much. They are no longer called ghosts.”

The quest explained that there were ghosts and irregulars in Thanatos against the will of the God of Death.

“In the past, they were treated as monsters and hunted by ordinary humans, but now they have become social leaders.”

That would be a bit of a problem.

As civilization advances, the power of the social leaders becomes proportionately stronger.

Of course, there are also means to check that power, but usually those with such means also belong to the social leadership.

“What exactly is that ghost?”

“They’re immortal.”

“Immortal?”

“Yes, it literally doesn’t die. They die when attacked, but they don’t naturally die because they don't have a lifespan."

What, that's cheating.

Is it like a vampire?

"No, it doesn't matter if they wander in the sun. They don't even drink blood. It's just like an ordinary person. The only difference is that their skin becomes translucent and requires magical surgery."

The risk is too small.

Being transparent is a really meaningless risk.

You just need to wear clothes underneath.

When the skin on the face becomes a little translucent, it is not a disadvantage compared to eternal life, although it may look disgusting.

The need for magical surgery was not a disadvantage, but rather an advantage.

"Surgery will be expensive, right?"

"Yes, so only people with a lot of money can do it."

Of course, everyone who can get surgery is getting it.

Those in power will be those in power for the rest of their life, and only the workers under them will die and be born again and again.

It's the worst social structure.

It was understandable that Lee Jun-seok was not using much power.

Those in power here will wield powers closer to gods than kings.

Immortality.

The God of Death deserves to be hated.

Humans who overcome death appear in the realm of the god that symbolizes death.

No matter how much I thought about it, it wasn't normal.

It must have been the skill of a god who wants to keep the God of Death in check or covets this realm.

“Is that so?”

“Of course. It makes no sense that eternal life is possible in the first place.”

It was impossible without the involvement of divine power.

Even those who have gone through the Tutorial get older as they age.

Their aging rate is only slightly lower than that of the general public.

But those who have the same body as ordinary people, having their life expectancy extended to near eternal life?

It was impossible without divine power.

It was said that this happened even before the technological prowess of this world developed, so I was even more certain.

When I heard that Thanatos became a place for a war between the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon, I thought it was just an excuse for the Hundred Gods Temple to start a war.

But now that I see it, it is really a place where a conflict could happen.

I don't know what kind of god it is, but it was too blatantly outspoken in its quarrel with the God of Death.

[As if prepared for war.]

The God of Hope, who had been quiet for a while, said abruptly.

What, all of a sudden.

[I have something to say.]

What.

Did any new information come out from the Hundred Gods Temple?

[Let me go.]

At those sudden words, I had to stumble for a moment.

What?

[Let me go.]

What if I let you go?

[I want to go back to my sanctuary and hide for a while.]

As far as I know, there is no sanctuary for the God of Hope.

Of course there was, but I destroyed everything.

[I just need to rebuild it.]

I ignored those words.

Whether reconstruction was possible or impossible, it was none of my business.

The God of Hope was held by me for the obvious use of providing information.

I'm also worried about what kind of accidents he would cause if I let him go free that would make the situation more complicated.

The God of Hope's hope was not in consideration.

The God of Hope, who was denied his request, remained silent.

This is a little weird.

Whether it's interrogation or torture, I thought I should talk to him in depth later.

* * *

"Is everything alright on Earth? Are you all doing well?"

Lee Jun-seok asked.

I had to think about it for a while.

There was something special.

While Lee Jun-seok was not present, I thought about how to explain that the Pantheon invaded Earth and it was chaotic, but somehow we blocked it well.

And I gave up.

"Uh, nothing much."

I decided to let him ask Kim Min-hyuk or Hochi for an explanation later.

My conscience began to itch.

I took out what I had prepared to ease my conscience.

"What is it?"

“An item. I said I’d make it for you before.”

In fact, the reason Lee Jun-seok was sent here was because of this item.

Because I had disposed of the items Lee Jun-seok used in the Tutorial, I issued him a new item.

And it was bothersome to get it right away, so I sent him here to get some time.

“This.....”

It was a gauntlet that I handed to Lee Jun-seok.

“Originally, I was going to make a bracelet, but these days, gauntlets seem to be the trend.”

“Wow, that’s perfect.”

Lee Jun-seok, who wore the gauntlet on his hand, said.

“What is the effect?”

“I prepared that too.”

I flicked my finger and opened a message window in front of Lee Jun-seok.

[Gauntlet]

*Physical Damage Immunity

*Magical Damage Resistance

*User Protection Effect

*User Lightning Immunity

*Lightning Damage Amplification

*Magical Power Recovery Increased

*Gauntlet made by Lee Ho-jae.

It has been made with great care for a long time, and has perfect performance without any flaws.

As expected, the item needs such an intuitive explanation.

“When you press on an item, the exact number is also displayed.”

“Hyung.....”

Lee Jun-seok looked at me with a face full of gratitude and joy as if he was moved to tears.

Chapter 372

Thanatos (2)

“Hyuuunngg.....”

Lee Jun-seok choked up.

Yong-yong will hug you without knowing. I tried to take it as usual, but I struck him with my hand.

Why is the grown-up guy doing this?

Even though Lee Jun-seok was brutally rejected, he was still moved.

The back of my nose was twitching.

It was a meaningful gift to Lee Jun-seok.

When you are struggling, there may be emotions that come from someone helping you and giving you good will.

Lee Jun-seok cleared the Tutorial and was unable to use his proper strength due to the absence of his items.

He feared that he would hurt not only the enemy, but also the people around him and himself because of his excessively strong attack power.

Many people may be impressed that he has finally recovered the power he polished for a long time in the Tutorial.

“The lightning resistance built into the gauntlet is almost at the level of immunity. In addition to the lightning resistance, there is magic to protect users, so it won’t be a problem even if you pour out your power to your heart’s content. Of course, when there are people around, you should naturally be careful using it.”

Lee Jun-seok looked at me with eyes that started getting moist, and said,

“Hyung, thank you very much.”

Lee Jun-seok expressed his gratitude, and frankly talked about his resentment of the past saying that he had been neglected for a long time and was afraid he was forgotten.

“There’s no way. I thought it was later than expected, but I always remembered you.”

“Hyung.....”

“I didn’t come late because I didn’t care about you, but I was late to make this. There was also some other work. Understand?”

“Yes, hyung.”

Ok, fine.

It’s heartwarming.

My mind was refreshed.

[The God of Death is frustrated.]

[The God of Death is urging you.]

“That’s easy.”

From a while ago, the God of Death continued to send messages.

“Can you see the messages too?”

“Uh, I can see them.”

Lee Jun-seok seemed to be looking at something similar.

It seemed as if a message came to mind from the Tutorial.

The quest window was also a quest window, but more was possible because this is the realm of the God of Death.

“Are there any other gods’ religions on this planet?”

“No. It’s almost a holy land, but it’s not a holy land. It’s such a place.”

It meant that all religions are unified as the religion of the God of Death.

In the midst of that, there were people who abandoned the doctrine of religion and wished for immortality.

As time passed, such apostles came to occupy the top of society.

Therefore, the God of Death sought to solve the problem by hiring mercenaries from outside.

This may be the background of this world.

Looking at it like this, it really reminds me of the time when I was clearing the Tutorial stages.

“So, what is the solution?”

The God of Death requested the purification of Thanatos here.

I had to know the exact meaning of the word purification.

“It’s extinction.”

Oh, that’s nice too.

The God of Death is not afraid.

If you kill all the social leaders, there will be a lot of problems.

Of course, it's not a problem for the God of Death.

"How is the progress?"

First, let's hear how far Lee Jun-seok has gone here.

Lee Jun-seok began to unravel the things that had been happening here over the past few months.

*

"Hitman?"

"Yes, that is correct."

It was an unexpected choice.

"Because there aren't many ways I can kill the nobles."

Noble meant the irregulars who chose the surgery to make them immortal.

It wasn't that wrong, since only the wealthy can undergo surgery.

Anyway, it's an assassination request.

I thought about it for a moment.

If it were me, I would have attempted terrorism by finding a place where nobles gather.

There was a clear problem with the assassination hit.

If there is no quest, you can't kill even if you want to kill.

However, if there is no quest and you kill someone, you won't receive quests.

Your credibility as a contractor will decrease.

Who would ask the crazy guy who kills people without a request?

Therefore, the fact that Lee Jun-seok chose assassination can only be seen as restriction by a narrow range of actions.

With or without a quest, it is very difficult to assassinate someone, and it takes a very long time.

So, there is no loss of time even if you move only when performing the quest.

“Yes, that is correct.”

Lee Jun-seok admitted coolly.

“Really?”

With Lee Jun-seok’s skills, the assassination itself would not have been difficult.

Information or preliminary work would be a bit of a problem.

“First of all, as the mission was prolonged, I needed money and a base to live in. I needed information, and above all, the assassination itself was a little.....”

“Why, are the kids here so strong?”

Do all of the targets have enough power to kill Lee Jun-seok alone?

It was surprising.

It was also quite interesting.

Lee Jun-seok is definitely strong.

He was even more so among beings who could not deal with divine power.

It is a planet where Lee Jun-suk is a rare opponent who can finally express his true colors.

“Oh, that... After I started my activities, all the nobles.....”

“Well, what.”

Lee Jun-seok blurred his works.

“Because of the non-conductive equipment.”

What equipment?

“Because the lightning doesn’t work anyway, it’s a bit difficult to kill... A little difficult for the mission.....”

I looked at Lee Jun-seok with a slight sense of absurdity.

Hey, look at the person you’re talking with.

Lee Jun-seok shouted, blushing his face, as if embarrassed.

“It’s because the technology is so excellent here!”

The excellent technology doesn’t matter.

Lightning attacks are easy to deal with because their attack methods are limited.

“I obviously told you to learn things other than lightning before, right?”

Obviously he would fail.

But Lee Jun-seok ignored my words.

It was a time when he was on the hard difficulty of the Tutorial, and he was feeling strange competitiveness toward me.

No, Pikachu also uses lightning tails.

It's like having the guts to boldly focus only on lightning skills.

“It's cool.”

“Is that important?”

Lee Jun-seok did not answer.

Instead, he nodded his head softly.

Yes, it's a bit important.

[The God of Death feels impatient with your conversation!]

[The God of Death urges you to complete the quest as quickly as possible!]

“Ah, scary. Tsk, what should I do.”

“What?”

It was because of the war.

A war between Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

It was a war that was scheduled to take place right here in Thanatos.

It turned out that the war had not yet begun.

I came in a hurry to evacuate Lee Jun-seok, but if I go back hurriedly, it won't seem right.

I am convinced that Thanatos is nothing but an excuse for war.

Whatever it is, it's a war caused by other needs.

However, it was clear that Thanatos was the excuse and justification of the war.

How about completing the mission before the war begins in earnest?

What would occur if the possibility of a war in Thanatos was resolved in advance?

Of course, another war might happen elsewhere.

Maybe there was no war.

[Let's complete the quest quickly.]

Oh, what, again.

The God of Hope suddenly expressed his opinion.

Recently, his sudden outbursts kept getting worse.

It wasn't because he suddenly told his own intentions.

The God of Hope, who was constantly trying to show me his presence, constantly snarling and babbling, was weirdly silent, so I was more concerned about him saying a word in the meantime.

[Maybe we can stop the war. It may be delayed, or we may be able to reduce its scale. It is better to prevent it.]

This is surprising.

I thought the God of Hope had encouraged war, but he didn't seem to mind.

I was thinking that he had become quiet recently because he was planning something with his incarnation in the Hundred Gods Temple.

Likewise, he suddenly told me to let him go.

The actions of the God of Hope became increasingly suspicious.

‘Doesn’t hope bloom in despair?’

[Yes. Only when despair exists can hope sprout on it.]

The God of Hope sank into silence again in the end.

I tried to summon the sunken God of Hope, but he did not respond.

*

“Jun, who is he?”

An Irregular, who endured to become an apostle here in Thanatos, which follows the doctrine of death, and was immortalized through an unidentified operation.

So the Noble asked Lee Jun-seok.

Their appearance was very impressive.

He was wearing a loose robe.

He looked like an important character coming out of Star Wars, but in fact he looked like a leader character anywhere where the Extras are.

This was an outfit with a food worker hat on his head.

As I heard from Lee Jun-seok, their appearance was not very different from humans except that the skin on their face was really translucent.

“This is my colleague.”

“Hmm, is he someone you can trust?”

The two started a conversation.

Lee Jun-seok was moving while receiving the Noble's assassination request.

And the client was also a Noble.

Well, this would be natural if all the upper classes of society became nobles.

As if the relationship between Lee Jun-seok and that Noble had become quite good, he was having a fairly comfortable conversation.

It seemed that he had built up trust.

Tutorial challengers love this aspect.

Being an all-rounder.

Since they are tested not only in their combat abilities but also in the trivial things, they can also create allies and socialize this way.

Of course, there are cases like me who progressed while beating them all without such a thing.

I carefully reviewed the appearance of Noble.

Immortality is certainly a tremendous advantage.

Instilling divine power and making them an apostle can make them immortal, though some may not want it.

If we could immortalize the humans we know through some surgery without any risk.

Obviously it wasn't bad.

So I was thinking of getting to know the technique.

“Hey, why didn’t you tell me? The story is a little different.”

“...Yes?”

Lee Jun-seok, who was talking with the Noble, asked, confused.

I approached slowly and took off the Noble’s food-worker hat.

There was a soft head on his translucent skin.

“You never said that one of the risks of being immortal was being bald.”

“Ah ah! What are you doing!?”

The Noble rushed to take back the food-worker hat that had suddenly been stripped off.

I ignored it and slapped him on the back of his head.

It was cold.

Rather than human skin, I felt like I touched a window.

“Ahhh!”

“Shut up.”

It’s not just baldness.

It was possible to recognize at a glance that all the pores of the scalp were wiped out by the magical reaction.

In short, he became bald because of the surgery of immortality.

“It’s still immortality, but it’s a bit too much to say that losing a little hair is a risk.”

Lee Jun-seok said naturally.

This guy is screaming as if it was a big deal.

“You, what would you choose if there was something that would increase your lifespan but would make you bald?”

It’s not even just hair loss.

It was a bizarre twist that looked like a hybrid of some kind of jellyfish and octopus because of the perfect hair loss that peeled off from end to end, and the skin of the head that became translucent.

“Well.....”

Lee Jun-seok couldn’t answer easily.

Look.

If this becomes your job, it’s never a light job.

I remembered Park Jung-ah, who became bald in my head for a moment, and then quickly erased it.

Obviously, quite a few people would probably refuse the surgery to make them immortal because they do not want to be bald.

I was sure.

“If you give up your immortality in order to not become bald, what should I call it? Death with dignity?”

“This, bastaardd! This bad bastard!”

The Noble screamed with tears in his eyes.

Chapter 373

Thanatos (3)

“Turn to the side a little bit.”

The Noble obeyed me and turned his head slowly.

He listened better than I thought.

“How is it?”

The Noble asked me, as I was observing the back of his head.

How did they do it?

“I don’t think I can.”

“Ah... Is that so.”

The technique of immortality was amazing even to me.

The one drawback is that their heads are translucent and smooth like glass.

How to solve the shortcomings... I looked around the Noble’s head and could not come up with a specific method.

“I wanted to see how immortality was possible, so it seems like the body is made of magical materials. Of course you won’t die if you do this. Although, your physiology will also disappear. Well, it’s natural that there is no hair. Have you seen fur on a magic stone?”

“Ah.....”

It was definitely a strange operation.

It is a surgery that replaces only the body with magical substances without affecting the ego and soul.

If this operation was possible even in the days when there was no advanced science and technology, there must have been some god intervening.

This is unbelievable.

“I think what I said earlier would be possible instead.”

“You mean going back to the original body?”

“Yes.”

“...Thank you so much, God.”

The Noble named Dosifer, who was introduced by Lee Jun-seok, surprisingly, wanted to return to his original body.

I thought it was because of the baldness, but he said he had no intention of becoming a noble.

“Isn’t it a waste of immortality?”

“It’s not a waste at all. I am a priest who serves the God of Death.”

It wasn’t that Lee Jun-seok introduced me to him for nothing.

Both Lee Jun-seok and Dosifer were cooperating with the same goal of killing Thanatos’ nobles.

“I was forced to choose immortality to destroy the apostles.”

I guess so.

If all of the social leaders became immortal nobles, he would also have to be a noble in order to keep them in check.

Or maybe we have to gather the will of the lower class and start an uprising.

No matter how large a force the crowd has, it is difficult for mortals to destroy immortals with wealth and power.

It wasn't a question of ability, it was a question of the available time allowed in life.

"If everything is sorted out, and if I have a chance, I want to return to being a normal human again."

Dosifer said firmly.

"I think immortality will be a waste as well. If you do research, you might be able to transplant your hair one day."

Immortality isn't just something you can obtain.

Really.

When you become a deity, you naturally acquire it, but it is not something you would like to gain.

On the other hand, immortality is a blessing that you just need to rejoice in comfort.

"Thank you, but I have to decline. I don't want to miss the opportunity to approach the great rest."

"Why, because of the God of Death?"

I asked if he was considering immortality as a curse rather than a blessing because he worshipped the God that symbolizes death.

"It's a curse. Death is the only absolute truth that exists in the world."

It's the absolute truth.

I think I heard that somewhere.

Dosifer spoke with a passionate voice like a theater actor.

He started talking with excitement that he felt joy in revealing his beliefs that he had to hide to live.

“Why is life precious? It is because there is an end. We can live more passionately because we have limited time.”

Lee Jun-seok, standing outside of Dosifer's view, shook his head and sat down on a chair a little further away.

It seems that Lee Jun-seok has already heard Dosifer's lecture on theology.

“There will be a cycle in everything. The beginning will promise the end. Death in itself proves this world.”

“One thing.”

There is a loophole in the theory of the theology of death.

“There is one exception.”

“What is that?”

There are beings in this world who have overcome death.

Unlike mortals, there are beings free from the truths of the world.

Even though they are trapped in their own truth, they remain the exception in the face of death.

“Gods.”

Dosifer crumpled his face.

Look at him. Look at you not managing your facial expressions.

I told you that I am definitely a god.

“That’s right, God is the exception.”

Rather than managing his facial expressions, Dosifer distorted his face even more.

As if he was angry with the fact.

“There are too many gods in this world. There are too many.”

Well, I can’t stand it.

I hit Dosifer’s head.

“Ahhh!”

“You big bald head, there’s nothing you can’t do before God! You’re going to die.”

*

“Isn’t it beautiful?”

Asked Dosifer.

I nodded and affirmed.

Dosifer’s residence had a glass ceiling.

Like his head.

Unlike Earth’s night sky, stars and satellites were clearly visible.

[The God of Death is very impatient!]

[The God of Death urges you to take action!]

You're going to die soon from stress.

I must move before the God of Death falls out in rage.

“So what was you two's original plan?”

Lee Jun-seok and Dosifer looked at each other for a while and then explained their idea to me.

“It was to assassinate the Noble of the Nobles, one of the most powerful people in Thanatos.”

That's unexpected.

I was expecting a plan to destroy the immortal surgical facility.

“The supreme power gap will naturally lead to confusion. Someone will have to take that place.”

“And it was my original plan to be more active in the gap of that confusion.”

It was a plan for Lee Jun-seok to work hard as a hitman amid the power struggle to assassinate the highest power and take the place of that power.

“In the end, the power structure will be stabilized.”

“That's why we have to choose the targets for the assassination well. First of all, it is an advantage that we can be more active.”

It wasn't my favorite plan.

“Where is the highest authority?”

“It’s here.”

Dosifer explained, pointing to the building on a translucent tablet.

“This building is the target’s residence. Armed guards are guarding it tightly. It is impossible to enter through the entrance. We tried to break into other buildings, but the other buildings in the vicinity are also owned by the target, so the security system is shared and we failed.”

“What about bombing?”

“...Yes?”

“Bombing.”

Lee Jun-seok would have been able to blow this building up.

Of course, human damage may have occurred on an enormous scale, but that doesn’t make the attempt impossible.

Or you can try to snipe from a distance by determining the location of the target a little more accurately.

“Oh, that’s.”

Lee Jun-seok scratched his head and explained.

“The building has a shield, hyung.”

“Is your attack not working?”

“Yeah. The building will probably be fine even if a nuclear bomb falls.”

Certainly, I realized that it is a planet that is technologically far ahead of Earth.

It’s not an underground bunker, but a high-rise building like that has a shield to withstand a nuclear attack?

It was a planet with a lot to learn.

It would be nice to bring Yong-yong later and find out about it.

I was in the midst of getting information by constantly talking with Dosifer and Lee Jun-seok.

“What.”

“...Yes?”

There was a hole in the dimension.

Not even one or two, but dozens.

This is something I experienced once a while ago.

When the Pantheon attempted to invade Earth.

[It started.]

Said the God of Hope.

“It’s far earlier than expected.”

Too early.

It wasn’t long since I first heard that the war discussions had begun.

The gods already appeared in the place that had been marked as the battlefield.

[The gods. Is there anything they need to prepare for the war?]

Why, well, there could be.

Like having to prepare a large number of troops like when they were poured onto Earth.

[The situation is different from then. It is an all-out war between numerous gods. No matter how much a mortal intervenes, it makes no difference.]

The God of Hope explained in a light-hearted voice.

[The Pantheon made a decision.]

“What?”

[All out war.]

[Yes, as you said, it was an early decision. I am also embarrassed to hear the news from a spy. But it doesn't seem like I'm the only one who planted spies.]

[The core personnel of the Pantheon did not panic at all and united their opinions, as if they had heard a prophecy. And all the gods of the Pantheon announced their intention to participate. It's weird enough that we should be suspicious.]

Each of the gods began to pass through the rifts that were forcibly opening on this planet.

They were the gods of the Pantheon.

And I could see one thing.

That the gods who took the lead in the invasion of Earth were really at a sloppy level.

There were also a number of gods of a class that could be compared to the God of Flexibility that I encountered before.

[Lastly, I'll ask you one more time.]

The God of Hope whispered.

[Let me go.]

“Why.”

[I have to go and hide. It will be done in one way or another.]

The voice of the God of Hope seemed desperate.

I wondered if there was another god in the world that was so subdued and timid.

“I can’t. If you need a place to hide, just hide in me.”

Above all, it felt a little unpleasant that the God of Hope, who seeks safety, senses danger and tries to run away.

“Hey, how did this happen?”

Dosifer asked urgently.

The whole planet was trembling as if an earthquake had occurred.

“It seems that the God of Death could not stand it anymore and called for friends. What would you do?”

As soon as Lee Jun-seok made eye contact with me, he showed me a determined look.

Our warrior, who had escaped all sorts of battlefields, exclaimed confidently.

“To the subspace!”

“Yes.”

Quick judgment.

Great judgment!

Lee Jun-seok was placed in a sub-space.

I was worried that he was too light-minded when viewed in competition, but he grew up very well.

“What are you going to do?”

This time I asked Dosifer.

“I will remain.”

“It will be dangerous.”

“That’s all right.”

Dosifer seemed unwilling to bend his will.

“I will stay here. Even if it is dangerous. I am not afraid of death. Rather, I haven’t been able to fulfill my mission so far.....”

“Yes, do it.”

Dosifer nodded his head.

“If you ever change your mind, let me know.”

Maybe it will change soon.

The gods of the Pantheon were appearing in Thanatos from beyond the dimension.

“Where are the gods appearing?”

Asked Dosifer.

Where is this.....

“About the other side of the planet. I don’t know the exact name of the place.”

The gods of the Pantheon are gathering around there.

What should I do?

In this war I am a third party.

The God of Hope expected both the Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon to come in contact with me, but he was wrong.

Neither of them contacted me.

If so, how should I intervene in this war?

While I was thinking, I realized that a new god appeared in Thanatos.

It was a god I knew.

I could notice that it had a divine power I had felt before.

[It is the God of Sacrifice.]

The God of Hope whispered.

Unlike the Pantheon, where many gods were entering, the only god belonging to the Hundred Gods Temple was the God of Sacrifice.

Finally, both sides faced.

I watched the situation, wondering what kind of conversations would come and go.

The situation went in a completely different direction than I expected.

The God of Sacrifice looked exactly as I had seen on the 61st floor.

The God of Sacrifice, who appeared, tried to attack the gods of the Pantheon.

Kwa-Aang!

On the other side of the planet, there was a clearly audible sound.

Whether the gods of the Pantheon were expecting a raid, they gathered together to prevent the attack.

The attack of the God of Sacrifice could not penetrate the defense, but it did not fade and bounced in all directions.

As if a bombing had occurred, continuous sound rang from everywhere.

No, only I can hear it, so I'm sitting there listening to this.

Humans will not even hear this sound properly.

Humans will not even be able to hear properly.

Because their eardrum must have ruptured already

“Are you okay?”

Dosifer couldn't answer.

He seemed to have already lost his mind.

His body was convulsing with fits.

I said I would protect him.

Ordinary humans were too weak.

No, on the contrary, the gods may have too much power.

The building was shaking as if it would collapse at any moment.

Maybe in a little while it will actually collapse.

The screen of the tablet that Dosifer dropped from his hand caught my eye.

On the screen that was shining on the bustling city with the target building, only a black wasteland with nothing left and the flames burning above it were visible.

I could tell without having to look at the tablet.

Countless lives that were felt on this planet, which had a higher population than Earth, disappeared in no time.

Now, I could feel little life on this planet.

Just one attack.

And defense to prevent the attack.

That alone killed more than 90 percent of the planet's population.

The rest were also seriously injured, enough to die soon.

It was a vain and futile power.

“Is this really what you were hoping for?”

With this destructive force, you wanted to push away the planet where your followers live and deal with the apostles?

Even providing an excuse for the war between Hundred Gods Temple and the Pantheon.

[The God of Death affirms your question.]

Chapter 374

Thanatos (4)

Thanatos was quite different from my expectations.

When I first learned about Thanatos after reading the quest window, I thought of a swampy area full of poison.

You could fall in a swamp while walking around the town, die of poison while drinking water, and die from hail that flew through the roof while sleeping.

Well, it was reminiscent of such a neighborhood.

A world where death is closer than anywhere else.

However, Thanatos was a very normal neighborhood.

It is questionable whether the world ruled by the nobles who have undergone surgery to have the head of a jellyfish octopus could be called normal.

Compared to my expectations, it was.

To put one more characteristic, there was very advanced technology.

From the standpoint of eagerly exploring different worlds, it is rare for a world to have more or equal technological prowess compared to Earth.

The same was true of civilizations developed through magic, not science.

Probably because of the circumstances of the gods.

As civilization progresses, people become less dependent on God.

More problems are solved through technology, and values also changed pessimistically.

For the gods, the civilization of their believers are moderately barbaric, and at the same time, they are most appropriate to maintain a sufficient population.

But Thanatos was not.

Dosifer's passionate speech helped me understand the concept of death here in Thanatos.

The promised end.

Because of the finality of death, it was a world that believed that it is right to be more immersed in the present and live passionately.

Therefore, it would have been possible to possess such technology.

The tablet that Dosifier dropped was still lighting up in the city that had become ashes.

It was a worthless death.

They believe that death is the last salvation, and in the light of that death they were living a brighter life.

It wasn't assumed that they could feel any value in that vain death.

So I asked.

To the God of Death.

I wondered if that sight was really meant to be?

[The God of Death affirms your question.]

If so, that would be what you wanted me to do.

The goal was not to find and eliminate the nobles, but to annihilate the apostles even by sweeping the planet's surface right away.

Maybe ordinary people who were influenced by the nobles were also targeted for annihilation.

"This is too futile."

Dosifer, who called death the absolute good, and other believers.

[That is death.]

It was the voice of the God of Death.

It was a familiar energy.

It was because I had long used the powers I received from the God of Death.

"Oh, now we're talking directly. You should have done so earlier."

As in the days of the Tutorial, it was annoying to check intentions by only looking at the message window.

[Because I am ready to step up.]

It may be because of the war.

The war has just begun.

There was still a series of binge watching.

The war between the Pantheon and the Hundred Gods Temple began with the first strike of the God of Sacrifice.

[I hoped that using your skills, you would quickly solve the problem.

At least so that this war would start elsewhere.]

As expected, as soon as I came, I guess he wished that I would shoot a single Zit-Pop.

[But it doesn't always work out the way you want. Death is embarrassing and futile for the maintenance of life, but it must exist as a result.]

For these gods, this is the problem.

They'll start with a lecture on their concept as soon as they appear.

I'm not curious.

"Like when you tried hard, spreading some of your power, but I wasn't interested in your apostleship, so I roughly refused it? Oh, is that analogy a little weird?"

[.....]

The God of Death was a god who gave exceptionally many powers.

Of course, there was a limit to the powers that he could formally present, but the God of Death gave me powers even while concealing himself.

However, compared to the powers presented by the God of Adventure or the God of Slowness, they were not of great use.

[The problem will be solved anyway, so I will make the mission that was given to you a success.]

I had doubts.

It's so easy to complete the quest.

Not only the God of Death, but also other gods.

Kirikiri explained that this was the judgment of the gods who were reluctant to engage with me, but I was not easily convinced.

Rather, I felt that I had to roughly complete it whenever there was an excuse.

It's like the Hundred Gods Temple think I have to complete my quests as quickly as possible.

There would be no reason for me to do that at all.

[Go back now.]

Said the God of Death.

That said, he made a sudden big impression.

“Bullshit. Why am I going back.”

[Here, you are no longer.....]

I blocked the voice of the God of Death.

Why are you telling me to do this and that?

“Hey hey hey.”

“Ugh.....”

I kicked Dosifer down on the floor with my feet.

Dosifer was still groaning and had yet to become conscious.

I made him drink a potion, but there was no difference.

It seemed unlikely to work for some time.

I can't deal with this.

I roughly threw Dosifer in the subspace.

Lee Jun-seok will take care of it.

Dosifer himself may prefer to die as he is, but I still need him.

Bang bang!

Rather than sounds of war, it seemed like the sound of the final collapse of the world was constantly ringing.

The gods of the Pantheon and the God of Sacrifice were fighting high in the sky, but the aftermath fell to the ground.

A barrier was laid under the battle area to protect the planet's ground.

It wasn't very strong because it was roughly covered in a hurry.

If numerous gods gathered in Thanatos attempting to attack, Thanatos would be destroyed in no time.

It didn't matter.

The barrier was an expression of opinion.

Don't touch anything below this.

Any god who felt my strength in the barrier would have understood it.

As the barriers were laid, I could feel the eyes of various gods focusing on where I was.

Whoa.

It was burdensome for me too.

Too many gods were gathered to exist in one space.

Anyway, even in the midst of the battle, the gods recognized my existence, who had a barrier.

Unless you're a moron wanting to add an enemy for no reason in the midst of war, you won't be rushing to destroy the barriers.

"Seregia."

[If there's a flaw in the barrier, are you going to use it as an excuse? Can I just rush towards the barrier?]

Seregia, who was watching over, asked.

Well, is there such a self-injury blackmail operation?

"No, it's just a straightforward plan."

[As far as I know, there was an agreement made between the Hundred Gods Temple and Warrior.]

The agreement has already been broken.

"My stiff friend is hurt."

Dosifer is my friend.

Although we have not known each other for long, we have a deep connection and share friendship and trust.

I was convinced that Dosifer would also consider me a close friend.

I was outraged by the injuries suffered by such a friend, and I will inflict retribution on the gods for causing this damn explosion.

[That is perfect logic.]

"Are you sure?"

The battle of the gods continued.

They were fighting very hard without even paying attention as if both sides had agreed not to care about the barriers.

Maybe there is no time for that.

It was truly spectacular to see thousands of gods of the Pantheon filling the sky.

Among them, there was also the figure of the God of Flexibility who had been seen before.

The God of Hope explained that the God of Flexibility was one of the best in the battle and he explained that he would not be pushed even compared to other gods of the Hundred Gods Temple

That's what it looked like to me.

Even in the Pantheon, there were a few gods that could be mixed with the God of Flexibility.

It was a force of an overwhelming scale.

It wasn't that the God of Hope only praised the world's real heavyweights.

The battle was going in a one-sided fashion.

It would be normal for the large numbered side of the Pantheon to dominate, but surprisingly, the sole God of Sacrifice was overwhelming all of the Pantheon gods.

The God of Sacrifice was pouring out an enormous amount of power as if there was really no limit to its power.

The Hundred Gods Temple was focused on preventing attacks without damage as much as possible against the God of Sacrifice.

Rather than reducing damage and attempting counterattacks, they seemed to aim to drain the God of Sacrifice's power.

It seemed to me that it wouldn't last long.

The output that the God of Sacrifice is showing is definitely over the line.

It wouldn't be strange even if it disappeared right now as a result of the immense power it is using.

Rather, it is strange that the attack is continuing.

However, the God of Sacrifice just calmly continued the attack.

"Good timing."

In any case, both sides are in balance and are in tight confrontation.

Either way, just before the counterweight collapses.

It will be just the right time to turn the table over.

Hundreds of red dots were created at the same time on the gods fighting excitedly.

This reminds me of the old days.

In the past, when the Spirit King and the Rulers were struck at the back of their head in the same way.

"Zit, Pop."

Hundreds of red dots exploded at the same time.

The Pantheon gods, who were distracted in battle, could not respond to the sudden explosion.

Light and heat waves swept the gods in a flash.

Zit Pop is certainly a powerful skill, but it wasn't a skill that could defeat a godhood by itself.

Unfortunately.

Although it can cause damage to some extent, the main use of the method was to limit the other's response by spatial expansion of divine power and to disturb it through light and heat.

In the meantime, in the vortex of flames containing my divine power, giants with perfect immunity charge and end the gods in close combat.

In other words, the god killing power was slightly lowered, but the role of causing confusion could be carried out perfectly.

"Seregia, how's everything going?"

[Good, of course.]

Oh, it wouldn't have been easy.

[I placed a condition that I would allow him to walk in a human state.]

It was an overly cruel condition.

A little harsh.

[He hates being sealed still. I threatened to imprison him for about a thousand years using time warping.]

Of course he hates being sealed.

He was originally a sword that had been sealed for hundreds of years in the basement of the imperial palace.

Maybe that squirm-inducing chatter is a side effect of prolonged sealing.

[Enter.]

A space opened with Seregia's words.

Today alone, thousands of gods were in Thanatos, twisting the space.

The twisting of space here was no longer strange.

However, what appeared in the newly opened space was not a deity, but two swords.

It was Seregia and Ahbooboo.

[The main character Aubutz has appeared!]

As soon as Ahbooboo crossed the gap in the space, he cried out.

And the virtual world unfolded.

*

"Looking back, it's a scam, this."

He said, scratching the dirt floor of the wasteland with his feet.

Just before, he was in Thanatos, but for a moment he was summoned into a virtual world created by the God of the Sky.

It wasn't just me.

The gods of the Pantheon and the God of Sacrifice were also summoned.

[I am so great, warrior.]

Through the voice of Ahbooboo, who was struggling, a shout of embarrassment and horror resounded here and there.

This virtual world created by the God of the Sky using Ahbooboo as a medium with my research was amazing.

It was to return the summoned target to the state they were in before acquiring their divinity.

-Kwaaaaa!

-Kaahak!

“Look at the things that you haven’t learned, it’s noisy.”

The gods of the Pantheon were going berserk in madness.

Those who had been devouring and devouring, became deified, and became gods.

When they lost their divinity, they returned to their original form, the monsters of their roots, possessed by the desires of the past.

It has been a long time since I last saw them.

Chapter 375

Thanatos (5)

“Kyaaaak!!”

It’s a mess.

I knew that many of the gods of the Pantheon were originally Rulers.

In fact, it turns out that almost all of them were made from Rulers except for a few. Non-Rulers were not the majority.

The Rulers who had returned to the days before becoming gods when they were called monsters of the source, were going berserk in madness.

Since they had just returned to the verge of reaching godhood, they were not completely devoid of reason.

But they couldn’t handle the sudden confusion.

Falling from divinity to mortality, returning to the days when reason remained, but still possessed by desire, they could not think normally.

Frightened and excited, they attacked whatever was nearby.

There were also those that showed off their survival instincts and ran away.

There was a phenomenon of chasing and being chased in all directions according to the complex hierarchy of the forces.

“Ohoho.”

Ahbooboo was smiling unpleasantly next to me.

“It’s such a great ability, isn’t it Warrior?”

He seems to want to show off his abilities.

I was trapped on the 61st floor because of that ability, and I didn’t think I was going to be trapped in the future.

I didn’t dare to point that out, and decided to just make Ahbooboo feel better.

“Yes, that’s great.”

It was really great.

It was an idea that we came up with on the 61st floor, but it was a discarded experiment because it was not realistic.

The God of the Sky who made it into a reality is really amazing.

Seregia sat quietly on the ground.

There was a somber look on her face.

“I feel heavy.”

I guess so.

Seregia lost her godhood, so if she considered her body light, then that would be even stranger.

For a moment, I watched the Rulers roll around.

I don’t know how long the confusion will last.

They certainly have reason.

Enough to rise to the level of a deity.

It will calm down soon.

And then, their anger and madness will focus on me.

But before that, there was something to be aware of.

“It’s been a long time.”

When I looked back, I saw a giant fox lying around a little away.

It was the God of Sacrifice.

This was the first time I saw her since the 61st floor.

The God of Sacrifice was not like the one who was dealing with the gods of the Pantheon, nor was she like when she borrowed the body of an apostle on the 61st floor.

She looked like a giant fox flapping hundreds of tails.

Which floor was it?

It was on the 19th floor.

At the stage on the 19th floor, where Myong-myong and the fox beast appeared, I encountered the God of Sacrifice, who had not yet reached godhood.

She looked the same as back then.

The appearance of a time when she was called the godmother of the fox beasts.

The only difference was that there were hundreds of giant tails fluttering behind her giant body.

“There are so many things I want to ask you about.”

Really? That’s very strange.

For me too.

From this bizarre war to the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple, the God of Adventure and the God of Order.

I even wondered what kind of ending Myong-myong had in his original time.

“But today is not that day either.”

The God of Sacrifice said something that seemed like she was backing out.

This is where our opinions diverge.

I had no intention of putting off my curiosity.

There was no need to worry.

I knew the art that allowed me to get the information I wanted.

“If you don’t like ordinary conversation, let’s move on to a more aggressive way.”

On the 19th and 61st floors, I wanted to fight the God of Sacrifice.

Even though I’m inferior in abilities, I wanted to hit and burn her.

I wanted to challenge her even if I was reckless.

The difference from that time was that I had the confidence to survive and win.

“I don’t want to.”

I'm sorry, but that's not up to the God of Sacrifice to decide.

It's up to me to decide.

I, too, was no different from the Rulers who fell into ungodliness and were in a riot of madness.

When I went back to my imperfect days when I couldn't complete myself, my emotions were fluctuating.

Tension and excitement.

The mighty power I feel from the God of Sacrifice stimulated me rather than discouraged me.

"I understand what you're saying, but I'm a pacifist. I'm sorry I can't accept."

You're a pacifist.

You say all sorts of things.

Like a fox.

It wasn't a word to brag about, considering the fact that not that long ago she participated in the war against the gods of the Pantheon alone and launched an attack, destroying the surface of a planet in the aftermath.

"Many sacrifices are expected in the future. We'll probably see each other again. By all means, I would like to be able to talk rationally then."

I sat there, forgetting about the talks.

I ignored those words and ran toward the God of Sacrifice.

But before I even approached, the God of Sacrifice faded and disappeared completely.

The only thing left in the place of the God of Sacrifice was a huge fox tail.

“...Are you a lizard*?”

The God of Sacrifice ran away again this time.

*

The space was shaking.

The God of Sacrifice disappeared silently, like paper wet with water.

But the aftermath certainly remained.

What method was used by the God of Sacrifice to escape this space and go outside.

She must have regained her godhood.

That fact was shaking the premise of this virtual world.

“How long can you stand it, Warrior?”

Ahbooboo said.

In the words of Ahbooboo, an actual user, this space will begin to collapse very soon.

This meant that the beings inside would go out and regain their godhood, and the number of Ahbooboos prepared at best would be in vain.

“Before that, I should reduce them as much as possible.”

No matter how much I’ve been preparing to deal with the godhoods, and although I say I have the abilities to match them, it is much easier to deal with monsters without godhood than to deal with ones with godhood.

I just entered the war, and the God of Sacrifice, who was one of the pillars, has disappeared.

There is a high possibility that the battle between the gods and mine will proceed, so I have to reduce their power over there as much as possible.

Even though I, like them, am ungodly and outnumbered, I was confident.

In the absence of the variable of godhood, I had the confidence to triumph against any being in the world.

“Ahhhhhh!”

One of the Rulers cried out loud.

Then, the movement of the Rulers who were in a riot around them became noticeably dull.

Do they communicate with such a scream?

You don't need a secret language.

The number of Rulers slowly regaining reason is increasing.

They attacked each other in confusion and are not immediately able to reconcile, but soon they will cease to fight.

I had to attack right now.

“Seregia.”

I called out to her and reached out my hand.

Seregia, sitting blankly on her floor, put her hand on my outstretched hand.

I was dumbfounded by her reaction, and I looked at her for a moment.

“I’m sorry, can you return as a sword?”

Seregia looked at me with a sulk for a while, then turned into a sword without a reply.

Ahbooboo, who was watching a little away, vomited blood.

“Ugh, Warrior, did you use poison?”

I didn’t use it.

This was not me, but the poison that Seregia was emitting.

It wasn’t just poison, it was Lee Ho-jae’s special poison.

But, Ahbooboo, this guy doesn’t have poison tolerance.

Come to think of it.

Ahbooboo is not a deity.

Although it could be said he is degraded in this space, it is not before becoming a god, but before reaching his current state.

Now he is just an ordinary superhuman.

It was sloppy.

This guy, why did I believe in him?

“Hold on anyway.”

“It looks like it’s going to be hard!”

“Then, run away.”

Ahbooboo immediately turned to the opposite and started running away.

It was a wise judgment.

Whoooo

A heavy roar rang from Seregia's blade held in one hand.

It was heavy.

Come to think of it, it was the first time I tried using this in practice.

To my surprise,

Before becoming a god, on the 61st floor, we had so many attempts.

Most of them were Seregia's remodeling experiments.

When it was difficult to find a way to damage the godhood, I tried to create a sword that could even injure the godhood with extreme destructive power.

It was the Seregia at this point that was completed as a result.

In the end, I couldn't do proper damage to godhood.

Because of this, most of the abilities were lost when Seregia ascended to godhood.

But there, there was no weapon like this against those imperfect monsters without godhood.

Poison, disease, curse, fear, confusion, hallucinations, flames, lightning, freezing, radiation.

It was the worst weapon using everything harmful to life.

I endured the heaviness I felt in my hand and ran forward.

Whether they noticed my approach or not, the closest Rulers focused their attention on me.

You're late.

In order for them to increase their odds, they had to unite and ambush when I was talking to the God of Sacrifice.

Kwooooong-

A huge shield was created in front of them.

I threw Seregia at the shield.

A huge explosion occurred, and I was swept back by the aftermath.

But I got up again and ran forward.

I went through the heat wave.

There was a Ruler who was alive even though he was hit by the burst of radiation.

I grabbed Seregia who had flown into my hand again, and swung her towards the Ruler.

Once again there was a huge explosion.

With the explosion, all the harmful effects built into Seregia spread far and wide.

[Warrior, I think I will die first before the space collapses!]

Ahbooboo's whining was heard via telepathy.

Surely Ahbooboo won't last long.

Even me, who had enough tolerance, was wielding her while taking considerable damage.

[But hold on for a bit.]

Until then, I'll take care of everything.

*

The space is collapsing.

I could feel it even in the storm of the heat wave caused by the nuclear chain reaction.

[Are you alive?]

[Barely!]

I also thought that the space suddenly collapsed due to the death of Ahbooboo.

[Because I'm dying, it seems like the space is collapsing!]

It was right that I turned over.

Damn it.

I just need to kill some more.

Keughh!

I thought, sticking Seregia into the neck of the Ruler, who was making a thin scream.

Immediately after the first clash, the Rulers began to spread openly and flee.

If you were a god, you might not be able to easily choose the option of escape.

They were now in the form of those days, the monsters of the source who valued only desire and survival.

There was no problem with chasing and killing them, but it took too much time to deal with them one by one, as they were struggling to run away and enduring it as long as possible.

Eventually, before the space collapsed, I realized that I could not kill all the gods of the Pantheon.

“That’s too bad.”

I escaped from the lightning storm and moved back to the sky of Thanatos.

This planet became a devastated field, but it was in quite a good condition compared to the place where I had just been.

[What. Are you feeling bad that you didn’t kill us all?]

Someone asked me as if they had heard my self-talk.

He was the God of Flexibility, a member of the Pantheon.

I was feeling a lot of intense anger on my skin.

The number of the Pantheon gods was greatly reduced.

At first glance, the number that had exceeded thousands had shrunk.

Now, I should call it not a war between the Pantheon and Hundred Gods Temple, but a war between Hundred Gods Pantheon and Hundred Gods Temple.

It became very fair.

All of the gods of the Pantheon who survived in the midst of it were the powerful ones.

The gods of the Pantheon, who recovered their godhood and recovered their physical damage in an instant, were sending me strong hostility.

[Take care of everything... Can't you?]

Ahbooboo asked anxiously.

Note:

*) Since lizards can intentionally break or sever their tail as a self-defense so they can escape from predators.

) The Korean word used for Pantheon actually means 'Ten Thousand Gods Temple' like the 'Hundred Gods Temple', so this was to imply that LHJ decreased their number and evened out their numbers.

Chapter 376

Thanatos (6)

Puk. Puk.

Kirikiri pressed the floor hard with her feet.

Traces of digging remained throughout her garden.

Gods don't care about anything other than what they think is important.

Of course, they don't even consider the fine dirt floors they are trampling on.

It was after a long conversation.

There were close to one hundred gods gathered in one place to talk, so this much damage was natural.

“Hnnngg.”

Kirikiri sniffed hard and eagerly wandered around her garden, then she found a bunch of dirt and a wildflower uprooted.

Fortunately, neither the stem was broken nor the roots hurt.

Kirikiri planted the wildflowers back in the ground.

Kirikiri was an unusual god.

She was unusual in many ways, but also in that she was very interested in regeneration.

Instead of returning the garden to perfect condition herself, she waited and helped it recover on its own.

“It’s hard work.”

Beside Kirikiri, there was a person approaching gently.

Kirikiri was satisfied with the steps.

The other person didn’t care about weeds in the garden, but respected Kirikiri’s efforts to maintain the garden.

“Another tail is down.”

Kirikiri asked.

“I had to get out as quickly as possible.”

The God of Sacrifice replied.

As Kirikiri heard the answer, she thought the God of Sacrifice was like a lizard.

“It seems like it was a mistake to have the challenger in contact with the God of the Sky.”

The God of Sacrifice said she was worried that an unexpected variable was affecting her plans.

Kirikiri didn’t think so.

If it hadn’t been for the knowledgeable God of the Sky, there would have been no god to tackle, knowing that it was a trap.

“What about the other gods?”

“The God of Light is shining, the God of Regret is still regretting something, the God of Devotion is sad, and the God of Play is just fluttering.”

It was a routine reaction.

The actions of the gods were easy to predict.

They responded consistently in any situation.

The ancient gods of the Hundred Gods Temple, which existed before the cataclysm, were more prominent than those of the later era.

“...The God of Slowness?”

The God of Sacrifice seemed to be frightened when asked that one phrase, as her voice trembled.

It wasn't unusual to remember what the God of Slowness meant to them.

“The God of Balance is blocking it. It won't be long until the God of Slowness comes out.”

“If the God of Slowness emerges, it will collapse immediately.”

The God of Sacrifice said so, still anxious.

Kirikiri did not share the same worries as the God of Sacrifice.

The God of Slowness does not come out.

That is the world's greatest blessing.

The God of Slowness does not decide.

It doesn't move.

It just exists.

It exists in all spaces at the same time.

It exists in the past and in the future at the same time.

Therefore, the concept of movement or a change of state can not exist in the God of Slowness.

The God of Slowness is a god who can not see the world from a first-person perspective.

To the God of Slowness, the world is such a thing, although there once existed a self called the God of Slowness with a taste and a will.

It was nothing more than a thought that the universe accidentally gave birth to.

That thought has become the most powerful deity since the beginning.

And the gods who followed that god and the gods who opposed it made the world of today.

Kirikiri did not worry about the God of Slowness.

The God of Slowness will continue to exist as it is now.

“What are you going to do with the Thanatos side? Should I go back again?”

Kirikiri shook her head.

The God of Sacrifice had already sacrificed most of her sanctuary.

Now Thanatos needed a stronger deterrent.

“If all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple die yet, you will be in trouble.”

“I will be in trouble when they die? Will the challenger die before that?”

Kirikiri shook his head again.

Challenger Lee Ho-jae was a god who was so fierce that he was obsessed with victory and tied it to causality.

“If there’s no chance, will you run away to avoid losing?”

Kirikiri shook her head again.

Perhaps because she sacrificed too many tails, the God of Sacrifice was showing a rather stupid appearance.

Kirikiri thought it was better off letting her rest.

In Lee Ho-jae’s causality, the result was not a victory.

It was the completion of the divine nature that weaves causality.

Processes and results did not always have to flow from the past to the future.

“The challenger doesn’t have to worry about it.”

Lee Ho-jae has already finished all preparations to achieve victory.

That’s why he could have acquired causality.

The only concern was the God of Order.

To the God of Order, who had already advanced to a realm Kirikiri was not aware of, she was unsure of how causality could have an effect on the God of Order.

Rather than worrying about Lee Ho-jae’s safety right now, the priority was to clear up Thanatos’ situation.

It needs strong power.

To disperse the gods of the Pantheon and Lee Ho-jae, the usual way will not work.

You will need a very extreme method.

Enough to even dare to face it.

There is only one god that is suitable.

A god who is eagerly waiting to do something for himself.

The hottest, shiniest god in the Hundred Gods Temple.

“Hngg... I hate it.”

Kirikiri raised her hand and pulled her ears down, covering her face.

The other person was a god she really didn't want to meet.

It was wisest not to be associated with that god, but she needed the power of that god right away.

Kirikiri was upset, humming alone in the fields that had been scattered up.

*

[Can you handle it?]

“Nearly.”

Ahbooboo asked anxiously.

It was worrisome.

Because the other side they were facing was the gods of the Pantheon.

Although they were reduced to a number of a few hundred and looked like defeated soldiers, in reality it was not like that at all.

In the virtual world of Ahbooboo, I fired a wide range attack to reduce their numbers as much as possible.

Thanks to this, I was able to drastically reduce their numbers as I wanted, but their real power remained.

The God of Hope praised them for not being pushed back at all compared to the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple.

In fact, the powerful people who ruled most of the universe remained intact.

When it comes to this, I feel as if I am inspecting defective products.

I think I only did good things for others.

Of course, the gods of the Pantheon seemed to never think so much.

That was another problem.

The gods were basically arrogant and indolent.

It was natural.

Because they were gods.

Because I was a person who proved some of the laws of the world.

And the characteristics of those gods gave me great confidence.

When we had equal skills, it was obvious that I didn't even have to see the odds between a person who flutters and a person who runs desperately.

Most of the gods I dealt with were the former, and I was always the latter.

However, the gods of the Pantheon now seemed to have a lot of malice.

It was even after they were summoned to the virtual world of Ahbooboo and experienced the wildness of when they were a monster.

During the battle, there was a possibility of showing recklessness that would never be seen normally.

[Don't be pretentious, why don't you just run away?]

Soon Grandmother and the giants came.

I only had to hold on until then.

A meteor shower was pouring from space.

Along with that, various attacks were flying from all directions to prevent my movement.

I had to get closer and move before all the escape routes were blocked.

I was able to penetrate deeply into the gods of the Pantheon.

It was much better to dig into the middle of them than to confront the gods of the Pantheon.

Of course, that didn't mean it was safe.

[I remember we had an agreement!]

The God of Flexibility screamed and swung his huge arm.

It was an arm that looked as if it were fluffy like a liquid.

At first glance, it was poison or something like that.

It wasn't one with which my poison tolerance worked.

It was a thing made with unique divine power.

“That agreement is broken!”

Evading the arm of the God of Flexibility, I threw Seregia at their enormous body.

“Because you guys hurt my stiff friend!”

[Kaak!]

Seregia was accurately embedded in the body of the God of Flexibility.

Compared to their enormous body, it was almost as if she was a small thorn, but the effect was fatal.

Until the giants arrived, I was confident in my ability to hold on.

I had confidence in my skills, but it was also because of Seregia’s ability which was specialized against the gods.

“Zit Pop.”

F you, you bastard.

Actually, I didn’t like it before.

This is the second time we met, but I continued to unfold Zit Pop and swore inwardly at the God of Flexibility.

Zit Pop was harmful while the divine power was suppressed.

I rushed to finish the God of Flexibility, who couldn’t even get out of the range of Zit Pop.

Then something huge fell over my head.

The impact made me fall toward the ground.

The barriers spread out on the ground were broken like a sheet of paper, and I fell on the ground of Thanatos, which had become a large field of dust.

Looking around, I could understand the situation.

The gods of the Pantheon were just focusing their attacks on me, who was close to the God of Flexibility.

It seems that they didn't even care about the health of their colleague, the God of Flexibility.

It's too harsh.

The God of Flexibility died instantly in a series of attacks while his divine power was restrained, and their huge body scattered around the ground did not move even after it was shattered.

And.

Meteor showers struck exactly where I was.

I couldn't properly prepare for defense or avoid their position.

It was perfect timing without even an inch of error.

Damn, is there a god who can foresee short-term to the future?

"Seregia!"

Seregia, buried in the remains of the God of Flexibility, returned to my hands.

I just held on.

Bang bang bang!

In the endless falling of the meteor shower, I repeatedly bounced back and forth while floating in the air.

After a while, my body fell to the ground again to see if the meteor shower had stopped.

It was a long distance from the place where the meteor shower hit.

In the distance, near the horizon, a huge tsunami caused by the meteor shower was visible, so I flew quite far.

Before even knowing the exact location, the Gods of the Pantheon came down to the ground and rushed again.

The Gods of the Pantheon were seen with their huge bodies shortened.

Yes, it's wise to do that.

Because the smaller the target, the harder it is to stab Seregia into them.

Decreased weight does not mean that the gods' abilities decreased.

Usually, even if the gods died soon, they maintained their enormous form, but the gods of the Pantheon seemed to be so full of malice that they didn't even care about pride.

However, I was confident in my interpersonal skills.

Far away, a tsunami is approaching.

Soon this battlefield will be swept away by water.

Sounds fun!

This mud fight was really to my taste.

“Ahhhhhhh!”

Maybe I was feeling too overwhelmed, I screamed at myself.

Whether it was a signal or not, the gods of the Pantheon ran back.

Reminiscent of a game of barrage, several Pantheon gods moved freely and attempted close-quarter combat with me in the midst of long-range attacks that flew in the blindspot of my vision.

Somehow they are working together.

Or maybe someone is commanding them.

All attacks could not be avoided.

The sharp nails of a nearby Pantheon god flew toward the side of my face.

Turning my head and avoiding the hand, I further narrowed the distance.

I leaped to the nearest Pantheon god.

My friend, I don't know if you've ever been attacked by this kind of attack.

At the same time, I made Seregia turn into a dagger and stabbed the opponent's shoulder.

Long-ranged attacks targeting me hit.

I endured this time and time again.

However, the Pantheon god, whose divine power was suppressed by being stabbed by Seregia, could not withstand the aftermath.

[Kyaaa.....]

Surprisingly, the sound that the god made when it died was no different than when a human being was struck and killed.

After killing one, I saw another rushing from the front.

I guess it was aiming at my gap that was hit by attacks consecutively.

It is never a good judgment to hit head-on.

I ran face to face at the rushing Pantheon god, and kicked it away.

The kicked god suddenly crashed into the tsunami wave that was just around the corner.

A huge ripple broke out and the tsunami cracked.

And a huge wave poured over the battlefield.

Shaaa.

The gods of the Pantheon pushed the water away by force.

In an instant, a huge colosseum made of water walls was created.

A huge shadow cast into the Colosseum.

The huge ice giant, who completely obscured the sun's rays, said.

“Is it fashionable to get smaller?”

Grandmother, spitting out a murmur, struck her fist down towards the Colosseum of Water.

The water wall that had been filling the area was pushed away by the shock wave.

“King, it's a little disappointing that you were enjoying yourself without us.”

Suddenly, Grandmother, who had changed into a small form like the gods of the Pantheon, complained.

Starting with Grandmother, new things were added one after another.

500 giants under Grandmother.

Reinforcements arrived.

The gods of the Pantheon stopped attacking whether they were surprised by the sudden appearance of giants or whether they needed to talk among themselves.

I don't care.

“King, what should I do?”

“Annihilate. Here, kill all named gods and do not miss any.”

I didn't even want to think any more about the Hundred Gods Temple or what Kirikiri was trying to gain from this war.

I have to end this damn war here with my own hands.

The God of Hope was showing abnormal symptoms of fear of the aftermath of the war.

But contrary to those worries, the war ended today without any further escalation.

And I won this time too.

Chapter 377

Thanatos (7)

The giants confronted it calmly.

While they were dealing with the Pantheon gods, I was a little behind.

It was not because of a lack of strength, but because of the difference in our roles.

In order to end the war, they should not be allowed to flee.

While I was a little far away, I assisted the giants, while interfering with the Pantheon gods trying to open the portal and flee from Thanatos.

It was my battle with the Pantheon gods who tried to connect the dimensional passages in the midst of a frantic battle against the giants, and I was going all out to sabotage them.

Until now, I had not allowed a single escapee and it was well blocked.

Watching the battle from a distance, I learnt one thing.

The Pantheon gods are not good at group battles.

Their abilities are outstanding.

Wielding all sorts of miracles, they showed really ridiculous appearances.

Some of those abilities have also been applied because of cooperation.

They predicted our behavior using short-term foresight, and showed the possibility that several gods could move like one body with the ability of telepathy.

But that is the limit.

They have no understanding of groups.

Although one is able to lead, they feel uncomfortable being part of the group and fulfilling said role.

It was natural when I thought about it.

These are the monsters who ate everything visible to them to gain their godhood.

After becoming a god, they wouldn't have had to fight with strength.

This may be the first battle some of them experienced since becoming a god.

It would be unreasonable for them to cooperate when they were a group of over a hundred.

In addition, there was a deep-rooted individualism peculiar to the gods.

In order to suffer less damage to themselves, they were willing to endure the collapse and the death of their colleagues.

It may not even be a risk for them.

They just did what was natural for them.

They are the gods who will be reluctant to put their own safety and comfort on the same scale as others.

On the other hand, the giants moved systematically.

Maintaining the display that I was used to, through long and repeated training.

They moved according to a clear command system.

It was a battle between two sides that showed excellent ability, but one had an almost perfect organizational power while another was stubborn.

It wasn't an overwhelming battle, but the giants were chasing them step by step without losing their control.

As time passed, the giants' initiative only grew.

Now it was looking more like a kind of mass hunting rather than a battle.

They were putting together the Pantheon gods who were just looking for a chance to escape, and reducing their numbers one by one without taking any damage.

It was then.

[Time Confinement]

Suddenly, a power was used.

The battle was in progress.

The flames fired out in all directions, and the giants calmly defended.

I could see the scattering flames get blocked by the defense.

This power of time confinement, presented by the God of Slowness, is the power to slow down only my time apart from the time in the universe.

In a world that was so slow, I felt puzzled.

I didn't use the power.

No, although what I used is correct.

There was no intention to use it.

It wasn't a good sign.

The power of time confinement had to be used.

Because of the danger I didn't even notice.

The problem was I couldn't find the danger.

The battle was one-sided.

Damn it.

What the hell is coming?

While puzzled, I was preparing for an emergency.

And soon the cause could be found.

Far away.

From very far away, a crack in space occurred.

It was a distance that you would never notice if you didn't foresee that there would be some danger due to the sudden triggering of time containment.

It was a crack that occurred in the vicinity of a star visible from Thanatos, beyond normal range of vision.

It was a very small thing that jumped out of the crack.

Something just the size of a human being moved actively.

It was moving at such a fast pace that I forgot that I was looking at it in the slowness of time.

When I looked closely, it really had limbs like a human.

God of Light.

There was no basis, but I thought so.

I couldn't think of any other answers.

That was absolutely the God of Light.

The God of Light moved busily, perhaps excitedly.

It also looked similar to a human dancing.

The God of Light suddenly stopped and raised his arm flashingly.

And it burst out.

Light.

And it was light.

I tried to confirm this sudden phenomenon through feelings rather than sight, but the light with strong divine power drove everything away.

When the spreading light touched the edge of Thanatos, a voice was finally heard.

[Shine!!]

And everything was colored with light.

* * *

I couldn't see.

I couldn't even feel.

As if you were trapped in a fantasy world made of only light.

All sensations felt from the outside were paralyzed.

It felt like I was being separated from the world.

The surprise was inevitable.

I didn't expect to experience this kind of thing after becoming a god.

If I hadn't been through the 13th floor in the Tutorial.

Had I not been able to overcome the ordeal there, the time I could not move in surprise would have been longer.

The whole world was engulfed by the power of the God of Light.

I also aggressively used the expansion of my divine power through Zit Pop, but it was very difficult for me to get it to hit.

It was difficult to deal with.

In a hurry, I stretched out my hands.

Even that wasn't easy because of the power of the God of Light.

With the light, I pushed away the divine power of the God of Light that was thickly blocking, and reached out my hands toward the giants.

I felt a sensation at my fingertips.

I dragged them to me.

I opened up my inner space and threw them into the subspace.

Whoo-

Rather than an explosion sound, it was a grotesque sound as if the world was screaming low.

Shuddering, I also went into the subspace.

I fled from a world made of only light to a world made of only darkness.

* * *

All the giants were safe.

This was because after the explosion of light, the giants did not move and remained still.

It seems that they couldn't move because they were overwhelmed by the pouring power rather than believing I would save them.

Thanks to my complete grasp of their location, I was able to evacuate everyone without leaving any behind.

[Five hundred including me. All are safe. There is also a friend from your hometown here.]

Grandmother confirmed their safety.

It was a relief.

It would be better not to go outside right now and stay here.

Now Thanatos is a hell surrounded by light.

When we go out, we will explode together.

[King, where are you?]

I looked around.

I was annoyed by the sloppy darkness.

When I touched it with a sore cheek, a wet, sticky black moisture appeared.

I fell in a bad place.

It wouldn't be good to go back to the giants right now.

"Why were you sitting here?"

I asked the buzzing fly.

I can't believe I found this place in this big subspace.

It is a place where all kinds of bad feelings have been thrown out, unable to endure helplessness on the 61st floor.

It was a huge garbage dump.

I would say it was my dark history memorial.

[Amazing. You turned yourself into a subspace. Built a mental world, coordinated it, and used it as a physical space. Maybe you were the first to develop something like this.]

The God of Hope said nothing else.

There are also many surprises.

Thinking of the time I was trapped on the 61st floor and the things I tried to do there.

These were achievements to be achieved.

"That sounds like a good place to be."

The God of Hope seemed familiar with this place.

It also looked good on him.

A trash can that collects all kinds of bad feelings.

It might be a good environment for the God of Hope.

[Is that sarcastic?]

No. How did you know?

I was thinking inside myself!

[Because it is inside you.]

Why are you so serious and trying to explain?

It's not funny.

So with me too.

The feelings of the God of Hope were flowing into me.

He seemed to be quite assimilated with this space.

The God of Hope was afraid.

"I should have tried a conversation here earlier."

I had a lot of questions.

The grotesque irrationality of this war.

The sudden appearance of the God of Light and his incomprehensible actions.

And.

“I have to listen now. If you don’t say anything, even with your own strength. Tell me. What the hell are you so afraid of?”

The fear of the God of Hope.

Obviously, the God of Hope was reacting abnormally.

The God of Hope welcomed the war and was not opposed to it.

[It’s just reasonable anxiety.]

What are you talking about?

The God of Hope had told me little about war.

There was a war discussion.

But at one point, he suddenly felt terrified and wanted to run away.

[One thing was a problem.]

“What.”

[There is no limit to this war. This is a war in which all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple participated.]

Before asking again what he meant, the God of Hope began explaining.

[I highly value the Pantheon. If you compare their forces with the Hundred Gods Temple, it’s no match. They themselves are doing the war, but they are not warriors in the first place, but kings. When they mobilize all their capacities, it means that all civilizations in this universe join forces.]

Including both the deities and the non-deities, the God of Hope added.

[Of course, the Hundred Gods Temple is also strong. If the God of Balance and the God of Sky work together, we can guarantee victory. If duel and death go hand in hand, we can guarantee immortality.]

[But if it is a war in which all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple participate, the story is different. The Hundred Gods Temple itself is not a problem. Some of the gods there are a problem. Some of the ancient gods that existed long before the Cataclysm are not gods capable of war.]

War is impossible.

Doesn't that mean they're harmless?

[The opposite. Haven't you just seen it?]

[The God of Slowness, the God of Light, the God of Devotion, these gods will end everything by themselves. The word war doesn't hold water.]

[This is the intention of the Hundred Gods Temple. They were not interested in disputes or initiatives. From the beginning, they had thought of getting rid of Thanatos by burning it. Like all other planets.]

“...What?”

[The only goal of this war is destruction.]

What is this bullshit again?

[Then do you think that the God of Light came here for war?]

He didn't.

Instead of attacking the gods in the war, the God of Light launched a rampage against the world.

There was a prediction like so.

I thought the purpose of this war was to weaken the God of Order.

The Hundred Gods Temple are out of the limits of the system by themselves, which means that the power of the God of Order is weakened.

[It's soft. It's a soft guess. What they're aiming for isn't confusing the system. They are intending to erase the root of the divine power.]

“...Are you sure?”

[I'm sure.]

I had to ask again.

Because I knew the basis of the divine power and what cancelling it would mean.

“How can you be sure of that?”

[Because it has already happened once before. I remember it clearly because it happened when I was just reborn as a god. When the God of Slowness was approaching transcendence. The God of Adventure destroyed all civilizations in the universe, weakening the gods who followed the God of Slowness.]

* * *

[You are here again]

Said the God of Slowness.

Kirikiri was able to smile triumphantly in front of the voice.

“I didn't come to see you today.”

The God of Slowness smiled widely.

[Yess. I guess so.]

“Weally! (Really!)”

Kirikiri shouted and protested, but the God of Slowness just laughed.

The God of Slowness did not believe her words.

“Hmph!”

Kirikiri ignored the God of Slowness and prepared to open the door.

All the gods’ of the Hundred Gods Temple rooms have been prepared.

The same was true of the room of the God of Slowness.

However, the room of the God of Slowness was special.

It was where the war started.

It was also the reason for the existence of the Hundred Gods Temple.

The entrance and exit of the Hundred Gods Temple.

Kirikiri opened the door to the world.

She was not talking to the God of Slowness near the door as usual.

Kirikiri had someone to meet at a distance from the door.

[It’s been a long time since you’ve been in the world.]

It’s been a long time.

Does the God of Slowness have such a concept?

[I said it according to your standards.]

Kirikiri took a deep breath and stepped into the door.

A little later, she shut the door behind her back.

Once again, the voice of the God of Slowness reached her, as she flew towards her destination with her small hands clenched.

[I hope this will be a fun adventure.]

Chapter 378

Thanatos (8)

This is the story of when I was just born.

The war was prolonged.

The sides of the war had turned.

There were more and more gods who wanted to be one with the great universe.

The opponents began to decline.

And the God of Adventure made a decision.

[That's what happened at the end of the cataclysm. Without some gods who remember the past, it might have been called the Genesis, not the Cataclysm. Everything that existed before that was destroyed.]

There was an existence that suddenly came to mind.

The God of Horror.

That is the god I met when pursuing the God of Hope.

He knew a lot of things, and thanks to him, I was able to collect miscellaneous information.

The God of Horror also recognized Kirikiri, who poked her face out from the quest window.

[He is a god who knows the story of a long time ago. Even those symbolic metaphors that have only been handed down through songs. I don't know the exact history.]

The destruction of the world.

I never thought about it.

So when the God of Hope first told the story, I thought it was absurd.

I thought that he must be worrying excessively because of the anxiety that he has been showing.

However, the God of Hope gave evidence that it had already happened once before.

“How similar is the situation to that time?”

[The God of Slowness only had a will, but he did not move. In fact, the war was actually a war between its followers and their opponents. The God of Adventure attacked the gods by destroying all civilizations. Killed all those gods, and sealed the God of Slowness that they were admiring.]

The elimination of the fundamental faith.

Destroy the sources of faith that exist at the bottom of the pyramid, and attack the gods above it.

He even went up in turn and sealed the God of Slowness.

[Now that is the God of Order. Although not admired, numerous gods are subordinate to the system and devote their faith to order. Same situation.]

Kill all the gods who are affected by the order of the system, and all the believers who are affected by those gods.

Thus, weakening the power of the God of Order.

It was easy to understand.

It was an unacceptable method.

But I couldn't ignore it.

The gods have continuity in all their actions and judgments.

If they were normal people, they could use a different method each time, and go over it.

The existence of gods, they must make the same judgment in the same situations.

The God of Adventure is not an exception.

[Now let me run away. It's clear they'll come for me.]

I guess so.

If they really intend to destroy the world to weaken the God of Order.

It was unlikely that the God of Hope, the apostle of the God of Order, would be left alone.

[If you don't believe me, look outside.]

The God of Hope said so.

*

[King, are you alright?]

I heard Grandmother's voice.

She seemed to have noticed me coming out.

"It's okay. I'll go back to Earth and take you out later. Wait there."

There was no need to get them out of here right now.

Rather, it was better not to do so.

[What happened to the battle? It's our victory.]

Grandmother's last words weren't asking a question.

As expected, it was more of an assertion.

That's how much Grandmother believed in our victory.

Like me.

I do not know.

In the clash with the Pantheon, we surely won.

The battle ended, however, the winner was us.

In our outnumbered circumstances, we have achieved overwhelming records.

However... I'm not sure either.

It wasn't victory or defeat.

The results weren't even postponed.

As I came back, Thanatos was like a hell of light.

If there is only one difference from my expectations.

It was just that it was worse than I expected.

Everything turned into light.

Thanatos was reconciled with the light and was extinguished by it.

In the distance, I saw the satellite colonies of Thanatos.

Looking at what was happening on the satellite, I was able to guess exactly what was happening in Thanatos.

The stone that was rolling on the side of the road suddenly started to shine.

It emitted intense light outside, and soon exploded as if it couldn't stand the light.

The body of the person sleeping in the bed began to glow.

Explode.

Light flew out of the dull concrete wall.

Explode.

Everything was flashing and exploding again.

That will be the beginning.

Again, I turned my gaze to Thanatos.

Light was coming up from the ground.

From the asphalt floor, from the dirt floor, and even from the bottom of rivers, lakes, and seas, a strong light was emanating.

The planet of Thanatos was shining.

Like a natural occurrence, this planet will also explode.

The death of a star.

Is there a more effective way to annihilate living things?

...like this?

Do they intend to destroy the world like this?

Some of the Pantheon gods appear to have fled.

A dimensional passage was created that did not exist before I escaped to the subspace

The ability of the God of Light, which was made into a bomb that self-destructed everything in the world, was certainly great, but it was a method that could not be tried against the gods.

Because the divinity of the other gods cannot be ignored.

In a world where everything explodes, the gods will also suffer damage, but at least they would not explode themselves.

Therefore, it meant that the attack of the God of Light was not against the Pantheon gods from the beginning, but against the planet Thanatos and the survivors.

[Isn't that what I said?]

It was just as the God of Hope speculated.

The Pantheon gods were defeated and fled.

Probably scattered to their holy land.

The war is not over.

The gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were able to navigate the entire universe, avoiding system constraints, in the name of war against the Pantheon.

It would be possible to destroy the world with the excuse of attacking the forces of the Pantheon that occupy most of the universe.

As the God of Hope said, the reason why the God of Light and the God of Sacrifice appeared here was not to deal with the gods of the Pantheon, but to scatter them apart.

I looked at the universe in the distance.

The place where the God of Light was, was surrounded by light from a strong explosion.

Thanatos was tough, but it wasn't a match to that.

[Zit Pop!]

[Zit Pop!]

The God of Light was raging with Zit Pops.

The heatwave kept its round shape and spread in all directions.

That technique is very difficult to keep round.

Because it uses friction of force, it was common for the spraying to be more to one side rather than an even circle.

However, the God of Light was showing a Zit Pop, which was close to the perfect prototype.

I could see that he didn't practice and study it just once or twice.

It wasn't as perfect as mine.

[Zit Pop!]

As if boasting, the God of Light was showing the same technique over and over again.

It was clearly to show me.

There was no one who could see that other than me.

The gods of the Pantheon have fled, and all of the humans in Thanatos have become ashes or are in the process of becoming bombs.

[Zit Pop!]

It looked like a flower of fire blooming in outer space.

Like a round and colorful red chrysanthemum.

[Zit-Pop!]

It was artistic.

I was able to understand because I knew the effort and agony necessary to bring out that form.

But it didn't look beautiful.

[Don't do that. Run away.]

The God of Hope whispered.

[Please.]

I ignored that eagerness.

Holding Seregia in my hand, I flew toward the God of Light.

There were still survivors left on the satellite planet of Thanatos.

They too were turning into bio-bombs, but they didn't know there might be a way to save them.

There was no way for me, but the God of Light may have it.

With that thought, I flew toward the God of Light.

Until I met their two eyes.

“Hi?”

They were clearly flying at a fast pace.

In the meantime, our faces appeared close enough to touch each other's nose tips, and I tried to pull back.

But my body didn't move.

Two large round eyes filled my field of view.

Their eyes were unnatural and heterogeneous, as if a child had painted black crayons on a drawing paper.

"Hihing, you must have been surprised."

The eyes slowly moved away.

Only then could I recognize the owner of the eyes.

Kirikiri.

"It's been a long time. Aren't you upset that I didn't contact you?"

*

I couldn't understand.

Given the speed at which I was moving, it was impossible to stop without any reaction.

And the fact that Kirikiri could appear in front of me without any warning.

"Don't think it's too weird. It just felt like I appeared suddenly because I've stopped you for four hours."

That was even stranger.

You got involved in my time?

It was impossible.

It wasn't a matter of Kirikiri's ability.

I was a god.

It was a confirmed fact.

No god could intervene in the realm of another.

There was one thing that came to mind.

Guards were stopped by a time containment in the shrine of the sage who I visited in the realm of the God of the Sky.

The divine power that ignores other's divine power.

There was only one hypothesis that I could think of.

'The God of Slowness.'

Kirikiri read my thoughts and replied.

"Cowwect. I'm using it little by little."

Kirikiri said refreshingly.

Then she showed me the stone she held in her hand.

"Hihing."

It was strangely familiar, but I couldn't figure out what that stone was.

Kirikiri took turns looking at the direction I was moving in and said to me.

"It's not so good to face the God of Light. As I said before, the God of Light is as irrelevant as possible."

Well.

Now Kirikiri felt more dangerous than the God of Light.

The God of Light was very excited that it was causing a series of explosions.

Do you think that I approached so I could watch the explosions up close?

I felt the excitement of the God of Light in the bursting frantic explosions.

However, the God of Light did not care about Kirikiri's existence.

Even though she was blocking my view between the God of Light and the explosions.

There was no change in Kirikiri's appearance.

"I'm sorry, but I want you to wait for a while like this. If you interfere more than this, I'll be in trouble too."

Kirikiri said in a cautious voice, as if asking a really sorry favor.

It was polite for a request to completely suppress the opponent's movement.

My body was completely overpowered, so I had to communicate my intentions through thoughts.

It was very uncomfortable to be able to read my thoughts, but sometimes it was convenient.

"Yes, I will destroy it all. To stop the God of Order."

Kirikiri answered my question calmly.

I was rather fed up with the calmness.

“It’s an unavoidable choice.”

‘No, it’s not.’

I denied it.

If I were in her position, would I have made the same choices as her?

I won’t.

“You speak like the God of the Sky. The God of the Sky said that it is a choice that neither side can be chosen. But I have no intention of putting off my choice and destroying the world.”

It has always been like that.

The God of Adventure has always valued the process.

So there was a time when I thought that the God of Adventure was a god who didn’t care much about the outcome if the process was sufficient.

However, considering how obsessively the gods are bound to their divinity, I can see how ambiguous the word “important” is.

The process was more or less a matter of preference.

Even in retrospect, the God of Adventure always respected and cheered me on whenever I made a painful choice.

Kirikiri really intended to destroy the world.

‘It would be better for the God of Order to become a transcendent god than for the world to perish.’

The perished world and the sanctified world of the God of Order.

It was obvious which side was better.

In the latter, survival is viable

“It’s an illusion. The world where a transcendent god exists is not a world governed by some divine law. In that world, there is only the will of the transcendent god.”

Kirikiri said.

“Both sides are scheduled for destruction. So I just chose to destroy it. At least so that we can rebuild the world.”

Kirikiri curled up her little body, speaking in a similarly small voice.

Chapter 379

Choice (1)

“You don’t seem convinced.”

Kirikiri scratched her ear.

Then she reached out and grabbed my hand and said.

“Shall we move first? This doesn’t seem like a good place to chat.”

I was moved by Kirikiri without a chance to speak my mind.

The red sky and the burning smell pricked my nose.

For a moment, I thought I had come down to the ground again.

But soon, I could see that I had moved to a completely different dimension from where I was.

I looked around.

Before I knew it, my body was suddenly free from the power of the God of Slowness.

I could move freely.

“Even here, it’s not a very good place to talk.”

I pressed the floor hard with my feet.

I didn’t give that much strength, but blood came up, squirming from the floor.

It was disgusting.

It felt like stepping on a body, not on the ground.

Kirikiri picked up a piece of wood from somewhere and squatted on it.

It seemed like she didn't want to put her feet on the ground.

I was puzzled.

It looked like a kind of virtual world.

Similar to what was created by the God of the Sky.

But what an unpleasant place for a conversation.

I didn't understand.

Kirikiri didn't say anything.

I kept looking around.

I could feel a strange feeling of déjà vu.

The horizon seen from the border between the red sky and the red earth was familiar.

Kirikiri explained.

"It's my hometown."

My disgust has doubled.

I took a peek and lifted my feet.

Sticky blood sticking to the soles of my shoes crept.

"Maybe the dirt under your feet is the corpse of my family, which has been finely ground.”

If your goal was to make me feel upset, I want to tell you that it is extremely effective.

But the words didn’t come out quickly.

Kirikiri, who smiled casually when talking about the destruction of the world or anything, looked solemn.

Regret and distress were evident in her face, muttering by herself.

Kirikiri sometimes had a serious face, but I was a bit surprised because she never showed such a dark appearance.

A little later, I noticed the source of this sense of déjà vu.

This was a place I had been to before.

Several times.

It was a very different landscape, so I couldn’t immediately notice it.

Whenever I cleared the Tutorial, I encountered Kirikiri’s Garden.

It was always the place where she was hopping and rolling around.

“What happened here?”

This place was weird.

The ground spews out blood every time it is pressed, just like a wet sponge.

Even if a war breaks out, Earth is not drowned in blood in this way.

Without killing thousands of people first.

“Destruction. The stupid being who wanted to be part of the God of Slowness wanted to gain a greater godhood through human offerings. She ate all of the land she had ruled, but in the end, when there was no one left to worship her, she lost even her own godhood..... Such a stupid thing happened.”

...It was a crazy story.

“Because there weren’t many gods back then. Most of them were mighty ancient gods and guardians who ruled small areas or tribes. It was when the gods themselves were ignorant of godhood.”

A god who slaughtered their followers.

It was a story that I experienced several times in the Tutorial.

Just thinking about it again caused me to feel reluctant and disgusted.

It wasn’t because it was simply cruel and unfortunate.

I felt displeasure when I witnessed the taboos of what shouldn’t be done and what shouldn’t happen.

“So what’s the reason for bringing me here?”

“...I want you to know that I’m not just talking about it. I chose it not because I was belittling life, but because I really had to.”

I have been with Kirikiri for a long time.

I don’t know how sincerely she treated me, but I think I know her to some degree.

Unlike other gods who think that her existence, let alone the lives of others, are rats on the streets, Kirikiri is a god who values her relationship with others.

She was the most similar to the God of the Sky, to put it bluntly.

She cared about the challengers, and even the beings in the Tutorial.

I could understand just how special that is, now that I know she is a god and what kind of being she is.

When I finished the first floor of the Tutorial and asked about the people who died there, I remembered the sorry face that Kirikiri showed.

So it was more shocking.

She is casually speaking of the destruction of the world.

“Really, I think it’s better to destroy the world once.”

It was still a dark face, but Kirikiri said it clearly.

I guess.

Although she may be sorry for the deaths of the challengers, she does not block the summons of the Tutorial.

“Are you sure?”

Kirikiri nodded her head.

“I’m sure. It is better for the world to perish than for the God of Order to become a transcendent god.”

I thought a world would unfold, perfectly aligned with the will of the God of Order.

That’s why people will be like cogs that disappear after living a perfectly structured life like a machine.

I told Kirikiri my guess.

“In a world where the will of the transcendent god dwells, you would not think that there is anything else left besides that will. Perfect order will force a world of perfect nothingness.”

Either way, it means destruction.

Things really turned out to be the worst.

“...You should have made a good design in the first place.”

I heard that the God of Order and the system were artificially-designed gods.

This isn't a runaway Skynet, but it should have been designed to prevent such an accident from occurring in the first place.

“...The God of Order is well designed, just.....”

“Just, what.”

“It was a problem that so many more gods were born than expected.”

Excessively many gods came under the system, and as a result, the power of the God of Order exceeded the expected range?

“Because I didn't know that when I spread the power of the God of Slowness all over the world, it would come together so easily.”

Kirikiri mumbled and said to herself.

Listening to her excuses, I could recall what the scattered power of the God of Slowness meant.

“The source.”

“Right.”

The source, oddly enough, originated from ordinary people.

Even on the planet itself.

And when faced with a continental or tribal crisis, the power is concentrated on a hero.

Heroes become monsters because they can't handle the power, and those who came out of Thanatos beat the monsters that endlessly accumulated power and are turned into gods.

In the end, the story of the source was revealed.

The rapid increase of the gods from rulers, and the creation of a Tutorial in the name of protecting the realm from such gods.

I roughly understood the situation.

“It wasn't like that from the beginning. However.....”

“We'll talk about that later.”

I stopped Kirikiri from trying to explain in detail.

There was a lot to talk about before that.

“Is there any way to stop the God of Order?”

I recalled when the God of Order appeared in the realm of the God of the Sky.

The attacks of the giants, as well as the struggles of the God of the Sky, had no effect on the God of Order.

There was no way to do anything when attacks did not even touch it.

“There is.”

“How? I couldn't even touch it like an illusion.”

“There is.”

Kirikiri repeatedly answered my question.

“...So how?”

“You.”

“What?”

“You can touch the God of Order. You could attack it.”

I couldn't.

Like the giants, I tried to attack the God of Order.

And my attacks did not reach the God of Order.

“Because back then, you were outside the rules. The God of Order was preventing the God of the Sky from breaking the rules. You had nothing to do with the God of Order. So you wouldn't have reached it.”

“Is it possible now?”

“If you follow the rules of the God of Order as a challenger.”

* * *

...challenger.

Yes, that damn challenger.

I always wondered why we were called challengers.

At first, I thought it meant challenging an ordeal.

It was an unnatural title when I recall that the place of the trial was a tutorial.

If the purpose was to cultivate an apostle of the gods through a tutorial, it would be right to give a title such as an apprentice or a trainee rather than a challenger.

“In the end, that was the final goal of the Tutorial.”

“Hmm. There was also the purpose of nurturing the apostles of the gods and producing superhumans who would protect the planet by themselves, but the goal was to eventually gather the apostles and to challenge the God of Order.”

That way is too convenient.

The way to stop the transcendental god is to grow and stop the mortals?

“Because the gods couldn’t come forward directly. The same goes for those underlings. Eventually, I had to raise a new one. Originally, I was thinking of gathering more challengers. But because the God of Order has grown faster than I expected, and above all else, you appeared.”

She wasn’t able to clear the Tutorial well, and at the last minute I appeared, who grew up to occupy part of the Tutorial.

“So when you asked to stop the Tutorial, I was able to feel free to do so because the challenger was ready.”

“What are the odds?”

“None. Right now.”

The immediate answer came back.

“To increase the odds.....”

Destroying the world?

The scale of the story was enormous.

To the point of absurdity.

“I can’t help it. Now is your last chance. The God of Order has become too powerful, and there are too few challengers ready.”

Kirikiri spread her two fingers.

“There are two options. Both are destined for destruction, but in one the odds for a future go hand in hand.”

“There is one more.”

There is one option that Kirikiri did not mention.

Maybe it was something I wouldn’t have even thought of.

“You just have to win without destroying the world.”

After all, the destruction of the world is to increase the odds.

But if I could overcome it without destroying the world and weakening the God of Order.

The destruction of the world eventually becomes meaningless.

“It’s impossible. It’s arrogance.”

Kirikiri, who was squatting, got up from her seat and looked straight into my eyes.

Standing on the bloody ground, we were moved back to the Thanatos area.

My body didn’t move again.

I couldn’t even make a sound by moving my lips.

“You being unable to escape from the power of the God of Slowness right now is proof. You can't resist that power, and there's no chance of winning by challenging the God of Order that is not yet weakened."

Kirikiri looked at me, who couldn't move, with rather sad eyes.

And whispered.

"I believe you will understand. Because the most important thing for you is the result. It's a painful process, but I can't help it because it is to achieve the results."

Kirikiri, who talked about it, grew farther and farther away from me.

"Wait here. By the time you're released, the painful process will all be over. Then you just have to focus on your goals."

Kirikiri, who left with those last words, went away and disappeared again.

* * *

Time confinement.

Apart from the world, it slows down the time flowing through me.

As a result, you experience a world that is almost still, and your mind experiences a long time during a moment.

It was a useful ability for training and for judgment and concentration during battle.

However, Kirikiri transformed this ability and used it on others.

As a prison of time disconnected from the world.

Kirikiri was right.

In the power of the God of Slowness, I couldn't lift a single finger, so I wouldn't be able to win against the God of Order who was approaching transcendence.

That said, I didn't want to wait for the world to perish, just trapped like this.

No, I couldn't.

My definition of victory is complex.

As a result, even if I achieved victory, if I destroyed the world in the process.

Could I accept the result of that victory?

I felt dizzy.

The God of Light, which had not cared, was approaching.

It was dazzling and annoying just to get closer.

When it came too close to me, it looked like a small human.

I couldn't know exactly because it was painful to look straight ahead.

The God of Light, approaching almost right around the corner, clapped.

Flash.

Every time he clapped, the light scattered loudly.

What are you doing, this crazy guy?

The God of Light lifted his finger and tried to poke me when he approached me and I didn't respond.

Slowly his fingers approached.

A powerful beam of light was swaying around the finger made of light.

It all seemed to be slow in the confinement of time.

Slowly, slowly, his fingers came in front of my face.

It was just before the finger of the God of Light touched my nose.

I was able to get out of the prison of time and hold on to that finger.

“Put it away.”

Chapter 380

Choice (2)

[END]

The prison of time.

It was familiar to me.

It's not just because I often used this power of the God of Slowness for my growth.

Apart from that, there were many experiences of being cut off from the world and being blocked by the wall of time.

The first time I was blocked by the wall, I gave up and abandoned it.

I gave up on the challenge, admitting that my senses became dull and my skills declined as I grew older.

Without any goal, I confined myself in a small room and wasted time.

I would not have been so surprised or sad if I lived like that and then died suddenly because of alcohol.

That much, my attachment to life had disappeared.

The second time I was blocked by the wall, I continued to hit against it.

I was confident that someday I would be able to break through the wall.

I didn't get old in the Tutorial, and I was able to keep growing.

As long as my mental power didn't collapse, I could believe that I would clear the 6th floor someday.

So I was able to keep hitting the wall that looked so high, and eventually broke the wall and headed beyond it.

The third time I was blocked by the wall, I lost my confidence again.

Even though I finally had a goal, I ran into an insurmountable wall on the way towards the goal.

I believed that I could continue to grow, and I also believed that one day I would be able to challenge my goals and achieve them.

However, I couldn't endure the unexpected wait.

Without a companion to clear the 61st floor, it was impossible to cross the wall.

I'd been broken several times in the thirst and impatience that seemed to burn me during every moment.

At that time, it was Hochi and Yong-yong who made my time on the 60th floor bearable.

And it was Lee Yeon-hee who let me know that hope was coming.

Eventually, I gained the ability to get out of there on my own before Lee Yeon-hee reached the 61st floor.

Through the three challenges, I gained complete confidence.

That I will endure, and that I will eventually win.

Even now, when Kirikiri imprisoned me in the prison of time.

I will break down the walls of this prison and escape.

No matter how long it takes, no matter how much trouble and effort it takes.

And that means that one day I can cross this wall.

That conviction gave me an answer.

The finger of the God of Light came to my face.

It was a finger shining so bright that it was hard to look straight ahead.

A finger approaching my nose, as if it wanted to touch something strange, came slowly and carefully.

That didn't mean it wasn't unpleasant.

I grabbed that finger.

“Put it away.”

The God of Light was surprised and hastily stepped back.

His appearance was very blurred.

After stepping back a little, I was able to see the God of Light again.

The God of Light was shining so naturally.

Because of the light, I couldn't recognize the features of his face.

I could just see that he resembles a human form.

Had I been an ordinary human, my eyesight would have been blinded just by looking straight at his finger.

Not only his finger, but the whole body of the God of Light was shining like that.

The God of Light never stood still for a moment.

He was moving in all directions irregularly, like a firecracker held by a person with a hand tremor.

At an overly fast pace.

The God of Light, who had been doing that for a while, came back towards me.

And he reached out both of his hands.

A very brightly shining sphere emerged in his hand.

I could see that it was a Zit Pop reduced to the size of a palm on his hand.

Making it small, it looked like a pretty little toy.

The problem is.

“...It’s blinding.”

Getting close to it, it was difficult even for me to look straight ahead.

When the God of Light heard me, he thought it was a compliment, so he clapped and flew in all directions.

Every time he clapped, light scattered.

I was annoyed at the sight of the God of Light flying around, obscuring my vision.

No matter how harmless it was, it was annoying.

To hold it for a moment, I reached out my hand as I flew toward the God of Light.

The God of Light was terrified by my sudden movement, so he flew like a blast in the opposite direction from me.

After that, a bunch of bright lights stretched long.

It was an exit that was as raucous and abrupt as when he appeared.

“I can’t catch that.....”

I admitted it calmly.

The gods usually seem to be missing a screw somewhere.

Actually, I myself was like that.

However, it was the first time that I met a god that looked as crazy as this God of Light.

I felt like I’m in a mess for no reason.

I looked back.

The planet was collapsing.

The planet that failed to overcome the explosion that started from deep below the ground was facing death.

The death of a star.

Perhaps this was the most ideal solution that the God of Death wanted.

I can’t stop that.

To do that, I would have to spend too much power.

And even so, it wouldn’t be meaningful.

Because all the people who lived on that planet had already died.

Let's go back.

I had no intention of getting caught up in the explosion of a star that was already dying.

* * *

The God of Order becomes a transcendent god and the world is destroyed.

Kirikiri destroys the world in the name of weakening the God of Order.

All had to be stopped.

[Challenge.]

The voice of the God of Order hovered in my memory.

I knew well where to go for the challenge.

The realm of the God of Order.

The Tutorial.

I had to go there again.

*

The end of the universe.

The end of the world.

There is an end to everything.

Even in this huge universe that you can't even dare to measure.

And even for long journeys that didn't seem to end.

Kirikiri thought about it as she looked at the entrance to the Hundred Gods Temple.

Finally, the end is approaching.

[It was a short adventure.]

Said the God of Slowness.

It was a long adventure.

[Did you get what you wanted?]

Kirikiri nodded her head.

It wasn't the ideal shape she was thinking of, but it was able to fit to some extent.

She sent the God of Light, and she scattered all the gods.

Terrified, they will be scattered throughout the realm and hide.

Under the guise of pursuing them, it was possible to dispatch the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple all over the world.

Challenger Lee Ho-jae finally fully understood the situation.

In fact, when he cleared the Tutorial, she had to tell him everything, but she was concerned that he would challenge the God of Order without any preparation.

The God of the Sky, who was against her opinion until the end, was weakened by the power of the God of Order.

She couldn't even find a trace of the God of Hope since it seems as if he had completely disappeared.

In the Hundred Gods Temple where it was required to maintain one incarnation, he must have been completely destroyed.

For one thing, she suppressed Lee Ho-jae with force, but she couldn't help it right away.

After all the preparations were over, she believed that Lee Ho-jae would also challenge the God of Order according to her plan.

Knowing that his divinity is aligned with the results.

“It can't be helped. Adventures don't always go perfectly as planned.”

[Yes, adventure always comes with unexpected variables.]

Kirikiri felt a little uncomfortable.

Would she overreact if she felt as if he was teasing her at the words of the God of Slowness?

Kirikiri tilted her head for a moment, then flew back to the entrance of the Hundred Gods Temple.

As she moved closer to the entrance, she met the God of Balance.

The God of Balance, in the form of an old man, seemed to have gotten older while she was gone.

Of course, since gods cannot grow old, it would mean that he only looked tired.

To the point that it can be seen in the appearance of his incarnation.

“Did it go well?”

“Huh.”

Kirikiri asked the God of Balance, who was guarding the room of the God of Slowness, about his job.

“Fortunately, the God of Slowness seems to have no intention of moving.”

“I guess so.”

Kirikiri answered briefly and opened the door.

“Then, good work.”

The God of Balance nodded his head without a word.

Kirikiri escaped from the room of the God of Slowness and entered the Hundred Gods Temple.

The door started closing behind her.

Kirikiri, who looked back without thinking, was amazed at the unexpected sight.

Apparently, Lee Ho-jae, who should have been unable to move, was running around in perfect condition.

“...N, no!”

*

“Oh, are you here?”

Hochi asked.

It was a question out of peace and boredom.

“Did you bring Jun-seok?”

Come to think of it, Hochi only knew that I had gone to pick up Lee Jun-seok.

I thought about what I had to do to explain all the things I had experienced in Thanatos.

I decided not to.

It was too long to explain right away.

Hochi was fiddling with his system window.

He seemed to be looking at the church's situation.

Since the church has grown to a global scale, I had been told that it was difficult to manage.

This is unavoidable because the number of managers was insufficient compared to the sudden growth.

Without the system window, the essence of the church would have been altered.

The sects are divided, and pseudo-religious people who mistake themselves as gods appear.

The system window was a great help not only for the growth of the church but also for its management.

As expected, I thought it was well done.

“Ta-da!”

The neck pillow on Hochi's neck suddenly began to move, and it changed to Yong-yong.

Yong-yong stepped on Hochi's shoulder and jumped into my arms.

I asked while holding Yong-yong.

“Why did you turn into a neck pillow? To get rid of dandruff?”

The words angered Hochi.

“Hey, I don’t have dandruff.”

“I was bored.”

Yong-yong seemed to have been bored a lot while I was gone.

Hochi must have been busy working too.

I hugged and patted Yong-yong, who was whining.

“Let’s go, Yong-yong. There is somewhere you need to go with me.”

I didn’t have much time.

I had to move before any useless disturbances came in.

“Hmm!”

Fortunately, Yong-yong accepted without asking where I was going.

Hochi, who was staring at me and Yong-yong, stood up from his seat.

“...I’ll go too.”

“Okay, then.”

The passage to the 61st floor was opened.

Yong-yong and Hochi passed over first, and I stepped forward to follow.

It was then.

I heard Kirikiri’s voice.

[Stop!]

I looked around to see where I was hearing it from.

Without my knowledge, the quest window opened.

[...Why, why are you doing this!?!]

Why are you doing this?

I had no intention of letting the world perish because you wanted to increase the odds.

[So reckless!]

Kirikiri said I was reckless.

As proof of that, I couldn't move because of the power of the God of Slowness.

"I got out, like this."

I said with open arms.

Kirikiri shouted again, apparently understanding what I was saying.

[Still!]

Whatever, though.

[Can you handle it? If you fail, everything will be over!]

[The world will be completely destroyed without even the last hope. All the futures and possibilities ahead of us will disappear!]

Kirikiri shouted one after another.

Rather than being angry, she seemed desperate.

[Please don't go in. It won't take long. If you try and die like this, there are no more chances left.]

“I just have to win.”

The odds are low, not none.

Never.

[If you don't win!]

I laughed at her words.

*

I sent Yong-yong and Hochi to Grandmother at the Ice Palace.

I walked towards the volcano alone.

Soon I was able to reach a huge door.

When I opened the door and entered, I saw Old Man lying halfway soaked in the lava.

Giant warriors gathered near Old Man and looked at him with anxious eyes.

Is he in bad condition?

“Are you okay?”

“I'm fine.”

Old Man replied nicely.

However, the answer resembled that of a patient lying in a hospital room.

Old Man wasn't just a little out of steam, he had a fatal inner wound.

The loss of divinity was such a great loss.

It will probably take a long time to settle properly.

If not, it was to regain confidence and divinity and restore health.

“Are we going?”

Old Man asked.

“Everyone noticed. I didn’t say anything.”

“Because I can feel it.”

“What.”

“Your excitement. And tension and determination. I can see it at a glance. Has the time finally come?”

I nodded.

“It’s a shame. We promised to be with you. And I only looked at that promise and came this far.”

Old Man slowly lifted himself up.

As his enormous body stood up, lava poured down like a waterfall.

It was Old Man’s body that always boasted a huge presence, but today it only seemed to be somehow sad.

“In the end, we can’t help with anything.”

I don’t think so.

They won’t be able to come with me at the last minute, but they made it this far.

Their efforts never meant nothing.

“I’m waiting for you. You will win and come back.”

*

A stadium with a strange interior mixed with lava and ice.

It’s a place I’ve been to before.

When I cleared the 61st floor.

It was the arena summoned when clearing both the Lava Palace and the Ice Palace.

“Dad!”

Yong-yong called out to me and eagerly ran towards me.

I thought while holding Yong-yong.

I headed to the Lava Palace, and Yong-yong and Hochi to the Ice Palace.

And that means we met again here.

I was able to clear the 61st floor through Yong-yong.

However, I had given up on exiting the 61st floor using Yong-yong as a challenger.

And that’s probably the best choice I’ve ever made in my life.

I gave a kiss to Yong-yong’s cheek.

Yong-yong laughed at the ticklish feeling.

“Yong-yong, I think Dad should go somewhere for a while.”

“Will it take long?”

“Probably, I guess.”

“Can I come with you?”

It’s a weird thing.

No matter how much I devoted my passion and hard work to Yong-yong’s education, it was surprising that both me and Hochi at the time raised Yong-yong into such a pretty and kind child.

Maybe Yong-yong had grown up well on his own.

He was such a very blessed child for us.

“No.”

So I didn’t want to expose Yong-yong to danger.

Yong-yong was sullen, but he didn’t ask me to take him away.

“I’m sorry.”

Hochi said so.

“What.”

“Just. Because I couldn’t help.”

I felt strange

I didn’t expect to hear this from Hochi.

I was always angry with Hochi for being useless, and Hochi had told me that it was none of his business.

“No, you helped a lot.”

Hochi kept frowning.

I didn't like the worries and anxiety that stood on that face.

"Hey, don't worry. You still can't believe in me."

"I believe in you."

"Then?"

"I'm still worried."

Hochi said so.

"Bye. Don't get hurt."

"Yes."

Thanks.

After swallowing the last words, I stepped back to the portal.

My body was engulfed in a bright light.

The next moment, I was standing in a beautiful garden.

Not a terrible garden that oozed blood from the floor, but a garden filled with the smell of grass and a gentle breeze.

There was an angry rabbit in the garden.

"Kirikiri."

"Hmph!"

*

"I'm not stopping you anymore."

I thought that as soon as Kirikiri saw me, she would try to hold me back again.

“You can’t stop me.”

At my words, Kirikiri said, stepping on the floor with her feet.

Her way of expressing her dissatisfaction was more childish than Yong-yong.

“I can’t stop you on my own!”

I guess so.

If she does, she will be caught by the God of Order like the God of the Sky.

“And Hooooo Jaaeeee is an unconvinced idiot!”

“What a bummer, that’s a bit too much to say.”

“The strange name Hooooo Jaaeeee is worse!”

Hoo, even personal attacks.

“I’ll buy you a cake instead.”

“Won’t eat it!”

This was a little shocking.

Don’t you love cakes?

Kirikiri suddenly sighed, then sat down.

“I’ll give you some helpful information.”

“Can you do that?”

“...That’s my role.”

This way, it felt the same as when I was doing the previous tutorial.

Before entering the stage, I got brief advice and information from Kirikiri.

Kirikiri gave all the details.

At the time of the Tutorial, I could see that she was giving almost all the information for my growth.

I memorized the information Kirikiri told me bit by bit.

I had never lost money by taking her advice.

After her story, Kirikiri bowed her head to her knees in front of me.

“Hing, if you go in alone like this, you will surely die.”

You are still worried.

A portal has already appeared in front of me.

And a faint voice came from the portal.

[Challenge.]

It was a voice I’ve heard several times already.

The voice of the God of Order.

Perhaps it was funny to think that the rush to challenge was encouraging me to challenge before it went according to Kirikiri’s plan.

“I’m going.”

After saying so, I stepped up on the portal.

I left Kirikiri behind, and the familiarity that was felt in the simple actions as I stepped up on the portal.

And the familiar tension.

“Don’t die!”

Listening to Kirikiri’s farewell, I was moved.

[Welcome, challenger Lee Ho-jae.]

The message that appeared before my eyes greeted me.

It was a narrow and dark passage.

It was an atmosphere reminiscent of the first floor of the Tutorial.

I checked my condition.

There was nothing wrong.

My clothes were the same as what I was wearing, and the swords on my waist were the same.

[Mayday, Mayday.]

I’m with Seregia, who speaks erratic words without end.

[Wa, warrior...? Why am I here?]

Ahbooboo is confused.

I comforted Ahbooboo’s whining of his resentment, by saying that I would return him to the God of the Sky when this was over.

And I looked ahead again.

As if until now it was just a tutorial.

As if this was the true game, I felt the ominous and dangerous energy from the walls of the narrow passage.

And from afar, the God of Order was felt.

I spoke towards that place.

“I said it. The power that you stole, I’ll go back someday to get it back.”

The God of Order did not respond to my words.

One step forward.

And I paused for a moment at the chills that I felt.

The hideous energy felt on the other side of the dark passage felt just as dangerous.

But I took another step forward.

There were long and long steps I had walked before, so I was able to walk one step at a time during this moment without hesitation.

It was a long tutorial.

And it was a very difficult tutorial.

That’s why I was sure.

Now that I have finally finished all preparations and put my goals in front of me.

I will not be defeated, nor will I give up.

-END-

PDF by: traitor/SEN

THE TUTORIAL IS TOO HARD

- 튜토리얼이 너무 어렵다 -

- VOLUME 12 -

-AUTHOR-
Gandara

[Nocturne Translations]

Side Story 1

Iddy (1)

[Round 11, Day 4. 6:22]

[The 6th floor gate begins.]

Description: It has already been 50 years since the cursed priests of the Bahar Church were marked by the continent and pursued to gain merit. As you know, the Bahar Church is a society that seeks to resurrect the dead, turn their souls into demons, and harvest more lives.

Their leader, Quezas, and 16 priests succeeded in escaping the pursuit of the Knights Order and reached the heart of the White Mountains.

The heart of the White Mountain range is also called the New Heaven and Earth, the place where the gods came in the past.

The cursed social priests are trying to cover the continent with nightmares using the fragments of divinity remaining in New Heaven and Earth.

Warriors, you are the only ones who can stop them until the Knights arrive here.

[Success conditions]

1. Stop the Death Army from advancing outside the White Mountains until the arrival of the Knights Order.
2. Destroy the Death Army and defeat 16 priests.

[Current party member (1/5)]

1. Lee Ho-jae

“Have a great death!”

Shouted the skeleton knight.

It had a daunting appearance, unlike skeleton soldiers, befitting the grand dialogue.

A larger body, somehow glossy skeleton bones, and a large, heavy sword.

At first, I was excited and thought that he was the final boss on the 6th floor.

It had high intelligence and I could even have a conversation with it, so it was not unreasonable for me to be mistaken.

[Kim Min-hyuk, 14th floor: Hey, are you listening to me?]

[Lee Ho-jae, 6th floor: Uh-huh.]

“Uwooo!”

The skeleton knight shouted and swung his heavy sword.

I answered Kim Min-hyuk’s message roughly, and deflected the skeleton knight’s sword with a shield.

Perhaps because the large sword was too heavy for a skeleton knight without muscles to swing, the skeleton knight was swayed by the weight of the sword.

With my shield at the forefront, I bashed into the skull knight.

The skeleton knight fell back and rolled around.

The sound of bone bumping against the stone floor sounded ugly.

It was unbelievable that just a few months ago, everytime a skeleton knight attacked me, I was brought to the edge of the underworld.

[Lee Ho-jae, 6th floor: What's going on?]

[Kim Min-hyuk, 14th floor: The next day of dialogue agreement (*) has been announced.]

Is it another day of dialogue agreement?

It is the second day of conversation since being trapped on the 6th floor.

It is already the third day of the dialogue agreement.

[Lee Ho-jae, 6th floor: It will be noisy again.]

I sent a message again, kicking the leg joints of the skeleton knight trying to raise its body.

The skeleton knight once again rolled on the floor.

[Kim Min-hyuk, 14th floor: It's already raging. It's been a few days since the dialogue agreement day was announced. Soon, information will begin to circulate to the community.]

Kim Min-hyuk regularly informed me of important information that had not spread to the community.

Since I was trapped on the 6th floor for 8 months, I couldn't gain any information except from Kim Min-hyuk and the community.

I ended the conversation after hearing some more news from Kim Min-hyuk.

“Kaaak! Come to me! Power of death!”

The skeleton knight who was being beaten by me shouted wildly.

Then the heavy sword that the skeleton knight was holding began to turn dark.

It looked pretty grand, but in fact it was just a signal to call the skeleton soldiers.

“Warrior! Death be upon you! I, Asde, the death knight will give you rest...!”

Kuak!

I rushed to the shouting skeleton knight and swung my shield toward its head.

Although it was a soft wooden shield, it became a more powerful weapon than a decent blunt weapon when it was infused with magical power.

When its head, its only weakness, was smashed, the skeleton knight became powder and began to disappear.

I picked up the heavy sword dropped by the skeleton knight.

I needed this.

[Kyaaaak~!]

I heard the sound of skeleton soldiers running after being called.

Two crossroads were seen behind the remains of the skeleton knight.

That crossroad was a problem.

The primary goal of the sixth floor is defense.

Until the arrival of the Knights, it is to stop the skeleton soldiers from exiting this cave.

However, no matter how much I waited and waited, the Knights did not come.

It was 26 days.

That was my record for how long I endured against the skeleton soldiers.

From then on, I couldn't really stop the skeleton soldiers.

As if being pushed by a wave, I was pushed by the quantity and weight of the skeleton soldiers and was sent to the exit.

I had to revise the plan.

Instead of waiting for the Knights, I decided to first target the final goal of the mission, the 16 Priests.

It was the crossroads that became a problem here.

When you enter one of the forked roads, skeleton soldiers protruding from the other road will run to the exit.

I couldn't go to the heart of the cave, blocking both paths, unless I was using an alter ego to block both paths.

And the solution I found was this skeleton knight's sword.

When a skeleton knight is rushing to the defensive, he calls the skeleton soldiers around him.

The effect remains on the sword even after the skeleton knight dies.

In other words, as long as you are holding the skeleton knight's heavy sword, all skeleton soldiers in the vicinity will run towards you, not the exit.

[Ahhhhhhh!]

[Kyaaaaa-!]

The voices of the skeleton soldiers are now close enough to be heard clearly.

The sharp footsteps knocking on the stone floor resonate like a quick drum.

Because of the reverberation of the floor, the hard cave floor rocked like I was on a bed.

Now, here comes the next problem.

There is the skeleton knight's heavy sword with a wide-area aggro effect, so the problem of the skeleton soldiers ignoring me and running to the exit disappeared.

However, a new issue has arisen that requires me to face the skeleton soldiers flocking from all directions.

Suddenly, the appearance of skeleton soldiers running toward me came into view.

I have seen the skeleton soldiers many, many, many, many times, but every time I see them, I get sick.

“How many days will it take this time?”

At first, I was really excited about this fight, but now I'm really tired of it.

The battle that continued without a break was really hard work.

“Ahhhhhhh!”

“Keaaahhh!”

Skeleton soldiers who had come around the corner rushed in screaming.

Hundreds and thousands of skeletons screamed at once.

In order not to be overwhelmed, I also responded to them.

“Aaaaahhh! Don’t open your mouths because they smell rotten! You sons of bitches!”

[Soul Cry]

Not long ago, the skeleton soldiers in the line became stiff for an instant as they shouted along with their new soul cry skill.

I didn’t miss that gap and jumped towards the skeleton soldiers.

A heavy sword struck, and the remains of the smashed bones scattered frantically.

[The God of Adventure is watching you.]

* * *

[Round 11th, Day 19. 2:02.]

I’m dying

Really.

After fighting for more than 15 days, I was able to reach the end of the stage on the 6th floor.

The final goal of the 6th floor stage is the 16 priests, right in front of the common where they live. Now, a little further, I could face them.

The result was just around the corner, but I had to stop.

My feet couldn’t step forward.

I forced my creaky legs to move. Leaning against the wall, I took the jerky out of my inventory and put it in my mouth.

It wasn't the usual jerky.

Like the Senzu Beans in Dragon Ball, it was a jerky that made the body full and healthy even if you ate a little bit.

It was very expensive, but it was worth it.

When I chewed the salty jerky, saliva gathered in my mouth little by little.

As soon as I felt the moisture in my mouth, which had been as dry as a rice field cracked by drought, I spit out in surprise.

I spit out the jerky along with it.

I smelled rotten corpses in my mouth.

It was a natural result.

I've been fighting skeletons without time to rinse my mouth, let alone wash my body.

There must have been a lot of dirt in my mouth.

In fact, the saliva I spit out was black like filthy water.

I rinsed my mouth with water, took out a new jerky and put it in my mouth.

Fortunately, there was no sign of skeleton soldiers approaching.

Perhaps the priests have noticed my approach.

Rather than sending out the skeleton soldiers, it was clear that they were gathering them.

It was the limit.

It is not the first time I have been here.

But it was like this every time I came.

I had to push myself to the limit every time.

I put the back of my head on the wall.

The cold wall touched my feverish head.

I just closed my eyes.

I couldn't afford to sit or lie down.

I was worried that if I fell down like this, I would not be able to get up again.

'You went too far. You always do.'

In the midst of becoming dazed, a quiet voice passed by my ears.

That is what I heard one day.

Who said it?

I didn't remember.

'I'd rather just rest. Give up. Please stop.'

It was when I was nine years old.

I pushed my friend off the stairs.

It's questionable if I can call the child I pushed off the stairs a friend, but let's just skip past it.

In elementary school, everyone in the same class was a friend.

I didn't feel particularly guilty after pushing my friend off the stairs.

It wasn't because I was a psychopath.

It's a problem I'm unsure about now, but I certainly wasn't back then.

It was an unavoidable fight against a friend who had been picking on a group of children.

I didn't even push hard.

When the uproar broke out, I thought the teacher would notice that there was discord in the class, and it would work out.

It was a shallow thought.

My friend wasn't badly hurt.

His knee was a little injured.

Of course, I was called to the teacher's office, and they called my house.

I thought I was a victim but I became a perpetrator.

I had to kneel and pray with my sister who came to elementary school in a school uniform.

It was 5 o'clock when I left school like that.

That was the case for a second grader in elementary school.

It was awkward to leave the quiet school gate while looking at the sunset sky.

It was like seeing a friend's smile reflected through the window of the car passing by us.

My sister, who I thought would punish me by picking up a tree branch that fell on the way home, only walked without saying anything.

When we were almost home, my sister said,

“Why didn’t you break his knee?”

That wasn’t supposed to be said.

It wasn’t an educational and emotionally desirable thing for an older sister to say to her nine-year-old brother.

But it was warm to me.

It was such great comfort that there was one person who sided with me regardless of right or wrong.

The next day, I broke my friend’s leg, and my sister had to be called back to school.

Since then, nothing like my sister getting called to school happened again.

My sister said it one time.

She said she regretted saying that to me at that time.

I did not regret it.

I opened my eyes.

[Round 11, Day 19. 2:36.]

I just opened and closed my eyes for a while, but a fairly long time had passed.

In the distance a little farther away, I heard the rattling sound of skeleton soldiers.

I quietly listened to the sound and tried to guess the number of skeleton soldiers.

I was now on the verge of getting the number of skeleton soldiers just by hearing the sound of the snapping of their bones.

During only 15 minutes of rest, the number of skeleton soldiers increased considerably.

Now it was time to move again.

The more you delay, the more dangerous it will be.

Slowly I took my back off the wall.

I felt a heavy tiredness in my back where I had no place to lean on.

(*) Editor Note: The dialogue agreement refers to the challengers meeting and making agreements during a large summoning by the managers.

Side Story 2

Iddy (2)

“You are brave but that is foolish courage! You have taken the wrong path! I, Quezas, will lead you to your death!”

“Servant of the false god! Face the great power of the abyss! Only one absolute good that exists will be the salvation of this absurd world!”

The final goal of the 6th floor stage, Tutorial Hell difficulty:

Quezas, the head of the 16 priests, is a very talkative guy.

He says a lot of weird nonsense, and the problem is that the nonsense causes a very serious level of irritation.

I’m tired in both body and mind, and he’s been dragging his time with drivel; who would possibly enjoy this?

“Fool, beguiled by the delusion of eternal life! Behold, this is the true image of me, Quezas!”

He even transformed into a giant squid at the last minute.

I hate the boss fights that suddenly transform and enter a second phase right when I kill them.

The hell.

They should just come out like this from the beginning. By the time I have killed them, they transform and heal all damage.

So mean.

The annoying Quezas is now spitting black blood out of his mouth, with his chest pierced by the skeleton knight's heavy sword.

What is it, ink?

After transforming into a squid-like thing, it seems that his species has become a squid too.

“Wa, warrior.....!”

Pookh!

This guy is going to talk about nonsense again.

He can speak even though he has a huge heavy sword in his chest like a vampire pierced by a stake.

His tenacity for chatting is surprising.

I picked up the heavy sword embedded in Quezas's chest and stabbed it into him again.

Quezas had a seizure, then again vomited black blood.

“...In my life, I've never seen a man who was as brave and strong as you...”

I guess so.

I haven't seen one either.

“Warrior. Please do not be deceived by the deceptions of false gods... The only good that exists in this world is... Keuhaak!”

It's called death.

I've had enough of that damn death admiration.

I even got to memorize some lines.

Pukh! Pukh! Pukh!

Again, I punctured Quezas's chest and made him pay the price for this annoying nonsense.

Even at this point, Quezas did not die.

Rather, I should say that he cannot die.

When I looked at Quezas's face distorted in pain, it seemed right.

I spent some time torturing Quezas like that for a while.

Leaning on a heavy sword holding a cane.

When only the black blood bubbles on Quezas's mouth came out, and no sound was heard.

When my trembling knees got closer to the floor.

[Acquired Curse Resistance Lv.7.]

The message I was waiting for appeared.

The reason why I remained here even though I had beaten all the stages on the 6th floor.

It was a message informing that the curse resistance skill had risen by one level and reached level 7.

It was a message letting me know that I had nothing left to get from this stage on the 6th floor.

It was also a message to let me know that I was ready to move on again.

Finally.

It's time to leave this place.

I stepped on Quezas's head and smashed it.

He was tough and able to hold on to his life, but even he couldn't live after his head had been smashed.

Immediately a message appeared.

[You have cleared the 6th floor of Tutorial Hell difficulty.]

[All conditions and injuries are recovered.]

It was a clear message.

Immediately, the healing effect was activated.

The wounds that had been inscribed on my body healed, and the feeling of fatigue that had covered my whole body disappeared.

It was weird.

After clearing the 6th floor, I thought I would be very happy.

I wondered if I would run around excited and cheer like a child.

When I was training alone, I sometimes imagined that.

The appearance of myself who cleared the 6th floor.

But contrary to my imagination, my mood was calm.

I shook my head.

The feeling was also strange.

My fatigue was gone.

In fact, there was no discomfort when moving my body.

But it wasn't refreshing.

There was no difference from a little while ago when I was crushed by fatigue.

It was just that my body moved much more smoothly.

It was strange.

[The God of Slowness is paying attention to you.]

Paying attention.

Immediately after clearing the stage, a message appeared asking if I would try to become an apostle of the God of Slowness.

[The God of Adventure is also paying attention to you!]

[The God of Adventure pays attention to you eagerly.]

In addition, the God of Adventure.

It seemed that the God of Adventure was just imitating the God of Slowness.

The concept of an apostle appeared, which made me quite embarrassed.

As I attacked the 6th floor, I knew that the interests of the gods were increasing day by day, but I didn't know that something like this would appear.

I thought about it for a while and came to a conclusion.

Let's ask Kirikiri.

Thinking that way, I tried to step up on the portal that appeared right in front of me.

Then I realized that I had forgotten one thing, and I was flabbergasted.

8 months, it has been too long.

Thanks to that, I forgot.

Kirikiri hates when I come into her fields with blood on.

She hates it so much.

When I cleared the 4th floor with blood on my body, Kirikri even backed away to avoid me.

I took a towel out of my inventory and wiped the blood off my body.

It was easy to clean because my wounds had already healed and the bleeding had stopped.

But it couldn't be completely wiped off.

The blood that was too old had already dried up on my skin and was not easily cleaned.

After trying to clean, I was able to get on the portal.

The portal started to glow brightly.

My eyes, which had been accustomed to the dark cave for such a long time, frowned due to the sudden light.

I felt a brief dizziness, and soon I could notice that I was standing somewhere other than a cave.

Instead of the bloody scent and rotten odor that had been in the cave, I smelled the scent of grass.

The sunlight from the sky was mild, unlike the light of the portal that hurt my eyes, and brought warmth to my cold frozen body.

It was so beautiful and peaceful.

It looked even more so when contrasted to where I was before.

In the middle of a bright, open field, I cried unconsciously.

Had it not been for the rabbit girl who shook her arms and ran, I may have been doing that for a long time.

* * *

“Ahahang.”

Kirikiri, who quietly ate the cake, laughed briefly as if she had thought of something.

Soon she started to scoop the cake again.

And.

“Ehahahang. Hooooo-jaaaeeee was crying!”

“Noisy.”

“Crybaby!”

I can’t.

I took the fork from Kirikiri’s hand.

Although I was thinking of taking the fork I had taken as a hostage, Kirikiri didn’t stick to the fork and began to scoop the cake with her bare hands.

Oh, she eats anything with her bare hands.

The triumphant smile on Kirikiri's face was extraordinarily disgusting.

On the side, I watched Kirikiri suck her finger loudly, and I thought about the need to take away the plate.

I decided to stop.

As long as it's been a long time, Kirikiri probably hasn't had a cake in a long time.

I returned the fork to Kirikiri.

"Hihing."

Kirikiri turned her head round and round and smiled.

It is unusual for Kirikiri to turn to something that isn't on a plate while eating a cake.

"Why."

"Hi-hing, do you have anything you want to ask me?"

Kirikiri asked.

Of course there was something I wanted to ask.

"It's okay to ask now!"

Kirikiri exclaimed exultingly, pushing her chest out.

I knew how great the decision in that statement was.

Kirikiri is putting off the cake.

Kirikiri, who is proud of her role as a manager and advisor, seems to want to tell me this and that after a long time.

I couldn't make that decision go away.

I asked what I was most curious about.

"The Knights Order."

"Eing?"

"What day does the Knight Order arrive?"

The primary goal of the 6th floor was to hold on until the arrival of the Knights.

However, in the cave on the 6th floor, I have never seen a grave robber, let alone the Knights.

"Is that what you're curious about?"

Then what should I be curious about?

Until I finally gave up on waiting, it was my biggest concern as to when the damn Knights would come.

I even wrote a journal alone.

This time it lasted a long time.

The Knights did not come.

Let's endure ten more days next time.

Probably, the Knights will come on the tenth day.

Well, like this.

Every time I updated the record like that, I didn't know how crazy I was.

No way, don't tell me the Knight Order came-

“Day 30!”

Yeah, so it's the last day 30.

Damn it.

Do they really come on the last day?

Who the hell designed this tutorial?

You have to be moderately absurd and irrational to...ahaha...I see...
I'll just move on.

It was designed so that it would not be possible to exhaust them without being very crazy.

* * *

I asked Kirikiri for some information.

As the 6th floor was so difficult, I thought I could hear a lot of information.

The information that can be heard was limited again this time.

“Because it's very expensive information.”

First, it was information on the soul exploitation skill obtained as a reward for clearing the 6th floor.

You can go to the waiting room and check the details.

Next was information on the ‘Apostle Proposal’ of the God of Adventure and the God of Slowness that appeared immediately after clearing.

Kirikiri did not explain in detail, saying that information about gods was expensive.

But I could hear a minimal explanation for basic understanding.

It was the information that if you accepted the offer, you could get one more power skill and that even if you accepted the offer, nothing would change immediately.

Accepting the offer means you must meet the conditions for becoming an apostle.

The conditions vary greatly depending on the individuality of each god.

That is all the information I heard from Kirikiri

Let's think about it a little.

Choosing a god or religion to worship, and gaining some abilities in return is a common setting in many games.

Nevertheless, in many ways, I was reluctant to become an apostle of a god, but Kirikiri advised that it would not hurt.

If Kirikiri said that, then there would be nothing wrong with being an apostle.

I believed so.

After all, in this crazy tutorial that forces people to come and challenge the stage and die out in succession as a result, Kirikiri was the one who felt guilty and regretful about the fact.

I knew the humanity she had.

It was unlikely that Kirikiri would give any advice that would really hurt the challenger.

Let's say I accept the offer.

So now the question remains as to whether to choose between the God of Adventure and the God of Slowness.

The basis of judgment was about two things: the god's personality and the power skill as a reward.

Then,

[The God of Adventure looks at you.]

Kirikiri was also sitting across from me wondering which god I would choose, watching with deep eyes.

In fact, there was nothing to worry about for long.

If you compare the two gods, the answer is already decided.

I will choose the God of Adventure and the God of Slowness.

[The God of Adventure was shocked.]

What do you mean 'shocked'?

It was an obvious choice.

There was a clear difference in performance between the blink skills presented by the God of Slowness and Talaria's Wing Skills presented by the God of Adventure.

Talaria's Wing skill is definitely a good power skill, but blink is too overpowered.

Even when I thought about the gods' personalities, it was so

Why would I choose a god that seems to be staring at me all day, without doing anything?

[The God of Adventure is embarrassed.]

[The God of Adventure pleads that that is not true.]

Since then, the message of the God of Adventure continued to appear, but I decided to ignore it.

What to do?

Should I make a choice here right now?

I can also choose after learning more about the gods.

If I choose right away, there is an advantage that I can get one more power skill right now.

However, due to lack of information, there is also the downside of choosing a god that does not fit me.

“What shall we do?”

When there was something I didn’t know, it was most comfortable to ask Kirikiri.

Kirikiri replied, as if waiting for me to ask.

“Of course, it’s better to learn more about the gods and choose! The best thing in the world is to be safe!”

Kirikiri even hopped while preaching her opinion.

They say that the fast guy always has the fastest way to go; you have to look at life for a long time.

Well, it wasn’t wrong.

Should I postpone the choice too?

“Yep!”

But there was one disturbing matter.

It was the next floor, the 7th floor stage.

Like the 6th floor, the 7th floor was a stage requiring party play.

It took 8 months to clear the 6th floor alone.

It would be really difficult if it took a similar amount of time to clear the 7th floor.

At this speed, I will grow old and die before completing the 100-floor tutorial.

I thought it might be better to get one more power right away for clearing the next stage.

“No!”

Kirikiri screamed.

“Hooooo-jaaaaeee has to trust himself more! He will be able to clear the 7th floor in no time! Now! Go ahead! Go ahead!”

Kirikiri grabbed my hand and forcibly lifted it above my head and waved it, telling me to do my best.

It was arbitrary support.

I answered that I knew and got up from my seat.

Now it was time to go back to the stage.

I thought as I approached the portal.

Is it really okay for me to become an apostle?

It was a bit uncomfortable.

Of course, Kirikiri said there would be no harm.

Maybe I should live like a monk.

If you have to live by being a devout religious person and obeying hard doctrines.

I really don't think that's right.

While contemplating that, I tried to step up on the portal, but Kirikiri spoke abruptly.

"The gods know that much."

"...What?"

I asked a little belatedly as I was startled.

Sometimes I was surprised to know that Kirikiri could read my thoughts.

"You can't stand a quiet, peaceful, monotonous life."

It was true, but it strangely sounded like a curse.

"And it's okay, you don't have to worry that the gods will force you to fit."

"What does that mean?"

Kirikiri said, staring at my face.

"The position of the apostles of the gods that you have proposed will fit well with your disposition.

“With my disposition?”

“There’s no way a god would want to make a human their apostle who doesn’t fit their disposition. The suggestion means that the appearance of Hooooo-jaaaaeee that they’ve seen so far and his future actions match what the gods want.”

I paused and spent time understanding Kirikiri’s words.

My appearance and my actions matched what the gods wanted and liked.

I thought about what I’ve been through and what I’ve done since I entered the Tutorial.

I soon realized one thing.

Both the God of Slowness and the God of Adventure are not sane gods.

Side Story 3

Iddy (3)

[Round 11, Day 29. 4:20.]

[Waiting room on the 7th floor]

Something was awkward.

This ticklish feeling in my chest.

Is it because the waiting room on the 6th floor had become too familiar?

The scenery of the waiting room on the 7th floor felt strange.

I felt uneasy.

I'm not an elementary school student on a picnic.

I took a jerky out of my inventory.

It wasn't a high-efficiency emergency food jerky, usually eaten on stages.

It was a jerky made specifically for meals.

The liver wasn't too salty and its aroma was rich.

It was well cooked, so even if you only ate a meal of jerky without other foods, you wouldn't feel sick.

I opened the community window while munching on beef jerky.

It was a habit.

Like sitting on the toilet seat and reading a comic book, I checked out the community window whenever I had a leisurely meal.

This is comforting in its own way.

Watching people talk in the comment window.

When you roll around to death with skeletons that say ‘kyaak, I often feel a strange impression of humanity, even one that is as small as a rat’s shit.

It was comforting to see people just chatting.

From my point of view, the current community atmosphere is very uncomfortable.

The atmosphere in the community is very chaotic.

As Kim Min-hyuk predicted.

The jerky in my mouth suddenly felt salty.

It was unavoidable.

Information spread that the third day of the dialogue meeting will be held soon.

Until now, there was only one condition for the meeting to be held.

When there is a conflict between challengers within the Tutorial and how to solve it.

The system punishes neither party of the dispute.

It just puts all the challengers in one place.

It seems like you have to solve it yourself.

The fact that the dialogue meeting day is announced means that there is a serious level of conflict between the challengers somewhere in the Tutorial.

Each other's nerves were bound to sharpen.

Moreover, the dialogue agreement was not a place for friendly dialogue.

It was close to the Colosseum, where two opposing forces clashed to win and survive.

The first day of dialogue was held because of a private organization called the Representative Association.

It was an organization that tried to create a structure to intimidate and exploit newbies in the waiting room, aiming to expand to the entire Tutorial.

When the first day of dialogue agreement was held, the Representative Association and opposing forces clashed, and the Representative Association was defeated.

The second day of dialogue agreement was caused by the internal strife of the Vigilante Group, which was created by destroying the Representative Association.

The aim of the Vigilante Group was to prevent criminal activity as well as protect and support the remaining challengers on the lower floors.

However, at some point, the top rankers, who were the main forces of the Vigilante Group, began to have different ideas.

They were displeased with the selfless use of their abilities and knowledge for others.

They wanted to be privileged, not volunteers.

The Vigilante Group thus became the new ruling class.

It was a natural flow.

They were the ones who had more abilities and information, and they were the ones leading the other challengers at the highest level.

However, there was one variable that no one thought of.

That variable was Park Jung-ah, who was the Vigilante Group's face madam*, exceeding everyone's expectations.

Suddenly, a clash between the challengers began.

Bloodshed occurred in several waiting rooms, and the community was flooded with agitation.

The war went beyond a small conflict, and thus another day of dialogue agreement was held.

The war ended poorly.

With countless bodies left behind.

And the third day of dialogue agreement was announced.

Everyone was thinking the same thing.

Another war is coming.

With a sigh, I turned off the community window.

I was chewing the jerky in my mouth blankly, and I suddenly felt stuffy.

It was impatience.

I felt sorry for having a comfortable meal and resting.

I whisked the remaining jerky into my mouth at once and swallowed it whole.

Fortunately, it didn't get caught in my throat.

However, when I forcibly swallowed the piece of jerky that was not chewed properly, I felt uncomfortable in my stomach.

The stuffiness got worse.

I felt a pressure, as if something were going to happen right away.

I drank water in a hurry, rinsed my mouth, and opened my inventory.

It was difficult to breathe.

There was no problem with my respiratory rate.

My lungs were also functioning properly.

But, like when you are diving in water and just get out, my brain felt like it wanted more oxygen.

I'm losing my mind.

In this case, just sitting still and breathing hard does not help.

I am already breathing abundantly.

I opened up my inventory and checked to see if there were any items that could help.

There was a scarf I knitted on the 6th floor.

It was a scarf that had already been completed.

I urgently looked to see if there were any missing parts on the scarf.

There weren't.

No, looking closely, the scarf seemed a little short.

I quickly pulled out the end of the shawl and started knitting.

It was only then that my breathing began to subside little by little.

* * *

[Round 11, Day 29. 4:30.]

Instead of going straight to the 7th floor, I decided to take some time to train.

There were two reasons.

The first was the Soul Exploitation skill obtained as a reward for clearing the 6th floor.

[Soul Exploitation (Lv. Max)]

Description: A power gifted to you by an unnamed god.

It is the ability to directly interfere with the soul of an enemy.

Subjects within the range of soul exploitation are bound by the path of the soul, feeling fatigued and pressured for unknown reasons.

The caster can gain a small amount of life by killing a target within the range of soul exploitation.

It was an interesting skill.

But I couldn't try it right away.

In order to use soul exploitation, a target enemy has to exist.

The second reason for delaying the attack on the 7th floor was to continue my recent training.

In the past, training was easy.

It wasn't a matter of difficulty, it was just that simple.

You just swung your sword to train your strength and sword skills and hurt yourself to increase your tolerance.

But at some point, I hit a wall.

The relevant skills were not rising.

I had to find another way of training.

The method I found on the 6th floor was meditation.

I learned how to operate on magic alone, meditated to become more proficient, and gradually moved the magic of my body little by little.

I don't know if it's the right way.

There was no one to teach me.

However, I managed to produce results.

For up to 10 minutes, the magic could be used on my arms, hands, feets and limbs.

At some point, even this stalled as if it had hit a wall too.

Recently, I have been focusing on imagery training.

It is to battle alone while imagining that you have an enemy.

But isn't it fun if you just do it?

I applied magic to my sword.

Magic adds strength to the blade and increases the durability of the weapon.

Stronger, sharper.

The effect was quite simple for dealing with the mysterious power of magic, but there was nothing as effective as this from the standpoint of dealing with weapons.

I swung the magic sword toward my left leg.

The underside of my thigh was cut very neatly.

Blood spewed out like a waterfall.

I quickly attached a bandage to the cut surface of my leg.

And I wrapped it tightly and tied it up.

The bandage was meticulously tied, but the blood from the wound was dripping on the floor.

It didn't matter because the bandage wasn't tied to stop bleeding in the first place.

I leaned against my sword like a cane and stood up from my seat.

My leg wasn't broken or fractured, but it was cut.

This greatly destroyed my sense of balance.

Standing still by itself made me uncomfortable.

For ordinary humans, the loss of their legs will lead to a loss of mobility.

That was a loss of combat power.

But not for me.

If you had muscle strength and a sense of balance beyond human limits, and Talaria's wings and Blink, you could somehow continue to battle.

The training I'm doing now is training to get more used to the situation of losing my limbs.

The waiting room is dark.

A small light on the high ceiling.

Far from the window, it is a weak light to illuminate a closed, gapless room.

In the corner of the waiting room immersed in darkness, skeletons began to rise slowly.

There were also skeleton knights and priests from the end of the 6th floor.

It was a familiar sight.

So it was easy to imagine.

[Kyaaaakk!]

Skulls screamed.

It was too lively to be the illusion I had imagined.

Even the vibrations transmitted through the sound seemed to be felt.

I've seen it too many times.

How many times did I see it? I was able to reproduce in detail even a piece of the skulls.

It was familiar because of the countless experiences.

[Kyaaaak!]

[Kyaaa-]

With only one leg left, I kicked strongly against the floor.

So I screamed and rushed face to face toward the skeletons that ran.

* * *

My heart pounding in my chest fluttered.

New stages, new enemies, new hardships!

I was like a pervert, I was even feeling a strange sense of pleasure.

What kind of hardships and adversity will the new stage present to me?

I moved to the 7th floor full of anticipation.

[You have entered the 7th floor stage.]

The 7th floor stage was a small room.

It was amazing.

Like the 6th floor, the 7th floor was a stage requiring party play.

Of course I thought it would be spread out in a large area like the sixth floor.

However, when I came in, it was a small, sealed cavity of about 30 pyeong.

(T/N: pyeong = 3.30508 square meter. Used to measure real estate in Korea.)

It was even empty.

Empty.

What.

You want me to do yoga in an empty space?

You want me to do a million push-ups?

I asked Kirikiri for advice on attacking the 7th floor.

She said that the training I'm doing recently would be of great help on the 7th floor.

The training is, of course, the imagery training with one leg cut.

This is the stage where such training will be helpful.

I had no idea.

Is there a landmine on the floor?

I looked closely at the cavity.

I noticed geometric paintings engraved on the wall.

Its shape looked similar to the Tutorial portal.

[The 7th floor gateway begins.]

Description: The Trial on the 7th floor consists of three stages.

Each level contains 2, 3, and 9 rooms.

Each room can be traversed through a magic circle engraved on the wall.

Each room contains a number of Izaaku's Disaster Dombas and one of their mother bodies.

Clear the first trial to learn more about the 7th floor.

1. Clear all rooms and defeat all enemies.

1. Clear stage 2.7-1.

1. ?

1. ?

Unlike the 6th floor, there was no explanation of the setting such as the worldview behind it.

Can I just kill the enemies and clear the stage?

It's okay.

That's neat.

Well, there were no Knights to wait for so I touched the wall with the pattern of the portal.

Then, a faint light leaked out of the wall.

[Would you like to move?]

It really is a portal.

As soon as you cross this portal, a dangerous situation will unfold.

I took out a weapon from my inventory, tied it to my waist, and checked the joints of my armor.

Okay, I'm ready to go.

“Yes.”

The place I moved to was exactly the same shape as the dark cavity I had just stood in.

There was one difference.

Unlike the previous room, which was empty without anything, in this room now.

Thump, thump.

There were monsters wandering around.

They looked like short, naked humans.

There was no hair at all, of course, on their bodies.

They looked like newborn rats.

They were strangely human-like, but unpleasant to look at.

These are probably the monsters in the message called Dombas.

The monsters didn't rush right away, even though I was moved into the room.

They didn't seem to notice my existence in the first place.

I held my breath and did not move.

There were no eyes on the faces of the monsters.

They may be a species that has deteriorated vision as they are in a dark cavity.

If so, they'll use their hearing or smell.

If they had developed a sense of smell, they would have already noticed my existence, which means that they depend on hearing.

I carefully observed the monsters.

The monsters were moving slowly.

With a constant flow line.

They went back and forth in the same place as if they were units that issued patrol orders for reconnaissance in the game.

Their number is thirty-one.

Thirty of the same-looking monsters were mixed with a slightly unusual one.

The peculiar one stood still in the center of the cavity.

Unlike the other guys who are moving smoothly, this one didn't move at all.

That's probably the 'mother body' mentioned in the message.

What I had to do was simple and clear.

It was enough to catch all of them and kill them.

I slowly moved my hand to my waist to pull out my sword.

Shing.

That was the sound.

It wasn't the sound of a sword being pulled out, and it wasn't the sound of my feet moving.

There was a slight sound of my leather armor rubbing as I moved my hand to my waist.

The monsters were walking around, so the sound didn't even feel that loud.

However,

The monsters did not miss that small, foreign sound.

All the monsters in the room stopped moving and turned to me.

Eyeless faces turned to me.

They flashed with life.

The monsters' bare arms swung from the side.

I put magic in the shield on my left arm and swung it.

In the center of the shield was an iron hemisphere.

I thought I would hit the monster's arm and break the arm in reverse.

Bang!

My body was pushed back.

It was an unexpected shock, so I almost rolled back because I didn't give enough strength to my waist.

That was unexpected.

As I cleared the 6th floor, I gained some confidence.

Although I struggled on the 6th floor, it was overwhelming in number.

My confidence rose even more after defeating Priest Quezas, the most difficult enemy.

So it was embarrassing to see the situation in which the stupid eyeless monster that looked like that had absurdly pushed me back with a swinging arm.

The skinny arm of the monster that pushed me looked fine even though it collided with the magical shield.

The monster started running straight at me.

Huh, oh dear.

It's really ridiculous.

How much more difficult does this crazy tutorial have to be in order to get the job done?

I pulled out my sword.

The running monster's movement was simple.

This was good news.

They seem to have superior strength compared to skeleton soldiers and knights, but their movements are no different from those of wild animals.

I swung the sword at the speed of the monster running.

No, I was trying to swing it.

My right arm holding the sword was rigid.

It did not move.

Stiffness began from my shoulder, and the stiffness spread to the tips of my fingers.

I lifted it halfway, but my hand loosened, and the sword fell to the floor.

My arm was also completely weak and drooped.

Our eyes met in embarrassment.

The mother body that stood still in the center of the cavity.

The mother body was looking straight at me with shining, bright green eyes.

Intuitively, I guessed that those strange eyeballs caused the stiffness in my arms.

Thud.

Eventually, I couldn't cope with the monster that was running.

I had to hit it with my body as it was.

I rolled to the floor.

[Blink]

Using Blink in place, I erased the rolling kinetic energy and stopped in place.

The monster that hit me hadn't stopped yet.

That wasn't the problem.

The common monster wasn't the only one.

The monsters didn't scream at all, they didn't even have eyes, but the hostility they were sending me was so clearly felt.

They could see that I was crouching and tense like a cat and they were beasts on the verge of running forward.

Unsurprisingly, the monsters started running towards me almost at the same time.

The monsters attacked me from all sides, the mother body's green eyes were still shining, and my right arm was still motionless.

Wow.

That's true.

"It's exciting?"

Notes:

*) Face Madam: it is slang and literally it is sort of a bad word. but it can be used in a not bad way though. It represents someone who has an outstandingly beautiful face (every other person in his/her group is not beautiful or handsome like him or her) for instance.

Side Story 4

Iddy (4)

I stepped on the head of a monster that fell on the floor.

The head burst with the sound of a fruit popping.

Blood and brain fluid spewed out of the head, and bone fragments and brains could be found in the crushed debris.

It was a strangely reassuring sight.

It wasn't the crazy sound that calmed my mind at the grotesque sight.

At least, it was nice to see that these eyeless monsters are normal creatures.

These monsters were bizarre.

They were in appearance, but even more so with their physical ability.

Certainly, they seemed scrawny, thin arms and lacking muscle mass, but the force that came out of their arms surpassed the level of a skeleton soldier as well as a skeleton knight on the 6th floor.

If thirty of these guys were released on the day of the dialogue agreement, most of the challengers would probably be wiped out without being able to resist properly.

But that wasn't the only reason these guys made me feel terrible.

It isn't their physical ability, but it's creepy to hear those babbling words.

[It's exciting?]

[It's exciting.]

They were talking.

These guys who didn't even make a scream or cheer at first ran into me while talking.

[Exciting!]

[It's exciting?]

They were imitating the words I muttered unconsciously.

As if there was only one word, 'excitement' as a language in this world.

It didn't hurt me directly, but I felt uncomfortable.

Truly.

[Exciting!]

The monsters even looked excited.

Oh crazy.

Rolling around with fresh skeletons that seemed to have just crawled out of the grave, I thought that there would be no other enemies more disgusting and unpleasant.

I was mistaken.

I only went up one floor, but I encountered things that were twice as eerie as the skeletons.

[Exciting...!]

Cried a monster who had been kicked in the side by me.

[...Excite! Excite! Excite!!]

The monster in a mounting position cried out every time my fist hit its face.

Oh crazy.

It screamed 'excite, excite' every time it was hit, so it's more like a freaky pervert bastard than a bad feeling.

Obviously, I'm beating them, but why do they make me feel bad every time I hit them.

At that time, a monster climbed behind my back.

As if the monster would not let me go, it squeezed my neck with both arms.

The disgusting smell of the monster's breath came out.

And with a voice almost sobbing.

[Excite.....]

"Stop it! These crazy eyeless idiots!"

I shouted, holding back the creepy sensations.

[Talaria's Wings]

I used Talaria's Wings.

Huge wings appeared behind my back, and the monster hanging on my back bounced off with sharp wings stabbed through its chest.

Its heart was pierced, and the monster fell on the floor and could not stand up again.

One of the monsters died in vain, but the other monsters weren't a wink saddened by it.

The monsters were mad at the new words they heard.

[Eyeless idiots! Excite! Stop!]

[Stop! Excite! Crazy eyeless idiots!]

[Eyeless idiots! Exciting!]

[Exciting eyeless idiots! Crazy! stop!]

...Wah, this is driving me crazy.

* * *

They were monsters that hit the spot.

From appearance to behavior, they were nasty monsters that felt unpleasant from the beginning to the end.

They were monsters that showed me how displeasure can make a person go mad.

As I struck down the monsters without hesitation, there was only one body left: the mother's.

The mother's body was still shining its green eyes.

[Excite.]

Unlike the other monsters, the mother wasn't an eyesore.

But it had the same speech impairment.

[Eyeless idiot...]

As the mother body said so, it looked at its monster kin who had fallen at its feet.

Those green eyes look strangely faint.

Its voice is also low.

As if talking to a fallen fellow.

What bullshit is this?

[Crazy eyeless idiot. Exciting.]

The mother body raised its hand and touched its chest.

Like introducing itself.

Then moved its hand again and said, pointing towards me.

[This crazy eyeless idiot stop?]

...What is it saying now?

The mother body didn't try to resist, and I could easily burst its head to kill it.

After killing the mothers body, my stiff right arm began to move again.

[The 7th floor gateway begins.]

Description: The Trial on the 7th floor consists of three stages.

Each level contains 2, 3 and 9 rooms.

Each room can be traversed through a magic circle engraved on the wall.

Each room contains a number of Izaaku's Disaster Dombas and one of their mother bodies.

You have cleared stage 7-1.

Some information on the 7th floor stage will be released.

The Izaaku Dungeon is made up of hundreds of cavities connected by short-range portals.

The Izaaku Dungeon, which is complicatedly structured like a maze, has been attacked a long time ago, and a safe route has been revealed.

However, somewhere in the Izaaku Dungeon there is an unknown cavity that no one has ever been to.

Among those unknown cavities, there was also a pit inhabited by a group of Dombas.

Izaaku's Disaster Dombas are foreign entities.

Some claim that they are new creatures created through experimentation by a madly obsessed warlock, while others say they may be demons summoned from Hell.

Their origin is not exactly known.

Early Dombas are characterized by imitating the words spoken by the other party.

The mother body can stiffen their opponent's limbs through their eyes.

Clear the second trial to learn more about the 7th floor gateway.

1. Clear all rooms and defeat all enemies

1. Clear stage 7-1. [Complete]

1. Clear stage 7-2.

1. ?

I learned a little about the origins and backgrounds of the monsters, but I wasn't happy at all.

What good would it be to know that these monsters existed?

It only adds to the discomfort.

I know a little about the stage mission with question marks on it.

That fourth goal would be to clear stage 7-3 anyway.

It was a worrisome stage in many ways, but clearing it was easy.

If the difficulty remained the same, it seemed that stage 7-2 and stage 7-3 could be cleared soon.

It didn't seem like a stage like the 6th floor that took months to clear.

The newly acquired Soul Exploitation Skill was very satisfying.

Small recovery every time you use the wide-area debuff and kill an enemy.

It looked good just by reading the skill description, but when I used it in practice, it was better than that.

The monsters affected by the debuff were noticeably unnatural in movement, and the amount of recovery was more than expected.

If I had acquired this skill earlier and applied it to the 6th floor skeleton soldiers as well.

It would have been much easier to clear the 6th floor.

A portal appeared on the floor.

A portal appeared from the floor, not from the wall.

I climbed on the portal.

After a while, I was moved to another cavity.

[You have entered stage 7-2.]

I was moved.

The newly entered cavity was about three or four times wider than the previous one.

And there were three or four times as many monsters.

I held my breath reflexively.

Again, the monsters did not notice my position.

It wasn't because vision does not exist for the monsters named Dombas.

The monsters were engrossed in something.

The monsters were facing their mother's body, squatting in the middle of the cavity.

Just as when a celebrity appeared on the streets of Myeongdong, all the monsters faced the mother body.

As if they wanted to be close at least a little, they stuck together.

The monsters at the end seemed to try to look at the mother body by getting on the shoulders of other monsters.

No, what's it for, for creatures who don't have vision?

There were dozens of monsters crowding, but no noise was heard.

The mother body, who was getting everyone's attention, narrowed its green eyes and was scratching the floor with a piece of stone in its hand.

Scratch, scratch.

I could only hear the mother body scrawling something on the floor.

I wondered what the hell it was doing, so I watched them quietly.

After a while, the mother body's voice rang out in a quiet cavity.

[Excite.]

The mother body pointed to the figure she drew on the floor and speared it.

And.

[Excite.]

[Excite.]

[Excite.]

[Excite.]

[Excite.]

All the monsters followed the word.

Those crazy things are doing that here too.

Stages 7-1 and 7-2 are clearly separate stages, but the words the monsters heard and remembered seemed to be the same.

[Eyeless idiot.]

The mother body pointed to the figure next to it and speared it again.

[Eyeless idiot.]

[Eyeless idiot.]

[Eyeless idiot.]

[Eyeless idiot.]

[Eyeless idiot.]

Again, the monsters imitated their mother body's words.

Only then could I see what the monsters were doing.

I got goosebumps momentarily.

Language.

Those monsters were now building a language among themselves.

[Stop...]

The mother body who was trying to spear the figure again suddenly stopped speaking.

Then it lifted its green eyes off the floor and looked at me.

Following that gaze, the faces of the monsters turned towards me.

* * *

As the mother body's eyes turned to me, my right leg stiffened.

I was holding a sword earlier, but this time it's my right leg.

What are the laws here?

I didn't know.

[Crazy eyeless idiot!]

[This eyeless idiot!]

I think my guess is correct that these monsters were studying language.

In the first stage, the monsters who spoke randomly combined words came to me with a somewhat unified vocabulary.

[Soul Exploitation]

As soon as I used Soul Exploitation, the movement of the monsters was disrupted.

The more I used it, the better it was.

Wide area debuff.

Their words stop, and suddenly their body gets tired and loses energy in the battle for no reason.

It will be embarrassing to the person who is on the other end.

If they don't know that it's a skill, they might be afraid of the unknown power.

It was effective enough against monsters, but it seemed more intimidating when used against intelligent enemies.

One leg hit the ground and bounced.

I swung my sword towards the monster that was running at the forefront.

[Eyeless idiot exci...!]

The body of the black monster was cut in half.

[Talaria's Wings]

There is also a minor buff effect, but it has a glide effect on Talaria's Wings.

If the body is in the air even a little, it is applied unconditionally.

It was only about 30 centimeters, but there was a monster flying towards me like a bullet.

I swung my sword again.

The sword slit the monster's neck.

The head was cut off, but the torso flew away and collided with me.

[Blink]

I had no intention of falling and getting tangled up with the corpse.

Blink was a highly valuable skill in mobility itself, but it was a highly utilized skill in that it removes the kinetic energy currently applied and moves it to a stationary state at the target point.

I grabbed the monster's head right in front where I moved with Blink.

The heads of the monsters were a little smaller than that of a normal adult human.

Like playing with children's basketballs.

It was just that size.

I put the head down on the floor, like dropping it into the hoop.

The monster's head broke and blood splattered.

It was enough to reach the bodies and faces of the monsters right in front of me.

[Crazy!]

[Stop! Crazy!]

Indeed, the use of the monster's vocabulary was appropriate.

Did they give it meaning according to the situation when they spoke?

After the battle began, there were several things I learned.

The monsters on the 7-1 floor and the monsters on the 7-2 floor were the same but different.

They shared what they heard from me and the external features were the same.

The behavior was subtly different.

First of all, the monsters were wearing pieces of raw leather.

The mother body who can see over there wore a decent piece of clothes on its shoulder like a muffler.

I wondered if it was a by-product of adventurers appearing.

The other difference was that unlike the monsters on the 7-1 floor, who were talking without knowing any meaning, the monsters on the 7-2 floor seemed to think and spit out the meaning of words properly.

They just seemed a little higher in intelligence itself.

Finally, there was a difference in the aggressiveness of the monsters.

The monsters on the 7-1 floor ran wildly like beasts who knew no pain.

However, the monsters here were relatively less active.

[Stop. Stop.]

[Eyeless idiot. Stop.]

The evidence was the monsters crept out of their places and hid themselves.

Several monsters attacked aggressively, but it was limited to a small number of individuals.

After picking and killing the worst ones, the monsters quickly lost their fighting spirit.

I was sure.

These monsters learned fear.

Side Story 5

Iddy (5)

[Stage 7-2]

“Do you want to live?”

It looks like that.

The monsters on the 7-1 floor rushed blindly without even thinking about their own lives.

These guys here were obviously scared of getting hurt and dying.

It was interesting.

The acquisition of language led to the development of intelligence, and the developed intelligence led to the improvement of self-consciousness.

[Want to live.]

[Want to live.]

The monsters also imitated my words.

I’m not saying they know what they mean.

They began to withdraw little by little, as if they didn’t want to fight with me anymore.

Rather than the community’s will to kill a common enemy, it was the individual ‘I’s will to live.

How do I deal with enemies who are lingering in fear?

How can I kill more efficiently, using less power?

It would be nice if communication worked.

These monsters imitated my words, but it was unlikely that a conversation would be possible.

I approached the monsters one step at a time.

The monsters stepped back just as much as I approached.

They pulled their butts back and maintained the gap.

They didn't turn around and run away toward the wall at all.

Even though they were terrified, they maintained order.

I didn't see them fighting from behind other monsters or pushing their own people toward me.

They are a disordered crowd.

I don't know if this is what they know

Well... This is difficult.

My legs are still not moving.

It was easier to fight against enemies who were aggressively tackling me rather than enemies that were tightly united and responding defensively.

I can't.

Even by using more blinks, I have to squeeze back into the middle of the monsters and force them into a melee.

When my legs were stiff, each flash was precious, but it seemed unavoidable.

It was then.

The mother body, who was watching the situation after falling away from the fight, suddenly turned around and started running.

Wondering what it was doing, I stared at it blankly.

It was the first time I had ever seen the mother body who had been standing still without constantly participating in battles, actively moving its body like that

The mother body touched the portals magic circle, and went to the next room.

I was fascinated by the unexpected movement of the mother body.

No, did it run away from here?

While its people were still fighting?

Perhaps because the mother body disappeared, even the stiffness of my leg was relieved.

It was embarrassing.

The monsters who were holding the line while surrounding me were more embarrassed than I was.

The murmur of a few words filled the cavity.

And, as if a lightning bolt suddenly fell from the sky full of dark clouds, a scream burst out.

[Stop! Stop!]

[Crazy... Stop.]

[Stop! Stop! Stop!]

Once the scream burst out, all the monsters began to scream and scream.

It felt as if they were howling.

They didn't have eyes, so they couldn't shed tears.

However, I felt a deep sense of loss and betrayal in the voices of the monsters.

Huh, yeah.

I knew that the mother body was a special entity compared to other monsters.

It was the only unique entity in the group.

It alone had eyes, and through those eyes, it even had the ability to stiffen the limbs of the enemy.

Besides, it had been shown to have higher intelligence than the other monsters.

From the attitude of teaching something to the monsters.

Even more plausible word combinations.

But I never thought that it would leave the community and run away alone.

In the first place, I didn't expect the monsters to be able to use the portal, and I didn't think that the mother body, who seemed to be the center and leader of the monster group, would abandon its people.

The monsters kept wailing.

The battle line they had maintained while they were frightened collapsed.

The monsters roared and cried, paced around, and fell to the floor, as if they had been more shocked by the betrayal of their mother body than by my existence.

There seemed to be no intention of running away with the mother body.

It's a bit of a drag, but I have to finish the job here.

[Stop. Stop...]

The monsters completely lost their spirit.

But I couldn't just leave them alone.

“Come here.”

[Soul Cry.]

It was one of the skills I got on the 6th floor.

It is a skill that has replaced the Battle Cry skill.

When used, it slightly increases my combat power and gives the opponent a weak sense of intimidation.

And it prevents the enemy who is fighting with me from fleeing.

Unlike the sword of the skeleton knight on the 6th floor, it didn't have a strong aggro ability to call in enemies in the distance.

It was just enough to prevent the enemies fighting with me from retreating and running away.

Even so, the effect depends on the situation and my condition.

However,

[Stop.]

The monsters whose mental states had been blown away approached me, dragging their feet while weeping as if they never wanted to fight.

[Stop!]

[Want to live!]

[Eyeless idiots want to live.]

[Crazy. Want to stop]

I was able to deal with enemies who had lost their former intentions but could not escape without any danger.

Only five minutes after the battle resumed, the noisy monsters fell asleep in silence.

I thought the stage was easier than I thought.

I thought I could clear the 7th floor within the day.

It was a brief illusion for a moment.

* * *

The stage on the 7-2 floor consisted of three rooms.

In this room, a portal magic circle was drawn on the left wall from the front and on the right wall.

Without thinking, the moment when I tried to reach out to the left magic circle where the mother body ran away.

I realized my mistake.

Damn it.

My thoughts were short.

I shouldn't have let the mother body run away.

Originally, there was one mother body in every room.

But in the room on the left where the mother just ran away, there will now be two mother bodies.

Two mother bodies.

If both mother bodies can exert a stiffening effect.

I have to fight with two of my limbs sealed.

The difficulty level that I'll be having.

In the worst case, both of my legs may become stiff.

Damn it.

I haven't trained for this.

No, who would prepare for a battle with both legs lost?

If you lost both legs in battle, you're just dead.

Of course, there is only one mother body in the room on the right.

The problem is that when this mother body runs away again, three mother bodies will remain in the third room.

I would have to fight with only one limb.

Oh God.

It doesn't make sense.

The risk was too great to even try recklessly.

[Information on the Dombas is updated.]

– Dombas are special creatures.

They have high intelligence and learning ability, excellent physical ability, dungeon magic, and even a special condition that can maintain their physical health without a supply of nutrition for a long time.

But what's most special about them is that they have leaders in their groups.

The mother body paralyzes one of the enemy's limbs through their special eyeballs.

It is certainly a powerful effect, but an adventurer party of more than five or six people would be able to deal with the Dombas without problems.

However, at one point, a mother body began to escape the crisis and fled to a room where other Dombas lived.

Adventurers had to deal with a group of Dombas that included more and more mother bodies as they went on.

Due to these characteristics, the Dombas' realm has begun to be avoided by all adventurers.

Until Dombas multiplied over and over again, and took up most of the depths of the Izaaku Dungeon, no clear strategy was found.

A message appeared and explained Dombas and the mother body.

I was very thankful for the explanation.

When I read it diligently wondering if it could tell me how to fix it, there was an explanation that ended with ‘There is no strategy, haha’.

Why did you explain it, then?

You want me to feel how difficult it is in advance?

Do you want me to scratch my head and make it a little bit more intense?

* * *

It’s messy.

I looked around the cavity.

Unlike the 7-1 floor, the rooms on the 7-2 floors had this and that.

There was one thing after another.

It was difficult to pinpoint something.

There was a structure in which a rag blanket was placed on a wooden stick and made like the ceiling of a tent.

It is presumed to be the bedroom used by the mother body.

It was evidence that clearly stated that their intelligence was more developed compared to the Dombas on the 7-1 floor.

I searched for any clues.

Usually, games hide important clues or items in these places.

When I searched the tent, I found a good thing.

It was a picture painted on leather.

It was painted in red dye.

Three squares were arranged in a triangular shape.

It looked like a map.

It didn't seem very useful.

I decided to quit the trash search.

There were two portals in this room.

One on the left wall from the front and one on the right wall.

It was the portal on the left wall that the mother body ran away to.

First, let's go to the room connected to the right wall.

There will be only one mother body there.

And before the mother body tries to run away, kill it first.

After that, it's better to think slowly about the strategy for the left room.

* * *

"Ah, come on! Please!"

Damn it.

What the hell are the guys who designed the Hell difficulty stage thinking?

What do you usually think about, and to create a weird stage like this?

[Want to live.]

[Stop. Eyeless idiot stop.]

“Shut up, you bastards!”

I cried out, smashing the back of the head of the monster crawling on the floor.

The monsters whined without even thinking of resisting.

Somehow, these monsters must be connected by a sacred connection to share each other's thoughts and feelings.

Even when I saw the monsters imitating what I said in the first room.

The mother body's reaction was more shocking.

As soon as I entered the second room, the mother of this room turned around and ran away.

I tried using the skill Soul Cry in a hurry, but even that didn't work.

I was completely ignored as if not treated as an enemy.

“Ruined.”

[Ruined. Ruined.]

[Want to ruined.]

[Shut up...]

The monsters crawling around repeated my words again.

They were monsters who were very specialized in scratching people's nerves.

Ugh.

Let's organize my thoughts

The 7-2 floor consists of three rooms.

And I missed both the mother bodies I encountered while settling the two rooms.

In other words, in the last room on the 7-2 floor.

There are three mother bodies.

Suppose three mother bodies each seal a different limb.

When that happens, I'll have to fight with only my head and torso with one of my remaining limbs.

I roughly pictured the battle situation in my head.

Relying on a single arm or leg to move, I can only hit the torso and bite the enemy with my teeth.

Fuck, what am I, an eel?

This couldn't be answered.

“Ha.”

If this happens, I have no choice but to listen to Kirikiri's second advice.

Kirikiri gave me two tips for the 7th floor.

One was advice that my recent training would be very effective, and the other.

[Summon Envoy (Lv.???)]

Description: This is the power of an unknown god who refused to reveal his name to the challenger.

It is possible to summon an envoy for a certain period of time using an item engraved with a part of the envoy's soul as a medium.

It is a power with God's constraint in it.

Number of casts (5/5)

It was advised to use this lion summoning skill.

[Lizardman Idaltar's* Soul Stone]

Description: A soulstone of Idaltar, the strongest and most sinister warrior among the Lizardmen living in the Aydin Swamp.

It is available for sale at the shop window.

“Hmm...”

I wonder if this is really the right decision?

Notes:

*) Previously translated as Idaltaru and Idy by another group.

Side Story 6

Iddy (6)

No matter how much I thought about it, it wasn't quite right.

It was suicide to charge into a room with three mother bodies.

Waiting for the round to end like this should be the way to go.

And I could try again in the next round.

However, in the next round, if the mother bodies ran away as they are now, I would only face the same situation again.

How about taking some time and devoting myself to training?

Until all my limbs can be completely sealed, and I can crawl around with my torso and bite and kill the monsters with my mouth.

Damn it.

It was nonsense.

Crawling with my torso, biting monsters and killing them?

Would I even be a human? An African snake in the mask of a Homo sapiens.

It wasn't training, it was evolution.

Damn it.

The 7th floor was said to be easier than the 6th floor, but in the end, I still got stuck again.

It was not a stage that required more than 5 people for nothing.

It seems like a stage that can be easily cleared even if there were only five or two people in the group, but it was a problem that could not be solved alone.

[Tutorial, Hell Difficulty (4/7)]

I tried accessing the community on Hell difficulty.

The community was cluttered because of the dialogue meeting day, but this was different.

[Kim Mi-young (1st floor): It's been more than 10 hours since Hyung-jin entered, right?]

[Park Chun-su (1st floor): Yes. It's been 10 hours and 21 minutes now.]

[Oh Hye-ri (1st floor): Oh, then he must have crossed the rope trap. Unless he passed out in the middle.]

Challengers on Hell difficulty are, as always, chattering in the community.

The theme was the attack on the first floor by a challenger named Lee Hyung-jin.

It seems that it has already been 10 hours since he entered the stage.

10 hours.

If you were caught by an arrow trap, it is time to return to the waiting room or die from excessive blood loss.

The challengers are excited about whether Lee Hyung-jin will come out of the 1st floor.

There was no particular atmosphere.

They just sit down in the waiting room or at the entrance of the first floor and chat about it all day long.

I don't know what is so enjoyable.

They sometimes said this from time to time.

[Park Chun-su (1st floor): Biscuits are really cost-effective honey. You can buy five bags of biscuits just by passing through the first trap. I bought it once and am eating it for the third time. It's good to eat with salty jerky, and it's good to feel full, and it's good to eat one by one while being in the community.]

[Oh Hye-ri (1st floor): Oh, great tip.]

Damn...

How the hell do they think about living, if they just sit still and eat biscuits?

I couldn't understand.

Apart from me, there were a total of 6 living Hell difficulty challengers.

Five of them gave up on challenging stages.

They are focusing on finding food and surviving with small points given at the end of the round.

Their only hope was the delusion that someone would clear the Tutorial and send everyone back home.

The challenger named Lee Hyung-jin was trying hard to attack by himself, but his speed was too slow.

How long until he will be able to clear the first floor?

I wanted to urge the community to stop talking and challenge the arrow trap once more.

I did not put it into action.

If I rushed to drive them away, they would all die in the midst of an accident.

Huh.

I sighed once and turned off the community window.

I felt it on the 6th floor, but it's impossible to raise them and use them as party members.

At least it wouldn't be possible until I got old and died.

If this happens, I have no choice but to listen to Kirikiri's second advice.

Kirikiri mentioned my skill to summon envoys while advising me on the 7th floor strategy.

[Summon Envoy (Lv.???)]

Description: This is the power of an unknown god who refused to reveal his name to the challenger.

It is possible to summon an envoy for a certain period of time using an item engraved with a part of the envoy's soul as a medium.

It is a power with God's constraint in it.

Number of casts (5/5)

Kirikiri said that this skill can be used to summon temporary companions.

And even saying that that colleague will surely be of great help

Well.

It was not convincing.

Of course, Kirikiri's advice was always valuable and valid.

This time it was not so clear.

Summon Envoy is a skill that summons dead enemies.

And nowhere in this skill description did it say that the summoned deceased could be used as an ally.

Even when I asked Kirikiri, she said they are summoned just as they were before.

There was a limit to the number of times, so it was a waste to use it as a test.

It was a skill with great variables and risk.

I thought it was a skill that was useful only when trying to revive the enemy and find out information through interrogation.

Even in the midst of a hellish attack on the 6th floor, I didn't use this skill.

No matter how difficult it is, it was because I had the belief that if I grew up like this, I would be able to clear the 6th floor someday.

But now I needed a variable.

Unlike the 6th floor, I was not easily convinced that even if I grew through training, I would be able to clear the 7th floor.

After a while, I stopped worrying and opened my inventory.

Let's do it.

I needed a colleague so desperately now.

A companion and meat shield who will meet the mother body's stiffness for even a single blow.

If it doesn't work, let's knock them out.

[Lizardman Idaltar's Soul Stone]

Description: A soulstone of Idaltar, the strongest and most sinister warrior among the Lizardmen living in the Aydin Swamp.

It is available for sale at the shop window.

The target to be resurrected was a Lizardman, who appeared as a boss mob on the 5th floor.

She was the only one who could survive the Dombas crowd during the melee.

[Would you like to use Summon Envoy on this Soul Stone?]

A message appeared as I was holding the soul stone in my hand.

Sigh, is this really the right decision?

This Lizardman was a real idiot.

“Yes.”

No matter how much I thought about it, there was no other way.

At the same time as my answer, the soul stone was broken and shattered into powder.

While watching the strange powder that was flying in the closed room without any wind, a strong light emanated from the front.

A very short flash passed, and the body of a Lizardman, facing me, appeared in the middle of the closed room.

“Croak.”

The Lizardman looked around as if embarrassed to find me.

“Croak, Warrior, what’s going on here?”

The Lizardman recognized me.

Fortunately she didn’t jump on me.

I thought she might attack right away.

How should I explain it?

“I brought you back.”

It was easy to understand and concise.

First of all, she had to understand this situation.

The Lizardman tilted her head.

The Lizardman, who had been agonizing about it for a while, nodded as if she understood now.

Then she laid flat on the floor and said to me,

“As expected, you had me in mind. I know that you couldn’t help it because we were enemies of each other before. Accepting a battle is a true warrior’s attitude. I will forget about the mean numbers you made. Get on.”

It was good news that she had no resentment at me for deceiving and killing the Lizardmen in previous battles, but the last words didn’t make sense.

“...Get on?”

“Croak, Croak, don’t be shy and get on. I’m very excited. Croak.”

Breathing out, sniffing the floor, the tip of her tail smacking the floor, and a voice trembling with excitement.

With the ability of the pre-Babel knowledge skills to perfectly translate not only language but also body language, I soon understood the meaning of what the Lizardman was saying.

“Croak, you wanted to revive me. I heard that human sexual desire was strong, but I didn’t know it was this much. Croak, Croak.”

“No! That’s not it!”

* * *

“I have no intention of mating!”

I talked bluntly.

To put it a little mildly, this libido-mad lizard distorts or ignores my words.

“Why!”

The lizard seemed astonished as to how it could be.

I was rather astonished at that attitude.

“Why!? I wonder why you came to the conclusion that you and I have to mate!”

“Croak... That, how do I say that with my mouth? I already noticed it when I saw you the last time. You have a bit of a nasty personality, Croak.”

Ah... Ah...!

The Lizardman, burning with the race's desire to breed, couldn't make any sense.

Eventually I had to put on a serious face and explain to her the reasons for over thirty minutes to convince her.

I don't like the Lizardmen; I have no intention of breeding; and I have no intention of sexual intercourse.

She was too heated to speak seriously, so I continued to explain it angrily without realizing.

“...Croak.”

As a result, the Lizardman was noticeably depressed.

What is this?

Why am I feeling guilty?

What did I do wrong?

“I understood..... Croak.”

The Lizardman Idaltar, squatting with her knees together, swept the floor, moving her tail from side to side like a windshield wiper.

Even though she was sitting on the floor, her head came up to my chest.

She was a surprisingly good conversation partner after calming down.

It was a relief.

I decided to ask her one question first before I spoke about my purpose in summoning her.

Lizardman Idaltar was a boss mob met on the 5th floor.

At that time, she was burning with desire to breed with me, and when I refused, she went crazy and raged.

But this time, she quietly accepted my refusal.

The difference in attitude was a little puzzling.

“Croak, isn’t it natural? I was stronger then.”

Idaltar said, breathing out with excitement.

Of course, I did not take it for granted.

What is this nonsense again?

I was stronger then?

It was me who eventually won.

“Croak, croak, whatever the fact is, let’s just move on.”

Whatever the fact is and move on?

The fact that I was stronger was the fact.

Why just move on?

“Croak, anyway, I thought I was stronger. Courtship is the right of the stronger person. You didn’t seem to accept my abilities, so I had to show my strength.”

I understood it roughly.

About Lizardmen’s notion of sex.

In their notion that they became insane because they were intoxicated with the existence of the strong, courtship is the privilege of the strong, and it is natural to accept the courtship of the strong.

So Idaltar, who thought she was stronger than me, couldn't accept my refusal.

Idaltar, who thought that I was underestimating her power, went straight to exercising her skills.

I saw it as an attempt of rape.

Actually it was.

"Then now?"

"Croak, at a glance you look stronger than me. I can't help it."

Idaltar was so coolly convinced.

Of course, she did not completely give up her desire to reproduce.

"Croak, if you don't like me that much, I'll have to work harder. So you want to welcome me as a bride."

No, don't bother trying.

I won't be willing to do that forever.

"If you watch my skills, you will change your mind little by little.
Croak. It is natural for a strong male to be paired with a strong female.
Croak."

It was a reason I hadn't heard of before.

Side Story 7

Iddy (7)

After explaining to Idaltar, I immediately tried to enter the last room.

“Wait!”

“Why?”

“Croak, are you just going like this?”

Idaltar asked as if she didn’t understand.

Then let’s just try and challenge it.

Should I put money in the pig’s mouth* and go through it?

(T/N: It’s part of a ritual where foods were arranged as an offering to the spirits. The main focus was a pig’s head and people would put money in the pig’s mouth to wish for success.)

“Croak, how about having a meal first?”

“Meal?”

“Haven’t I just been resurrected? I need a meal. Croak, Croak.”

It was a reasonable statement.

I took drinking water and jerky out of my inventory, but Idaltar refused.

Idaltar insisted that she wanted a proper “meal”.

Meals are frozen meals.

It looks like what a frog would eat in a swamp.

I thought about it for a while.

How about ignoring Idaltar's opinion and forcibly dragging her away?

I decided to stop.

At best, she's already coming cooperatively, so there was no need to twist the situation.

It was a waste of time.

"What's wrong with jerky?"

"There are not enough nutrients. Croak. A person must eat vegetables and fruits as well as meat."

I was a little surprised.

First, I was surprised that Lizardmen had the concept of balanced nutrition.

Second, I was amazed at her calling me a person.

It seems that the range of 'person' translated through pre-Babel knowledge skills is wider than I thought.

"Croak, I want a meal with more nutrients."

Idaltar insisted strongly.

I refuted the claim.

"This is a comprehensive nutritional jerky."

“Croak, where the hell is that from?”

It’s real.

This is a jerky made to provide all the nutrients you really need.

When asked where such jerky came from, it was in the shop window of the Tutorial system.

Actually, day in and day out I have only been eating jerky, but I did not experience any problems such as lack of nutrition.

“Croak.”

As I explained the nutritional content of the jerky, Idaltar began to eat the jerky quietly, whispering.

She looked sad somehow.

“Croak, Croak.”

Idaltar chewed and stuffed the jerky in her mouth.

You don’t like beef jerky?

“Then would you like to eat this?”

Looking through my inventory, there was a whipped cream cake I bought for Kirikiri.

I took it out.

“Croak, I don’t know what it is, but I’ll try it first.”

Idaltar said so and hurriedly removed the jerky from her hand and accepted the plate.

“Croak, what is this?”

“Cake.”

“What about this?”

“Fresh cream. It’s just fruit on top.”

By the way, that’s dairy, is it okay?

Wouldn’t lizards get sick when they eat dairy products?

I was worried and asked.

“Croak, it’s okay to eat.”

Glad it was.

I thought they couldn’t eat cake because there was a lot of milk in it.

Idaltar ate the cake little by little with her fingers.

She looked happy.

It seems that what Idaltar wanted was not to replenish nutrition before the battle, but to take a little more time off like this.

“Croak, what is this bread made of?”

“Wheat flour, milk, eggs, butter. Something like that.”

“Croak! The bread made from wheat is so soft!”

Idaltar was amazed as she shuddered.

“It’s great. Croak, Croak.”

Watching Idaltar praise it as delicious.

I was oddly proud.

Is this the charm of a different world?

“You gave me jerky over something so delicious!”

No, what’s wrong with jerky.

I hope you will refrain from making derogatory remarks towards beef jerky.

“Croak, no matter how nutritious it was, it’s not good to eat jerky every time.”

“It’s not good, but it’s simple.”

“Then your taste may deteriorate. Croak, Croak.”

My taste is deteriorating.

Does that make sense?

It was a minor problem.

When was the last time I used my taste buds?

Perhaps the last time was when I licked the poison on the arrowheads on the third floor and said, ‘Oh, this is neurotoxin’.

I’d rather have my taste deteriorate.

All the time, it wasn’t once or twice that I was disgusted by pieces of the enemy’s flesh, and blood entering my mouth.

“Croak, in the past, I also ate a lot of jerky.”

In the past?

“Because I was expelled from the tribe and always had insufficient food to eat, I made jerky every time I succeeded in hunting and ate it.

Croak.”

Suddenly, a tragic past has emerged.

It was more unexpected than that.

That was the story of the past, especially the story of hunting.

“Do you remember that time?”

“Croak, of course.”

If so, do you remember how you got into the Tutorial?

I quickly asked questions because of the excitement that I might have learned the secret of the Tutorial by accident.

“Croak, I don’t know.”

* * *

Unfortunately, I couldn’t uncover the secrets of the Tutorial through Iddy’s past.

She tried to recall the time when she came into the Tutorial, but even that was impossible.

Idaltar couldn’t remember the moment.

She said that the memory at the time was not erased, but if she tries to recall the memory in connection with the Tutorial, it seems that she cannot recall the memory regardless of the time.

It seemed to be a system constraint.

Somehow, the system limits anything about the past.

I quit in the end.

From some point, it seemed to me that Idaltar was distressed from her inability to recall.

It was such a weird tutorial.

It was like that for every single thing,

The Idaltar I'm seeing right now is the 5th floor boss.

Then, when a challenger challenges the boss room on the 5th floor, which Idaltar are they facing?

Can this Idaltar and that Idaltar be called the same Idaltar?

The settings in the past have changed, but the present is different, and the future will be changed.

What happens to Idaltar when the duration of Summon Envoy is over?

After eating, I was finally ready to enter the third room.

I touched the portal and asked Idaltar.

“Are you ready?”

“Croak.”

Idaltar nodded and giggled.

I was very fortunate in many ways.

So far, I didn't think that Idaltar would be this cooperative.

[Would you like to move?]

“Yes.”

I entered the third room through the portal.

Unlike the monsters belatedly noticing my entry in the previous two rooms, the Dombas in the third room reacted immediately as soon as I entered.

As if they were waiting for me to come in.

[This crazy eyeless idiot!]

[Come here! Do you want to live?]

[Damn it! Damn it!]

Using the newly added vocabulary, they screamed loudly.

I could see that the atmosphere of the monsters was completely upset.

They did not see me as a mere intruder.

Their hostility roared.

I was not seen as repulsive, but as an enemy that must be captured and killed.

In the meantime, they don't rush, but they stick to each other and keep their positions.

Now, they're positioning themselves very properly.

It was easy to see what caused the changes the monsters showed.

Three mother bodies standing at the back.

Their eyes were shining green.

"Croak, my tail is paralyzed."

Iddy told me of the stiff area.

Her tail.

That's really good.

Why do humans not have tails or anything like that?

"I am on both arms."

I have both arms stiff.

"Are you okay?"

Then it's okay.

Compared to both stiff legs, it is much better.

Although my attack power has been greatly reduced.

"Croak, Croak. Maybe this body should step out."

Idaltar came forward, holding her spear firmly.

As I remembered, Idaltar was a prudent spearhead.

While I secured defense, she was stabbing the enemies, aiming at their gaps.

It was very tricky in the interpersonal battle, but it was questionable how she was trying to deal with a number of enemies who were organized.

The monsters have no weapons.

Probably, using the length of the spear, cut them off one by one from the end, and lead the monsters to release their position and drag them out...

Shaa!

I don't think so, Idaltar threw the spear.

[Excite!]

Idaltar's large spear pierced the two narrowly cramped monsters at the same time.

The two monsters pierced by the spear shook, and even the surrounding monsters pushed by their bodies shook their postures.

And Idaltar ran towards that point.

Kaoooo!

Red light hovered in Idaltar's eyes, and the muscles of her already huge limbs became more tight.

There was no such thing as a small Lizardman.

Ah, I found that ability too.

I was also greatly affected by that ability.

In addition to the false desire to rape me, glowing eyes were added, so it was quite frightening from the standpoint of the receiving end.

Kuang!

When Idaltar hit the floor, the floor cracked with a loud roar.

The monsters shook greatly again.

Idaltar picked up the spear skewered through the two monsters and swung it.

Every time she swung the spear, the limbs of the monsters stuck in the spear fluttered.

The monsters collapsed.

I ran forward too.

The line at the point where Iddy charged was completely destroyed.

It seemed better to focus on that point without having to go back to another place.

[Talaria's Wings]

[Blink]

Talaria's wings were used to protect the body and head, and then blink towards the monsters.

Now I'm much better at handling swords, and in addition to that, I mix in and use magical power.

The strength and quickness of my body have already exceeded the limits of humans, but still could not surpass the impact force using the speed of blinking.

It meant that the blinking body hit I had been using since the beginning of the 4th floor was still my special move.

[Excite!]

[Stop it! Excite.]

The monsters that hit against me screamed and rolled around.

The shock has been conveyed to me too, but I haven't developed pain tolerance and faint tolerance for nothing.

I straightened my stance right away.

“Croak! It's my turn again!”

Idaltar shouted and jumped back to the battle line that had collapsed from my body hitting them.

The monsters flew like a baseball struck by a baseball bat as Iddy swung the spear taller than the height of an adult man.

Fighting like Sauron from the beginning of The Lord of the Rings.

Anyway, thanks to that, a gap was created once again.

I continued digging in a straight line, alternating the gap that began with Iddy's assault, me and proceeded forward.

I dug into the middle of the formation of the monsters.

This was enough distance to reach the mother bodies at the very back.

"My turn again! Good work, Lizard!"

"Croak! I'm not a lizard!"

What are you not?

I beat Iddy again and I ran out.

The monsters covered the shoulders of their people on either side and formed a wall.

They showed a will that aimed not to kill me, but to prevent me from reaching mother bodies behind them.

Clearly, their intelligence is increasing.

However,

[Blink]

The blink was used at a 45 degree angle toward the front ceiling.

And again while floating in the air.

[Blink]

I used blink once again at a 45 degree angle towards the front floor.

When using blink towards a floor or wall, I pay close attention to the distance.

If I made a mistake, I could hit a wall or floor at the rate of blink and pass out.

However, after constant training and practice, I achieved perfect proficiency.

I moved right in front of one of the mother bodies.

My left foot landed exactly on the ground.

I kicked with my left leg straight on the axis.

The kick hit the mother body's chin exactly.

The mother body's neck turned around like a top, and its head slumped over its shoulder.

One mother body died.

I felt the stiffness of my right arm relieved.

[Stop it! Crazy eyeless bastards]

The monsters screamed out, but I ignored them.

[Inventory]

I held a single-edged sword in my right hand.

I swung it towards another mother body next to me.

[Stop...!]

With that said, the mother body's head was cut vertically.

While blood was spewing out endlessly, the last mother body turned away from me and tried to run away, but it was pierced by the spear that Idaltar threw and died instantly.

With this, the three mother bodies were annihilated.

“Kao!”

Idaltar roared.

The monsters hanging from her spear seemed to have no concerns, and it was an exhilarating roar.

The monsters paused under the roar.

It was a bold cry to break even the enemy...

“Kaoooooooo!”

Idaltar roared once again.

The pre-Babel knowledge is a great skill.

It does not stop at just making you understand other languages, but also lets you know the meaning of intonation and nuance, as well as the signs of gestures and facial expressions.

Thanks to it, I was able to recognize it.

“Kyaaaaaaaa!”

That was a roar with the meaning of courtship.

The terrified monsters laid on the floor, and in the middle of them, Idaltar, standing like a giant stone statue, slowly turned her head to me.

“Croak, won’t you?”

“I will not.”

Side Story 8

Iddy (8)

“I will not.”

“Croak, okay, okay. Humans also need a bed...”

I picked up a stone from the floor and threw it.

Idaltar did not avoid it, and the stone hit her snout and fell down.

“Croak, Croak, why are you doing this? Didn’t you see my performance? It was even better than yours.”

“Better than what? I took care of all the mother bodies.”

“Croak, I also caught one.”

It’s like a slap in the face from what I’ve got.

And since I caught two mother bodies and Idaltar took one mother body, my performance was better.

Idaltar protested that she had killed more monsters, but I ignored her.

Monsters without the mother body were just scarecrows.

It does not count as performance.

[Excite. Croak. Excite.]

[Both arms. tail. Won’t you?]

[Mother body. Performance. Mother body.]

[Crazy-eyeless bastard stop.]

[Stop. Stop it.....]

Look at them.

As soon as the mother bodies died, the monsters went crazy and crawled on the floor.

I looked at the monsters and found a stone in the hand of the monsters crawling on the floor.

I cut off the head of the monster holding the stone, and took the stone from its hand.

Well... This could be a bit of a problem.

It wasn't just a stone rolling in a dungeon.

It was a pebble.

The surfaces were cracked and cut for use as tools and weapons.

I was told that there were a lot of stones rolling around.

I could see at a glance that their intelligence was developing.

The problem was the speed.

How long did it take for early humans to use stone tools?

In stage 7-3, you may have to face monsters with spears or swords.

[You have cleared the second gate on the 7th floor.]

Description: The Trial on the 7th floor consists of three stages.

Each level contains 2, 3 and 9 rooms.

Each room can be traversed through a magic circle engraved on the wall.

Each room contains a number of Izaaku's Disaster Dombas and one of their mother bodies.

You have cleared stage 7-2.

Some information on the 7th floor stage will be released.

Having secured an area in the deepest part of Izaaku Dungeon, the group of Dombas succeeded in protecting their mother body from adventurers.

Dombas were blind and strong monsters, and the mysterious abilities of the mother bodies made adventurers reluctant to deal with them.

But some adventurers have said that the real strength of Dombas is their intelligence.

Dombas were rated as having a low level of intelligence that was not much different from that of monkeys, so their opinions were ignored.

After that, as adventurers completely gave up on sweeping the Dombas, interest in Dombas ceased for a long time, and people forgot about them.

During this time, Dombas began to learn and use the words spoken by other people.

They started using primitive level tools.

Their mother body can stiffen the limbs of their opponents through their eyes.

Take the third ordeal to learn more about the 7th floor gate.

1. Clear all rooms and defeat all enemies.

1. Clear stage 7-1. [Complete]

1. Clear stage 7-2. [Complete]

1. Clear stage 7-3.

Completed stage 7-2.

In addition, information about the Dombas has been slightly updated.

There was no information worthy to pay attention to.

It was information that I could find out on my own without them telling me.

It didn't matter to me whether I knew the background settings or not.

Next is the 7-3 stage with nine rooms.

A mobile portal appeared on the floor.

There were still monsters left in the room.

The mother body was annihilated, and some monsters were thrown into the corner of the room in fear.

The rest were crawling on the floor, crying quietly, as if paralyzed by fear and unable to even feel reason.

[Excite! Won't you...]

A monster crawling on the floor sobbing a strange combination of words put a hand on my shoe.

I shook my foot, slapped its hands, and kicked the monster's temple.

The monster stopped sobbing and moving.

"What are you doing, let's finish it."

"Croak."

I said let the monsters be dealt with, but Idaltar did not move.

“Croak, there, is that a portal? Do I have to go to it?”

I nodded in affirmation.

“Then we can just move on? There’s no need to kill these monsters one by one.”

But there’s no reason not to kill them.

“Until now, you’ve been stabbing them with a spear.”

“They were enemies back then.”

“Not now?”

“No. Not even prey. Croak.”

Huh...

What do you mean not enemies?

I looked at the monsters crawling on the floor again.

They are still enemies.

They are just enemies who can’t resist.

“Then I’ll take care of them myself.”

It doesn’t matter if you don’t help.

[Soul Cry]

The monsters started to react when I used the soul cry skill with an aggro effect.

The monsters crawling on the floor and the monsters hiding in the corner of the room began to slowly approach me.

[Stop.]

[Won't you stop?]

The remaining Dombas came to me one after the other as if they were receiving rations and died like that.

* * *

[Round 11, Day 29. 23:52]

I was thinking about going straight to the 7-3 stage, but I decided to go to bed after a while.

I often skip sleep when in battle or in the waiting room, but it is good to rest when I have time to rest.

Thanks to the experience of continuing battles without sleeping or resting for several days on the 6th floor, I knew how dangerous battles in a sleep-deprived situation could be.

I needed to give my body and head a little rest to stay focused.

Normally, I would have just sat down, closed my eyes and slept like that.

“Croak.”

The bodies of the Dombas were pushed against the wall and the floor was cleared.

There was quite a bit of space.

“Croak.”

“Well, do you want me to clean the floor with water?”

The bodies were moved, but the blood could not be removed.

The fishy smell and stench were the same.

But I'm not a janitor, and I couldn't clean here in this situation.

"No, if you're going to take a break, shouldn't you eat something?
Croak, I'm hungry."

You ate the cake before.

No, you must be hungry because you ate the cake.

Just by looking at Idaltar's size, it was predictable that she would eat much more than a normal human.

Besides, the cake is not very filling.

"That's why I told you to eat jerky."

It is a magical jerky that will keep you from feeling hungry for two days even if you eat just a few pieces.

Even the taste isn't bad, so it's okay

There was no food.

I took out a jerky from my inventory.

"Croak, if possible, not jerky..."

"If you don't like it, don't eat it."

"Thank you for the food. Croak."

Idaltar hurriedly stretched out her hand towards the jerky.

"Thank you, husband."

I threw the jerky at her.

Idaltar skillfully caught the flying jerky and ate it.

“Don’t do it when I tell you not to. I will destroy you. Really.”

From a while ago, I only talked to her in a good way, but she continues to cross the line.

“Croak, but I don’t even know your name. There is no specific title to call you.”

This is how Idaltar protested.

She did.

“I thought you were a warrior, but you weren’t a warrior either. Croak, I don’t have the right words to call you.”

Not a warrior

Are you saying that because I killed the monsters that didn’t resist earlier?

I didn’t even think to argue.

“Then husb...”

“Captain, call me Captain. Now you’re my subordinate.”

“Croak? Weren’t we friends?”

No.

You were just summoned to share the rigidity from the Dombas mother bodies.

It’s also a lot of work.

“Croak, then call me Iddy.”

“Iddy?”

“My nickname. Croak.”

It was creepy.

Seriously, what about nicknames?

“Actually, it’s my nickname.”

I was silent, Iddy explained.

“When a Lizardman is called by their family and close friends, they use their childhood name. It’s a familiar name, not a tribal, or social name.”

It’s a familiar name.

People also call family members by their childhood names or nicknames.

“Then you were called Iddy when you were young?”

“Croak, no.”

Idaltar shook her head.

What again?

“I was banished from the tribe and never called by any other name. The nickname Iddy was created by myself.”

...Another dark story suddenly appeared.

She was banished from the tribe and never called by her nickname.

“How old were you when you were expelled from the tribe?”

“Croak, maybe around five years old.”

It was when she was young.

But she was young enough to have a nickname.

Usually, a nickname is given by parents as soon as their child is born.

“Okay, I’ll call you Iddy.”

“Croak, Croak.”

Iddy liked it.

I was a little surprised by that candid expression.

I thought you weren’t that different from me.

I was certain, though.

“Croak.”

Iddy, who had just chewed and swallowed all the jerky, asked.

“But are we just sleeping like this?”

“Huh.”

Again, in fear of making a silly joke, I said it seriously.

She luckily didn’t say anything about coming closer.

“Croak, do you have any camping gear... or at least a blanket?”

“No.”

It was strange that the Lizardman, who looked like she could fall asleep in a swamp with mud on her body, mentioned a blanket.

“Croak, that’s strange.”

Iddy said so and laid down on the floor.

She curled her body and wrapped her long tail around her body.

She looked like a cat.

Although she was too large to be called a cat.

I saw Iddy lying down completely.

And after checking the distance between Iddy and I, I quietly closed my eyes.

This was enough distance for me to react when Iddy got up.

“Croak, are you just sleeping like that?”

“Huh.”

Anyway, I don’t sleep deeply.

From the first floor, there were already signs of it, and on the sixth floor, it completely hardened.

I am always awake even while sleeping.

I respond immediately to even the slightest sound or presence.

After waking up like that, I wonder if I really fell asleep.

The only time I could be very sure that I slept was when I woke up from a dream.

“Isn’t it uncomfortable? It’s better to lie down.”

“It’s not uncomfortable.”

I cut off Iddy’s words.

She’s been talking a lot ever since.

I even felt like she was trying to somehow create a topic for conversation.

I soon found out why.

“Croak, this is the first time I’ve slept with someone else. I always had to sleep alone. Nights in the jungle are dangerous. Have to be prepared for attacks by nocturnal beasts. It’s too painful to always fall asleep ready for attacks. Croak.”

Iddy was chatting alone even when I didn’t answer.

Iddy was excited about sleeping with someone.

She acts like an elementary school student on a picnic for the first time.

“Croak, Croak. Once, I caught a leopard cat and tied it to my hut. When something attacked, I thought that the leopard cat would make a noise and I would be able to wake up by hearing the sound. But when I woke up the next day, the leopard cat was dead... With a half-eaten stomach. Croak, Croak. Maybe I would have died if it hadn’t been for the leopard cat that day.”

The chatter continued.

Iddy didn’t seem to want to sleep at all.

It was hard to accept it...

No, I haven’t accepted it yet.

Still, I wish she was a little quieter.

Unconsciously, I fumbled on the floor to see if there were any stones to throw at her.

“Croak, Captain, tell me the name of Captain.”

“Name?”

“Didn’t I tell you mine too? It’s right for Captain to tell me yours too.”

What is this nonsense?

Iddy was looking at me with bright eyes.

It was strange.

I remembered the look in my nephew’s eyes as he looked at me with the Children’s Day gift hidden behind my back.

“Then, in return for telling my name, sleep quietly. The rest of the story will be told after I sleep.”

“Okay. Croak!”

Like a nephew who promised to do his homework well in the future in hope of receiving a gift, Iddy answered with vigor.

“Lee Ho-jae.”

“...Croak?”

I wondered if Iddy didn’t hear it, so I said it again.

“Lee Ho-jae. That’s my name.”

“Croak croak?”

However, Iddy's reaction was a little strange.

Side Story 9

Iddy (9)

“It’s nothing. Croak.”

“What, why?”

“Croak.”

Iddy rolled her eyes, avoiding answering.

As she was doing that, she looked like a lizard again.

“Why? Does it mean something?”

Sometimes when I listen to a foreign language, there are words that sound similar to Korean.

And if those words have the wrong meaning or sound like a swear word, they can be used as funny jokes.

I thought that might be the case.

“Croak? I don’t know.”

“I don’t know, I don’t know. Why don’t you answer quickly?”

“Croak. I can’t remember... Suddenly I can’t think of anything!”

You’re talking nonsense.

Die.

Approaching Iddy, I took her spear and swung it.

I poked Iddy on her side that was lying on the spear.

“Croak!”

I stabbed her pretty hard, but for Iddy it tickled rather than hurt.

I was able to realize once again that there was a difference in the durability of her basic body itself from that of a human.

I swung a little harder.

“Croak! It hurts, Captain! It really hurts!”

I’m hitting you because you’re sick!

Iddy got up and started running away, and I followed her.

I played tag for a while and beat Iddy, but in the end I couldn’t figure out the meaning of my name.

Iddy repeated the lie that she really didn’t remember.

“Croak, Croak!”

Iddy was excited, panting for breath.

She was like a dog going out for a walk.

There was no sign of pain in the place where she was beaten.

She has a needlessly strong body.

In the end, I decided to give up asking for the meaning of my name.

She was so happy, it was embarrassing to be honest and ask her questions.

I thought it would be better not to know.

“Now sleep. The meaning of rest is gone now. Time is wasted.”

I decided to go back to sleep.

I closed my eyes sitting a little away from Iddy.

I closed my eyes altogether, so Iddy was sad for a while, then laid back down.

Iddy tried to grab my attention by waving her tail and sniffing the floor; perhaps she wanted to chat more, but I pretended to be asleep and ignored her.

After a while, Iddy seemed to have given up, so she stopped trying to catch my attention and went quiet.

After that, she tossed and turned a little, but did not get up.

After waiting for another 15 minutes, Iddy's breathing became more even, and a hoarse snort began to come out.

After I opened my eyes and made sure that Iddy was asleep, I went to sleep too.

* * *

“Wake up!”

“Croak!?”

I woke Iddy from her sleep.

As soon as Iddy woke up, she had a bewildered expression on her face.

“Croak? Captain, how long have we slept?”

“Six hours.”

“Croak!”

Iddy said she was sleeping really deeply.

It was amazing.

She was just amazing.

In fact, I slept for about an hour and a half.

I can't sleep more than two hours a day because of insomnia.

However, I couldn't wait for Iddy to sleep and wake up without doing anything.

“Croak. I've slept for six hours and I'm still tired.”

“You're not awake enough. You'll wake up if I spear you.”

After getting ready with Iddy, we moved on to stage 7-3.

[You have entered Stage 7-3.]

“The room is empty. Croak.”

“Yeah.”

The first room on stage 7-3 was empty.

Stage 7-2 started in a room full of monsters.

What's the difference

Actually, it wasn't completely empty.

In this room, I could see the huts of the monsters I saw on stage 7-2.

They were bigger and more numerous than before.

There were just no monsters.

Anyway, the level of completion of the huts has improved considerably.

In a place where wood and mud could not be obtained, I wondered how well it was built with stones, leather, and bones.

I looked around the hut, and this time, I found a map.

As described on stage 7-3, it was a map with 9 rooms drawn.

The nine rooms were organized like a numeric keypad in a 3×3 arrangement.

And this room marked with a highlight line is the middle of the nine rooms.

Judging from the number pad, it was room number 5 in the center.

When I checked the wall, mobile portals were drawn on all four sides of the square room.

According to the map, I think it's right to think this is the middle room.

"I'm glad it's not a straight line configuration though."

If the mother bodies continued to run away from the dungeon with a straight line configuration, in the last room, you would have to deal with a group of Dombas including nine mother bodies.

Even with me and Iddy combined, there will be no limbs left.

The middle room was also a plus.

"What are you going to do? Croak."

I showed Iddy the map and explained.

“You’re going to the upper room, I’m going to the left room. And.”

We are in room 5.

From here, attack rooms 8 and 4 at the same time.

Naturally, the mother bodies will run away.

The mother body of room 4 flees to room 1 or 7.

A maximum of 3 mother bodies can be gathered in room 7.

3 mother bodies.

It was a number that Iddy and I could handle.

“Croak. What if the mother of room 4 escapes to room 1?”

“You just have to attack Room 2, block the escape route, and attack Room 1. Even then, the maximum number of mothers to gather in Room 1 is three. You can handle it with ease.”

Then, the remaining rooms are rooms 3, 6, and 9.

If two mother bodies are gathered in Room 9, you can attack Room 6 first, then attack Room 9 and 3 separately.

Up to three mothers are not intimidating, so we should be able to finish them with ease.

“Croak. It seems like a good plan.”

The remaining variable was the difference between stage 7-2 and 7-3.

I waited for a message explaining something to appear, but no message appeared.

They don’t show up when you need them anyway.

“Enter.”

I touched the portal on the left wall and said.

When I turned my head, Iddy had already reached the portal on the northern wall.

We exchanged glances with each other and activated the portals.

It was a strange feeling.

Cooperating with someone. No, there was no such thing as cooperation.

It was a little strange to be part of a team.

It was a really weird feeling.

Without a moment to be confused by the uncomfortable feeling, I was moved to the 4th room.

As soon as I moved into the room, I saw the monsters.

The difference, the biggest variable, was confirmed with the monsters on the 7th and 2nd floors.

There was a clear difference that could be seen at a glance.

The first was that the monsters were already forming a square, as if they were waiting for me to enter.

Second, the monsters had clothes and weapons.

There were crude clothes made of leather and stones, long stone spears and stone axes carved out of whole stones.

For a stone spear, it would be difficult for a human to lift it, let alone swing it, but it would be just the right weight for those monsters.

The third difference was this.

[Come here. Hello. It's crazy-eyeless bastard.]

All the monsters were talking.

Unlike stage 7-1 and 7-2, the monsters here were silent.

Only one monster has spoken to me.

Is it the commander?

Also, their intelligence has improved a lot.

“Right, hi, you crazy-eyeless bastards?”

I approached them pretending to accept their words.

The last difference.

The mother body of this room was aware of my intrusion, but neither stiffened me nor ran away.

Yet.

[Blink]

I approached the mother body with the surprise Blink.

[Stop! Die!]

The commander screamed and screamed.

[Stop! Excite! Excite!]

[Excite! Exciting!]

The monsters around me clashed together and clinged to me.

Apparently, these guys have adopted strange words as their cheering voice.

[Talaria's Wings]

Huge wings spread out from behind my back, and the monsters that were clinging to me were hit by the wings and flew away.

A spear pierced from the front.

I pushed my forearm forward and blocked it.

My arm with magical powers is no different than a shield in itself.

I moved forward

The sharpened spear blade scraped past my forearm.

Unfortunately, the monster did not even have a shield.

As the gap narrowed, the spear became powerless.

Their spear skills aren't even that high yet.

With my free hand, I gripped the monster's neck.

I could feel the sensation of a broken neck bone in my hand.

I threw the corpse of the monster with its strength lost head-on.

My front is open.

Through the collapsed display, the mother body could be seen.

The mother body was running towards the wall.

I picked up a stone spear that had fallen to the floor and threw it.

A spear that flew straight should pierce right into the mother's back.

[Excite!]

However, one monster threw itself and was struck by the stone spear instead of its mother.

[Good job! Excite!]

[Excite!]

One fellow was killed instantly by the stone spear, but the monsters cheered.

Meanwhile, the mother body ran away to another room beyond the wall.

Oh my, the monsters were more desperate than I thought.

They were monsters who did their best to protect the mother body in the previous stage, but they did not sacrifice their lives to help the mother escape the room.

Rather, as soon as the mother body tried to escape, they quickly lost their courage.

[Excite! Excite! Crazy-eyeless bastard!]

[Kill! Stop it, stop it!]

Surprisingly, the monsters were still fighting even after their mother body had fled.

The monsters surrounded me, who had dug into the middle of the camp, and formed a formation again.

Monsters with long spears in front, monsters with stone axes in the rear.

It's fun.

I thought it would be easier to deal with the monsters after the mother body had left, causing them to feel frustrated.

I can't believe they were so active

I was just grateful.

I took out a single-edged sword and shield from my inventory.

"Come on, run!"

[Soul Cry]

[Soul Cry]

Unlike the monsters of the previous stage, who were drawn to the soul cry and shuffled to their feet.

[Excite! Excite!]

[Excite! Excite!]

With a loud unified slogan the fiercely attacking monsters swung their shields and swords.

"Ha!"

I felt refreshed as I hit the monster's neck.

Yes, the battle should be this passionate.

Every time the mother body dies or runs away, it is not enough to only deal with those who babble.

However, it is impossible not to aim for the mother body first.

But now that the monsters are aggressively attacking me, I feel like fighting a little bit.

I reduced the number of monsters surrounding me one by one.

Around the time when all the monsters with spears in the line had died, leaving only the monsters with axes.

An extraordinary event occurred.

The portal carved into the wall hummed.

For a moment, I wondered if Iddy was coming, but soon I knew it wasn't.

There were a total of two rooms connected to room 4 where I am now.

Room 5, which is safe, and Room 7, which will contain the monsters.

The portal that is currently running is the one connected to Room 7 where the mother body escaped.

And

Suddenly, one leg and one arm became stiff.

Bang!

A monster slammed its shoulder into my side.

I was pushed by the force and fell to the floor with my face down.

My face smashed the floor, and blood gushed out of my forehead.

I forced my head to look up.

The blood dripping from my forehead was annoying, but I could see what I wanted.

The monsters that came from room 7.

3 mother bodies.

I could understand the situation.

The mother of room 4, who escaped, returned with the mothers of the other room.

[Excite! Excite! Excite]

[Excite! Excite! Excite]

[Excite! Excite! Excite]

The monsters cheered and screamed.

A message appeared in front of me.

[Information about Dombas is updated.]

– The reason Dombas, who had been forgotten for a while, started to gain attention again was their socialization.

– They originally had a small society of one Dombas mother body and several Dombas, but as their intelligence rapidly increased, they expanded the boundaries of society.

– While leading and managing her own pack, the mother body began to form social and political relationships with the mother body of other groups.

– When they felt grave threat by an intruder, they went beyond entrusting themselves to the mother body of another group, actively traveling between each other's realms, interfering with or cooperating with commerce, alliances, and expansion, and even waging war with each other.

– In the process, the Dombas mother bodies began to expand beyond the depths of the Izaaku Dungeon to lead more realms and more hordes.

– The adventurers who had already given up on subjugating the Dombas could not stop the Dombas trying to expand due to a sudden increase in number.

– Belatedly, they joined forces to try to stop the Dombas, but they were defeated by the united Dombas group and were eventually kicked out of the Izaaku Dungeon, and the Dombas were reborn as the true owners of the Izaaku Dungeon.

A message appeared.

Again, this message is of no help.

“This... this...!”

Son of a bitch!

Real bitch stuff!

How far do you have to push people to get rid of their intuition?

By creating a pattern for the behavior of the Dombas mother body.

All of a sudden, ‘Ta-da. Our Dombas have evolved that much. In the future, the pattern will be different. Haha.’ Does this make sense!

They’re not telling you in advance, but after you’re done!

[Excite!]

A monster flew at me as I fell.

Damn it

If it falls on me, I’ll die.

One arm and both legs were already paralyzed.

[Blink]

I used Blink up in the air.

As I floated up to the ceiling, I could see the condition of the room at a glance.

Three mother bodies joined the group of Dombas, which had shrunk to half their original number.

The Dombas swarm began to encircle the mother bodies in haste as soon as I floated into the air using Blink.

The portal on the wall was still running.

Another mother did not appear, but ordinary Dombas armed with spears and axes continued to come in.

They must have been the Dombas from Room 7 and Room 8 that the mother bodies brought.

In the meantime, all I have left is a right arm, a head, and two blinks.

Fuck. Let's do it.

I don't think it's a good idea.

I had no choice but to do it.

Side Story 10

Iddy (10)

Blink is not an all-around invincible skill.

Oh, of course, I agree that it's a versatile skill.

The downside of Blink is simple.

I'm limited to five uses.

It fills up again after a while, but with limited time, five uses was all I had.

It would have been really nice to save a Blink.

I was judging that I had almost cleared the room before, so I didn't even care about the limit on the number of blinks.

Now the remaining number of uses is 2.

Even if I only used one for each of the three mother bodies, it was not enough.

My body parts that are not rigid are an arm, my head, and my torso.

[Excite! Excite!]

[Excite! Excite!]

I looked at the monsters while floating in the air. The three mother bodies were desperately surrounded by them.

The mother bodies were not gathered in one place as before, but they were dispersed in all directions under the protection of the monsters.

Damn it

It is really evident at a glance that their intelligence is increasing.

[Blink]

I approached one mother body.

Immediately, the monsters surrounding the mother body reacted.

They must have been waiting for me to appear close to the mother body after seeing me use Blink.

[Combat Focus]

There was a monster that ran and threw its own body towards me.

I was able to hit it with one arm.

The monsters reacted to me right away, but not fast enough.

I fell straight down towards the mother body.

As I fell, my gaze was fixed on the nape of the mother body's neck.

It didn't matter that I would fall defenseless in the middle of the monsters, or that I wasn't prepared for the fall at all.

If I bite that mother body and kill it, it wouldn't take my breath away.

If I can't kill it, I will die.

I aimed at the nape of the mother body's neck, but what I bit off was the mother's collarbone.

I could feel the bones in my mouth along with the flesh.

A counterattack came immediately.

I felt a strong shock on my back.

A stinging pain that started in the back spread down my spine.

I got it wrong.

I could feel the hands of monsters grabbing me here and there.

Stone axes were falling all over the place.

“Ahhhhh!”

[Soul Cry]

[Talaria's Wings]

I smashed the monsters around me.

The mother body was escorted away from me.

It wasn't far away yet.

I hit the floor hard with my right arm.

With that shock, I flew toward the mother body once again.

Damn, does it make sense for someone to punch the ground to try to move?

Moving without using your legs.

Damn it

The more I think about it, the angrier I get.

“You bastaaaarrrddssss!”

Once again, I was disgusted to bite the mother body's neck and the monsters ran trying to protect the mother body.

* * *

“Sigh.”

I leaned my back against the wall.

I used up all my blinks.

At a time when movement was impossible, it was necessary to secure even the safety of my back.

I lifted the body in my hand.

To be exact, the mother body.

The neck was torn and she was already dead.

“Hooo...”

With my right hand, I covered the wounds on the mother body, which were bleeding profusely.

What should I do with this

“Hey! Back off! If you come close, this guy will die!”

I shouted while holding the corpse of the mother body in my hand.

The monsters were puzzled for a while, but soon an answer came back.

[Why!? That monster is already dead!]

It was a strange combination of words, but the meaning was understandable.

‘Don’t gossip. I know he’s already dead.’ It should be about that.

Damn things.

Now, they have reached a level where communication is very smooth.

The words were a bit strange, but better than the original situation when they faced several adventurers, and could only imitate what I said, leading them to have limited vocabulary.

My efforts were not in vain.

I ended up killing two mother bodies.

I crawled on the floor with one arm, eventually biting it to death.

But in the process, too much was lost.

My spine creaked with every twist.

It wasn’t just a squeak, but the bone was brittle and the tip of my toe was tingling.

Considering my pain tolerance skills. This is really serious pain.

My body is like, ‘You, if you move more there, you’ll die! Really die! This is a serious warning!’

One of my arms was broken at the elbow.

In addition to spinal problems, both of my legs were unable to move due to broken bones and stabbed muscles.

In the end, I killed both mother bodies, but the only thing I could move was my right arm and head, which had moved from the beginning.

Oh, it’s actually one less.

Now it's hard to even move my torso.

It would be nice if I could drink a potion.

Unlike games, the enemies in reality do not let others drink potions leisurely.

I don't know if they will understand and block the potion, or if they are just preventing abnormal behavior during battle.

My heart was beating so fast that I thought my heart was going to explode, but on the contrary, my head started to cool down.

I have one right arm.

One corpse of a mother body to be used as a shield to cover my body.

Fortunately, my location is close to the wall.

I'm not afraid of being attacked behind my back, so let's stop the monsters attacking me one by one

It seems so damn impossible.

As soon as I finished speaking, a stone spear came.

I reflexively grabbed the spear and pulled it to my side.

The monster with the spear was about to fall forward.

So, when swinging a weapon, do not place your center of gravity too far forward.

When the attack misses, your stance collapses.

I placed the spear down and grabbed the monster's neck and twisted it.

And finished by biting its throat with my mouth.

Blood gushed out of the monster's neck like a fountain.

There were two corpse shields to cover my body.

The monsters froze at that sight.

These monsters overcame their fears with discipline and a sense of community, but their emotions were not gone.

Rather, they would be richer.

Good news for me.

I shook my head and leaned my back against the wall.

How long will I be able to last?

How many more can I kill?

It was questionable.

But I'll see what I can do.

* * *

“Uhh...”

A thin breath escaped from my mouth.

I bled too much.

I became extremely sensitive, and was aware of every movement of my body.

My mind is becoming hazy.

Chills creeping up.

Split and torn right arm.

The monsters eventually gave up on stabbing me to death.

Instead, they kept their distance and aimed at my hand.

My hands and wrists were torn and cracked and very tattered.

It was helpful to have them sticking together without being cut off yet.

The floor was lined with the corpses of monsters.

They remained even after completely covering my torso and lower body, and they were piled up low like a barricade at least around me.

“Ha ha ha ha ha”

Laughter came out.

It was me who was dying, but it was the monsters that were crushed by fear.

“Only six left.”

All those monsters died.

There is only one mother body left.

The last mother body was shaking and trembling every time she made eye contact with me.

The monsters that have survived so far are not cowards.

Rather, they were the best.

Those who commanded other monsters.

They were afraid of me, but they were very vigilant.

Now I know I'm dying

I completely gave up the battle and waited for my death

It's almost over.

I'm almost there, but my body doesn't move anymore.

I'm pretty sure it's almost there.

My eyes kept closing.

Blurred vision.

Bang!

A sudden roar.

I opened my eyes.

Spear.

A spear appeared.

A huge spear that pierced through the head of the one remaining mother body.

“Captain! I'm here!”

Iddy is here

* * *

“Croak.”

Iddy groaned.

“I’m just trying to help.”

Iddy said.

“Hey, here’s the spear.”

Iddy grabbed my attention and pulled out the spear, and rolled it away.

“Croak, it’s okay, it’s okay.”

Iddy slowly pulled her foot towards me.

My nerves sharpened as the distance decreased.

“It’s okay. I’m trying to help. Croak.”

Iddy moved forward little by little despite my nervous reaction.

It was a pity that I couldn’t even throw something.

“Do not come.”

“Croak, it’s fine.”

Iddy kept coming.

I was anxious.

In my mind, the worst thing I could imagine unfolded.

I was too weak.

I wish you would leave me like this.

If only I had recovered, a little bit, just a little.

“Croak.”

I am losing my mind again.

Iddy was slowly approaching me in this situation where it was hard for me to even react.

Thoughts filled my mind that I had to stop Iddy.

When I came to my senses, Iddy was one step closer, and when I woke up again, she was two steps closer.

“Croak, I’ll borrow this.”

Iddy picked up a potion bottle that had fallen on the floor.

She opened the potion bottle and came closer to me.

The moment Iddy touched my body, I grabbed her by the neck.

No, I didn’t grab it.

Her neck was too big and thick for my hands to hold.

Damn it

“It’s okay, it’s okay. It’s over. Croak.”

Iddy removed the corpses from my body and started applying potions to the wounds.

I thought I would be able to resist when the bodies were removed, but my body still didn’t feel strong.

I tried to move, but my body couldn’t even struggle.

And so I fell asleep.

[The God of Adventure is thrilled.]

* * *

The next day, I was able to clear the last room on the 7th floor stage.

[You have cleared the 7th floor stage.]

[You are the first to clear the 7th floor stage.]

[Obtained additional points.]

[You have cleared the 7th floor of Tutorial Hell difficulty.]

[All status ailments and injuries are healed]

[Many gods are watching you.]

[Acquired additional rewards according to stage progress.]

[Favorable: 81, Unfavorable: 4]

Seeing the message, I roughly brushed my hair.

Damn it.

Too many votes were favorable.

Even when I cleared the 6th floor, there weren't that many.

In other words, after all, the gods liked my clearing of the 7th floor.

Damn it, damn it!

“Croak, are you done?”

“Noisy!”

“Why are you so angry?”

Iddy was sullen.

I looked at her figure for a moment and then said,

“Let’s go. We’re going through this portal.”

It was questionable whether Iddy, who was summoned, could advance to the next stage.

Let’s go.

I used the portal with Iddy.

I was moved to Kirikiri’s garden, and Iddy was still by my side.

She can come here too?

“Hello! Hello!”

Kirikiri came running, waving her hand vigorously.

She was more excited than usual.

The height of her jump was about 1.5 times higher than usual.

She seemed to jump almost to my chest.

Kirikiri ran hard and ignored me and clinged to Iddy next to me.

She grabbed Iddy’s hand and started spinning around.

Iddy was perplexed.

Kirikiri went round and round without paying any attention.

“Good job, good job. Thanks to you, Ho-jae survived.”

“No it’s not!”

“No, it’s not what!?”

I would have survived in the end even without Iddy.

I have super regeneration skills.

Survival was tight, but in the end I would have survived.

If I had recovered enough to drink the potion, I would have survived.

“Hi-hing, I know everything. It’s because you’re shy.”

“No!”

I screamed, but Kirikiri and Iddy ignored me.

They didn’t listen to me at all.

The two started talking about the 7th floor.

How Iddy was able to come to my room on time on that stage.

Kirikiri knew my movements on the stage, but didn’t know Iddy’s movements.

Iddy explained diligently.

She seemed to adapt well to the absurd situation of the Tutorial where the environment suddenly changed.

After watching them for a while, I bought a cake from the shop window.

“Talk while eating. I need to rest.”

I said so and laid down.

Kirikiri was excited and started eating her cake.

Iddy just stared blankly.

“What are you doing, you eat too.”

“Croak.”

Iddy chuckled and laughed.

“Thank you, Captain.”

I was silent for a while before I could say thank you.

Then I answered.

“...Yes, thank you too.”

Side Story 11

Iddy (11)

“Nyooooo!”

Kirikiri screamed loudly.

What do you mean no? You’re screaming without even thinking twice.

“This is miney.”

Kirikiri said as she wrapped her body around the cake plate.

Hey, that’s what I bought for you.

“Hing, this cake already belongs to me.”

“Umm, no.”

Kirikiri was hiding the cake plate on the ground like a chicken incubating an egg.

Her arms and head were blocking in front of her.

Unfortunately, she had a hole on the side.

I shoved my hand in and took the cake plate.

“Aaangg, it’s mine!”

Kirikiri grasped and tried to take back the plate in my hand.

“Would you like to eat together or alone?”

“I’ll eat alone!”

When it came to her cake, Kirikiri knew no compromise.

I tried to persuade her in a kind way, but at some point, the persuasion itself felt annoying.

I just returned the plate to Kirikiri and bought Iddy a separate plate of cake.

“Eat.”

“Thank you, Croak.”

Kirikiri talked to Iddy with a friendly attitude, perhaps because she had preserved her own cake.

She was asking what happened on the 7th floor stage.

“Croak, I was dealing with the monsters there after the mother body in Room 8 escaped. Then suddenly a monster entered Room 8 and took the monsters from Room 8 to Room 7.”

Iddy mumbled with the cake.

Since she has a big mouth, she didn’t seem to have any trouble talking while eating.

The monsters in Room 8 moved to Room 7.

The monsters from room 7 and 8 gathered and flocked to room 4.

No wonder there were so many.

“Croak, after killing the remnants, I felt uneasy about the monsters moving freely around the room. If they gathered in one place and launched an offensive, it would be a big deal. So, I went into the 4th room where Captain was.”

“Good judgment!”

Kirikiri exclaimed vigorously as she said that Iddy’s decision was correct!

Well, it would be better if she wiped the cake cream on her face and spoke.

Kirikiri quickly ate up the cake and began to look at Iddy’s plate with bitter eyes, and I had to buy another plate of cake to give it to her.

* * *

“Then you’re saying that the same monsters on the 7th floor appear on the 8th floor stage?”

“Yep!”

It’s unique.

Kirikiri said, the enemies on the 8th floor are also the Dombas that appeared on the 7th floor.

Two stages in the same place and targeting the same enemies.

I think it’s the first time

“Any more questions?”

Kirikiri asked.

Of course there are.

“The 7th floor stage. How were you supposed to clear that usually?

“Hehe, it would be better not to be curious about the previous stages.”

Kirikiri always wants to save information and have me ask about future stages rather than ask about a stage that has passed.

However, now I'll get to fulfill my curiosity and collect information on this past stage so I can aid the challengers coming up from below.

Of course, it is unclear whether the challengers behind me will be able to climb to the 7th floor.

"First of all, the best way is to match up five party members and challenge it."

But I can't do that

Anyway, there must be a way to clear it solo without a party member.

On the 6th floor, there was a simple way.

It was to be strong enough to fight all those skeletons alone.

It's simple, and it's damn hard.

But on the 7th floor, there was really no way.

If there were no party members, it was designed to be unbeatable in the first place.

"...hi-hing."

Kirikiri laughed softly.

...It was a strangely disturbing laugh.

"Is it really designed to be unbeatable?"

"It, it's not?"

It's not.

The attitude was a little bit unsettling, though.

She said no.

Is there going to be a stage with a level of difficulty that you can never clear by yourself?

Like a stage with 100 party members.

I'm anxious.

“Uuuuummmm?”

I tried to make Kirikiri confess with a cake.

Kirikiri insisted that she should not give information about that stage that will appear later.

“So there is no way to beat the 7th floor by yourself?”

“Of course, there is a way. If the mother body runs away from the 7-2 floor, the Dombas will be frustrated.”

Kirikiri explained.

I nodded.

“You can take those Dombas with you as subordinates.”

What is that?

That's unexpected.

“Of course it won't be easy. Anything else? Any other questions?”

There wasn't much.

I've already heard the advice for the 8th floor stage.

“Did you know that the first day of the dialogue meeting will be held soon?”

I nodded at Kirikiri’s question.

The day of the next dialogue meeting was approaching in a few days.

Kim Min-hyuk delivered the news once a day.

The mood of the community was now becoming more chaotic.

In the end, no compromise was reached until the day of the dialogue agreement.

It was war again.

* * *

[You have entered the 8th floor stage.]

Kirikiri’s mood was unprecedented, so I wasted more time than I expected in Kirikiri’s field.

I didn’t even need to rest in the waiting room, so I went straight to the eighth floor.

The eighth floor was engulfed in darkness.

The floor was obviously similar to the 7th floor, but neither the ceiling nor the walls were visible.

It was a bewildering darkness.

There doesn’t even seem to be a single ray of light at all.

Although vague outlines could be seen through the use of skills, there was nothing clearly visible.

“Croak.”

“Iddy, what do you see?”

“I can’t see. My eyes at night are rather bright, but I can’t see anything. Croak.”

Iddy couldn’t look beyond the darkness either.

The lizard can’t see it.

It’s only natural that people don’t see it.

I removed the heating stone and cloth from my inventory.

Had I known this would happen, I would have bought a glowstone.

Kirikiri gives some really useful advice, but not advice that only guarantees convenience.

If she had given me some advice to prepare a glowstone or at least a torch...

As usual, I lit the cloth with the heating stone.

It was then that I saw Iddy’s face right next to me.

“Croak.”

I looked around.

The wall was still invisible.

The ceiling was so high that it was difficult to reach even by using all my blinks.

[The 8th floor stage begins.]

Description: Occupying the Izaaku Dungeon, the Dombas hordes have succeeded in uniting their society through decades of development, cooperation, and warfare.

After that, it was decided that the biggest factor that made their development and life uncomfortable was none other than the structure of the Izaaku Dungeon.

The structure of the Izaaku Dungeon, linked by thousands of tiny rooms and mobile portals, once allowed the Dombas to defend themselves.

But after driving out all the enemies, they were nothing more than obstacles to each other's traffic.

The Dombas broke down the walls through a major expansion project, and succeeded in making the Izaaku Dungeon into a huge joint.

So time passed.

The Dombas were then starting to feel cramped in Izaaku Dungeon.

They were able to act without discomfort even in the sun, and they began to go out and gather information about their surroundings.

The area around the dungeon was afraid of the invasion of the Dombas, and once again asked the adventurers to clear them up.

The Dombas' mother bodies became very few in number as their society consolidated.

However, the mother bodies are still the center of Dombas society and their spiritual pillar.

If the mother bodies were gone, the Dombas would not even think of uniting to invade the outside world.

Defeat the mother bodies of the Dombas and bring peace to the area around the dungeon.

1. Defeat the Dombas' mother bodies (0/36)

Come on

This time, it was a very kind explanation.

It was different from the 7th floor, where the information given to me was very little and then explained later with a message whenever I realized the difference through my own body.

From the very beginning, from the setting of the background to the goal, it told me everything.

If you read the description of the message, the location of the 8th floor stage is the Izaaku Dungeon that is the background of the 7th floor stage.

But it seemed like a lot of time had passed.

“Not bad?”

“What do you mean? Croak.”

The kindness of the message.

And the monsters running over there.

The Dombas were running, probably because they saw that we had made a fire.

It was in the dark, so the light was clearly visible.

By the way, why couldn't these guys who have developed for hundreds of years not be able to make a single lamp?

I was able to understand the situation by seeing the Dombas running towards us.

Oh, those, they don't have eyes.

Of course, there would be no need for a light.

It seemed that it was not because of the lights that they came to us, but the sound of our words.

One Dombas running in front shouted.

“Stop! You have trespassed into the Izaaku Kingdom!”

Oh boy.

It speaks well

“Since you broke in without going through the entry point, if you resist, you will be shot dead on the spot! Accept arrest silently and you will be escorted to the entrance office...”

The group of Dombas that came running was about five.

It's not enough.

The guy in the front is a little flashy

The Dombas in the back are dressed in uniform.

The level of clothing is quite high.

The mother body was not included.

“What to do, Captain?”

“What to do?”

The mission of the 8th floor stage is to assassinate the leaders.

Ultimately, the goal is to kill their leader and disintegrate the group.

I wondered if it was necessary to follow them and get them through conversation.

All you have to do is grab it from the start and get into it.

“Croak, you’re the captain.”

“Isn’t that a good plan?”

“No, you’re the captain because you say crazy things. Croak.”

This brat?

“Croak, Croak.”

Iddy laughed loudly and grabbed her spear.

No matter what, Iddy does not refuse or shy away from battles.

What a good subordinate.

I also took out my sword and shield from my inventory.

“Stop! Stop...! Kaaaaa!”

A scream echoed across the quiet city outskirts.

* * *

I got a map.

The map was drawn quite accurately.

However, it had to be checked by touching the surface, not by color, but by touch like a braille code.

I think the Dombas checked it not by looking at it, but by touch.

I don't know how to see things without eyes.

Will it look like an ultrasound?

I don't know yet.

Next time I catch a Dombas, I'll have to ask that too.

“Croak, unfortunately, the mother bodies are scattered all over the place.”

It was as Iddy said.

In the Dombas society of the Izaaku Dungeon that had become a kingdom, the mother bodies were literally noblemen.

Rather than gathering in one place, they were wandering around for various purposes.

Rather than directly attacking the city head-on, Iddy and I infiltrated and hid inside the city.

Dombas as well as a small number of other races had entered the city.

It wasn't for nothing that the Dombas I met on the 8th floor were talking about the entry office.

Thanks to this, it was easy to hide in the city.

We were looking for an empty house and using this as our hiding place.

We first decided to target individual roaming mother bodies.

If more than ten mother bodies were gathered in one place, it was clear that we would be defeated without doing anything.

Because the paralysis ability of the mother bodies is still there.

So the plan was to hide in the city and assassinate the mother bodies one by one and reduce their number.

“Croak, each one a day. It will be over in 15 days.”

What 15 days?

Ten days will be fine.

“Croak, do you have any plans?”

“Yes.”

There is one most important point in our assassination.

I asked Iddy if she knew what it was.

“I don’t know. Croak.”

“The enemy should not know that we’re only killing the mother bodies.”

When the mother bodies start to gather in one place, there is no solution.

“Croak, then what do we do?”

There was one very useful method.

“Terror.”

Side Story 12

Iddy (12)

The buildings of this city usually have no ceilings or walls.

Maybe it was because there is no need to cover from snow, rain, wind, or the sun.

Maybe it's because wood and mud are precious.

In any case, buildings with walls and ceilings are rare in this city.

If you think of it as a home, it is your personal space.

It was nothing more than a low stone wall.

But it wasn't that there weren't a lot of buildings in the right style.

It was the highest tower in the center of the city where the mother bodies of the highest rank lived.

The same was true of the (relatively) luxurious residential area that was centered around the tower.

Finally, there was the gigantic theater located in the heart of the city.

Apparently, in this city, walls and ceilings are regarded as symbols of wealth.

"Croak, it's a big theater."

"Yeah."

A play was in full swing in the theater.

Because it was such a large theater, anyone with an interest could come in and watch the play at will.

Anyway, their level of civilization was considerably high.

There is popular culture, and the infrastructure for it has gained a high enough level for theatre.

After looking around for a while, I found a place where the mother bodies were gathered.

It was confirmed that several mother bodies were watching the play with their green eyes twinkling in the front row, which is the best place to watch the play.

I also found the target.

I should start working.

“Croak. Captain, that sounds like the story of Captain.”

“Huh?”

As Iddy pointed, I looked up at the stage of the theater.

On the stage, several Dombas were fighting bravely against a Dombas disguised as a human being.

Red and black, sinister patterns of wings hung on the back of their enemy, a ferocious human.

From gigantic sizes to jagged, sharp shapes.

It was an exaggerated version of Talaria’s wings.

“Croak.”

“Don’t laugh.”

On the stage, you could see the Dombas defeating the human and comically depicting that human's defeat.

They are missing the point of course.

They're making up a story that doesn't exist, fabricating it.

"Let's go."

I led Iddy, who wanted to see more, and headed towards the theater exit.

"Croak, this was the first play I've ever seen. It was fun."

It's not fun.

Forget about that scam play.

It's time to slowly rise.

As I was thinking about it, smoke began to rise from inside the theater.

Okay, now it's time for the smoke to start.

These Dombas have no eyes and have a poor sense of smell.

So, even though I put a pile of oil-soaked cloth in the corner of the theater, no one really noticed.

Heaps of cloth were easy to obtain.

Clothing, including cloth and leather, was the representative item that the Dombas traded with the outside world.

Clothing seemed to be a popular and precious luxury to these monsters, who appear to be unable to eat, drink, or even reproduce properly.

I was able to find a warehouse with a large amount of fabric, and it was easy to steal using the inventory.

There was some oil I had bought on the 6th floor to burn down the dungeon.

Bang!

While the Dombas were confused after recognizing the heat and smoke belatedly, they knocked down the exit of the theater.

The pillars of the building built entirely of stone were really easy to break.

It wasn't a poorly crafted pillar, but if they had the power to break a stone, it could be broken down.

A large pillar blocked the exit.

“Croak. It's not completely blocked.”

“It's okay.”

This building is made of solid stone.

It does not catch fire

The only heat and smoke now was from the burning oiled cloth.

In the meantime, rather than blocking the exit.

It would have been better if there was a hole that was difficult for one person to pass through.

There will be more deaths from monsters trying to get out through that hole than deaths from monsters burning.

“Croak, as expected, Captain is mean. “

Iddy said.

She said it as if it were a compliment.

In fact, for the Lizardman, being mean was never a good thing.

Rather, it was used in a more negative sense than humans.

It doesn't matter if I'm mean.

The results are coming now.

It's enough to win!

Is it so wrong to use a cheese rush* for a rookie who was about to debut?

Did I win?!

“Even shameless. Croak. It's so shameless and mean, I think I'm going to fall in love with it. Croak.”

Noisy.

I won't fall for that.

The confusion was growing.

The mother bodies and actors who were in the innermost part of the theater were rolling their feet in the place where the heat was felt the most.

They shouted over and over, but there were no Dombas to clear the way for them.

Everyone wanted to leave as quickly as possible.

Also, they are too well socialized.

If they were the Dombas on the 7th floor, of course, they would have evacuated the mothers first.

However, the Dombas on the 8th floor gave priority to living.

Individuals become wiser, but as a group they become duller.

“Go and come back.”

Multiple mothers were isolated in the panic.

Could there be better targets for this surprise attack?

“Croak. Are you okay?”

Iddy was worried.

Unfortunately, Iddy couldn't get close to the heat.

It was a limitation of amphibians.

“It's fine. I'm better than they are.”

It has already been confirmed through experiments how vulnerable the Dombas are to heat.

On the 6th floor, it was the opposite.

The skeleton soldiers were better than me,

I was about to die while trying to burn the entire dungeon.

“Croak, as expected, Captain seems a bit crazy.”

I screamed and hid among the chaos.

Hiding in the crowd, I slowly approached the mother bodies.

If all those mother bodies' eyes were on me,

Then all of my limbs would probably be stiffened and I would be immediately subdued.

However,

“Kyaak!”

A sword was stabbed in the chest of a mother body who had been buried in the crowd.

Unfortunately, no one cared about the death.

I reentered the crowd

There was a mother body who bravely tried to put out the fire.

Dombas basically lacked the concept of extinguishment.

It was not a race that needed water, and it was not a sandy or earthy environment.

For them, fire was just something to avoid.

But that mother body was trying hard to put out even the slightest bit of flames, wielding its clothes.

I smashed its knee with a low kick and pushed it into the flames.

There was a mother body pushing another Dombas.

It didn't seem to care that the Dombas were crammed back and forth.

I kicked the mother body's hamstring.

Its legs were broken, and I grabbed the head of the mother body who had come down to its chest and twisted it.

It was so easy.

Dombas distinguish objects by hearing.

They have neither sight nor smell.

They are literally blind in this enclosed space, distracted by screams.

The exit of the theater was noisy.

Looks like a rescue team came from outside.

The Dombas are running the city's security forces.

There is also a border guard belonging to the entry office, so it was natural that there are soldiers for security.

And there were mother bodies among those soldiers.

Because the mother bodies themselves are powerful weapons.

Even among the soldiers who rushed to the front of the theater, the mother body could have been mixed in.

I had to quickly organize the remaining mother bodies in the theater and take care of the outside as well.

I hurriedly moved on.

* * *

“Found it! This way!”

We escaped the soldiers pursuing us and returned to our hideout.

As soon as I returned to the hideout, I found a wriggling Dombas.

The original owner of this house.

It is also our informant.

It was obviously tied to a pole, wriggling to see if the bindings were loose and trying to escape out of the house.

I'm sorry.

If we had arrived ten minutes late, it might have escaped.

The Dombas, who found me and Iddy, sighed.

"These... bad guys. Humans like you shouldn't even be allowed to enter the city...! You crazy-eyeless bastards!"

I hadn't seen its face for half a day, and its mouth got rough.

I want to treat you kindly.

By the way, why are you using 'crazy-eyeless bastard' as a swear word?

They don't have eyes.

My eyes are fine.

"Wicked bastards! You!"

The Dombas groaned.

This Dombas is a guy I'm personally grateful for.

It taught me a lot.

About the position of the mothers.

About the number of soldiers.

Locations of major buildings, including theaters.

Locations of clothing warehouses.

The map.

It even showed how vulnerable to fire Dombas' bodies are.

Anyone could tell that I was gathering information for the purpose of harming his people, but this poor monster confided everything before torture.

I suddenly had a thought.

The monsters on the 7th floor were primitive and savage.

But they wouldn't have given me this information.

It was pitiful.

The ropes on its limbs were released.

“Ugh...!”

The Dombas trembled with a gust of wind as the ropes that had been fastened to its bones were released.

After a brief refreshment, the pain will come.

Before that, I stabbed the Dombas in the temple.

I clasped my fingers with magical power.

My fingers went in and out of his temple like an awl.

That ended the Dombas' life.

The physical abilities of the Dombas were also incomparably weaker than those on the 7th floor.

As soon as I killed the Dombas, I heard footsteps outside.

I stopped breathing.

All you have to do is to not make a sound.

They have no eyes, and no sense of smell.

They simply perceive objects around them with their superhuman hearing.

The Dombas soldiers, who had been looking around for a long time, eventually returned without finding us.

Didn't they think that instead of running away along the road, I would go into a house and hide?

"Croak."

Iddy was close by.

We were close.

Iddy doesn't look too uncomfortable

It was.

It was definitely something to be concerned about.

The gap was.

This gap was to my advantage.

Probably because my limbs are shorter.

Weapons are also shorter.

It was quite a dangerous gap for Iddy who has long limbs and uses a spear.

It is a position that I would never have given up if I were Iddy.

“Croak, it was a tiring day.”

As Iddy said, I was busy all day.

However, it was in a day that I could achieve all this.

[Number of mother bodies remaining: 17/36]

Killed nineteen mothers in one day.

They didn't seem to even realize that our goal was not indiscriminate terrorism, but the assassination of the mother bodies.

Rather, the Dombas tried to find us by densely mixing the mother body among the soldiers.

Along with that, we also escaped against the soldiers with one or two mothers.

I wanted them to continue to misunderstand that using the mother bodies would be enough to deal with us.

Iddy was tired, but she looked happy.

Iddy knew that fighting fair and just like a warrior was a virtue.

But Iddy enthusiastically joined my plan without any complaints.

“Hey.”

I suddenly wondered.

Actually, I've been curious about it for a long time.

I just thought of asking.

“Croak?”

“Why do you like me?”

“Are you curious about that?”

Iddy chuckled and laughed.

“I like you because you’re handsome. Croak.”

“Bullshit.”

Lizardmen and humans are so different in appearance, so to like them because they are handsome.

It was nonsense.

Iddy insisted it was real, but I ignored it.

“The handsome one is the biggest, but there are other reasons as well. Captain isn’t afraid of me. You’ve been like that since the first time I saw you. You were weaker than me back then, but still, you weren’t afraid of me.”

That is bullshit again

I was stronger back then too.

“For us Lizardmen, strength is a virtue. But in the eyes of my people, I am not a strong warrior, but an abomination and was feared.”

Iddy looked me in the eye and said.

“They saw me as a monster that they couldn’t handle because I was too strong. After wandering around the tribe, I got used to those kinds of eyes at some point. Being treated as a monster. Everyone was like that. But Captain was different.”

When I first met Iddy on the 5th floor.

I remember the conversation we had back then.

When I praised her for being a strong warrior, seeing Iddy who was remarkably pleased, I thought that she was a very simple Lizardman.

“Croak, of course, Captain was only looking at me as an enemy to kill. Even that was comforting to me. Croak. It’s something I said, but it’s strange. Do you understand?”

I understood.

I could sympathize a little bit.

Maybe it’s because I’ve had a similar experience.

The second day of the dialogue meeting was war.

At the time, I was stuck on the 6th floor, and I did not interfere with the complicated commotion in the community.

Because I didn’t have time or space for that.

It was they themselves who decided.

I do not know.

Why did they make that choice despite seeing my strength in the first meeting?

Did they think that they had grown up and caught up with me?

Did they think that I was isolated on the 6th floor and stagnated?

Or did they just think that they could win with a difference in numbers?

I was not taken aback by their misunderstanding.

I wasn't even angry.

Rather, it seemed a little refreshing.

To use my power against a human, not a skeleton.

Just like a person who ate only rice every day, finally eating noodles and feeling like it was a special meal.

It just felt so refreshing and enjoyable.

When I came to my senses,

The people who stood by and watched the war from afar.

It was time to meet their eyes.

After meeting those eyes, I was like, 'Oh, smashing the head doesn't make the skulls fragment, but the brain explodes?' As I was ecstatic, I thought that something was wrong with this.

From then on, I felt that gaze.

I thought that it wasn't that I made any mistakes or wrongdoings, but that I had changed in a strange and terrifying way.

Am I wrong?

Could it be that I am going the wrong way?

I thought so.

But I could only see one way.

I couldn't see any other way than the one I'm walking on to survive and to be strong.

“Croak, the eyes of others are always dangerous to an isolated person.”

Iddy replied.

What did I say?

Ah, yes, I must have muttered my heart out again.

I am aware that I mutter to myself.

Sometimes my mouth is moving alone, so I realize later that if I want something, I’m just muttering my thoughts.

What did I say to Iddy?

I do not know.

“You said that the eyes of people you’ve met before follow you.
Croak.”

.

.

.

It was silent.

By the time the silence lasted as long as my average sleep duration, Iddy spoke again.

“Thank you, Captain.”

It was out of the blue.

“What?”

“Croak, I’ve always been alone. My memories of the past are erased, but maybe I was alone even when I didn’t remember. So I’m happy now. So thank you.”

I thought quietly.

Although Iddy didn’t remember.

I thought that there must have been someone by Iddy’s side.

If it’s for Iddy, who is laughing at her embarrassing words.

Even if she doesn’t remember.

There must have been someone, I thought there was.

* * *

I looked at the tower that stood tall over the city.

When I first saw it, I thought it was a fairly high tower, but the view of the tower I see now has a very different atmosphere.

Probably because everything in the city has collapsed except for the tower.

“Croak, croak, the city has collapsed. It’s awful, Captain.”

That’s my strength too.

When I do things, I do it very well.

“Croak, are there now four remaining mother bodies left?”

“Five.”

[Number of mother bodies remaining: 5/36]

All the remaining mother bodies were on that tower.

Five.

In the worst case, I thought that more than ten mothers could gather in one place and fight.

Five was a very good result.

“Croak, what now?”

“What now, what? You have to do it with your body.”

Including the limbs and tails of me and Iddy, there were nine in total.

There are five mothers to deal with.

It is a fight by sealing 5/9 of the limbs and tail.

It was incredibly difficult

Shit, I'm the one who picked the Hell difficulty, and I have to do something about it.

What can i do

As I was about to run towards the tower, a portal suddenly opened.

[The Day of Dialogue has begun. Please enter.]

[Time remaining until forced entry: 23:59:59]

Uh, was today the day of the dialogue agreement?

I knew there wasn't much time left.

When I checked the message window, Kim Min-hyuk's messages were pushed behind a lot.

No wonder.

I was able to clear the 8th floor by attacking the tower within 24 hours and participating in the conversation, and I was able to easily go to the conversation and clear the 8th floor.

There was no problem because the stage time was stopped while participating in the conversation.

“Croak, I think you must go.”

I had to go.

On the day of the dialogue agreement, there is a forced entry function.

Over time, everyone would come back if they were called in.

No wonder.

[Lee Ho-jae, 8th floor: Hey, are you busy?]

[Kim Min-hyuk, 16th floor: Brother! Why are you contacting me now!]

My title was changed to Brother.

[Lee Ho-jae, 8th floor: Why.]

[Kim Min-hyuk, 16th floor: Hurry up! it's really over when you come. Right now, we're evenly matched, so if you come, they will immediately surrender.]

It seemed that it would be better to go quickly.

Unlike last time, Kim Min-hyuk and Park Jung-ah did a good job, so I thought it would be less troublesome.

If you try to attack that tower, and 24 hours have passed and you are forced to enter, you will lose steam.

I looked to the side and saw Iddy gurgling and fiddling with her tail.

Her tail is so long that it comes up to the chest of that giant.

“Let’s go together.”

“Croak.”

Iddy widened her eyes.

“Didn’t you say it was a place of harmony where humans gather. If you take a monster like me, everyone will be afraid.”

She was worrying about everything

I could tell with a smile.

“It’s okay, actually, it still is.”

I thought that adding one monster would make two monsters, but there would be no difference.

Iddy groaned.

It was a lively Croak quite different from the dull Croak before.

“If Captain is okay, I’m okay.”

I climbed onto the portal with Iddy.

The portal was activated, and a bright light flashed from the dark underground city that had fallen into ruins.

[The God of Adventure is moved to tears.]

[The God of Dedication is happy.]

[The God of Light is bored.]

[The God of Duel looks at you with displeased eyes.]

[The God of the Sky watches over you.]

[The God of Slowness.....]

Note:

*) Cheese Rush, a Starcraft strategy term.

Side Story 13

Two years ago

“Hey, cut some slack and get in.”

I looked back.

There was a person standing in front of the practice room door, looking at me.

They had their hand on the light switch in the practice room, planning to turn the lights off, so I would come out.

“Let’s go to sleep. All the kids are uncomfortable.”

They don’t seem to be uncomfortable.

It looks like they’re all in the dorm and sleeping.

I was the only one left in the practice room.

“It’s our monthly free time. Do you have to stay in the practice room and make other people uncomfortable?”

Apart from holidays, the club gives players free time once a month.

They have to stay in the dormitory, but we are considerate of each other, so they can spend their time as they please.

And even if I practiced during that time, there should be no problem.

“Don’t you think that other people are being harmed because of you? No, you didn’t lose today, so why are you making a fuss even though you won. You can just rest today. Hey, are you ignoring me? Do you think that your seniors are funny?”

Such a long talker.

“Hey, don’t be rude; get lost.”

“...What?”

The senior was furious, but unfortunately there was nothing more he could do.

He was active in the past, but now he’s on the bench where he can’t even play.

There will be disciplinary action at the club level if a player who eats only salaries at the club dormitory every day interferes with my practice and causes friction.

The senior cussed for a while and then left.

The practice room was quiet again.

I wanted to resume practice right away, but I couldn’t.

I lost my concentration for a moment.

The pain I had forgotten during practice began to appear again.

I took the eye drops next to the mouse and put them into my eyes.

It feels like my dry cornea is torn.

Pain flows through the nerve membrane and into my eyeball.

The headache I felt in the middle of my head ran down the back of my head to my spine.

Neck, shoulders, back, and pelvis.

My wrists were tingling.

I felt a stabbing pain from time to time.

From the tips of my fingers to my knuckles, down my wrists to my elbows.

There was no place that didn't hurt.

Although there were no major problems with my daily life.

By the standards of a pro gamer, I was close to half a corpse.

It's been quite a while since my debut.

There was only one reason why I won the title right in my debut year and didn't miss it throughout my playing career.

I practiced that much.

I was able to win championships by my skills without any variability.

It doesn't cost money to practice, and if I just put in my effort, I'm guaranteed to improve my skills.

That's what I thought, but the cost wasn't as low as I thought it was.

My body couldn't stand the years of abuse.

A year at most.

If I have to forcefully drag it out for a long time, it will last about two or three more years.

And for that extended period of time, I could be a waste and I wouldn't even see the championship.

So this year was the last.

There is a trophy display case behind the practice room.

Tournament trophies awarded to the club and its players.

Most of the showcases were occupied by the prizes I had won.

All of them were trophies.

The most recent trophy was a runner-up trophy.

My gaze was fixed.

It may be an honor to some, but to me, that was just a joke that had to be removed as soon as possible.

“Hooo.”

I grabbed the mouse again.

If this is really the last year.

I should wash away that disgrace and retire.

I continued to practice.

Until the phone lit up.

Normally, I would have ignored anyone calling and focused on practicing.

[Father]

It was a call from my father.

It's been months since my father called me.

What have you been up to?

I quickly picked up the phone.

* * *

One day in the hospital room.

After going through the pain that comes from time to time and the ominous feeling that strikes him every time he sees the doctors and nurses, he feels tired and exhausted even after lying in bed all day.

When he was lying on the bed with no energy, the only entertainment that comforted him was the TV in the hospital room.

“Why are you looking at something like that again?”

That’s why...

When his daughter picked up the remote control and switched TV channels, he unwittingly got angry.

His daughter sighed and returned to the original channel.

It was a gaming channel.

The channel broadcasted game competitions.

After waiting for a while, his youngest’s name was called on the TV.

“Ugh, was there a match today?”

His daughter looked at the TV reluctantly, and said.

She is his eldest daughter who hates his youngest playing games more than anyone else.

So he tried not to turn on the game channel in front of his daughter as much as possible, but today was an important match day.

Aside from the game, it was also a really important day.

The surgery was scheduled for tomorrow afternoon.

The doctor said the surgery had a high chance of success, but that didn't mean there was no chance of death during the operation.

So he had to watch today's match.

After waiting a little longer, the host introduced the match and players to be broadcasted today.

His youngest's profile was captured on the screen.

"That's great. I worked hard in a factory and sent him to college."

His daughter bit her tongue and ran out of the room.

His youngest dropped out of college and became a pro gamer.

He thought his youngest wanted to show that he has that much will and potential.

He didn't think it was a good way to persuade others of that.

He knew that his youngest was more passionate about his job as a professional gamer than anyone else, and that he had the ability to earn enough money.

It was only because of the sacrifices that were forced on his eldest since childhood.

He couldn't help but feel the regret and disappointment that was caused because of it.

She can be comforted, though.

The time had already passed, and his daughter's lost time could not be regained.

He was even more apologetic to know that his daughter's resentment for leaving the hospital room was something her father, not her brother, deserved.

The first match started.

His youngest's match was second.

[Okay, the game has started. The first to meet at 9 o'clock is Blue Jin-young, Park Seong-hwa.]

The comments of the game casters and commentators began.

He pulled out a thick notebook that he had left under his pillow.

He turned the pages and listened to the commentators.

[Park Seong-hwa is a good starter. Contrary to his opponent who chose a build to start relatively well, is it a strong build in the early to mid-range?

[Hey, I'm done with this build.]

Build.

Actually he didn't understand the build.

However, he checked the comments of the commentators and the description of the build, which was written in crooked letters in the notebook.

He diligently flipped through the notebook to find the description of the player.

Park Seong-hwa, Park Seong-hwa Park. Found it.

Park Seong-hwa – The gameplay in the second half is not stable. There are a lot of things that go wrong trying to forcibly finish the game.

Here are the best possible cases.

No matter who wins, the first match will be over soon.

He won't have to wait long until the second game where his youngest appears.

A happy smile formed.

* * *

His son could be seen from afar as he entered the booth to play a game.

The excitement he had just before disappeared in an instant.

He felt frustrated as if there was a stone in his chest.

He looked unwell.

He could tell at a glance that his son's health was bad.

He looks like that?

What the hell are the team managers and coaches doing?

The game started and the commentators started shoutcasting.

His eyes didn't go down to the notebook.

During the match, it sometimes shows the players' faces for a moment.

He couldn't put his head down to the notebook, lest he might miss the brief screen.

About 15 minutes have passed since the game started.

For a moment, his youngest's face was reflected.

The commentator admired and praised his youngest's face, concentrating on the monitor in front of him.

The cheers of his youngest's fans were heard.

He couldn't.

His son's countenance was awful, so he couldn't look at his son's face with joy.

The match continued, and even after the match was over, his youngest's face did not leave his mind.

Since he won today's match, it would be good to rest a little.

He knew very well that his youngest wouldn't do that.

'That child could die before me.'

He thought so.

At first, he didn't even know that the kid had a strong desire to win.

Because he won every time.

The son he sees once every few months boasted only of his victory.

So he thought he was a good son.

He studies well, does sports well, and speaks well.

The father knew later that he wasn't perfect, but that he was a strong kid that couldn't lose to anything.

Not to lose to anything, not wanting to lose anything.

He was sharp and sensitive, as if he would die once he lost.

He felt like his heart was collapsing.

Even if he stopped his youngest, he wouldn't listen.

Still, he was a good listener to his sister, but after the two of them became distant, he couldn't interfere.

No, it's funny now that he was interfering.

He didn't deserve it.

He saw the hand holding the notebook.

It was a blunt, rough hand.

It was the hand that touched mechanical equipment more than the hands of his children.

His fingertips became numb and it was difficult to turn the pages of the notebook page by page.

The writing in the notebook was crooked.

It was full of mistakes because he couldn't learn to write.

He is the only one in the world who can properly recognize this nonsense handwriting.

So neither the nurse nor his daughter could see this notebook.

Because he was shy.

As much as he lacked his own hands, he treated his children poorly.

His daughter, who had to go to work every day while attending school, gave up university and said she wanted to work in a factory.

His youngest child who saw his face only once or twice a year and grew up almost neglected.

He picked up the calendar at the bedside.

Tomorrow was marked with a red circle.

It's the surgery day.

He's never been a father in his life.

He couldn't even discuss the future.

Now it was impossible to predict how much more time would be left.

He shook his daughter, who was sleeping in the caregiver's bed, to wake her up.

He asked his dreary daughter where his cell phone was.

"Why, Dad. Are you going to tell Ho-jae about the surgery tomorrow? That's a good idea. He should know now."

Saying so, his daughter gave him his cell phone.

He wanted to tell his youngest.

Past failures, future failures and successes.

Do your best, but don't push yourself to the brink by hurting yourself.

Apart from success, you are a worthy person.

He wanted to tell him that it's okay and that he loves his youngest.

He was so determined.

So the night passed.

Even the short morning wait passed.

Morning came.

Then, the door to the hospital room opened.

His youngest said he would come as soon as he finished training, and when he saw the face of his youngest who opened the door of the hospital room, he forgot what he wanted to say.

The words he had prepared to say, not even a greeting came out.

Nothing really came out after seeing his youngest's condition, which was much more serious than he had expected.

Anguish and sorrow.

A sense of shame.

“What’s going on, Dad?”

Unknowingly, he raised his voice.

Completely different words from what he had prepared came out.

His son sighed in frustration.

“Father... at least tell me why you called me.”

The conversation went contrary to his original intentions.

He couldn't be honest because of his lack of communication, intense emotions, and his fear behind the blame.

His youngest and his conversation continued to run in parallel lines.

In the end, it ended in the worst way possible.

Side Story 14

Hochi (1)

“Something like that happened? It’s kind of interesting.”

Lee Yeon-hee, who was listening to what I was talking about, said.

I asked what was interesting.

“That he had a friend like that.”

Oh, was that what I was talking about?

Of course, that’s interesting.

That Hojae had a friend.

It was even more surprising than if one day, all of a sudden, he said, ‘I’m a god.’

To be honest, I wasn’t really surprised when Hojae got out.

Maybe it’s just because I was thinking that it wouldn’t be strange if he did that and became a god.

Rather, it would have been more strange to not be a god.

“I think he got along well with that Lizardman.”

It certainly was strange.

Although Hojae had values that could be very problematic in society.

There were many similarities with the values of the Lizardman, who were simply ignorant, liked to fight, and liked to be strong.

And.

“I think it’s more about being able to empathize and understand each other than our personality.”

Perhaps in that sense, he felt a sense of camaraderie with the Lizardman Iddy and became closer to her.

I think that was the case.

Hojae is a person who can endure loneliness well.

But he wasn’t terribly lonely, and he wasn’t terribly free from loneliness either.

As soon as he entered the tutorial, he became isolated, maybe even before he got into the Tutorial.

He hasn’t been able to seek empathy and understanding from others since he retired from professional gaming, perhaps even before that.

He had people cheering from afar, but no one was standing by.

He didn’t even have colleagues.

The teammates saw Hojae only as an out-of-the-ordinary monster, an incomparable genius.

His opponents saw Hojae only as an enemy to be defeated.

The presence of fans cheering for him only made him more obsessive about winning.

I think that a lot would have changed if there was even one person who was by Hojae’s side at that time.

Of course, if that was the case, Hojae might not have become a god.

But when comparing becoming a god through that process and not becoming a god without that process.

I think it's a much happier life not being a god.

So whenever I think of Hojae's family, I feel a little sad.

If they protected Hojae.

But they couldn't, and whenever Hojae tried to avoid his family story and ignore it, I could only watch with pity.

Maybe it's a good thing they're already dead.

Anyway, Hojae was cut off from people and had to stand alone for too long.

And Iddy was the only person who could fill that loneliness.

"Still, I can't believe he's trying to destroy the tutorial because of a friend he met on a stage. It's a little weird, but it's cool."

"Right?"

I think so too.

Maybe it's because I was born in a tutorial, Hojae's goal of destroying the tutorial for the people in it feels cool.

Compared to other challengers who say that it's a meaningless world that resets every time, and abuse people in the tutorial, I don't think Hojae is a bad guy, although he is a bit crooked.

"Tell me another story."

Lee Yeon-hee said.

Recently, whenever I meet Lee Yeon-hee on the 61st floor, I tell her stories of Earth.

Today, strangely, the topic of Hojae came up.

Lee Yeon-hee knew quite well what Ho-jae was going through in the tutorial.

She says she's been scouring the tutorial community's old records.

But she didn't know what Hojae was going through on the stages.

By the way, I was a little nervous about telling the story of Hojae to others.

I think Hojae will get angry later.

Or just embarrassed.

I wanted to see it, but I was also afraid of the aftermath.

"How about you? Do you have any memorable stages?"

I asked Lee Yeon-hee in reverse.

"Me?"

"Uh-huh."

All the tutorials I remember are memories recorded during Hojae's time.

I wondered what other people would have experienced and how differently they would have seen it.

"Well, I don't have many memories of the stages because I struggled day by day with the homework Uncle gave me. Oh, but I still remember that place. The 16th floor. You know?"

I know

A stage where doppelgangers and chatty knights and miscellaneous extras appear.

It was a very special stage.

I remember that the atmosphere itself was a little different from other stages.

It was one of the few stages that Hojae remembered as a pleasant experience.

“Ah, that stage was hell.”

* * *

The topic of conversation quickly passed through Hojae and tutorials, and continued to the current state of the Earth.

The Earth was in an ambiguous situation, neither good nor bad.

There are no crazy gods invading Earth, and the gates full of monsters in the middle of the city no longer open.

It would have seemed very peaceful just hearing this, but it really wasn't.

In the areas near the gates where the gates were opened, living things began to become beasts.

From passing birds and stray cats to flying insects.

Even humans are said to become demons.

The exact cause and pattern have not been identified yet.

Compared to the days when the gates were open, it is not at a dangerous level.

However, due to the fact that it occurred without warning, the damage to the general public was quite large.

This issue is now one of the most trivial issues on Earth.

The bigger problem was, rather, the Awakened who had to deal with such an event.

There were too many Awakened left on Earth.

Most of the Awakened people with too much power became unemployed.

Although they were wary of beasts, the work has significantly decreased compared to the days when there were gates that had to be attacked all the time.

Such Awakeneds were used in national conflicts.

Although a full-fledged clash has not yet occurred, people are publicly speaking in the news that a world war involving the Awakeneds is about to happen soon.

The gap between the Awakened and the non-Awakened is also deepening.

Non-Awakeneds, who make up most of the population and are in fact supporting the splendid daily life of the Awakened, began to feel uncomfortable with the fact that the Awakened wield extra-legal power and authority while just fooling around.

Confronted with the psychology of rewards unique to the Awakened, it is causing various social problems.

Finally. Hojae is gone.

This has also become a big social problem.

Of course, externally, Hojae had been dead for a long time, and he had the 'setting' to return to Earth through resurrection whenever there was a crisis.

As this guy disappears, the religious system of the Lee Ho-jae Faith is collapsing.

Although I had the authority to operate the system.

It has become difficult to pay ‘reward’, which is a core function of the system.

Lee Ho-jae Faith’s compensation was entirely covered by Lee Ho-jae’s ability.

Rewards such as sending down punishment, giving simple abilities, or summoning guardians.

It all relied on Hojae’s ability to pay all of that in real time.

I didn’t have that kind of omnipotence.

In addition, the same was true for item-type rewards such as potions, which accounted for most of the rewards.

There was a limit to the quantity of items.

It was never meant to be infinite.

To solve these problems, we are preparing a plan to gather the Awakened and send them on an expedition to another world.

If we can successfully explore the world beyond through the inter-dimensional portal.

Therefore, if inter-dimensional exchange is activated, it is expected that several problems can be solved at the same time.

On the contrary, it may be more of an annoyance.

Anyway, because of these things, the Earth has been busy every day lately.

To solve the governments of each country that do not want to release the Awakened even on the brink of death.

Recruiting manpower and investment funds.

“One thing I know for sure.”

Lee Yeon-hee said abruptly.

“Hmm?”

“It’s that Uncle is a really different person from Hojae. You’re not really a normal alter ego.”

.....you realized that now?

I was a little upset.

Even when we met at the competition, Lee Yeon-hee did not understand that I was a different person even though I was Hojae’s alter ego.

“It’s because I also use an alter ego. However, my alter ego is really me. It is the concept of a separate body that shares a single consciousness. An alter ego with a separate self-consciousness.”

Lee Yeon-hee looked at me with academic eyes.

I got a little goosebumps.

It reminds me of Hojae’s eyes when he was experimenting with me in the past.

“Then what should I call you? It’s a little odd to just call Uncle an alter ego.”

“Hochi.”

“Hochi?”

“It’s my name.”

Lee Yeon-hee laughed and said it was fun.

“I heard he called you that, but that was a name, not a nickname?”

I told her of an anecdote that Hojae made up the name of a character named Hoochi Nedval and his name roughly.

He is a very indifferent guy.

Actually, I wanted to have a grand name like Yong-yong.

“Then Uncle Hochi...”

What do you mean Uncle!

I was furious.

How old am I?

I am even younger than Lee Yeon-hee.

I’m way younger!

“Ah, anyway, what exactly is the relationship between the two of you?”

Relationship?

My relationship with Hojae?

Well, what should I explain?

“I don’t know what Hojae will think, but I think of Hojae like a parent.”

Because I learned everything from Hojae.

Even though I was forced to learn things I didn't want to learn.

Even if Hojae doesn't have to explain it in words, there are many things I learned from his memories.

"It's similar to me in that respect. I learned it from him too. It's only in the tutorial."

It certainly was.

Me and Lee Yeon-hee had something in common which was that we learned from Ho-jae.

Perhaps I know more clearly than Lee Yeon-hee.

Lee Yeon-hee was like a little sibling who suddenly appeared one day.

That's unnecessarily outstanding.

To me, who was judged as a failure and buried in the ruins of the 61st floor, the existence of Lee Yeon-hee, who appeared like Hojae's savior one day, was really embarrassing.

Whenever Lee Yeon-hee went up one level, I saw Hojae regaining vitality and hope, and I felt a sense of shame, and also felt a sense of entitlement and inferiority.

It's an old story.

I now feel only a little bit of regret, a sense of debt, and gratitude to Lee Yeon-hee.

Thanks to Lee Yeon-hee, Hojae found his hope again, and his relationship with me became close, so I could say that Lee Yeon-hee was a benefactor to me.

"By the way."

Lee Yeon-hee said.

“You talk a lot more than I thought.”

“Uh.....”

I was embarrassed.

At Lee Yeon-hee’s sudden words.

Lee Yeon-hee laughed again.

Did she make fun of me?

Lee Yeon-hee asked me what was so embarrassing because she couldn’t think of what to say.

“Are you interested in me?”

“Uh... uh?”

Side Story 15

Doppelganger (1)

The divine message came.

A precious thing will be buried under an unnamed dungeon in the western part of the continent.

‘Dig it out.’

It was an extraordinary oracle.

It was not an archaic language that had been forgotten over the years, nor was it a secret language whose meaning was hidden through difficult rhetoric.

It wasn’t even a prophecy whose interpretation changed occasionally with the passage of time.

It was a simple message.

Here, there is something precious, so dig it up yourself.

It was simple and clear words that both the officer who interpreted the denomination’s Bible and the fruit sellers of the street could understand.

Such an unusual oracle was given to all temples across the continent.

In the papal palace towering in the middle of the belief, to the small monastery in the mountains that cared for the elderly who were recuperating.

The contents of the oracle spread quickly.

From the mouths of the priests to the mouths of the believers, the Empire tried to stop the rumors belatedly, but it was impossible from the beginning.

When the emperor first heard about the oracle, many people on the continent had already heard of the oracle.

Even the emperor could not stop the rumors that had already spread.

For the sake of an instant change of life.

People started to leave their homes.

They set a nail to the front door of their house and started walking westward with a promise to return with gold.

In search of the treasure that may be sleeping somewhere in the western part of the continent.

One year has passed.

Those who were farmers, blacksmiths, bakers, and hunters in their hometown became adventurers in the west.

The adventurers flocked to the dungeon.

Many people died.

Contrary to the name, they were bad at adventures.

Even if a war broke out, this many people would not have died in vain.

However, there were more people coming to the dungeon than those who disappeared day by day.

A city for such adventurers was built near the dungeon.

There was no one to claim the wallets of those who died, for everyone had given up their lives for the sake of their dreams.

Three years have passed.

The dungeon on the west side of the continent was being attacked.

In the vicinity of the dungeon, a city for adventurers was formed without fail.

The hastily built city also declined rapidly.

The old money the adventurers brought from their hometowns had long since fallen.

Adventurers are no longer consumers.

They weren't even producers.

They became thieves.

Five years have passed.

The seekers lost hope that one day they would find the treasure.

All that was left was the devastated western part of the continent, the family left behind in their hometown after losing their fathers, and a band of thieves.

By the time the vortex of desire that the oracle had evoked calmed down, and the ruins beneath it began to appear.

In the abandoned dungeon that had already been attacked before the oracle was issued.

A certain wizard, who was investigating the outer walls of the dungeon with detection magic, discovered that there was a long straight route beyond the small mouse hole.

It was an artificial straight passage that could not be formed naturally.

Upon hearing the news that a hidden path had been found, the remaining expedition team that had not yet disbanded headed for the unnamed abandoned dungeon.

‘...Can you dig it up?’

‘What, the treasure?’

‘No, the path.’

The hidden path of the dungeon was blocked.

It was in a deep cave, beyond a tunnel where a rock had collapsed and the road was blocked.

The hole that was thought to be a rat hole was a small gap in the ground where the ground collapsed.

Hearing the news, the magicians of the tower arrived at the dungeon, but they could not break through.

There was a risk that the ground of the dungeon itself would sink if they tried to penetrate the passage with magic.

In the end, the only way left was to remove the piles of stones one by one from the deep dungeon.

At this point, most of the adventurers who moved as individuals had left.

The main expeditions for the dungeon were run by the Order, the Royal Knights, the Magic Tower, and the Mercenary Guild.

They had enough time and money to invest in digging the dungeon’s path.

One more year has passed.

The expedition succeeded in expanding a tunnel the size of a mouse hole into a tunnel the size of a dog hole.

There was an opinion to use magic to temporarily lift the pile of stones, then put a few people in and explore the other side of the road.

Originally, it was planned to send in a few slender people first, but due to the complex interests of several expeditions, a representative of each expedition was selected one by one and they became the expedition team.

And now.

Five men were walking through a dark, small passage.

“Please raise the light.”

Said the adventurer who was leading the advance squad.

The wizard walking right behind the adventurer raised his staff higher.

That wizard was the tower owner of a famous magic tower.

A great person, who originally, an adventurer would not even be able to look straight at.

It wasn't just the wizard.

The knight walking behind him belonged to the Royal Knights.

In fact, the adventurer wanted to become a knight when he was young.

Just like all the boys in their hometown.

Of course, it was an impossible dream.

Behind the knight was a glorious paladin who was respected by the church members, and at the end of the party, the ace warrior of the mercenary guild followed.

The adventurer felt good.

It gave him a strange pleasure to have such a great group of people standing behind him, as he led them.

The dungeon's path was finally cleared, and the excitement, anticipation, and tension that came from the fact that he was included in the advance squad to search for the treasure was added.

So this experienced adventurer made a mistake.

Unlike an adventurer who had been eating and sleeping in the dungeon for ten years, he could not recognize the figure drawn under his feet.

As soon as the adventurer's feet stepped forward, the figure began to glow.

“Tr……!”

The walls of the dungeon began to collapse before the adventurer could even finish the word trap.

The wall collapsed, revealing a large cavity, and the coffin in the center of the cavity began to open.

The ground shook and rolled down towards the cavity.

He tried to grab something in a hurry, but he was so confused that he couldn't get any strength into his body.

While losing consciousness due to the effect of the stun magic trap.

The adventurer saw.

The figure of a demon crawling out of the coffin with wriggling black tentacles.

* * *

I opened my eyes

With my eyes open for a moment, I did not move my body, but rolled my eyes and looked around.

Fortunately, a dim light was shining into the cavity.

The wizard's wand was still shining.

Damn it.

Perhaps the ceiling had collapsed, and the way back was blocked.

They are trapped inside the cavity.

“Light.”

The wizard's quiet words echoed in the cavity.

The light from the wand grew stronger.

The surroundings were clearly visible.

I lifted myself up after checking for safety.

“Are you okay?”

Someone's arm suddenly came to my side.

Looking back, it was the mercenary.

The mercenary lifted me up.

While I was with the expedition team, I did not belong to any faction, so I was stuck in the mercenary guild.

The mercenary knew me and I drank together with him.

We weren't even in the same party.

I had no memory, but the mercenary said he remembered.

I also pretended to remember.

“Let's gather in one place for a while. Is there anyone you can't see?”

The paladin approached the wizard holding the staff and said,

The wizard pointed his staff at the paladin.

“Stop, don't come any closer.”

The paladin was bewildered.

The wizard explained that before he passed out, he had seen the appearance of a demon called a Doppelganger.

The paladin agreed to those words and stepped back.

“I also saw a doppelganger crawling out of a coffin over there just before fainting. It would be better for the mercenary and the adventurer to separate from each other. A demon called a doppelganger kills people and imitates them. I've heard it's said to be so subtle that it can never be identified with the naked eye.”

The knight explained.

The explanation was easy to understand even for an ignorant person like the adventurer.

He was a better talker than I thought.

The paladin prayed for a moment, and then he put on a more serious expression.

He said.

“The doppelganger is still in here.”

Damn it.

Damn it.

Why is my life so twisted every time something is about to be unraveled?

If I had discovered the trap in advance, I would have been slowly approaching the treasure by now.

Instead, now we're being locked in a cavity with a demon.

Damn it

“Isn't it hiding using invisibility magic? The doppelganger is also a demon, so it should know how to use magic.”

I said.

It was also a personal wish.

If the demon were hiding in the common corner, it seemed that our great party could somehow kill it.

“Detect Invisibility.”

The wizard's spell has been cast.

He shook his head quietly.

Then quickly took the magic tool out of his bag.

It was an artifact that sensed the magic being cast around it.

There was one reaction.

There was only one magic that was maintained in this cavity right now.

Light magic being cast from the wizard's staff.

"All five of us here are in my sensest. It seemed that while we fainted, someone had already been killed and the doppelganger replaced them."

the Knight said.

It was the worst.

I looked at the place where the ceiling had collapsed, feeling like I was chewing shit.

When I turned around, everyone in the party was looking at me.

"No. I think we will have to wait quietly for the rescue team to come. It will be difficult for us to clear this wreckage by ourselves."

"The Lord of the Magic Tower is here, what can we not do?"

asked the mercenary.

"I don't think so."

This rubble poured from the ceiling.

Just getting rid of it doesn't solve all the problems.

The more it is removed, the more it may fall, and it may be dangerous.

A number of wizards were needed, as we did when we entered this passage.

Enough to support the ground itself with magic power.

“The rescue team will come. The second expedition team will come in three days, if they find this place.”

the Knight said.

Then the wizard said,

“My apprentice must be included among them. The Memorial magic will be able to read what happened, so a rescue team will be organized.”

It was a relief.

At least I’m not dead yet.

I felt a sense of relief as if a stone in my stomach had passed through.

I had a wasteful life that no one would care about whenever and wherever I die, but for the other party, each one was a valuable person.

The expedition won’t just give up on this party.

The Paladin cleared his throat.

Like to pay attention to himself.

“There’s something more important than our escape right now. The doppelganger is a dangerous demon that should never be left out. We’ll have to work this out on our own before the rescue team arrives.”

That crazy bastard

Even though it was a very reasonable statement, swear words came out of it.

So, even if we all die, we should prioritize finding the doppelganger over that.

Does it make sense?

You have to live and see.

“However, it is very difficult to determine the identity of the doppelganger who has once stolen a person’s appearance. Doppelgangers cannot be easily identified because they steal not only the person’s appearance, but also memories and personality.”

The knight said.

Yes, how can you find a demon that is so hard to find?

When the rescue team arrives, there might be someone among them who can find the demon, so it’s better to leave it to that person.

“Does anyone here know how to find out the identity of the doppelganger?”

The mercenary shouted in a hoarse voice.

At the words of the mercenary, everyone in the party was immersed in their thoughts and pondered on how to do it, but everyone remained silent to see if there was anything that came to mind.

After a brief silence, the group began to share information and anecdotes they knew about the doppelganger one by one.

It wasn’t a fruitful story.

Rather, it was just a heinous story that only aggravated anxiety.

It was awkward

To think that someone here is a demon, not a human.

Unlike the rest of the party, when someone attacks, I have to face it.

I am the weakest here.

People around me began to be wary.

The one closest to me is the mercenary on the right.

And the paladin on the left.

The wizard standing in the center with the others surrounding him.

Damn it. Can I really survive here?

I was worried about that.

That was then.

Someone started whispering in a quiet voice I could only hear

[Hello, human friend? I guess you must have been talking about me.]

It was the voice of the demon.

Side Story 16

Doppelganger (2)

In a dark cavity, five men were conversing, wary of each other.

Everyone was paying attention to each other, but there was one person unfocused.

[Human friend, can't you speak?]

Demon.

It was the voice of the demon.

[Yes, I am the demon.]

“Anyway, doppelgangers should never be allowed out!”

“But there's no way right now!”

The group's harsh voices were heard.

The topic went round and round, and there was no clear answer.

Anxiety and fear added to the perfect situation to confuse people.

Rather than recognizing that there is no logic in their own words, they mistakenly thought that everyone else's understanding was lacking.

In the midst of the frustration, the voices grew louder, and finding a solution seemed to keep getting farther and farther away.

[You seem to know what kind of existence I am. right?]

The demon, the doppelganger, was inside me.

A thought came to mind in an instant.

Should I tell my friends?

[Oh, you better not do that, human friend, but if you really want to die with me, I won't stop you.]

The Paladin and Knight continued to explain the dangers of doppelgangers.

The Wizard stood in the center and kept quiet.

The Mercenary was annoyed and started shouting, "So what am I supposed to do?"

[Do you think those friends will save you? The moment you speak, they will kill us together with no regrets. Human friend, don't you think so too?]

That's probably true.

They will not feel sorry, or even the slightest remorse.

I don't mean that these people are heartless scum.

However, they were people who knew the dangers of doppelgangers better than anyone else, and my value was quite low compared to that.

I am just garbage that crawled through the dungeon and died by stepping on a trap unluckily, a few people died like that every day.

When entering the village, soldiers followed me for surveillance, and the houses with young daughters were locked.

I always had to be looked down on with contempt until I fell asleep.

The Adventurer was such a being.

The reason he was included in this great party was not that he was a great adventurer, but because he was one of the few who survived until now.

Perhaps there was a different reason for having him in the party.

He was clearly aware of his position and value because he had approached the threshold of death more often than anyone else.

However

“It was only 10 years ago that only two doppelgangers destroyed an entire Dwarven city.”

Is it right for me to hide the doppelganger in order to live?

The desire to live was shining, but is it right to sacrifice so many people for that light?

Although I was destined to live like garbage and die like garbage.

[My human friend doesn't seem to know much about me. right?]

The doppelganger broke his train of thought and spoke again.

[Why don't you ask?]

...what.

I didn't know what the doppelganger was suddenly saying.

[What happens to a human being who's been hit by a doppelganger?]

I looked around in doubt.

I kept looking at the knight that was explaining the doppelganger, and as if he felt my gaze, he turned his head and looked straight at me.

...What, does that man have eyes on the side of his head?

He's wearing a helmet too.

Is it a coincidence?

"Is there anything you want to ask?"

I nodded my head suddenly.

[Ask. What happens if you get hit by a doppelganger?]

I did as the doppelgangers said.

"What exactly happens to a person who has been attacked by a doppelganger?"

The knight nodded his head as if I had asked a very good question.

He looked like a teacher lecturing people at school.

I've never met a teacher in person, but I thought maybe they would be something like him.

"A doppelganger kills a person and immediately melts the body of that person away. And they can imitate the person they killed. In other words, we already have a doppelganger mixed in. To avenge that person, you must catch the doppelganger. There is no need to feel guilty or sorry because they look the same. Rather, it is the right thing to do to soothe the soul of the deceased by killing the doppelganger who is imitating the victim..."

The knight explained.

Good voice, accurate pronunciation, and easy-to-understand explanations.

He was really like a teacher.

[This is a great story. That knight is good at explaining. I wish he had become a teacher rather than a knight.]

Even the doppelganger agreed with me.

[That's not important, my friend. Didn't you notice something strange in that Teacher Knight's explanation?]

What's weird?

Is there something wrong with the description?

[No, that was an accurate explanation. But isn't it strange? You were not killed by me, and you were not eaten by me. Rather, you maintained your ego. Isn't that right?]

...It was.

However.....

[Wow, you think even this is a demon's trick? That is an exaggerated delusion. If I eat you, I will get all your memories and be able to imitate you perfectly. It would be better for me to act to deceive your party than to leave your ego alone.]

It was a difficult argument to refute.

What a surprising demon.

The demon's acting power is certainly enough to deceive humans.

That's why it's a demon.

[Let me tell you one thing. I've been sleeping in that coffin over there for over 400 years. 400 years is no small amount of time for a demon. I won't have much time left in my life.]

The demon doesn't lie.

Only when he declares he is telling the truth.

[During that long period, I grew old. So even though I took a place in your body, I couldn't kill you. The same goes for anyone other than you. Now I have no power left to kill and imitate anyone

[That means I'm harmless.]

[Of course, I am hiding in a friend's body, but that's not a big problem. No one dies, and no city perishes.]

[I just want to live. Even for just a little bit longer.]

[How about you, friend?]

The demon's voice was calm and polite.

Like a teacher who kindly informs you of the obvious.

I was moved by that voice and agreed.

I wanted to live

More than anyone else.

* * *

[Are your worries over?]

It's not over yet.

The doppelganger said he was harmless, but there is no fool in the world who truly believes a demon's words.

But I also wanted to live right now.

[Isn't that enough?]

Ignoring the demon's words, I got up.

The group's eyes naturally turned towards me.

The guy who had been quiet with his mouth shut until now abruptly stood up, so their gaze naturally moved to me.

In fact, in my position, it is natural to shut up and not come forward until the problem is resolved.

But if you really do that, you never know when your neck will run away.

The discussion of the party continues, and when the words, 'But does it matter if that adventurer dies?', I will die on the spot.

It would be nice if the adventurer was the doppelganger after killing him, and if not, 'Well, it couldn't be helped.' One word and I would be forgotten.

I didn't want to die like trash.

Like my fellow adventurers.

"I have something to ask."

The knight's eyes lit up when I said I had a question.

"How much time do we have left?"

"7 days."

the knight said.

"We have more than a month's worth of food, but we should see the time limit as when the rescue team arrives, not the moment we run out of food."

The knight looked like he was trying to find the doppelganger before the rescue team arrived.

How can I change that thought?

“Then we don’t have much time left. I have one suggestion.”

It was necessary to calm the chaos within the cave even if it’s just a little bit.

I knew all too well how reckless and cruel people can become in chaos.

And the victim of such confusion will most likely be me.

I suggested that anyone who would like to present a topic speak with me in the common center.

Fortunately, the mercenaries and wizards agreed.

Soon, everyone in the party agreed.

It was great that the sorcerer told me that he was discussing it in the tower as well.

There is a difference between speaking in a place that attracts people’s attention and a place that does not.

I think a little more about my words, and I calm down.

“Magician, there is something I want to talk about in the middle for a moment. Could you please go to your seat?”

I tried to speak as politely as possible.

If it had been outside the dungeon, it might have been branded as cheeky with this single sentence and I would have turned into a dead body without even realizing it.

Even if this wizard stood still, the people under him would not have left me alone.

Why are you arrogantly talking to the lord of the tower?

“Okay.”

But the Wizard followed my instructions and retreated from the common center.

The Wizard naturally retreated in the opposite direction from where I was approaching.

When I return to my seat, the wizard will be opposite

My place will be the darkest.

It was a small harvest.

[Human friend, you were the type to think deeply about even the smallest things.]

There is nothing you can do to survive as an adventurer.

In the world of adventurers, dozens of people die for really trivial reasons.

“I’m going to ask you another question. Once you’ve uncovered a doppelganger, it’s about how you deal with the demon.”

“Rather than that, shouldn’t we start by discussing how to reveal the identity of the doppelganger?”

The Paladin spat out.

“Oh, let’s listen. It’s not the first time you’ve said this.”

Fortunately, there was the mercenary on my side.

In my heart, I expressed gratitude for the fact that the mercenary was on the same page as me.

And me in the past who pretended to recognize the mercenary at a drinking party.

“Hmmm.”

“If we find the doppelganger, is it possible to deal with it alone with our party?”

“It’s possible.”

The knight answered immediately.

He was the one who seemed to be confident.

With the magic of the lord of the tower, we will be able to defeat the doppelganger. Of course, if the doppelganger interferes in the meantime, I don’t know, but I can stop the doppelganger. It won’t be long, but I can definitely stop it for a moment.”

Crazy.

Can you two kill demons?

It’s too pretentious.

[No, my friend. In my opinion, that knight is more dangerous than the wizard. And don’t forget that I am weakened.]

The demon denied my expectations.

I knew that the Lord of the Magic Tower was great, but that knight was also unusual.

You only need two people to kill a demon.

Too little.

That was enough power to spark the crazy idea of killing the remaining party members.

“What if one of you two is a doppelganger?”

At once, the knight and the wizard tried to talk, but I quickly swung my hand to break it up.

“What if, that’s the worst case scenario.”

“Yeah, didn’t the paladin man say that anyone in the party could be a doppelganger. Let’s talk about it first.”

Once again, I sent my heartfelt tribute to the mercenary and the past me.

A long discussion ensued.

I stayed quiet.

Because my power was at an insignificant level.

When the knight is the doppelganger, it was concluded that if me and the mercenary and the paladin protect the wizard somehow, there is a slight chance of winning.

When the wizard is the doppelganger, it was concluded that it would be the same if the knight were the main element, the paladin and mercenary were assistant, and I attracted attention like a fly.

Of course, the odds didn’t seem high at all.

“If one more person loses here, the odds are...”

“It will be very low.”

The paladin answered.

It was the answer I wanted.

“You shouldn’t attack anyone with hasty guesses.”

“Of course.”

I wanted this one agreement.

“The bottom line is that we don’t have many opportunities. We don’t know how yet, but we must find the doppelganger on the first try. Hmm... I think that’s the point I want to talk about.”

Saying that, I came down from the center.

Instead of going back to my seat, I approached the paladin.

The paladin seemed to dislike me at first, but later, as a more orderly and constructive discussion began, his gaze on me suddenly softened.

He hates demons more than anyone else, and he is a great man who wants to kill them blindly.

He was the most dangerous thing for me.

I came close to him.

“I want to ask you one thing.”

“Why do you have to...”

The paladin didn’t discuss it all together, and he asked as if I was talking to him separately.

“I want to ask you personally.”

“Hmm, tell me.”

“When the demon is possessed. Is there any way to bring out the demon so that the possessed person is not hurt?”

Yes, I'm talking about my story.

"A doppelganger is not a possessing..."

"I'm just asking, just in case."

"...No. Killing the demon and burning him as well is the only way to purify the tainted soul."

[Haha, I'm sorry, my friend.]

Damn it

Damn bastards.

You can't even do this while collecting taxes every month.

Incompetent priests.

Like an incompetent god.

[I agree. Hihi.]

Aside from the feeling of chewing shit, my expression was shown in a restrained way with gloomy regret.

"Why is that? As I explained earlier, a doppelganger is not a possessing demon. It is a demon that kills and imitates someone."

No.

I have one doppelganger whispering inside me right now.

"I was just asking. I just asked. Then there's really no way to save those who have been attacked by the demon."

The paladin nodded his head.

With skeptical eyes.

I said yes, and stood up.

I returned to my seat.

Be brave when you return.

When I returned to my seat, the mercenary sitting next to me greeted me.

“Wow, friend, are you good at talking?”

“Thank you, thanks to you, I was able to talk to the end. Without you, I wouldn’t have been able to come forward.”

“What are you talking about! If you speak so coherently, everyone will listen to you. Thanks to you, the atmosphere has calmed down, you did well, you did well. Even in your hometown, when you started talking, everyone listened.”

The mercenary patted my back and said.

Along with stories of the past that I do not know.

Who is the friend that the mercenary remembers?

Even while we were talking like this, the paladin’s doubts were not resolved.

His gaze was fixed on me as I returned to my seat.

Those gazes would even reach the mercenary sitting next to me.

My behavior of being friendly with the mercenary.

My question on asking how to rescue the victim possessed by the demon.

My topic was not about how to find the doppelganger, but after finding the doppelganger.

If the paladin's head wasn't full of shit, he would soon be able to arrive at one thing.

The adventurer knows who the doppelganger is.

So far it was true.

However.

“That adventurer suspects the mercenary as a doppelganger. Were there any subtle differences that he could discover because they were close friends?”

He would think so

While talking with the mercenary while laughing, my eyes met with the paladin.

He quietly nodded his head.

I nodded my head slightly at him.

Fortunately, the paladin was moderately stupid.

[There was one more demon here, hahaha]

The demon watching me laughed as if it was funny.

Side Story 17

Doppelganger (3)

“No one should be alone.”

The Knight said.

Standing in the center.

He insisted that everyone should be watched fairly and thoroughly.

“I think it would be nice to pair up and watch each other.”

“But, our numbers aren’t even?”

It was just as the Mercenary said.

The number of people in the group is five.

When paired up, there is one person left over.

“How about spying on two people on each side?”

The Paladin gave an opinion.

It was an idea that seemed to come from a sense of wariness that appeared when the Mercenary and I were paired.

I hope it does.

“Two people? Wouldn’t the boundaries between us be weakened?”

“No. In this case, it won’t be much different as you’re being watched by two people on either side.”

The Paladin's opinion seemed the most reasonable, and the party decided to follow it.

Looking at the seating chart, the group was seated in a circle in the order of me – Mercenary – Wizard – Paladin – Knight – me.

In this case, I am monitoring the Mercenary and the Knight, and conversely, the Mercenary and Knight are monitoring me.

I wondered if the Paladin would swap places with the Wizard to keep watch over the Mercenary, but he actually didn't.

Was he trying to avoid unnecessary provocation?

Or is it because he was still not sure of the Mercenary yet?

Or did he decide that it was safer for the Wizard to be with the Mercenary than himself?

I couldn't be sure.

It would be great if I could read other people's thoughts.

[Oh, I sometimes think that, too.]

said the doppelganger.

The doppelganger who said so was reading my thoughts.

[No, I mean that I want to read other people's thoughts. Reading other people's thoughts is very useful. Reading really solves a lot of problems. On the other hand, though, it sometimes causes a lot more problems.]

The devil laughed quietly.

Goosebumps rose on my forearm, perhaps because of that laughter.

I shuddered at the sensation burning down my spine.

Then the Knight turned his head and looked at me.

His eyes were full of doubt.

“Are you all right?”

Did you even watch me shudder?

impossible.

I cleverly sat behind the others.

In the situation where I was sitting in a circle, I sat out of sight unless the Knight moved his head.

“I, I suddenly got a chill. It’s okay.”

“I see. Maybe it’s because you’ve been nervous for a long time. You need to eat something first.”

The Knight climbed back to the common center.

He seems to be talking about having a meal for a while.

It’s okay to just say it on the spot, but he thought it was a common topic, so he sincerely went to the common center.

The Knight begins by explaining the physical and mental effects of nutrition for a person before he even talks about eating.

Was it a coincidence?

The Knight was clearly looking ahead.

But as I moved, when I looked at him, he turned and looked exactly at me.

Twice.

Is it because his hearing is abnormally good that he stares at me even at a rustle?

I don't think that's why he turned his head every time I moved.

Am I mistaken?

Because of the excessive tension, I suffer from hallucinations that the Knight is always watching me with an eye on the side of his head.

There was a possibility.

I had seen many adventurers who went crazy in the dungeon and suffered from megalomania accompanied by optical illusions and hallucinations.

[This is not an illusion. human friend. To a human like that Knight, vision is nothing more than an auxiliary means to grasp the world.]

What kind of nonsense is that

* * *

The doppelganger explained the principle of magic.

I didn't understand at all.

Can you manipulate magical powers to see where your eyes can't reach?

What is that?

It's a scam

The meal began.

As the advance team was organized, they didn't know how long the expedition would last, so they had plenty of food.

“Sir, have some of this too.”

In addition to the supply, I had a few more snacks.

This is what I am giving away to my party now.

These are dried plums with a sour taste, sprinkled with sugar and pickled. If you eat them one by one, your mouth will drool, and if you eat it when you are tired, you will feel refreshed.

I had a lot of experience of being in distress or suffering in the dungeon, so I still brought a variety of things even in a situation where there was enough food.

Finally, I handed out the dried plums to the Knight and took a seat close to him.

“It’s delicious. Normally, I wouldn’t have eaten it because it was too sour. Maybe it’s because I inhaled a lot of dust, so the sour taste is really good. Thank you. I’ll enjoy it.”

The Knight said.

I handed out plums to everyone, but this Knight was the most kind, saying thank you.

This gentleman also seems to have a good personality.

He was like a character in a fairy tale, so I felt a sense of alienation.

“Plums are said to be good for recovery from fatigue and intestinal activity, as well as good for eye strain and immunity. Oh, what does immunity mean? Humans have a certain level of resistance to various diseases. According to bacteriology...”

Although he’s a bit chatty and likes to pretend to know.

A bit much.

I listened carefully to something that didn't even make sense to me and said, 'Oh, that's right. Indeed. I knew it. I can't believe it.' I replied hard, adding those following words.

While talking to the Knight, the Mercenary came closer.

He seemed to want to chat for a bit as we seemed to have a comfortable conversation atmosphere.

"Sir Knight, where were you from?"

"Didn't I tell you? I'm from the Frembe region. Come to think of it, you two said you knew each other?"

So the story of the hometown began.

The Mercenary was excited and started talking about his hometown.

The Mercenary was actually from somewhere together with me.

I just don't remember him.

"In our village, there was a famous tree rock..."

I remembered

A tree rooted in rocks.

The children used to swing in the tree.

It was an unusual tree, and there were many adults praying under it.

However,

"Is there such a rock in our village?"

"Huh? Don't you remember?"

The Mercenary asked as if he couldn't remember the rock tree.

“...I don't know. Haven't you mistaken it for another town?”

The Mercenary said that he could be mistaken, he shouted so, so I hesitated, saying that I did not remember well.

The Mercenary said that my memory is not good, and he told me to take a decoction of good medicine for my memory and went on.

It didn't seem like a big deal, but the light of doubt in the Paladin's eyes who was looking at us from behind, more precisely, the Mercenary, grew stronger.

“What was the Knight's hometown like?”

I asked the Knight to change the topic.

I thought that if it was the Knight, he would make me forget this ambiguous situation at once with his unique chatter.

* * *

“The promise I made with that commoner friend had a profound effect on my life.”

Had I known this would happen, I would not have asked the Knight about his hometown.

If I had known the chatter would be this long.

“It was not my intention to become a Knight. It was my destiny to become a Knight. I had no desire to become strong and become a superhuman, nor did I feel obligated to be loyal to His Majesty the King. I was just being carried away like a boat swayed by the waves. It was that friend who gave meaning to my life. Meeting him gave me the goal of living a life where I can protect and help more people. I...”

When the hell will this end? This damn talk...

“So I started practicing swordsmanship again...”

I know a lot of talkative people.

Mainly, they talk a lot when they are drunk, but they have the characteristic of repeating the same thing over and over again while getting drunk and chattering endlessly.

But the Knight did not get drunk, nor did he repeat what he said.

The fact that the chatter was being filled without overlapping content was surprising, and I was honestly amazed.

“In order to meet the qualifications to become a royal Knight...”

So the Knight continued talking.

Continuously.

[Open your eyes, human friend.]

I was startled by the doppelganger’s voice and opened my eyes.

I fell asleep for a moment.

My heart was pounding.

I hurriedly looked at the Knight, but he was still talking as if he didn’t care that I was sleeping.

The Mercenary was listening with much amusement.

“Light!”

“Light!”

The two were immersed in the story properly, even with strange slogans.

Aren't they just two idiots?

"It's strange. The creator of the light sword said that he left only one word. If you don't think you can do it, you'll die at once."

"Ha ha ha ha ha!"

Where the heck is the point to laugh at?

If you don't think you can do it, then die?

The only answer is to die and be reborn. What is this?

Are you saying to just kill a person with no talent?

It was an upsetting story to hear.

I looked around.

The Wizard was still silent.

The Paladin was still looking at the Mercenary.

I had to keep this situation.

The Mercenary is under suspicion, but should not be branded as the doppelganger.

If the Mercenary even dies due to suspicion, the next victim will be me with a high probability.

My goal is never to reduce the number of party members.

Let's say you kill the people in this cavity one by one.

In the end, there will be two people left, including me.

And I'll die as the last one.

As the overwhelmingly weakest me, I had to hold on to the time somehow.

Until the rescue team arrives and the blocked path reopens.

[After the path is open, don't worry. Activate the stun magic trap beyond the wall once more, kill everyone, and then get out of here.]

Very good.

The people outside don't yet know about the doppelganger.

If I kill everyone and the rescue team and go back to the entrance alone, I'll be the only survivor and can make up a story.

I can survive.

I couldn't die like this.

When I left home to find the treasure, my life was ruined.

Since then, my life has been like rolling in shit.

Killed people, cheated people, betrayed people.

I was betrayed, deceived, and nearly killed.

All that was left for me was that I did not die and survived.

If the end of that long, long abyss is futile death.

I couldn't accept it.

* * *

The night passed.

Inside the cavity in the cave where neither the movement of the sun and the moon nor the intersection of light and darkness could be seen.

We could tell the time by looking at the clock.

And apart from the movement of the world

Incidents happened at night.

As always.

As if it was set that way.

People become more sensitive over time.

The friendly atmosphere of the mealtimes became harsh as if it had all been a lie.

The problem was that fatigue and drowsiness after eating were setting in.

The fact that there was still a doppelganger in the cavity made people afraid to fall asleep.

They began to guard each other sharply like a wounded beast.

And sparks flew over the oiled fuse.

The Wizard suddenly insisted on doing business in the corner.

Everyone was against it.

It was too dangerous for one person to disappear out of sight.

“It’s because I can’t! Damn it, I’m so old that I’m so embarrassed about my wrinkly things. We all should go away little by little and get business done.”

The Mercenary fiercely opposed it.

But the Wizard didn't give up.

He insisted on doing business in a place out of sight no matter what.

It may be inevitable that the Mercenary suspects the Wizard as a doppelganger.

To the Mercenary, the only person in the group who was acting suspiciously was the Wizard.

He accidentally pulled out his axe.

The Paladin who was watching him accidentally raised the hammer and blocked him.

“What, this! You should attack that old man, why stop me!”

Instead of responding to that, the Paladin used a holy spell.

“Cast a shadow under the light. Holy Mark.”

“Bastard, you want to try it with me now!”

The hammer of the Paladin and the ax of the Mercenary began to collide.

The Knight was perplexed by the sudden development of the situation, and I was quietly watching.

As if dealing with the enemy of his life, the Paladin swung his hammer desperately with a frightening expression on his face.

However, the fighting power of the warrior representing the Mercenary guilds covering the entire continent was formidable.

“Keuk!”

The Paladin fell on his butt.

Then, in the eyes of the Mercenary, I saw the Wizard casting a spell.

“This crazy old man...!”

The Mercenary pulled out the dagger hidden in his abdomen band and threw it.

The Wizard was hit by the dagger and fell.

“Stop it!”

Kuang!

A sudden burst.

As the Knight swung his sword and hit the floor, there was an explosion like magic, and the floor shook.

While the Mercenary looked at the Knight in amazement, the Paladin threw the hammer unhurriedly.

“Holy Smite!”

The hammer that even had a holy spell on it hit the Mercenary.

The Mercenary just fell to the floor.

[Hoho, this is totally messed up.]

It was as the devil said.

Damn, I should have stopped the fight somehow.

The fight broke out much more suddenly than expected.

There was no room for me to intervene.

I didn't even have the strength to stop their fight.

If I had intervened blindly, I would have died within a second.

The Paladin jumped up and picked up the hammer again.

The Knight also approached and began to stop the Paladin from trying to end the fallen Mercenary.

It's fucked up.

Really fucked up.

Those excited gents didn't seem to notice, but the Mercenary's head was bleeding.

It's bursting like a waterfall.

"Stop! Why are you doing this all of a sudden!"

"Get out of the way. He's a doppelganger! Let's take this opportunity to put an end to it..."

The Paladin clouded the end of his words.

It was then that he discovered that the back of the Mercenary's head had been completely smashed.

The fact that the body of the Mercenary, which had already been stretched out on the floor, was not moving at all.

"is, is he dead?"

The bewildered Paladin's eyes slowly rose and turned towards me.

Before new doubts appeared in those eyes.

I reflexively did what I was supposed to do.

"No!"

I ran to the fallen Mercenary with bitter tears.

And grabbed the Paladin's leg.

"Paladin! Please use a healing spell!"

"Bu, but..."

"If a doppelganger is in danger of dying, should he reveal himself!
This man is definitely not a doppelganger!"

Even in the midst of embarrassment, the Paladin poured healing spells into the back of the Mercenary's head.

The Mercenary miraculously survived.

Just for a second.

"If I become successful and go back to my hometown someday..... I want to propose to your sister..... Yuri..."

The Mercenary grabbed my hand and said so.

That was his will.

At the end of his last words, he died completely.

"No!"

I wept and wept like the end of the world.

Meanwhile, my mind was filled with unresolved doubts.

But who the hell is this Mercenary bastard?

I can't quite remember who he is.

How does he even know my sister's name?

My doubts were not resolved.

The only Mercenary who held the key to the answer was already dead.

While the bewildered party was silent, only the sound of my crying as I hugged the Mercenary's corpse reverberated in the cavity.

And

[Hihihihhi.]

The sound of the devil's laughter also accompanied the cavity.

Side Story 18

Doppelganger (4)

The devil said

[He just wants to live.]

I thought so too.

I want to survive somehow.

I wondered if there was any value left in my future life, but I still wanted to survive.

Rather than hope for the future, I wanted to live because of the frustrations and pains of the past.

How have I survived this far?

I endured those terrible times.

[I won't do anything. I will only be with you in your body until the end of your life. There won't be.]

My life was a waste.

I had a friend who told me to find a treasure in the west and become a rich aristocrat.

To use my hometown village as a manor, build a castle, and have knights.

Because of that goal, I left my hometown and family.

[What did you live for?]

I wanted to be a knight.

A shining life.

Like the heroes in the story, I wanted to walk the glorious path.

I bumped into the wall of reality, but I didn't lose my dream.

The only hope that protected me from the sense of separation was the treasure hidden in an unnamed dungeon to the west.

If only I can possess that treasure, my impossible dream can become a reality.

To do that.....

First I had to survive.

“Ahhhhh! Jack!”

I cried out the name of the Mercenary.

It was fortunate that I remembered the name of the Mercenary, who had been fluttering in my memory.

I just remembered hearing another Mercenary at a drinking party calling this guy Jack.

I cried desperately.

Like a person who has lost all of his family, I was heartbroken and desperate.

I thought while crying.

The Mercenary shouldn't die here.

It was never going to happen.

This was an accident.

Pickled plums with stimulants and sleeping pills created an unexpected accident.

My special pickled plums have been tested several times.

It puts people in a state of excitement with short-term arousing effects.

In a dungeon, even in such an extreme situation, it feels like hundreds of people clashing as an emotional battle begins.

If you are so excited, the effects of the sleeping pills will be delayed.

You feel drowsy and sleepy, and the people take it for granted.

It is natural that fatigue and drowsiness are felt because your mental energy is drained in a stressful situation.

Without even suspecting that I put sleeping pills on the food, they calm down and fall asleep.

This time it went the way I thought it would.

I handed out the plums to everyone in the group.

It was good to create an atmosphere of heated fighting.

When people start to slowly calm down from the effects of the sleeping pills, I intervene.

By appealing to the fact that I am in the weakest position, the plan was to gain justification during the arbitration and gain a voice.

My idea was that if I went that far, no one in my party would accidentally think, 'Let's kill that guy for now'.

The problem is that the Paladin, who thought the only suspicious one was the Mercenary, was almost certain that the Mercenary was the doppelganger.

And it may be my mistake of not guessing the instinctive disgust and aggression that the Paladin has toward the devil.

Anyway, this is fucked up.

Now that it has been proven that the Mercenary is not the doppelganger, the next suspect is naturally me.

“Ugh...!”

I did the acting of losing a friend with all my might, but.

Even when the party sees me like this, they may think, ‘Even that could be a doppelganger’s performance.’

If the doppelganger is really active, every time the party loses one member, the doppelganger has a huge advantage.

Naturally, the doppelganger will try to kill at least one more when given the chance.

Of course, I was the one who contributed decisively to the death of the Mercenary.....

“Get away.”

Or not.

The Knight instructed the Paladin to retreat.

“It’s better not to approach each other within a certain distance. Take a few steps back.”

The Paladin took a few steps back while panicking at the knight’s strong response.

I called joy inwardly at the sight.

Yes, the decisive culprit for reducing the number of people was not me who provided the clue.

It was the Paladin who blew off the Mercenary's head directly.

Fortunately, it seemed that I would not be designated as the first suspect.

With a smile inside, I wept.

* * *

The Knight sat next to me.

I had to manage to calm down my body.

It was too close.

If the Knight raises his hand and squeezes the back of my head, I will die.

On the other hand, the Knight sat comfortably as if he had no fear of being attacked by me.

“Aren't you going to kill me?”

I asked in a hoarse voice.

The Paladin explained everything.

He listed all the evidence he heard and judged, excluding his own feelings and subjective judgments.

Prior to the Knight's judgment, the Paladin knew that I had leaked the first clue.

I had to protest.

I said the Mercenary was different from what I usually knew.

He said the wrong memories and witnessed him behaving in an uncomfortable way.

Overwhelmed with guilt, I cried and said that my mistake had caused him to die.

Thank goodness for the knight.

“It’s not your fault. It’s all of us, and it’s an accident that was caused by the doppelganger.”

He gave a naive answer.

Such a nice boy.

I could bet all my fortune that if I brought this nobleman to the adventurer city, his underwear would be robbed off in less than two days.

We were seated narrowly in a circle.

There are now four people left in the cavity.

Me and the knight, the Paladin and the Wizard.

Among them, the state of the Wizard was not good.

The dagger thrown by the Mercenary stuck in his shoulder, and he is still unconscious even after pulling the dagger and stopping the bleeding.

The Paladin had to heal him.

It was a very dangerous situation for the Wizard, as he had to be treated alone by the Paladin.

In the end, the Paladin took care of the treatment, and the Knight and I took a few steps away to monitor it.

“I wanted to be a Knight who protects people.”

Suddenly the Knight began to speak.

Are you trying to comfort me?

“My friend asked me. He was surprised that I would become a Knight to save people. I just wanted to be a Knight to save people. After thinking about it, I answered, “I want to protect more people.”

So the story of the Knight began.

The knight's voice was warm.

It was a voice like a warm bonfire that calmed the listener regardless of the content.

The problem is... that it was way too long.

“It would be ideal to save everyone. That's what I was hoping for. But as time went on, I realized that it was a false ideal. When I tried to protect someone, someone would be left out. Those who were left out do certainly exist.”

I was starting to get a little annoyed at the endless words of the knight.

Normally, I would have coughed in moderation or cut off the conversation while avoiding my place.

I couldn't do it because of the circumstances.

I pretended to listen to him and then I pretended to be asleep.

Only then the knight's chatter stopped.

I quietly opened my eyes.

There was the sound of the knight's wheezing.

He, too, sat down and fell asleep, apparently because of the sleeping pills.

Completely defenseless.

I looked ahead.

The Paladin was still healing the Wizard's shoulder.

That Paladin also ate the special plum, but at the moment I thought he had a great will.

It was confirmed that the Paladin was nodding off asleep.

You're holding on to that healing spell while you sleep.

If I have attempted a surprise attack, he may come to his senses and counterattack.

[A surprise attack is not recommended, human friend. Especially against that knight.]

The devil advised.

I closed my eyes again and continued to pretend to sleep.

While counting the numbers inside, memorizing the time.

I fell asleep for a while.

Whaak.

Surprised by the fact that I was asleep, I took a deep breath.

Fortunately, I did not writhe or make a sound.

“Ma, maybe... your parents...”

“I’m an orphan. I was given to the magic tower.”

The Wizard and the Paladin were talking.

There was something strange.

One was that the Wizard’s voice belonged to a young woman.

The second was the content of the conversation.

What’s the matter, this

[Interesting, interesting. The Wizard wasn’t really an old man, she was a young woman. She was wearing polymorph magic. And the Paladin looked at that face and remembered the figure of his lost daughter in the past.]

“Then... before going to the magic tower...”

“I don’t know. It is said that there was a wandering troupe who took children who lost their parents during the war and gave them a performance.”

“Is the name of the wandering group...”

The conversation continued.

What, is she really the daughter he lost when he was young?

The Wizard’s past and the Paladin’s lost daughter had a lot in common, enough for me to think so, who started listening to the conversation late.

Place and time of disappearance, things they like and things they can't eat since childhood.

It really made me wonder if that Wizard was the Paladin's daughter.

[I have one thing to tell you. Human friend.]

The devil said

[The Wizard used magic. HiHi.]

What magic?

[Familiarization.]

It was the magic I knew.

It was simple magic.

It was just magic that made users feel friendly.

It has a slightly favorable effect, but in this situation.....

It can lead to great misunderstanding.

Let's think from the Paladin's point of view.

Suddenly, the Wizard's face changed, and the old man turned into a young woman.

There is a sudden feeling of familiarity in that face.

Even about the same age as his lost daughter.

Is this the attraction of blood ties? Enough to deceive.

Using magic to target the most painful past of a person.

She was a wonderful woman.

The expedition has been working together for nearly a year and investigating the dungeon together.

It is not strange that the Wizard picked up the story of the Paladin's lost daughter during that time.

Obviously, she knew the story of the Paladin's daughter, and he was deceived with her intentions.

If the Paladin is a doppelganger, I don't know what she's going to do.

Are you sure that the Paladin isn't the doppelganger?

Or is she wondering if he is the doppelganger through such behavior?

I couldn't figure it out

There is a possibility that that Wizard is the real Paladin's daughter.

[Looking at that Wizard's reaction, absolutely not. That's acting.]

The devil was sure.

“Dad?”

At the Wizard's watery word, the Paladin collapsed.

[Hehehehe, maybe our human friends don't need demons anymore.]

* * *

There was no need to panic at the unexpected development.

Not long after, the Knight woke up feeling the fuss.

The Wizard explained that he was imitating the face of the tower master.

That was why she insisted on doing business in the corner and kept her conversations as short as possible.

The Paladin and the Wizard never talked about blood ties.

In this situation where the doppelganger is hiding, did she decide that revealing it would be of no help?

But they didn't know that I was eavesdropping on the conversation.

Let's take the opportunity to speak to the Knight and find a way to turn the situation in my favor.

The knight, who had listened to all the stories, seemed to ponder for a moment.

He is standing alone inside the center.

He looked like he was thinking deeply about something while looking at the wreckage that had been broken on the floor during the battle.

The Knight who muttered like that suddenly stood in the center of the cavity.

And he asked us.

"Do we have to live?"

...what kind of bullshit is that?

I thought I was getting used to the chatter of the knights, but those absurd remarks that came out from time to time still puzzled me.

"If we can find the doppelganger with minimal sacrifice, it'd be great, but I can't think of a way right now. So I'm telling you. If we don't find the doppelganger in the end."

The Knight said so hopefully.

“How about we all die together.”

There was no answer.

Side Story 19

Doppelganger (5)

“...Dad?”

The Knight couldn't open his eyes.

Instead, he continued to pretend to sleep quietly.

* * *

“That's who you are.”

“Yes.”

“I remember seeing you. Were you a disciple of the Tower Master?”

The Knight asked.

The Wizard nodded her head.

It was not surprising that the female Wizard had the appearance of her old master.

The bizarre behavior of the wizards was well known, and among them, the eccentricity of changing their appearance was one of the famous ones.

If you are a magician who is about the same level as a tower master, you can use polymorph magic like breathing.

The master, who had been too bothered to explore the depths of the dungeon, had his apprentice pretend to be himself and then sent her in.

It's something that could happen.

"I see. Then the rescue team..."

"Master is coming. As myself."

That's a bit...

It's fair if a female disciple walks around pretending to be the teacher.

But it's a little bit when an old Wizard walks around pretending to be the young female disciple.....

"I see."

The Knight left the party for a while.

He lingered around in a line that did not deviate from the view of the party.

The Knight thought.

It seems that the Paladin and the Wizard are not going to tell the secrets of their blood ties.

'Should I pretend not to know?'

The Knight who did not sleep deeply listened to the conversation between the Paladin and the Wizard.

He wondered if he should have woken up instead of pretending to sleep.

"Hoo."

The Knight sighed involuntarily.

He was frustrated

This situation.

The group was swept away by emotions.

They should not overlook that there is still a doppelganger in this space.

‘Should I push them?’

A doppelganger is here, forget about the reunion for now.

If there was the Mercenary, he might have said so.

But the Knight didn’t.

They could not ignore their feelings because they had more urgent and important problems.

The Adventurer is still unable to escape from his sorrow.

Of course, he could have been a doppelganger.

There was certainly a possibility that he encouraged the Paladin to attack the Mercenary.

But what happened to that individual Adventurer was definitely a tragedy.

Whether it’s the Adventurer himself or the doppelganger who ate him.

While the Knight was in the expedition, he had seen the Adventurer and the Mercenary drinking fondly.

The Adventurer giggled at how cool the guy who used to cry every day when he was young had turned.

Even the Mercenary didn’t feel bad and laughed, saying he really did.

In fact, the Knight has met everyone here several times over the past year.

It was unfortunate.

The Wizard held the Paladin's hand behind her back.

The Paladin also held her hand.

Although he was standing with his back turned and looking the other way.

The Knight was able to watch the scene using his magical powers.

The Knight also knew the story of the Paladin's daughter.

The Paladin was a famous person.

The profession itself as a Paladin had no choice but to gain fame.

It is a priest who has to take care of all the people, and other times a Paladin is a battle profession where he has to oppose and even kill someone.

At every moment his faith is tested and questioned.

Because it was a glorious job that no one could become, their numbers were small, and as the number was small, a heavy-duty reputation followed.

The Paladin lost his daughter during the war.

Residents who were not involved in the war had to evacuate to the temple and usually wait until the battle is over.

The commanders of both sides also protect the inviolable territory unless it is a temple that participated in the war.

Magical failure was the direct cause.

The wide-area magic cast by hundreds of Wizards was fired toward the city, in the opposite direction, not beyond the walls.

In fact, there was a temple where civilians had been evacuated.

In the yard where the walls collapsed and the battle began, there was no means to support fire fighting for the temple.

The city fell, and the city's chaos continued for a long time.

It was only a few months later that the entrance to the burnt-out temple could be reopened.

Thousands of bodies were found there.

There were also countless children's bodies.

The identities of the bodies could not be determined.

The Knight approached the Mercenary's body.

The dead Mercenary with the back of his head exploded was already smelling rotten.

'If I had stepped out... faster.'

Maybe the Mercenary didn't have to die.

On the Mercenary's cheek, traces of the Adventurer's tears remained.

He wet his leather gloves with a little water and wiped the marks.

The water spread from the Mercenary's face.

He had to wash the Mercenary's face thoroughly.

The Knight prayed for the Mercenary.

The Mercenary was said to be a believer of the God of Balance.

May there be a price worthy of his death.

The Knight had once studied the Bible.

It was because of a question a friend asked.

“Do you think you can do it?”

The friend asked

As if to refute the Knight’s words that he wants to protect everyone.

‘Do you really think you can abandon them?’

When the Knight said that he would protect, his friend asked if he could abandon.

The Knight did not respond.

He couldn’t turn away from the few in order to save more.

He couldn’t even downplay less important values in order to pursue more important ones.

He couldn’t kill someone else to save someone else.

The young Knight didn’t throw anything away.

So he couldn’t protect anything.

Time has passed.

The Knight has aged.

He belatedly searched the Bible to find the answer.

The God of Light said.

There's just light.

The king prayed.

When will this drought end?

There's just light.

The beggar trembled in the cold and cried out.

When the hell does the morning come?

There's just light.

Will my father come back? Can I marry her? When the hell is that kid going to die? I have to close this deal. done. May this moment last forever. Please, just once. I'm happy. I shouldn't have done that, I love you. I'd rather die. How could I have saved everyone?

God answered.

There's just light.

The God of Sky said.

All life below me is equal, and all values are precious.

Lookup

Your answers will be there.

The reason was always cruel.

The ideal, as always, was vain.

The Bible did not give an answer.

One person has already been sacrificed.

It was no longer possible to close the case without blood anymore.

Finding the doppelganger is now a problem.

If the doppelganger is the Paladin or the Wizard, there is a high probability that the other person's power will also deviate.

Even if the devil revealed his identity and the rest of the party did their best to fight back, the odds were not high.

The vacancy of one Mercenary was too large.

He got up from his seat

He couldn't avoid sacrificing blindly.

If possible, he wanted to kill the doppelganger without any of the party dying.

But the party couldn't let the doppelganger go out.

Outside the dungeon is a city where many people live.

He could not endanger the entire kingdom beyond that city.

'Can you kill him?'

Yes, if necessary.

Even if I kill everyone

"Everyone."

The Knight stood in the center of the circle and said.

Although upset by his own helplessness to force sacrifices on others.

The sacrifice will include himself, he comforted himself.

“Let us die. All together.”

* * *

Hearing the Knight's words, I was stunned.

Do you want to die together?

Is he crazy?

Could it be that he developed a mental illness when he couldn't chat because of the quiet atmosphere?

The Wizard and the Paladin were also showing a reaction that was no different from mine.

It's crazy, what the heck is that?

A sense of displeasure appeared on their faces.

Seeing that, I quickly straightened my expression.

“What does it mean?”

I asked the Knight.

“Literally, Adventurer. We spent a day trying to figure out how to find the doppelganger. But in the end, we couldn't find a way. During that time, our suspicions grew and the Mercenary was sacrificed as a result.”

Damn it.

As soon as the Mercenary was mentioned, I had to quickly put on a sad expression.

Should I be in a position to empathize with the Knight here?

Disappointed at the death of a friend, should we all choose to die together to defeat the doppelganger, the main culprit?

I'm sorry for the death of my friend, but if I show that I want to live, I would seem too selfish.

No, if you're a human, you can be selfish to this extent.

What if I'm not the doppelganger?

[Do whatever you want, my friend.]

What?

The doppelganger said something irresponsible.

If I died, wouldn't you die too?

[My will is yours, do not be confused and decide. If it's a wrong decision, I'll stop it.]

While I was confused, the Wizard and the Paladin first responded to the Knight's words.

"There's still time."

"We still have at least two days, or at most a week, before the rescue team arrives. We just need to find the doppelganger before that."

They protested against the collective suicide of the Knight who wanted to die together.

Yes, of course.

Who wants to die

Moreover, the doppelganger is in my body.

Knowing that they are not doppelgangers, they have no choice but to reject the extreme method of committing suicide together.

But it's not good.

If I urgently point out the doppelganger, I become the most likely one.

It's not because I'm the most suspicious.

It was because I'm the weakest.

“And how do we trust the Knight? You could be the doppelganger.”

Said the Wizard sarcastically.

She seemed to think that even the Paladin wasn't a doppelganger.

Is it because the Paladin's reaction was humane?

Is it because he is a priest?

Nothing could be a solid basis for trust.

Even if the Paladin is the doppelganger, do you think he will be on your side now?

[Maybe she thinks that she really might be in a daughter-father relationship.]

Does that make sense?

She deceived him by using magic.

[You need magic to deceive others, but nothing is needed to deceive yourself. Hiihi.]

Anyway, the Paladin and the Wizard accused the Knight of dying together, saying it was rather suspicious.

A question arose.

What the hell was the Knight thinking when he asked us to die together?

Was he not at all concerned about being the doppelganger?

Is there any way to convince everyone in the party to commit suicide together?

There can be no such way.

The Wizard and the Paladin stood up.

The Knight saw the figures and slowly put his hand on the scabbard.

You crazy, are you really going to fight?

If the offer to die together isn't accepted, you're going to kill everyone yourself?

I knew that he was crazy, but I didn't know he was crazy to this extent.

The Knight must not die here.

When the Paladin, the Wizard, and I were left, it was all too clear who they were going to designate as the next doppelganger.

I must intervene.

Although I can't have a big impact on the battle with my own power.

I must not let the Knight die in the battle.

Rather, the best situation is when either the Wizard or the Paladin dies under the guise of an accident.

The two surviving people are hostile to each other, and I will mediate between the two using my strength to deal with the doppelganger.

It was a good picture.

With that in mind, I slowly pulled out a dagger.

The devil whispered as I picked up a small bottle of paralyzing poison from my pocket.

[Don't do that, you're going to die.]

What, who?

[Everyone except that Knight.]

...Damn, how strong is that Knight?

Even if the Paladin and the Wizard work together, the Knight wins?

Would it be the same if I joined there?

[You'll die. Don't fight.]

Side Story 20

Doppelganger (6)

“Wait!”

The fight had to be stopped first.

Regardless of whoever wins, it will result in a terrible outcome for me.

When the Knight wins, he might point his sword, saying that we should all die together.

Conversely, if the Paladin and the Wizard win, it was obvious that they would immediately point to the Adventurer as the doppelganger.

Either way, the chances of me dying were too high.

“Listen to me for a second!”

But that didn’t mean there was a proper way.

At my desperate cry, the eyes of the Knight, Wizard, and Paladin turned to me.

It stops for now.

Now the Adventurer must come up with a way to persuade them.

In 10 seconds.

To provide an answer, the Adventurer must first know what they want.

“What exactly does the Knight want? Can you explain it a little more convincingly for us?”

I was most curious about the intention of the Knight who asked us to die together.

The Knight listened to me and nodded his head.

“Yes. I’ll have to explain. As I just said, we didn’t figure out how to find the doppelganger in the end.”

It was fortunate that the Knight was a person who likes to explain.

He argued that it is unlikely that we will find a way forward, and that it will only become more dangerous over time.

“Now that I am still in good shape, I want to finish my work.”

In the end, he said that he had to kill all of us now that he had enough energy left.

“There is still a doppelganger among us. When the battle begins, the doppelganger may reveal itself. Then we will never win if we are fighting each other instead of uniting.”

“The Adventurer is right. We must join forces against the devil in case we find the doppelganger.”

The Paladin supported the Adventurer’s statements.

However, the Knight denied us, saying that it would be difficult for us to find the doppelganger on our own.

“If you have to fight, you will not be able to defeat the doppelganger. In the end, only the doppelganger will survive. The rescue team that follows will only listen to the doppelganger’s statements and will rescue it without even knowing that it is a doppelganger. ”

It’s the worst case.

From a human point of view.

This is the best situation for me.

As the Adventurer, it was difficult to trust the rescue team, and there was a possibility of being questioned or tortured.

But if I kill them all and take the form of a Knight or a Wizard, I could disguise myself, say it was a rock accident and escape the dungeon.

[...what?]

It's nothing, friend.

Just focus on the conversation, it's an important moment.

[Yeah, that's right.]

“Of course, it will be difficult for us to defeat the doppelganger. The mercenary is already dead, and if we fight each other, the odds will be very slim.”

The Paladin and the Wizard raised their voices saying that they should find the doppelganger through conversation again even now.

“But don't worry. We'll all die here, but the doppelganger won't survive.”

Whoa, that was interesting.

It's not about asking the Wizard to commit suicide with wide range magic.

The Knight intends to commit suicide on his own, along with all of the party and the doppelganger.

If he can wield enough power, it would be more reasonable for him to kill the entire party and find the doppelganger rather than commit suicide.

But he dared to commit suicide.

Yes, his abilities are limited.

There are limits that even he can't handle.

The Wizard and the Paladin countered that the Knight's words were nonsense.

It was funny.

They concluded that the Knight's remarks were foolish.

When humans oppose a claim, they really believe that the claim is absurd and unreasonable.

Maybe the Paladin and the Wizard could agree with the Knight's opinion.

They could cooperate.

One was a glorious Knight of the gods who had the respect of his followers.

The other is a direct disciple of the magic master who is leading the cutting edge of magic.

Either way, humans would agree that sacrifices should be made for the sake of others who would be harmed by the devil.

But 'I have to live.' And because of the two thoughts that 'there is another way', I rebelled against the Knight's words, and once I revolted, the backlash continued.

Far from thinking deeply about the Knight's opinion, it was ridiculous

Humans become blind as they get more excited, and when they become blind, they devalue and ignore answers other than the ones they have set for themselves.

“How can I trust you, that we should just die?”

Oh, I think our Adventurer friend is going to add some kind of fan to that.

The Adventurer’s words were key.

Now, the Paladin and the Wizard raised their voices to the Knight and began to explain how absurd his words were.

“I’m really sorry, but... I believe that the doppelganger will die here too, and all I can do is ask you to die with me.”

The Knight didn’t give up.

Oh my, you stupid friend

It’s not that they weren’t sure they could kill the doppelganger.

They were angry about ignoring the possibility that they may live and trying to kill them in advance.

The Knight finally pulled out his sword.

The Adventurer tried to persuade him, but he didn’t seem to have the intention of putting everything into words in the first place.

When he initially made an extreme claim of ‘let’s die together’, he was like a reflection of the idea ‘I’ll kill you even if you don’t like it.’

“I have a way!”

The Adventurer shouted.

It was also imperative.

Hmmm, he was a pleasant fellow to look at.

At first, I was desperate at the fact that the body I occupied was such a weak piece of garbage, but the improvisation of the original owner of the body, that is, the Adventurer's self, was useful.

Desperateness, quick thinking and judgment, coolness and immorality with no sense of guilt.

He was doing really well while I was recovering my strength.

After a little tweaking of his memory and personality, he became really useful.

Whether everyone else died or not, he was struggling to survive.

It was cute.

"I have another way. A way to definitively die with the doppelganger!"

The Knight looked at the Adventurer while holding the sword.

"I agree with the Knight's argument that the doppelganger should not be released."

The Adventurer made an unexpected remark.

"But I'm also concerned about the dangers of the doppelganger appearing and the dangers of leaving everything to one person and dying together."

While the Adventurer agreed with the Knight's argument, he also sympathized with the concerns of the Wizard and the Paladin.

Then it's time to come up with an answer.

"Magician, will the Lord of the Magic Tower be part of the rescue team?"

The Wizard nodded at the Adventurer's question.

“I’m sure he’ll come.”

After hearing the Wizard’s answer, the Adventurer now looked at the Paladin and the Knight and asked a question.

“The Knights and Paladin must also be included.”

The Knight and Paladin answered that it would be the same.

“Then it would be a much more powerful force than the four of us. Maybe the lord of the magic tower alone can burn the doppelganger to death.”

The Adventurer did a great job.

He showed both a selfish desire to live and a sense of justice that he still had to kill the doppelganger.

Among the party listening to the Adventurer, ‘I don’t think the Adventurer is a doppelganger.’ There must be one person who thinks like that.

“Why do we have to do everything on our own? Why don’t we just let the rescue team know we have a doppelganger?”

“But doppelgangers are very dangerous demons. They can harm others and change their appearance if left unattended.”

“You can ask the rescue team to quarantine us, or if that doesn’t work, you can ask the rescue team to attack all of us. Why don’t you do that? The doppelganger will appear, and maybe we can kill the doppelganger with the rescue team. Even if we’re seriously injured, we could be healed by the Paladins of the rescue team and survive. Above all else.”

The Knight almost seemed to have fallen for the Adventurer’s words.

The Adventurer was an eloquent speaker.

As the already dead mercenary said.

“If we die on our own, no one will know what happened here. But if we do as I say, others will know about our sacrifice. Shouldn’t we at least let them know that we sacrificed ourselves for the sake of peace on the continent? I don’t want to tell my family in my hometown that I died when the ceiling collapsed while crawling like a mole in a dungeon.”

The Knight thought that was completely out of the question.

Honor was a noble thing.

You have to try to protect yourself, but if others don’t look at you, it’s worthless.

The Knight was greatly shaken by the fact that nobody would ever find out that everyone here sacrificed themselves to defeat the dangerous devil that is the doppelganger but would instead believe that the party died in a rock accident.

“Furthermore, the rescue team may have a way to find the devil. There will be many Wizards and Paladins, including the Lord of the Magic Tower, who will be included in the rescue team.”

The Adventurer sharply lowered the tone of his passionately speaking voice, adorning his last words with a soft, gentle but a little weary tone.

“Why do we have to carry everything?”

Excellent.

* * *

The Adventurer’s argument was correct.

If it goes according to his argument, the doppelganger will be in a beleaguered state.

It was more likely to show up first before the rescue team arrived.

Our party decided to be as vigilant as possible and aim to not be wiped out until the rescue team arrives.

When the rescue team arrives, at least two survivors must inform them that there is a doppelganger in the area.

The worst outcome was that only the doppelganger survives alone.

Our group decided to be vigilant with each other as much as possible while trying to get the rescue team to arrive as quickly as possible.

Clearing the crumbling debris of the wall and drilling a small hole.

Through the hole, the magician sent magic power.

The efforts paid off.

Beyond the crumbling wall, the road is still intact and he could tell that the rescue team was clearing the rubble.

The rescue team, who sensed that the magician's magic was flowing, was advancing in the correct direction.

Now, the sound of a pickaxe squeaking could be heard clearly in my ears.

The rescue team was close by.

Our party supplemented the Adventurer's plan a little more.

With the magic of the magician's master, the lord of the magic tower, he drives everyone in the party to a dying state.

Soon the doppelganger will appear.

In the meantime, our party will recover with the help of the Paladin who would have been part of the rescue team and will also join the battle against the doppelganger.

“I think blitz magic would be good for magic. It can stun people for sure, and there is little physical loss, so you can fight right away as soon as your healing spell is done.”

In this way, we even talked about which order to ask for.

We expected the doppelganger to appear first and attack the party, and we were thoroughly prepared for it.

Fortunately, the party was able to unite again, confident that we would win if we persevere over time.

The united party strictly followed the rules and watched and protected each other.

“Knight.”

The Adventurer handed out pickled plums.

At each meal, the Adventurer gave me some snacks.

I smiled and said thank you.

The role of the Adventurer was really big.

Although he had the weakest power, the Adventurer’s contribution was really great in uniting the party and coming up with a solution.

“This might be the last snack.”

A rescue team will arrive soon.

The Wizard had assured that the rescue team would drill a hole in the wall before the next meal.

“Oh, you’ll still have a chance out there.”

The Adventurer smiled and said that I would still be able to eat the snack he had made when I went out.

While we were chatting like that, a hole began to be drilled in the wall.

The rescue team came.

Everyone in the party stood up and walked towards opposite walls.

It had already been discussed.

The doppelganger might attack the rescue team, so we approached opposite walls.

We also kept a reasonable distance between ourselves.

Gulp, saliva ran down my throat.

I became nervous.

The rescue team has finally arrived, and a battle with the devil is scheduled.

Looking at the party, everyone was quietly looking at the wall where the hole was widening, perhaps nervously.

While looking at the wall, I was prepared for a threat that might pop out.

The devil hasn't appeared yet, but you never know when it will come out.

“Arhan!”

A familiar voice came through the small hole in the wall.

The voice was calling my name.

“Arhan! There it is!”

The rescue team seemed to include several fellow Knights.

I smiled at the voices of my colleagues I had not heard in a long time.

I tried to answer in a loud voice, but no voice came out.

There was a strong sense of alienation.

My throat was choked like I was suffocating.

In the midst of the fluttering feelings, the sound of laughter from a foreign voice was heard.

“Hihihi.”

It was the devil’s laughter.

Side Story 21

Doppelganger (7)

“Hihihi”

I was so happy that I smiled involuntarily.

Crumble.

A small and short sound

A small noise generated by the preparatory action of moving the lower body's center of gravity and swinging the upper body using it as the axis of rotation.

The sound of rubbing small pieces of soil and stones between the stone floor and heavy boots.

The weak human friend would be able to hear this noise, but would not be able to respond.

But I am different.

Even with such a garbage-like body, I was able to show better movements.

“Ike.”

As soon as I bent my knees, the Knight's sword passed over my head with a stinging sound.

Soon after

Bang!

The Knight struck the stone wall.

Hey, hitting a stone wall with a hammer wouldn't make that kind of noise.

I doubt that that friend is human.

“Hihihi.”

A few steps back

As soon as he stepped back, debris poured over the spot.

The Knight glared at me and licked his mouth.

Well, is it quiz time?

Looking at that mouth shape... ‘Were you a doppelganger?’ he would have asked such questions.

“Yeah, I’m a doppelganger.”

The Knight cleared his throat and lowered his voice.

It was in vain.

“Isn’t it fun? It’ll make you feel a little out of breath, but don’t worry too much. It’s not toxic. It’s just a paralytic that makes it hard to talk.”

So why do you take what others give you and eat it straight away?

No matter how unvigilant you were when I was distributing snacks at every meal every day, you should have been vigilant on the last day.

Isn’t it?

“Arhan!”

A voice was heard calling the Knight's name from beyond the wall.

He must have heard the Knight's sword hitting the wall.

Apparently, the Knights are at the forefront of the rescue team.

“What's going on! Are you okay?!”

It was an urgent call.

As if the Knight wanted to answer, he worked hard to clear his throat, but in the end, he couldn't make a sound.

I told you not to.

It wasn't just the Knight.

The Paladin and Wizard naively ate the plums I gave them.

In the case of two people using spells, they would be far more lethal than a Knight.

“Arhan!”

“Paladin, are you inside?!”

Voices kept coming through the wall, but no one answered.

A murmur began, and the murmur soon became chaos.

I burst into a laugh.

I had no choice but to.

Things were going as our Adventurer friend had planned.

What should I do for this wonderful friend?

Would you like to visit your hometown?

[Kill me...]

“Hihihihi”

Cute

You want me to kill you?

Did you not know that it has been a few days since you died?

Contrary to the wishes of this Adventurer friend, I will not let his self-consciousness disappear.

Why would you throw away such a useful guy?

Manipulating the memory to fit the situation and bringing it to the fore will give him a head start on trying to somehow survive.

For my sake.

[...just kill me]

Oh man, the memory of your hometown friend seems to cause a bit of a shock.

Don't worry about it.

Those memories will soon be forgotten.

Would you rather be proud of yourself for tricking the mercenary?

[Devil.....]

Aww, you are a cute friend!

How can you be so cute!

Smart and stupid friend!

While the Adventurer's friends entertained me, the Knight and the Paladin seemed to have made up their minds.

They grabbed their weapons and started running towards me.

“Answer me! Arhan! Are you okay?!”

A cry for an answer continued from beyond the wall.

Our talkative Knight couldn't answer anything.

He was just approaching me with an unspoken shout.

* * *

There was a feeling of as if I had a foreign body in my neck.

It felt as if I had swallowed a wet cotton ball that got stuck in my throat.

“Hihihi.”

Then I heard laughter next to me.

It was such a sinister laugh.

The Knight reflexively swung his sword.

The Adventurer evaded the sword as if he had expected it and increased his distance.

There was a clear difference from the movements the Adventurer had shown during that time.

Only then did the Knight know the answer.

The Adventurer was the doppelganger.

He was taken aback by the lack of voice he had, but fortunately, he was not poisoned.

The Knight and the party exchanged opinions silently with their eyes.

It was already what they expected.

When the rescue team arrives, the doppelganger has no way to survive.

At the very last minute, the doppelganger was expected to show up, and it turned out exactly as expected.

So, as originally planned, all they had to do was fight the doppelganger and hold on until the rescue team arrived.

There seemed to be no problem except that it was the Adventurer who first came up with this plan.

The Knight, Paladin, and Wizard swallowed their anxiety and raised their weapons towards the doppelganger.

So the battle began.

The battle was tense.

Although the doppelganger's identity was revealed, he did not reveal his demonic form.

He maintained the appearance of an Adventurer.

Of course, he was showing a different level of movement than the Adventurer, but he could not overcome the limitations of the Adventurer's body.

The Knight and Paladin maintained the line, and the Wizard checked the movement of the doppelganger from behind.

The three's stance was solid, and it looked like they could hold out long enough until the rescue team arrived.

The problem was rather with the rescue team.

"Damn it, what are you doing!"

"Get away. Now we'll take the lead and break through."

The rescue team behind the wall was confused.

The battle continued in the cavity, and the sound of knives resounded.

There was no response to the question about the group's well-being.

The rescue team was divided into Knight, Templar, Wizard, and Mercenary guilds.

Each faction was wary of each other and began to be hostile to each other.

"Stand back. I warn you."

"That's a load of nonsense. Hey guys, take out your knife."

The Knight was frustrated.

Now is not the time for them to fight over there.

They must not bleed in vain.

If only he could say something.

I am fine, there's a demon called a doppelganger here and we were all fighting it together.

Not being able to deliver that sentence, the confusion beyond the wall was aggravating.

Kuang-kuang!

The doppelganger was diligently swinging the Adventurer's short dagger, blocking the weapons of the Knight and Paladin.

Now, the Knight and Paladin, who were leading the battle calmly and dragging time, started to get impatient on the contrary.

That was then.

The doppelganger suddenly screamed.

“Aaakkk!”

What came out of the doppelganger's mouth was the voice of a mercenary.

The doppelganger cried out in a loud voice.

“It's a betrayal! These damn bastards! They're trying to bury us in the dungeon and take possession of the treasure!”

It was the perfect voice of the Mercenary.

His tone and voice, his intonation, and even the vocal range were very similar to those of the Mercenary.

The Mercenary's voice, mimicked by the doppelganger, echoed through the walls.

The commotion heard from beyond the wall grew explosively.

‘Is this what the doppelganger was aiming for?’

The Knight was later aware of what the doppelganger was aiming for.

Because of this, the party was given paralytic drugs, and it took time until the rescue team arrived.

“It’s a treasure! Here’s the treasure!”

This time it was the voice of the Adventurer.

The two shouts the doppelganger masqueraded were so fatal.

“Look, it’s because of that! They cheated on us! Son of a bitch, kill!”

From beyond the wall.

The sound of knives began to be heard.

Followed by a scream.

“Argh!”

“What are these idiots doing!”

The dungeon expedition consisted of several groups.

And the group that first entered was made up of people representing the group.

All groups were competitive with each other.

They cooperated for a while to clear the road, but in the end they had to fight for the one and only treasure.

It’s a fact that everyone in the group had forgotten about because of the common enemy called the doppelganger.

They were not only a rescue team to rescue the party, but they were also the latter sent by each faction to claim the treasure first.

“Ahh!”

“Are you crazy!”

“Stop! Stop!”

“You betrayed me first! Die!”

Screaming.

Death.

“Argh! Arhan!”

The voices of their colleagues calling for themselves, who could not answer until the end.

‘No... No!’

They wanted to break down that wall and run to their colleagues right away.

I had to stop the meaningless battle and explain all of this.

However.

“Hehehe, where are you going, we were playing together.”

The cursed devil did not give way.

As if ridiculing the Knight, he was constantly keeping a close watch.

The Knight’s sword began to shine.

The sword that illuminates the dark cavity was swung towards the demon.

Quazzik!

The doppelganger hurriedly abandoned the Adventurer’s appearance and pulled out the devil’s arm, but could not stop the Knight’s sword.

The doppelganger, half human and half demon, looked up at his arm and said.

“I still don’t have enough strength. Hihi.”

The devil was muttering, but he didn’t seem to feel any sense of urgency as he looked at his squashed arms.

As the battle continued, the wall exploded with a huge explosion.

Buried in the roar, the screams and the sound of knives from beyond the walls all disappeared.

A strong heat emanated from the collapsed wall.

A Wizard with a long wand.

Burning corpses, visible behind the Wizard walking out.

“No.”

After checking the faces of the corpses, the Knight unwittingly let go of the sword from his grasp.

It was an unrealistic sight.

He finally met his colleagues again, and what he finally encountered was the faces of his colleagues who had become corpses.

All of this felt like a play, not an actual situation.

The wall that broke with the magic of overwhelming power, the one who broke through and appeared was the Wizard’s master who led the Wizards.

The Lord of the Magic Tower had the appearance of a young woman in her twenties who did not match with an elderly man of over 100 years old.

After he sent in his disciple in his own image, he himself came in as the disciple and belonged to the latter group.

He had the same face as the disciple, but there was a completely different atmosphere on the face that showed no emotion.

“Master! That’s a doppelganger!”

The Wizard behind the Paladin shouted to the master.

The Master didn’t even respond to the disciple’s cry.

He just prepared his magic.

A huge magical energy moved and concentrated on the tip of the staff he was holding.

“It’s a precious treasure. Please survive and become my test subject, demon.”

The master said to the doppelganger.

The doppelganger, who had been quietly listening to those words, muttered to himself.

“Yes, that was the perfect plan, friend.”

The doppelganger flicked his fingers as he said so.

At the same time, the floor of the dungeon began to glow.

The Knight felt dazed.

‘...stun trap. The first thing we saw when we were locked up here.....’

The last card prepared by the Adventurer and the doppelganger.

It was a magic trap.

Side Story 22

Doppelganger (8)

I opened my eyes

I couldn't see well ahead.

There was a pile of dirt on my face.

I involuntarily raised my arm and tried to shake it off, but my arm did not move.

I shook my head.

Then a pile of dirt ran down the side of my face.

It was uncomfortable because of the remaining dirt, but I forced my eyes to open.

It wasn't completely dark.

There was a flame.

There was a fire that was attached to the stone wall and the earthen floor and lit up the surroundings.

It was an explosion caused by the master wizard.

The master wizard, who was preparing a powerful magic, fell into a stun trap.

The prepared magic could not be captured and just exploded.

The explosion completely shattered the already endangered cavity.

Once again the ceiling collapsed.

Both the explosion and the collapsing ceiling could not be stopped.

I turned my head and looked at where my arm was.

My right arm rested on a rock.

My right ankle was likewise laid on a rock.

Crack-

I felt the pain later.

I clenched my teeth and held back the scream.

There was no sensation in the limbs that had been laid on the rocks.

The pain was even more terrifying.

There was a sharp pain in the shoulder and knee that seemed to be pulling on a nerve line.

There was a burning pain in the front of the chest.

How could I survive the explosion, but without burns?

My only moving body part was the left hand with the fingers stuck together due to the high heat.

It was as blunt as a child's clenched fist, and my knuckles were hard to recognize.

I'm not alive, even though I'm alive.

It was such a serious injury that it would have been better to die.

I was the only survivor.

I was the only one who had witnessed the sight of the wizard master raising the power.

No matter how much I spread my senses, I couldn't see anyone alive but me.

“Hihihi”

I need to correct my words a bit.

No humans survived the explosion, but a devil survived.

I heard the sound of the devil, pounding, footsteps walking.

Did you notice that I woke up?

Hatred ran up my spine.

I felt a disgusting feeling of vomiting, and I could feel the terror suffocating my lungs.

“Hello, Sir Knight.”

The doppelganger walked over to me and greeted me.

The devil giggled and laughed.

He shuddered and laughed, as if he was too happy to bear it.

Huge tentacles were intertwined like tree trunks.

The whole body was trembling like a wriggling snake.

“Devil.”

I could only utter a single word.

I felt the pain in my throat tearing like paper.

“Hehehehe. Yeah, I’m the devil. I know.”

“...you won’t last long either, devil.”

The devil groaned loudly again.

“Knight friend, do you really think so?”

The devil made a face over his body full of tentacles.

I could recognize it at a glance.

The face of the master wizard.

“I have never eaten such a powerful human being. I have never eaten such a powerful human being. A vast amount of magic and fame and influence spread across the continent. Hihi, how far can I go? “

Next to the master’s face, other faces appeared.

Paladin.

Mercenary.

The faces of other characters who were part of the subjugation team were also visible.

“I mean, I ate so much. Hihi, do you really think I won’t be able to last that long?!”

The devil’s laughter grew louder.

The joking and teasing giggles became more and more intimidating.

That voice sounded loud like thunder.

As he fell to the floor, I winced and my body started to tremble.

“Ah, yes, come to think of it, our Sir knight also had friends.”

Familiar faces floated over the doppelganger's body.

Knights comrades.

They were colleagues who were with me every day until I came back here.

The faces of my colleagues were even moving alive.

[Sad? Because your friends are dead? Because we're dead?]

The faces of my colleagues asked me.

The voices of my colleagues that are so familiar that just listening to them gives me strength.

The devil ripped off the face that floated above his body.

Tentacles with sharp claws bit their faces like meat dough.

“There's no need to remember this rubbish. Hehe.”

Without realizing it, I bit my tongue.

Blood broke out

Tears flowed from the corners of my eyes, like blood gushing out of my tongue.

It was my fault.

It was an issue I had to deal with.

It wasn't meant to bring them in.

It was the result of my weakness.

Maybe they'll all survive.

It was because of the complacency that colleagues could suggest a smarter way.

I should have killed him.

“Hehehe, it was difficult, it was really difficult. It’s a damn holy sword. I had been asleep for hundreds of years, but who knew that the aftermath of that time would still be there.”

said the doppelganger, wriggling its tentacles.

The dynamic movements made it look as if a human was dancing.

Then I should have not listened to the adventurer.

No matter how reasonable and plausible it may seem, it should not be forgotten that it could also be a doppelganger’s proposal.

The five of us.

I thought the sacrifice of five people was not worth it, so I multiplied the sacrifice dozens of times.

“This guy did a really good job.”

The adventurer’s face appeared above the doppelganger’s body.

The face of the adventurer was clearly expressing his emotions, unlike the other expressionless faces.

[Kill me]

The devil scratched the face of such an adventurer with its tentacles, crushed it, and tortured it.

He smiled as if he were as happy as ever.

Countless faces floated over the doppelganger's body.

Among them, the face of a childhood friend came to mind.

'Sorry.'

'You promised me. To protect people'

My friend blamed me.

As a child, I didn't know that the act of guarding meant giving up something else.

'You didn't throw anything away. This time too'

No.

I wanted to say that.

I tried too.

For the best result.

'But look at the consequences you have brought.'

The small world collapsed, and the people were slaughtered.

Only the evil demon remained, making fun of the deceased.

"Hehe, once the magic is restored a little, I'll go out with the power of the wizard knight. Then, I'll start looking for where you lived first, Sir Knight."

The devil whispered.

Now I know.

The devil was just making fun of me.

For the rest of the time.

For fun.

I raised my left hand.

It was the only limb that moved according to my will.

“What are you doing? Are you going to fight me with it?”

But my fingers were crushed by the heat.

It was hard to even wiggle my wrists at will.

Then there was no need.

With a pop, my left hand exploded.

Blood splashed on my face.

My sword was spread out in the distance.

There was no way I could reach out my arms and bring it.

Then I will use my left hand, which has already been broken, as a weapon.

“What are you doing? It’s too much to be called a self-determination. Honorable knight man, do you not know that self-determination is a mortal sin against the will of God?”

The devil speaks of the will of God.

It shouldn’t have happened.

The flame burning my hand grew bigger and bigger.

Instead of running to me, the devil backed away.

It was no use.

There was no escape from this narrow space.

A light sword.

A mythical technique used by a legendary swordsman.

Later swordsmen tried to imitate it, but in the end, no one ever created it like the original.

It wasn't because of the lack of power.

Rather, it was full of power.

Because of its excessively powerful power, there was no one who could survive immediately after using it.

Over time, the light sword improved.

Reduced power and increased stability.

So the light sword has changed.

When it came to my generation, I only swung the shiny sword and broke the rocks a little.

Prohibited suicide that endangered the user.

Yes I will die

I will die with you.

[Aaaaah! Stupid human!]

The devil roared and inflated his body.

The fire on my left hand is now so strong that I can't look straight ahead.

I prayed towards the pure white light.

Please kill everyone.

The devil's tentacles rushed.

Even a tentacle the size of a cow's thigh was burned when it came close to the light.

The devil couldn't even get close to the light.

When the light is at its peak.

The sound is gone.

The screams of the devil, and the sound of my heartbeat ringing in my ears.

A world unseen and unheard unfolded.

I could recognize it.

That I had recreated the very technology that appeared only in legends.

With one swing, to defend the kingdom.

With two swings to defend the continent.

The god who wielded it for the third time, evoked admiration.

The skill of a swordsman who was born as a human and became a god.

Light sword.

Bright light.

Burn me.

So that all things return to the light of the beginning.

* * *

“His Holiness.”

The old man raised his head at the voice that called out to him.

When he opened his eyes, the room was full of people looking at him.

“Did you sleep for a while?”

The old man thought for a moment and shook his head.

What he saw and felt was not a dream.

“The oracle has come down.”

The archbishops rose to their feet in amazement.

He hurriedly drew the holy grail and prepared to listen to the oracle.

The old man told the bishops who were waiting thrilled and excited for him to speak.

“God was satisfied.”

The Pope’s words reached all the bishops of the continent.

The Continental Festival has begun.

The oracle of the God of Light that suddenly came down one day.

‘There are precious things in the west, so dig them up.’

Unprecedented simplicity and clarity, this oracle changed much of the western continent.

As the elders headed to the dungeon, the proportion of the population in the territory collapsed and the economy started to suffer.

The economic crisis soon led to a food shortage.

A war for limited resources has begun.

In the meantime, many orphans and beggars were born.

The collapsed city was filled with adventurers, not citizens.

Such cities became slums.

Adventurers lost their dreams and became thieves.

The adventurer city has become a stronghold city for thieves.

The thieves who started their activities on a city scale formed a huge force, turning the western continent into a lawless zone.

It is the story of a kingdom in the western continent.

There was a kingdom that did not give up on the oracle even after many years had passed.

Because the main cities of the kingdom had fallen into ruins, the kingdom hung on the treasure mentioned by the oracle.

All of the knights dispatched to a certain dungeon lost contact.

The king thought that the knights had turned away and fled with the treasure.

He dispatched his troops towards the dungeon.

The soldiers could not find the escaped knights.

Instead, the corpses of the knights could be found in the dungeon rubble.

In the wreckage of the collapsed dungeon, where even the soles of boots were melted by the powerful geothermal heat, they found a dying knight buried in a pile of stones.

* * *

“Sir Arhan.”

I turned my head to the sound calling me.

“Again, you’re spying on the royal family through the window. Don’t do that. What will you do if you get caught?”

I just smiled.

Through the window, I could see the garden of the royal family.

The young royals were still running around.

“I’ll be right back.”

said the caregiver Tom.

I nodded.

Decades have passed since I was imprisoned here.

After fainting in the dungeon, when I woke up again, I was in the kingdom.

With the whole body bound

The king apologized to me.

He was supposed to give me credit, but he asked me to understand why he had to do this.

I understand.

I was the last survivor of the scene where the doppelganger appeared.

It was only natural that the hero who defeated the doppelganger could not be guaranteed freedom.

I thought I would be put to death in prison or quietly executed.

It didn't matter.

It was a life I had already given up on.

Rather, I was grateful to get some extra time and see the palace once again.

Then the king told me an unexpected story.

The story that I will be transported to the Empire.

A land protected by the Emperor and the Pope.

I couldn't speak.

A restraint ball was bitten in my mouth, so questioning itself was not accepted.

I was transferred to the unnamed tower of the Imperial Capital and imprisoned.

There was no freedom to leave the tower, no freedom to get out of bed and chairs without a guard, no freedom to even talk.

I followed the instructions faithfully.

So time has passed.

The Empire has forgotten me.

The watchman became the caretaker, and even when I went out of the tower, there was no guard to stop me.

But I locked myself in the tower.

There were no restraints on my mouth anymore, but I did not open my mouth recklessly.

There were times when I felt a sense of triumph that I overcame the devil and survived.

But the fear of the devil grew day by day, and the older I got, the more I grew.

I was worried that the darkness of that day would come again after I opened my mouth recklessly.

I also suffered from delusions of whether the devil was waiting for his time in my body.

it's dark

I lost even the strength of my last strike, and now I am so helpless.

One remaining fire was extinguished.

The limbs were cut off one by one, and the left hand was cut off from the top of the wrist.

An idiot with only one leg left.

I was forced to do nothing but look at the world through the window.

I remember the flame that day.

Sometimes I think

Is the technology of the light sword really reachable by humans?

Is it impossible without God's grace?

There were times when I thought about sharing my experiences with other swordsmen.

Give up everything and try with the intention of dying.

Maybe you can be successful.

I stopped thinking

I might really die.

I couldn't teach others what I didn't understand.

Outside the window, a loud laughter was heard.

It was the voice of the running royal family.

Forgetting old thoughts again, I watched the children play.

There was a naive innocence.

Of course, since they are the royal family, they are more accustomed to the messiness of the world than other children of that age.

Still, they were kids.

Kids are pretty

"You know what?"

Tom asked.

He said he was going out earlier.

I wonder if he's back.

"A new knight is coming to our knights!"

Tom's eyes were twinkling with excitement.

I could understand because I knew the romance that boys of that age had for knights.

By the way, a new knight is coming to this knighthood.

I belonged to the Knights of Knon.

Of course, I am the only member of the knighthood.

It was like an honorary post that was confined in a tower.

"His name is Sir Cromwell!"

Cromwell.

I wanted to tell Tom to study.

Cromwell is the castle of the Empire.

A surname given to a knight from commoners or bastards.

How could such a knight come to such a place?

What's the story?

It was sad.

I know the knights who live and die for honor and fame all too well.

Therefore, I knew very well what it meant to be assigned to this

Knighthood, which was nothing more than an exile.

It would be like a social death.

“Tom.”

“Yes!”

Tom was lively.

“A new knight is coming, you should welcome it. Try preparing some refreshments.”

“Yes! I’ll prepare for it!”

Tom went out with a bang.

It’s noisy.

I leaned my head back on the chair for a moment.

When I opened my eyes again, I could see a face I had never seen before.

A girl with wide eyes and red under her eyes.

She cried so much that her face turned white.

The sun was pouring in from the window behind me.

The light of the sunset, which had been covered by the clouds, illuminated the room.

The girl’s face, which had looked as pale as gray, regained some vitality.

“...Serezia Cromwell. As of today, I have been assigned to the Knights of Knon. It is an honor to be assigned as the successor of the Knights Commander.”

“Welcome. I am honored to have a knight like you as my successor.”

I looked around.

Behind the newcomer, I saw Tom diligently coming with a tray.

Fortunately, it's not too late.

Tom did what I asked him to do.

Sweet cookies and warm milk were prepared on a tray.

“Sir Serezia.”

“Yes.”

“Do you like sweets?”

Side Story 23

Hochi (2)

“Homen.”

“Homen.”

They joined each other and prayed.

Hochi thought to himself.

How long will this fake prayer greeting last?

It started unintentionally, but now it is becoming a tradition of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

If he had known that this would be the case, he would have looked for the right word.

“Are you going in now?”

Kim Min-hyuk asked.

Hochi nodded his head.

The festival was in full swing in Seoul.

It was the 1st anniversary of the founding of the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Seoul, the central city and capital of Korea, was now recognized as a sacred place for the Lee Ho-jae Faith.

Residents came from all over the world.

The crowd was enough to make the huge city of Seoul feel cramped.

You can get points for the Lee Ho-jae Faith just by participating in the festival.

As a church member, there was no reason not to participate in the festival.

On the contrary, if you engaged in a livelihood without participating, your faith score could be reduced.

The festival was almost coming to an end.

The fireworks that now lit up the night sky were actually the last event of the festival.

He took all the pictures

He met everyone he wanted to meet.

Hochi left the rest to Kim Min-hyuk and returned to the temple.

“Hello, Hochi? Homen.”

“Homen.”

There were also church members who he encountered inside the temple.

There were office workers who dealt with the Lee Ho-jae Faith’s affairs, and there were also believers who lived in the temple at all times.

The atmosphere of the temple was lively.

It wasn’t even authoritative.

Hochi was proud.

The religious system of his own creation.

Everyone puts moral values first and makes everyone act in a law-abiding manner.

Be more harmonious.

Be better.

Be more faithful.

He was also proud that it was achieved through the rewards that people aspire to, not through coercion through punishment.

Hochi thought that a person could be good or bad.

But in modern society, people have more easily chosen the opportunity to be evil.

If you commit an illegal act, you will be punished by the law.

However, in a line that does not come into contact with the law, or in a situation where they can avoid the law, people can become evil without hesitation.

There was no system that rewarded the opposite.

Instead, there was only compensation for evil deeds.

Conversely, rewards for good deeds were worthless.

Meddling to help others became a rarity, and the only reward for good deeds was the satisfaction you felt yourself.

As society became more competitive, and making a living became more difficult, this tendency became stronger over time.

It was the same with Lee Ho-jae.

He was crazy about competition.

He did everything to beat others.

Hochi knew.

Only Hochi knew.

How crazy Lee Ho-jae was about winning and losing.

This utter madman didn't even notice his meticulousness and naivety to others.

It wasn't because he didn't want to be the bad guy.

He was hiding his actions, lest the next time he would use the same method.

In return, Lee Ho-jae rose to the top of his profession as a pro gamer.

It also allowed him to retire at the peak.

Hochi didn't like that aspect of Lee Ho-jae.

The religious system of the Lee Ho-jae Faith was the opposite of Lee Ho-jae, who can be said to be its owner.

It encouraged people to be more relaxed and peaceful.

Without worries and obsession for the future, they lived each day doing their best and praying hard.

They had a belief that religion would take charge of their future and their family, no matter what happened to them.

They began to enjoy good deeds.

Good deeds satisfy both the practical benefits of religious points and emotional satisfaction.

The world was changing positively.

At least from Hochi's point of view.

* * *

Hochi confided his concerns to the Grandmother, who was half lying on his sofa.

The Grandmother was living on Earth for the church festival.

She was controlling the temperature so that people wouldn't fall from the heat during the festival held on the street in the sweltering summer.

She was lying on the sofa in the temple lounge.

Hochi told the grandmother what he had in mind.

Originally, he should have asked Lee Ho-jae, but now that Lee Ho-jae has gone to catch the God of Order, he has no one to consult with.

"What do you think, Grandmother?"

"I think you're like a kid."

Hochi pursed his lips in disbelief.

"Look, isn't that a childlike reaction?"

Grandmother said with a big smile.

Hochi didn't feel like laughing at all.

"What is childish?"

“Something cute like a child.”

The grandmother thought it was funny even though she said it herself, and she started to laugh a little louder.

Hochi's expression grew worse and worse.

“Isn't it right to be like a child?”

“Not really.”

Grandmother laughed again.

“No! No! I'm telling you!”

Hochi shouted, but the grandmother did not stop her laughing.

She shook her neck and chuckled, and she started to laugh.

Hochi could feel the rising feeling of injustice.

“I'm just thinking about it and I'm worried.”

“Yeah, you are.”

Grandmother just kept laughing and teasing him.

When Hochi was thinking about just leaving the room, the grandmother finally stopped her laughter.

“What are you so concerned about?”

“Just that...”

It was complicated.

Jealousy, envy, and inferiority that he felt in the past.

Regret, pity, and guilt.

There were too many emotions to single out.

There were also things in common.

That he was raised by Lee Ho-jae for the same purpose.

“That’s enough to get you interested.”

The grandmother nodded her head.

“Just go and talk to him often. If you talk, you will one day know exactly how you feel. The girl who is locked up on the 61st floor needs a conversation.”

For Lee Yeon-hee’s sake, try to talk to her often.

Hochi nodded.

That was clear and wise advice.

“Anyway.”

The grandmother floated her words.

“I sometimes think. Why don’t you blame the king?”

The king the grandmother was talking about referred to Lee Ho-jae.

Hoch was able to clearly answer that question.

“I blame him. Still.”

“Do you?”

Hochi’s body is, in theory, identical to that of Lee Ho-jae at the time when he created an alter ego on the 61st floor.

So are his brain functions.

Hochi did not forget what he had been through on the 61st floor.

He had too good a memory to forget those experiences.

But he wished he would sometimes forget those things.

Those were painful memories.

He received an apology from Lee Ho-jae, and he is still with him and has become his family.

Lee Ho-jae forced himself to be unfair from the beginning.

As an alter ego, he did not hide the fact that he was made to clear the 61st floor, and was made to be left behind on the 61st floor.

Of course, Hochi resisted.

Very violently.

He confronted Lee Ho-jae with the mindset that he would rather die fighting.

It didn't take long for that mindset to break.

Lee Ho-jae was a natural fighter.

He was even an experienced fighter.

Lee Ho-jae tried to grow Hochi.

Enough to make it all the way to the end of the 61st floor alone.

Or enough to be recognized as a challenger in the tutorial.

The process of growing up was no different from torture.

Hochi was different from Lee Ho-jae.

Even if he saw the same things, he could not learn the same things.

Lee Ho-jae did not accept that.

He thought that Hochi was forcibly slowing down his growth to prevent him from clearing the 61st floor.

‘Be strong! If you don’t become strong, you die! Don’t think you’re going to die on the 61st floor. If you don’t have enough strength, I’ll kill you before I put you on the 61st floor.’

And after I kill you, I’ll make you again.

Just remembering those memories made Hochi shudder.

Rather than his body being tired and exhausted, it was when the mind was more scared and terrified than the spirit.

In the end, Hochi couldn’t clear the 61st floor.

It wasn’t because he couldn’t get stronger.

Hochi was not accepted as a contender for the 61st floor.

Hochi thought that Lee Ho-jae would kill him, who had become useless.

So he hid in the ruins of the 61st floor.

He was sure to be caught soon, but he wanted to survive just a little bit longer.

Even a few minutes or hours

So time has passed.

A day passed, a week passed, a month passed.

It was then that Hochi realized.

Lee Ho-jae doesn't hate himself.

Lee Ho-jae doesn't even hate him.

To his surprise.

The reason he tortured Hochi by pushing him to the limit was really purely to make Hochi stronger.

It was amazing that there was no malice in that vicious act.

Lee Ho-jae, who gave up using his alter ego, started tormenting himself again instead of Hochi.

“So could you forgive me?”

“What is forgiveness?”

Hochi didn't forgive.

It would be right to say that he did not forgive.

As long as he can't forget the memories of that time, he will never completely forgive Lee Ho-jae.

Lee Ho-jae will not be able to cast off his guilt either

“I understand rather than forgive.”

“Understand?”

“That you were originally like that.”

Lee Ho-jae was a character who pushed himself more than others.

Perhaps the person who hates that hostile nature the most is Lee Ho-jae himself, not anyone else.

How could that be?

The spirit of sacrifice that laid down everything to achieve his purpose was truly magical.

There seemed to be no greed or satisfaction for a comfortable life.

He was like a human who had mentally castrated his indolence and slackness.

“He must have killed himself. His weak side. Just like he did to you.”

said the grandmother.

Hochi thought so too.

What human being is born so obsessive from the moment they are born?

He cut off his own weak side.

Hochi knew it too.

Lee Ho-jae gets annoyed whenever he sees Ho-chi idling, slacking off, and playing, and gives him a scolding

He was sometimes angry.

Each time Lee Ho-jae calls him, Hochi could feel jealousy.

Lee Ho-jae was envious of Hochi's laziness, but he did not stop it.

Of course, this is the story after giving up on the 61st floor.

Lee Ho-jae used to write novels for Hochi as a hobby.

Lee Ho-jae himself could have also enjoyed reading the novel he wrote.

But he couldn't.

Instead, he watched as Hochi had fun reading the novel.

It was an indirect surrogate satisfaction.

He was tickled, wondering what was so much fun.

When Hochi had almost finished reading his novels, he would transcribe a new novel.

Hochi thought about what Lee Ho-jae was doing now.

He couldn't imagine.

He disappeared saying he was going to beat the God of Order that is close to a transcendental god.

He still shows no sign of coming back.

However, the God of Order did not become a transcendental god and the world did not perish.

How much more is he pushing himself?

He was worried.

* * *

The church festival was over.

Hochi, who had been spending his days busily working, finally became a little more free.

Hochi, who was breathing a sigh of relief from his seemingly endless work, was able to realize one thing.

He realized that he wasn't the only one worried about Lee Ho-jae.

“Uncle!”

Yong-yong called him in a determined voice.

Hochi opened his eyes and grabbed the little hand.

Yong-yong looked cute rather than determined, but he knew that Yong-yong was determined anyways.

“Uh... uh.”

Hochi was perplexed.

It was because of Yong-yong's outfit.

Yong-yong usually liked to wear fairy-tale and girly clothes.

However, the clothes that Yong-yong is wearing now were combat uniforms.

The military uniform-like outfit was strangely cute.

“I'm going to find Daddy!”

Hochi was even more perplexed.

How? Where? In what way?

A number of questions filled Hochi's mind.

“So, let's go together, Uncle!”

Side Story 24

Hochi (3)

“Me too?”

Yong-yong nodded his head.

Hochi felt embarrassed.

“Yong-yong, do you miss your dad?”

Yong-yong nodded his head again.

Yong-yong’s facade of courage quickly faded.

Yong-yong looked a little gloomy.

Hochi reached out and touched Yong-yong’s cheek with his hand.

He was as soft as a loaf of bread.

He thought Yong-yong was a good kid on his own, but since Lee Ho-jae has been gone for a long time, Yong-yong seems to be worried too.

When did you prepare a battle suit like this?

It looked more like a costume rather than a proper military uniform.

“Did Yong-yong make it?”

“Huh.....”

Although it was not comparable to Lee Ho-jae and Yong-yong, Hochi also had a knack for magic.

He also had the insight to recognize magical items.

He could see that the clothes Yong-yong had prepared were not just a costume that was focused on design, but a proper combat outfit.

It was evident at a glance how hard he had prepared.

“Yong-yong, wouldn’t it be a hindrance if uncle goes too?”

It was Hochi’s honest opinion.

Not to even mention Lee Ho-jae, compared to Yong-yong, his ability is far behind.

It was clear that he would only hold the ankles of others if he had come.

If he didn’t just grab an ankle, he could put them in danger as well.

“No, uncle has to go too.”

Yong-yong was rarely stubborn.

It wasn’t the courageous attitude he had before, but he stubbornly didn’t give up.

What was the reason?

Hochi had no intention of visiting Lee Ho-jae.

Of course, he was worried for Lee Ho-jae

However, it wouldn’t change anything if he went looking for Lee Ho-jae, and there was also the expectation that if it was Lee Ho-jae, he would somehow overcome any trial and come back.

“You must go.”

Yong-yong wiggled his fingers and said.

Hochi had no choice but to ask.

“Why does uncle have to go?”

In fact, Hochi was willing to join Yong-yong if he wanted Hochi to go with him because he was afraid or nervous to go alone.

Of course, it would be a hindrance, but no matter how lacking their abilities, it was not the behavior of a guardian to let a scared child go alone.

He had no intention of stopping Yong-yong from leaving to find Lee Ho-jae.

However, Yong-yong gave a different answer than expected.

“Just. I feel like it.”

“How did you feel?”

Hochi asked while holding Yong-yong.

Yong-yong thought Hochi would refuse, so he nodded his head slightly and buried his face in Hochi's chest.

Hochi thought as he patted Yong-yong on the back.

If he had to give reasons why he shouldn't visit Lee Ho-jae, he could name a few things right away.

Hochi's own judgment and Yong-yong's intuition were put on the scale.

The weight of balance was tilted to one side.

“Yeah, let's go.”

Hochi got ready before morning came and wrote a letter down.

It wasn't a huge letter.

It was a letter that said that he would be absent for a while and to take good care of the church in the meantime.

The letter placed on the desk in the office was picked up by Kim Min-hyuk the next morning.

Kim Min-hyuk screamed and made a riot that he would leave the church immediately, but he had to start his work in the end due to the disapproval of other members of the church.

* * *

“Uncle, why are we sneaking out?”

Yong-yong asked.

Hochi and Yong-yong were walking down the street on the 60th floor of the tutorial.

Secretly

Sneakily.

It seems that Yong-yong felt strange that he had to hide himself in the residential area on the 60th floor, which had been their home for a long time.

Actually, it was weird.

“...There is such a thing, Yong-yong-ah.”

Bump!

The windows of the two-story house swung open.

It used to be the house that Lee Ho-jae used as his room.

Now, Lee Yeon-hee inherited it.

Lee Yeon-hee appeared through the window.

Lee Yeon-hee leaned her arms against the windows and looked down at the street.

As soon as the window was opened, Hochi hardened.

“...Yong-yong, we’re not seen right?”

“That’s right.”

Hochi let out a sigh of relief.

No matter how good Lee Yeon-hee’s skills are, it won’t be enough to see through Yong-yong’s magic.

“Uncle, why did you ask me to use invisibility magic?”

“It’s nothing.”

Hochi didn’t answer in the end.

It was a bad decision.

Yong-yong couldn’t understand Hochi’s intentions until the very end, so he really only used invisibility magic because Hochi instructed him to do so.

The invisibility magic had hidden their appearance, but it could not erase their presence or voice.

Lee Yeon-hee leaned against the window and watched their backs.

Smiling quietly.

‘It seems that he’s not ready for an answer yet.’

Or just shy.

Lee Yeon-hee watched them with interest but didn’t really care where they were going.

They might have had something to do somewhere in the 60th-floor area.

Having lived here for ten years, she thought it could be.

In fact, Hochi and Yong-yong often visited the 60th floor.

Hochi left the streets of the 60th floor residential area while holding Yong-yong’s little hand tightly.

He was so nervous that his hands were sweating.

* * *

“Now, what should I do here, Yong-yong?”

Yong-yong excitedly explained Hochi’s question.

“Uncle that way, I’m this way!”

Yong-yong said, pointing to the volcano and the ice mountain.

Hochi couldn’t hide his curiosity.

The theme of the 61st floor was well known.

At the end of the two-way road, the challengers who meet again have to face off.

And only the victorious challenger could advance to the 62nd floor.

The problem is that Hochi himself is not recognized as a challenger.

So Hochi believed that Yong-yong had a way to get past the 61st floor.

But they have to move from here separately.

He couldn't understand.

"See you later!"

Yong-yong used magic and disappeared in a blink of an eye.

"This....."

Hochi was perplexed, and he himself moved towards the volcano.

The next moment, Hochi reached the heart of a lava volcano.

"Come on."

At the volcano, Hochi was able to meet a giant who had lost his confidence.

He encountered the old man lying on the lava.

"Uh... Old Man, are you okay?"

Hochi asked in a voice filled with concern without knowing it.

The complexion of Old Man didn't look that good.

Hochi felt sorry, wondering if he had been too indifferent to the Old Man.

"It's alright."

He didn't look okay at all.

The giant's body was flowing.

He knew the story about losing divinity, as even Hochi has heard of it.

The loss of divinity was more fatal than Hochi had thought.

The body and mind of the giant were returning to their pre-god state.

It was degeneration

Everything he had gained was falling apart.

“No, I really don't know. Whether I'm okay or not.”

The giant said so.

He said that perhaps he would suffer and die like this rather than getting stabilized without his divinity.

“.....”

He couldn't let his mouth fall easily when he saw the giant who said he was about to die too calmly.

“I can't help it. It's a natural result that a god who has given up his deity must face. I can't deny the result I brought. Anyway... What's going on here?”

Old Man asked.

Hochi didn't come to the 61st floor often to play.

In fact, the 61st floor did not remain a very good memory for Hochi.

Rather, it was full of memories of the bad side.

Neither the Old Man nor the other giants knew it.

Hochi said that he would find Lee Ho-jae.

The Old Man spoke as soon as he heard the explanation.

“You’re going to die.”

It wasn’t a joke.

The Old Man really thought Hochi was going to die.

“Maybe.”

In fact, Hochi thought so too.

Yong-yong will protect him, but his opponent is the God of Order, who is close to becoming a transcendental god and may destroy the world.

“Are you still going?”

Hochi nodded his head.

“What’s the reason?”

“Because I’m worried.”

Worried.

In fact, Hochi believed that Lee Ho-jae would win, but he wasn’t sure.

It was different from the giants who made Lee Ho-jae’s victory their deity.

Hochi considered both the possibility that Lee Ho-jae could win and the possibility that he could not win in the end.

“Because there is a possibility that Hojae may never come back.”

Then he will live with regrets for not visiting now.

He may not be able to meet him even if he goes looking for him.

Still, he didn't want to leave any regrets.

“You don't believe in the king's victory.”

It was natural.

A vague expectation that Lee Ho-jae could do it.

He was close to wishing he could do it.

“Good.”

The giant's body became smaller.

2 meters. About the size of a tall person.

“I'll go too.”

Old Man said.

“You are right. I do not want to die like this, leaving only regrets. It would be better for me to die while visiting the king.”

It seemed that the thought that he was still going to die had not changed.

Hochi nodded his head.

He had no reason or justification to oppose the companionship.

A portal appeared in front of Hochi and Old Man.

It was the portal to the final area on the 61st floor, the battlefield.

Hochi stepped up to the portal with Old Man.

“Aren’t you leaving?”

Old Man asked.

Hochi broke into a cold sweat.

‘What if the portal doesn’t work?’

Hochi, who was not accepted as a challenger in the past, could not advance from here.

Lee Ho-jae tried all sorts of methods, but Hochi couldn’t get to the last section of the 61st floor.

“Old Man, what if I don’t enter it?”

The Old Man seemed to have understood just then.

“We’re both going to be quite embarrassed. You didn’t even prepare a way to get over it, and with what confidence did you come here. You were so confident that I thought there was a way.”

Hochi scratched the back of his head in embarrassment.

“Try it for once.”

Old Man said.

It was as he said.

Hochi said, looking at the portal beneath his feet.

“Move.”

The portal’s light expanded.

Light enveloped Hochi and the Old Man's body.

In the next moment, Hochi and Old Man had moved to the arena.

“Uh... it works.”

* * *

[Lee Hochi(?)]

Lv.499

Power: ?

Agility: ?

Physical Strength: ?

Magic: ?

“Up to the status window...”

Hochi didn't understand why all of a sudden he was accepted as a challenger for the tutorial.

He shouldn't have said it like that before.

After waiting for a while, Yong-yong arrived at the arena.

Hochi asked Yong-yong what happened to him, but Yong-yong replied that he did not know.

Did they just bring him in just to be vague?

He couldn't figure it out

“How do you plan to move on?”

In the battle arena, challengers who arrive through the two paths fight each other.

Only the winner will advance.

Hochi thought.

‘Is it possible that Yong-yong wanted to bring me here to move on?’

If so, Yong-yong leaves the 61st floor and he returns to the 60th floor.

Hochi turned his head to look at the Old Man.

He thinks he’ll be embarrassed again.

He continued to embarrass himself because he had said big words while regretting nothing.

He said frankly that he followed Yong-yong without thinking about anything.

Fortunately, Yong-yong didn’t bring Hochi to use as a sacrifice on the 61st floor.

[You have cleared the 61st floor.]

It was easy to clear.

He was nervous for nothing.

All he needs to do is believe in Yong Yong.

Hochi asked a question to Yong-yong, who had already moved to his side.

“How did you do it?”

“We broke through the system and moved to this side. Then all the challengers over there will be eliminated, and that will be treated as a loss, and this will become the winner's group."

It seemed so simple.

Hochi thought.

If Lee Ho-jae had known the method years earlier, a lot would have changed.

Once again, Yong-yong looked great.

Hochi is with Yong-yong and Old Man.

Once again, he went through the portal.

Where they arrived was a green field.

"Huing?"

And in the field.

There was Kirikiri looking at them with round eyes in surprise.

Side Story 25

Hochi (4)

A pearl was placed on a flat stone.

Pearls are auspicious gems.

Unlike other jewels, the pearl conceived by life itself contains birth and death.

It was a smooth pearl with no blemishes.

Kirikiri struck the pearl with a stone.

If you hit it by mistake, it will bounce off and roll away.

But Kirikiri smashed the pearls very neatly.

“Unggg.....”

Kirikiri groaned as she looked into the remnants of the broken pearl.

This fortune-telling wasn't good either.

It was a fortune telling, but no matter how much she looked at it, there was no room for interpretation.

Suddenly, Kirikiri wondered if he had ever paid so much attention to fortune telling.

There wasn't.

Before and after becoming a god.

It was a sensible thing to do.

The start was also because of the challenger.

The challenger, Lee Ho-jae, went to the God of Order of his own volition.

She could hardly have predicted the outcome.

The God of Order was already beyond Kikiri's prediction range.

Only the great God of Slowness could guess what kind of will the machine god, who had power that had come close to the level of a transcendental god, will realize.

Lee Ho-jae was also a challenger that was difficult to predict.

He was a human being who had become a god alone since a little over ten years now.

She couldn't guess the outcome.

But she couldn't just sit back and wait.

The glimpses of the future she could view were regretful.

The God of Remorse existed as proof.

But like everyone else, Kirikiri couldn't overcome her anxiety and curiosity about the future.

Kirikiri was confident.

She knew how to use fortune-telling in a very positive way.

As soon as a positive prediction comes out.

As soon as a negative prediction comes out.

She tried to pull it in her favor.

Fortune-telling was the direction of the trend, the shadow of causation.

When that figure comes to reality, it can be changed as much as you want.

She was well aware that her own efforts and actions could shape the future to some extent.

Kirikiri looked down at the fortune telling with confidence.

And as soon as she checked the fortune-telling, her confidence was gone.

There was no scar like this.

There is an end but no beginning.

She repeated the fortune telling over and over again, but the result was the same over and over again.

In an adventure, the end means a new beginning.

There is no eternal end.

Even if you come back after an adventure and settle down.

That peaceful and comfortable life will also be the beginning of another adventure.

But the fortune telling was telling that...

There will be no more new beginnings.

As the long adventure is over, the true end will come.

Kirikiri released her own ear that she had been holding on to unconsciously.

As soon as it was released from her hand, her ears pricked up towards the sky.

Her ears were stiff enough to feel the heat.

‘Am I going to die?’

The end of the fortune telling was reminiscent of the end of her life.

The end of all adventures.

The extinction of the grand universe was executed through the destruction of the minor universes.

Death.

Kirikiri thought.

What her own death meant.

Even though she already wanted to die, she became a being who could not die.

That she is facing her death.

“Hooojae is losing.”

In the end, the God of Order achieves complete transcendence.

The world comes to an end like that.

“Ahhh...”

Kirikiri moaned.

She too had to destroy the world.

Even so, it should have weakened the God of Order.

That doesn't guarantee victory, but the win rate would have been a little higher.

"What to do..."

Kirikiri did not have a powerful card that could reverse the direction of that fortune telling.

She had no way to induce a variable in the confrontation between the God of Order and the challenger.

That was then.

A portal appeared in the middle of the field.

Three people were summoned above the portal.

Hochi and Yong-yong and the lava giant on the 61st floor.

Kirikiri's eyes widened at the unexpected appearance of the characters.

"Huing?"

* * *

"Wow!"

it was Yong-yong.

Yong-yong was holding Kirikiri's hand and spinning round and round.

Kirikiri was still buzzing as if she didn't understand what was going on, and was being dragged around by Yong-yong's hand.

Seeing that, Hochi thought it was a strange thing.

Yong-yong seems to like Kirikiri.

He probably remembers that she was from the first time he saw her.

Rather than having a strong affinity, it was closer to what young children would see as a kindergarten teacher or host of a children's entertainment program.

Is it because it's a rabbit?

It seems to be so.

Hochi strongly affirmed his thoughts.

Kirikiri hugged Yong-yong from behind, who was turning endlessly.

When Hochi is hugging him, Yong-yong fits snugly in his arms, but his legs tremble a lot because of the small difference in height between him and Kirikiri.

It looked like a little one was holding her little brother.

Kirikiri approached while hugging Yongyong.

She asked Hochi.

“What's going on here?”

Hochi felt annoyed.

How should he explain it?

Is it right to be honest?

Should he deceive Kirikiri?

What if Kirikiri won't let them pass?

In an instant, all sorts of thoughts filled his mind.

Hochi turned his head for help and looked at the Old Man.

Old Man did a great job.

He just ignored Hochi's gaze and looked into the distance.

What bothered him was the firm refusal.

Hochi felt sad inside.

In the midst of this, Kirikiri's round eyes were urging Hochi for an answer.

"This is pretty, right!"

Yong-yong, held by Kirikiri, pointed to his clothes and said.

"Uh... uh... huh."

Kirikiri's answer was unconvincing.

The military look is not to Kirikiri's taste.

"What are you doing here?"

Kirikiri immediately asked the question again.

Hochi was forced to confess.

"Are you on your way to find Hooojae?"

"Yes. You're okay, right?"

Kirikiri's round eyes widened.

“It’s not okay! No way!”

* * *

“If you persist, I will punish you!”

Kirikiri put her hands on her waist and shouted.

Like a strict teacher.

But Yong-yong was no ordinary student.

Yong-yong did not break his stubbornness.

He told Kirikiri, who had declared that she would not even open the way, that he would find a way to find Lee Ho-jae right on the 61st floor.

Even if the system collapses.

“Impossible! Huh!”

“It’s possible. All I have to do is follow Dad’s way of connecting the passage to Earth.”

Yong-yong countered that it was impossible.

Kirikiri pondered for a moment after hearing Yong-yong’s words.

She soon came to the conclusion that if it was Yong-yong, it was really possible.

“Aaaah! Why the hell are you doing this to me!”

Kirikiri was clamoring with all her might.

Yong-yong was strong.

Watching Kirikiri's stubbornness, his expression didn't change.

"Hey, you can't just go."

Kirikiri changed her attitude right away.

Instead of urging harshly, she began to ask Yong-yong.

"No."

As expected, Yong-yong was adamant.

Suddenly, the conversation between the two became the other way around.

"If you don't go, I'll give you the macaron I saved."

Kirikiri took out a macaron set from somewhere.

It was a macaron set box divided into 4×4 compartments, but only three of the 16 macarons remained.

Were you giving away leftovers?

Hochi felt embarrassed.

Even that macaron set looked somehow familiar.

No, he thinks Lee Ho-jae bought it a while ago.

"This is delicious."

I'm not going to eat it

I don't need it.

Besides, that would have been absolutely disgusting.

The color is also a bit weird.

There is also white mold.

She was trying to save it, but it must have been that she hadn't eaten it for too long.

So, ten years after he bought it, she still has three of those macarons left.

And if it's spoiled, throw it away.

Don't keep it like a souvenir.

The nagging reached the tip of Hochi's tongue.

Recently, since he was in charge of pointing out things in the church, it was Hochi that was used to pointing out things to others.

"Hey, it's delicious."

Hochi ignored it.

Yong-yong was not interested in macarons either.

Kirikiri tried to persuade him in other ways.

"If you go, everyone will die."

"No, they won't die."

Kirikiri clasped her head in response to Yong-yong's resolute sword-like answer.

It felt like a headache.

Of course, it was only a feeling.

“Well, everyone ignores me.”

“Wouldn’t that be okay. Our Yong-yong is a god.”

said Hochi.

Hochi thinks if it’s Yong-yong, it would be helpful for Lee Ho-jae as well.

“...do you mean that you know what the God of Order is like?”

The God of Order was originally a god of machines created to counter and restrain the gods.

Because of its overly superior performance, he has acquired a self and is approaching transcendence.

“If you go inside, divinity will become meaningless. You may lose your divinity altogether. The God of Order is such a god.”

Hochi had to try hard not to turn his eyes to the old man standing next to him.

In fact, there was a case right next to them about the loss of divinity.

God loses their divinity.

It was a loss worse than death.

However, Yong-yong did not succumb to Kirikiri’s warning.

“It’s okay. I’m strong even without it. Without it, I’m the strongest.”

Kirikiri made a tired expression without realizing it.

She also explained to Lee Ho-jae about the power of the God of Order.

At that time, Lee Ho-jae said that he could do it, and he went in at will.

The same answer came back from Yong-yong.

This family doesn't make sense at all.

She felt like her clothes were about to burst out of frustration.

Hochi was bothered in his own way.

Yong-yong's last words, that he is the strongest, caught his mind.

That wasn't true.

Without divinity, Lee Ho-jae was the strongest.

Hochi, who had watched Lee Ho-jae and Yong-yong's matches many times, knew best.

Yong-yong would have known that too.

Nevertheless, the reason Yong-yong is so optimistic is not that he really thinks he is stronger than Lee Ho-jae.

Because Lee Ho-jae taught him that way.

He has the mindset that he always thinks he is the strongest.

When Hochi was again thinking about Yong-yong's education, Kirikiri pointed out Hochi and tried to persuade Yong-yong.

"If you don't know, other people will be in danger."

"I am fine."

The Old Man next to him spoke first.

"I have already lost my divinity. Even if my divinity is lost again, it has nothing to do with me. And it doesn't matter if it's dangerous. This is a body that is already dying due to the collapse of my divinity."

Kirikiri moved his gaze to Hochi without strength, as if she had no energy to speak anymore.

What is he going to do?

"Uncle is fine."

"Why?"

"Uncle has no cause and effect."

Kirikiri was silent for a moment after hearing Yong-yong's answer.

So was Hochi.

There was no cause and effect, a story he had heard once before, but he couldn't understand why it suddenly appeared again.

"You mean you know what causality means?"

Yong-yong nodded his head.

"I know what you're saying..."

Kirikiri muttered to herself like that, and then went silent.

She stood blankly without saying a word.

Standing tall like a stone statue.

Yong-yong was also silent.

Hochi wondered if Yong-yong and Kirikiri were talking telepathically, but that didn't seem to be the case.

Both are just silent.

It was an awkward silence.

It had suddenly become so quiet that he was concerned about the sound of his own breathing.

Hochi looked up.

He said nothing, looking at Yong-yong and Kirikiri, who didn't show any movement, alternately.

Kirikiri, who stood like that for a while, spoke up first.

It was a completely unexpected sentence.

“Okay, I'll let you in. If you pass my exam first.”

After finishing her words, Kirikiri suddenly waved her hand.

In her hand was a gleaming golden blade.

The blade was pointed straight at Hochi.

Side Story 26

101st Floor (1)

[101st floor]

“This is so different from what I thought.”

[Is that so?]

asked Ahbooboo.

Seregia was silent.

It seemed that it would take more time for her to re-establish her communication skills.

The God of order could be found through the tutorial.

The God of order, the system itself, lives off the tutorial.

I re-entered the tutorial through the 61st floor stage, and was able to go straight to the 100th floor with Kirikiri’s guidance.

Unlike before when I was moved to Earth with a clear message on the 100th floor, I was able to face a message asking if I would move on to the next one.

[You have cleared the 100th floor.]

[You have met all the challenges. Would you like to challenge?]

It was a very simple question.

Naturally, I answered the question.

And I expected to face the God of Order right away.

Even if it's not, it will be settled in a short time.

However, contrary to expectations, the 101st floor had not been finished for several months.

Growl-.

My stomach rumbled.

I felt hungry.

“Ah damn.”

I took something to eat from the subspace.

Fortunately, a mountain of food remained.

It was fortunate that a large amount of food was prepared for Lee Ho Jae Faith's compensation.

Thanks to this, there was no need to procure ingredients and make a fire to cook and eat.

It was a hassle, but it was also a really good thing in terms of maintaining dignity.

How miserable would it be if I became a god and sat by myself, making a bonfire, grilling meat, and eating?

[You're not a god now.]

said Ahbooboo.

That's right.

I am not a god now.

I wouldn't feel hungry, and I wouldn't feel relieved to eating a sandwich.

And I wouldn't have wasted months of time on this 101st floor.

[Your divinity will be sealed.]

This was the message I saw as soon as I entered the 101st floor.

Sealing of divinity.

As soon as I checked the message, my godhood disappeared.

My body has gone back to what it was before I became a god.

As if I was in a virtual world created by the God of.

“Did the God of sky follow this place?”

[Yes, it did.]

Ahbooboo answered my question.

The God of Sky created a virtual world that annihilated the godhood through the medium of Ahbooboo and restored one to their form before becoming a god.

In it, he tried to subdue the opponent using the infinitely differentiated Ahbooboo.

It was quite a genius idea, but it was nothing more than a copy of the 101st floor.

It was a little disappointing.

I threw the rest of the sandwich in my mouth.

Bread crumbs remained in my hands.

I had to find wet wipes in the subspace and wipe my hands.

It was annoying.

“Why did the Hundred Gods Temple make such a place?”

I couldn't understand it at all.

The 101st floor of the tutorial here was nothing more than a device the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple had made to block the God of order.

Kirikiri explained that clearing the 101st floor can neutralize the God of order.

It was a really comfortable story.

If you have the ability to create a place like this, you can create a way to easily defeat the God of Order from the beginning.

So how comfortable and nice.

[As far as I know, there are good reasons.]

said Ahbooboo.

When I met Ahbooboo again, he had a lot of information about the gods.

There were many limitations in his memory before.

Ahbooboo, who likes to chat and talk, generously released his memories.

[The God of order is said to have been a mechanical god created from the beginning to monitor and contain other gods. It was decided that it would be dangerous for the control of such a machine god to be concentrated with one god. So.....]

“They’ve set up a trial ground like this in case the machine god breaks down after they’ve put no one to control?”

[Yes.]

There was one thing that bothered me.

“In such an ordeal, you should be able to clear it when a certain god in the Hundred Gods Temple breaks out. Why are they destroying the divinity?”

This was the problem.

When the God of Order had a problem, it was good to have a device to prevent it.

Because there is actually a problem.

But the problem was how to run the device.

[I heard that there is a reason.]

“What is it?”

What on earth is the reason for putting this son of a bitch ordeal that blows away the divine power?

If there was a good reason, that would be more interesting.

[The godhood is not reasonable and correct for everyone.]

“What are you talking about, that?”

[The gods act only according to themselves and their divinity. Even if there is a rational way to save the world, if your divinity wants it to be destroyed, you are willing to do it.]

For a moment, I pondered Ahbooboo’s words.

It wasn't wrong.

Let's think of the God of Light right now.

One day, the world suddenly collapses.

But if the method of destruction is the explosion of the universe.

The God of Light will favor destruction.

God of Hope.

God of Adventure.

God of Duel.

God of Nature.

God of Death.

God of Sacrifice.

God of Devotion.

No matter how much I thought and thought, there was not a single god who was sane.

In the field of 'common sense judgment', all of the gods were troubled people full of reasons for disqualification.

"So that's why they've eliminated divinity?"

[Yes. It was because it would be possible to make a more rational judgment in this place where godhood has been eliminated.]

Is blocking the God of Order really right for the world?

Are they saying that you have to get rid of the godhood and decide again after you judge?

I understood.

There was a really good reason.

That fact was even more surprising.

“Then why didn’t the gods directly block the God of Order?”

Why did they make a tutorial and nurture a challenger to take on the challenge here?

As time dragged on like that, the God of Order went beyond a simple problem and came closer to the God of Transcendence.

[Isn’t the godhood disappearing? What kind of god would want to give up his godhood himself? No matter how temporary.]

“Ugh.”

It was such a godly reason.

I got up.

The enemy was approaching.

The enemy was a huge beast-type monster.

With a bizarre appearance that looks like it was made from black cotton balls.

With golden claws.

My pulse was beating fast.

My body trembled with excitement.

Yes, my godhood was sealed, but this one thing was good.

Being able to feel the excitement and pleasure from before becoming a god again.

I heard Ahbooboo.

From that point on, the beast monster started running towards me.

It was a surprising phenomenon in itself.

Order was an unusual concept.

I have talked about the concept of order with Hochi in the past.

What is order and what is chaos?

Divinity is the force that shakes the law.

An apple that should have fallen down soars toward the sky.

Time flows backward.

It creates an impact force that is physically impossible in the air and creates life without any components.

Godhood had such power.

It was such a force to destroy order in itself.

The golden claws containing the divine power of the God of Order created a phenomenon the moment they were swung.

The divine power of the God of Order produced miracles, and the will of the God of Order did not allow miracles to entangle the laws of the world.

The clash of divine power and will lead to dimensional differentiation.

Instead of embodying the action of the divine power that tangled the world into reality, he created a new world.

The division of the world was the next best thing the God of Order could have chosen.

Numerous universes were created as the golden claws swung.

And countless universes fell with the golden claws.

It was a universe compressed into a space close to a point.

The weight that filled the world swung towards me.

I tried to calculate the impact.

It was impossible.

It was not a physical force that mere mortals dared to imagine.

Even after my powers were frozen, I did not stop doubting my abilities.

Even in a space with limited power, I was strong enough.

It was impossible.

This was not a place that could be overcome only by the abilities of mortals, except for divine power.

Every moment was a test of myself.

Can I persevere in the face of overwhelming power?

Can I affirm myself?

Can I be god?

I asked myself.

I answered once again.

Under the golden claws, I became a god once more.

“Go die.”

Ahbooboo was swung

The black beast with the golden claws.

It annihilated the fragmented universes as they were.

[Your divinity will be sealed.]

In the next moment, my divine power was gone again.

After being a god for a while, I became a human again.

“I’m getting used to this.”

[...I have nothing to say.]

Ahbooboo murmured.

I warmed up.

The body that became a god for a while and then returned to a human was stiffened with tension.

However, it was fortunate that only one came out this time.

If several beasts attack at the same time, I have to gain and lose the godhood and repeat it several times.

After that, my body can’t stand it.

Due to excessive tension, the new system begins to collapse.

Each time, I had to pull myself together before moving forward.

After all, I haven't been able to clear the 101st floor here for several months.

[The God of Sky must have failed.]

said Ahbooboo.

“What do you mean?”

[The God of Sky did not want to entrust everything to the challenger. He was trying to solve the problem himself.]

I nodded and listened to the story.

The God of Sky was such a god.

[The solution was to make me infinitely different, as you know.]

Ahbooboo with a number that is close to infinity.

It will definitely be a huge power.

[But I don't know if the God of Sky came here with me and succeeded. He probably failed.]

I think so too.

Perhaps the God of Sky's preparations were appropriate.

As long as the God of Order had not reached the Transcendental God.

The God of Order, which is said to be approaching the Transcendent God, was clearly demonstrating abilities beyond common sense.

The monsters that contain the power of the God of Order, even in a limited way, were embodying a transcendental phenomenon that could not be imitated by any other great rivals.

The idea of creating multiple universes in an instant and using the weight of the universe that was shrunk to pin down enemies.

It was surprising in itself.

However, there was one more surprising thing.

It was because of the favor that Ahbooboo was showing to the God of Sky.

Whenever Ahbooboo talked about the God of Sky, the affection and loyalty he showed were beyond my expectations.

[Of course, how long have I been with him? I have a lot of affection.]

“More than me?”

I asked.

As I asked, I knew it was childish.

[Absolutely.]

Ahbooboo answered immediately.

I was frankly upset.

Yes I am childish

“It’s surprising. I wouldn’t be like that.”

If someone locks me up in the tutorial, and even after pulling me out, playing around with me.

I'll never let it go

I must stab them in the back.

[Warrior is a great man, who, if given the opportunity, will hit the person above him in the back of the head.]

said Ahbooboo.

I couldn't think of anything to refute.

[Maybe it was the first time we were together, I don't know.]

"First time?"

[Yes. I remember the days before you became a god, when you were still an immature human.]

Ahbooboo started talking about the past again.

Side Story 27

The Boy and The Sword (1)

There was a small village.

This village was special.

It was a village that had two features that were different from other villages.

For that reason, the village was enough to be called a special village.

The village paid no taxes.

While the other villages at the foot of the mountain were struggling to make a living due to tax collection, the villagers did not pay a single penny in taxes to the lord.

The village was a slash-and-burn village where slash-and-burn people lived.

Young people who fled to avoid taxes gathered and formed a slash-and-burn village.

It didn't matter when a few people lived in hiding in the mountains.

They were earning a living by quietly plowing the fields and hunting for meat and hides.

However, as more and more people fled the territory due to the tyranny of the lords, the scale of the slash-and-burn village grew.

The lords became aware of the existence of the slash-and-burn village.

The soldiers came in.

The lords did not burn the slash-and-burn village.

Instead, they allotted harsher taxes to the villagers.

The people resisted.

From then on, the villagers became rebels.

Slash-and-burn village became a rebel base.

Although they were given the grand word “rebels”, there was really no basis for calling them “an army”.

There were three hunting bows, and there were more than ten tree furrows for plowing.

Hunting traps were installed in the rugged mountains.

That was all the rebels had.

When fewer than a hundred rebels were contemplating whether they should run away from the slash-and-burn village, or should they die while fighting.

A boy climbed a mountain.

“Hey, wait a minute.”

I cut off Ahbooboo for a moment.

Before continuing with the story, I have a question to ask.

[What?]

Ahbooboo asked.

“Why are you starting such a long story all of a sudden? Out of the blue?”

Aren't you too free?

We are still on the 101st floor to challenge the God of Order.

[Aren't you going to rest a little while recovering anyway?]

It is, though.

“It's because the story is so long that it doesn't seem like it will end during the break.”

If I ask you to stop talking in the middle and move on, you'll be disappointed.

I know it all.

I've been through chatting with Ahbooboo not just once or twice.

[Ah. It'll be over soon. It's not a long story.]

“Really?”

[Yes. Of course.]

Ahbooboo reassured.

Okay, so I told him to talk.

It didn't matter if it wasn't a long story.

As Ahbooboo said, I should have rested for a while to recover anyway.

Then Ahbooboo started talking again.

The boy who climbed the mountain alone solved the problem.

Leading the men and besieging the mountain

He sent the lords back to their estates.

Through an agreement with the rebel chief, he obtained a promise to exempt all taxes for three years, after which they would pay a reasonable tax for their income.

So the rebels again became ordinary villagers in a special village.

The village chief wanted to repay the boy who saved them from death.

He wanted to reveal the other reason why their village is called a special village, so he could reward the boy.

The village chief took the boy to a small cave.

Deep in the cave, there was a sword stuck in the stone floor.

“It’s a magic sword.”

“...A magic sword?”

The chief nodded his head and explained.

“It is a magic sword that makes you angry if you hold the sword carelessly, and makes you go crazy with blood lust if you pull it out without permission.”

“If it’s such a magic sword, isn’t it right to throw it into the furnace and melt it?”

Said the boy.

Then, the magic sword stuck in the cave floor began to hum.

It was a ghastly and gloomy sight.

But the village chief shrugged his shoulders as if he was familiar with it.

“But it’s a wise magic sword. The advice of that sword played a big role in how we lived and formed a small town here.”

It was difficult to understand.

A magic sword that can be a good adviser.

“That magic sword always lamented that it had no master to have itself. To handle that sword, you need excellent skills and a strong mind that will not be shaken by the temptation of the magic sword. I think the warrior is enough to become the master of that sword...”

That was the first meeting between the boy and the sword.

I listened to the story up to this point, and finally intervened.

“Ahbooboo. Were you a real magic sword?”

[It was a long time ago. That was a long time ago.]

It’s no wonder that he was a magic sword.

This was much more realistic than the story that he was a holy sword from the beginning in the first place.

Ahbooboo continued the story.

The boy liked the sword.

Although the sword was called the Magic Sword, it did not harm people randomly.

It was kind to the boy and shared its wisdom with the villagers that often spoke to it.

Above all, its performance as a sword was amazing.

The spirit of the sword was a little cruel.

He did like blood.

But the boy decided to live with it and take the sword.

The sword was originally an object that could become evil.

What the sword would do ultimately depended on the one who wielded it.

The sword liked the boy too.

It was not easy to meet a boy who seemed to have a talent for swords in a cave deep in the mountains.

[How did you save the people?]

The magic sword knew the situation the village was in.

The three lords were encamped at the foot of the mountain, leading their soldiers and knights.

If all the villagers did not come down within two days, expressed their intention to surrender, were punished, and paid their taxes, the soldiers would have climbed the mountain.

[I was planning to fight even if I borrowed the hand of the village chief's son.]

“Why him?”

The boy asked.

[Hmm. Because the village chief's son has good arm strength]

The boy thought that this magic sword cared for the villagers more than he thought.

It was a positive thing.

The boy told the magic sword how he had saved the village.

Honestly.

“I bought this mountain. Now, this is my estate.”

The greedy lords just couldn't go back.

The boy bought this mountain from the lords.

And a small number of permanent residents live on this mountain.

The lords will also have new lords in the neighboring land.

He didn't like the fact that he had to go back without punishing the bad guys even though he had led the soldiers.

So the boy paid the price to the lords to solve all their dissatisfaction.

[What, were you a noble?]

The magic sword was a little disappointed.

Especially because he persuaded the lords with money.

It was the pinnacle of inefficiency.

With that money, the boy could do more.

The foolish boy only raised the stomach of the greedy lords.

“But we were able to save the villagers right away?”

[You could have bought a mercenary. With that amount of money, you could get permission from the central government and win through the territorial war.]

“Then the mercenaries and the soldiers of the lords wouldn’t be saved.”

The boy was optimistic.

[You’re a dreamy fool. Damn, I think I picked the wrong owner.]

The boy drew his sword.

The magic sword, which said that if someone he didn’t like picked it up, would hum wildly and make him go crazy with blood, didn’t resist at all.

The boy left the village and continued his adventure.

[Have you never learned swordsmanship? Why are you so bad at holding swords?]

the sword asked.

The boy decided to answer honestly this time too.

“Actually, I can only use spears.”

The sword was puzzled.

Nobles usually use swords.

This is because swordsmanship has been taught for self-defense and training since childhood.

“Because I’m from the military.”

Whatever a soldier does, how would he be able to get ahead of himself enough to buy a whole mountain?

Did you seduce the daughter of a nobleman?

The sword asked.

The boy talked about his past.

It wasn't a very interesting past.

In return for it, the sword told the boy about his past.

Before it became a sword, it tells the story of a time when he was a human.

He was a great swordsman during his lifetime.

In his later years, he had a talented disciple.

The disciple mastered all his skills and went out into the world.

And he intercepted his master's achievements as his own.

[Everything I have built up is known as the achievement of my disciple. Damn it.]

"Are you going to reverse it?"

The boy asked.

The sword replied immediately.

[No, it's already too late. Now that I have died like this and remain as a magic sword.]

The sword was gloomy.

To his surprise, the boy could feel the feeling of the sword he was holding.

As the boy was thinking of words of comfort, the sword revealed his ambitions.

[Instead, I developed something more and more wonderful and tried to cover the disciple's achievement with it.]

“Something wonderful? What is it?”

[It's a great skill. I've never used it myself, but I've done it. If you have even half as much talent as I have, you can use it too.]

The boy wondered about the new skill.

To the boy, he gave the name of the technique he had developed just before his death.

[Space Rift Mind Slash]. It is a technique that will change the world.]

* * *

Bang!

“Ho,ho,ho,ho,hot!”

A sudden explosion caused the boy to miss the sword.

It already happened a few times today.

When the boy swung the sword into the air, an explosion would occur as if he had put some gunpowder on the sword.

The boy quickly picked up the sword.

[Hey! That's not it! Why can't you leave your life force alone, because the life of this technique is simplicity! The life force runs wild like rabid bastards, so they collide and fire up!]

The sword threw a fit.

“I'm sorry.....”

The boy apologized hastily.

The boy, who had already made several mistakes during the day alone, was a little gloomy.

The sword was silent for a while but praised him saying that he did well.

The sword really thought the boy was doing well.

Even though it verbally cursed the boy for being stupid and incompetent, the sword was surprised every day.

It was truly a monstrous level of talent.

The boy's growth rate felt like that.

The sword thought.

Would he be able to grow at this rate?

No matter how good a teacher is, is it possible to develop a life force in less than two years?

It was impossible.

The sword had fun.

It felt as if the boy's achievement was his own.

The boy's adventure continued.

The boy saved and saved people.

The boy saw and learned a lot.

People can be good or bad.

The people rescued by the boy were no exception.

In some cases, some had come back and punished the person he had saved.

Conversely, there were cases where the person he had imprisoned was reborn and found a new life.

People didn't stop pointing fingers.

Unrealistic dreamer.

An idiot who wants to live his own life.

All were correct.

But the boy did not stop.

Out of the reach of the shield of the law, there were so many people who desperately needed help to lift themselves up.

Always pressed for time, the boy always arrived late.

It was the same when he reached the city that was being attacked by hordes of goblins.

When the boy arrived, the goblins had already crossed the walls and entered the city.

Fortunately, the city's soldiers and the boy were able to stop the goblins' attack, but there were many casualties.

There was a person approaching the boy who had been thinking about having a drink alone after leaving the memorial service in the cemetery that was built in haste.

The person was wearing a priestess's uniform.

The priestess he met in front of the cemetery was cheering.

“Swordsman, please do that earlier! Do it again!”

“Yes?”

The priestess saw the sword bang and explode as the boy was fighting the goblins.

In the end, the boy, who could not solve the problem of the life force explosion, found a way to use the explosion in a combative manner with his sword.

The sword complained that it was not cool, but it was effective against monsters who hated fire and light.

“Do that one more time! Kwaang! Flash! Do that again!”

The boy refused.

“Sorry, Priestess. That technique is too dangerous to use in town. Plus, it’s so loud that people will be surprised.”

The priestess did not give up.

She introduced herself as a priestess of the Order of the God of Light, and she followed and annoyed the boy all day.

The boy eventually ran with all his might and had to run away from the priestess.

[It’s surprising that those crazy fanatics are still alive and not extinct.]

The sword spoke as if it knew about the priests of the God of Light.

The boy asked the sword.

“Do you know about them? I’ve never heard of the God of Light until today.”

[It is a small religion with fewer than a hundred members. It was like that when I was alive.]

Side Story 28

The Boy and The Sword (2)

Space Rift Mind Slash

It was a technique developed by Ahbooboo.

Although it was given a grandiose and technical name, it was a technique that did not require a specific mindset or enlightenment at all.

It was simply a move that increased the attack range by compressing aura to the limit and widening it with a fine thickness.

The technique of the ‘boy’ that Ahbooboo spoke of was of a light sword no matter how much I heard it.

Although the power was incomparable at the initial stage, the mechanics of the technique were the same.

Looking back, there were many similarities between the Space Rift Mind Slash and the light sword.

This was especially true of the way the aura was used.

The light sword was a technique that generated light and heat by rubbing aura particles with each other in the process of compressing the aura.

Maybe that’s why it didn’t feel so strange when hearing Ahbooboo’s story of a boy who was practicing the Space Rift Mind Slash and accidentally created an early version of the light sword.

Because there were so many connections between the two techniques.

[In the end, the Space Rift Mind Slash didn’t work out until the end.

So, the Space Rift Mind Slash has remained my own technique for a long time.]

It was an amazing story.

The fact that the light sword was made from the failure of the Space Rift Mind Slash.

It is said that technological progress always comes from failure, and that really is true.

“But you said you didn’t learn it to the end? You just have to practice hard.”

Perhaps because I learned the light sword first, I was able to easily follow the Space Rift Mind Slash.

Shortly after meeting Ahbooboo, I succeeded, and I improved it and combined it with the light sword to create my own technique.

[Shut up, please.]

Oh my.

Now you curse at me too.

I had one thing to ask Ahbooboo.

Why didn’t he tell me about the origin of the light sword earlier?

How much trouble did I have on the 35th floor to finish the light sword?

[Ah, I didn’t remember it when I was in the tutorial.]

Yes, I’m sure you did.

Some of the characters appearing in the tutorial often had limited memory.

Ahbooboo was such a case.

On the 61st floor, the god of the sky retrieved it and started putting it on him again, and it seemed that his memory was restored.

[It is a story of the time when God was human. Wouldn't it be a big deal if it got leaked by mistake?]

“Why is it a big deal?”

As a god of human origin, I asked.

Ahbooboo pondered about my words for a moment, and then said.

[Isn't that a sense of mystery? God must exist beyond the clouds. Can you feel the awe of a god who lives next door to you?]

I used to think so too.

If you are a god, you must be godly,

But recently, that thinking has changed little by little.

My followers on Earth knew all the dark histories of when I was a pro gamer.

I didn't even think about controlling all of them, as they roamed around the internet so much.

Anyway, people continued to grow their faith while looking at my human side.

I wondered if a closer and more horizontal relationship between God and believers could be possible.

[An interesting idea. I wouldn't agree, though. Anyway, let's keep talking.]

Ahbooboo doesn't like to be disturbed while chatting.

I was starting to wonder if this story was going to end really quickly.

Ahbooboo, who had clearly ignored my worried expression, started talking again.

* * *

“A hundred? It’s a really small church.”

said the boy.

The sword clicked its tongue.

Of course, the sword didn’t have a tongue, but it made a tsk tsk tongue-clicking sound.

[Yes, it’s a pity that the church hasn’t been destroyed yet.]

It was a great joke.

However, the sword was good at slander and liked to hate others.

The boy didn’t fuss about it and moved on.

[They have no sense of reality at all.]

The members of the church who believed in the God of Light did not faithfully farm or trade, nor did they cultivate special skills.

They didn’t even have the mindset that they had to live or work hard.

They just loved seeing sparkles.

Surprisingly.

Their goal in life was to see something sparkling.

Whenever they could afford it, they lit a fire and played while appreciating it.

It's a sad story.

Oil, firewood, and gunpowder were all consumer goods.

Therefore, most of the members of the God of Light were poor.

They make fires as soon as they have money.

There were no temples.

It was said that they played with fire so much that they burned them all down.

It would not be strange if the church died of starvation tomorrow.

"It's a church that makes you really wonder about how it is maintained."

said the boy.

The sword was guessing the reason.

[Maybe because their god is powerful.]

"Yes?"

The boy did not understand the sword's words.

[The god of light that those crazy fanatics believe in is so powerful, that's why they've been able to survive. Perhaps]

The sword guessed so.

"But wasn't the greatness of God determined by the number of members and the power of the church?"

The boy asked.

It was a theory.

[I don't know, I guess the god of light is at least powerful.]

The sword knew nothing more.

It had never been interested in theology in its lifetime.

However, it had experience working with a priest of the God of Light.

[I once entered a dungeon with a priest who worships the God of Light.]

To the boy, the sword told the story of its past.

The priest he met by chance when the sword was a human had tremendous abilities.

[Once, I cut my chest with a monster's claw. At that time, the priest of the God of Light healed me, and the ability was really great.]

“Did the wound heal all at once?”

[No, it only stopped the bleeding]

The healing effect was weak.

Instead, the lighting effects were awesome.

The little blood-stopping effect came out of a light that was like as if the sun that erupted from the priest's hand.

Anyone who saw it would have thought it was a resurrection.

[Thanks to that, all kinds of monsters in the dungeon came. I barely managed to escape.]

“What about that priest?”

[I don't know, I left him in the dungeon.]

The boy scolded the sword.

No matter how many monsters the priest had brought in, he should have rescued the priest and came out together.

[What a comfortable thing to say. If I did, I would have been a good roast with the monsters.]

As the monsters came, the priest fired a holy spell.

He was really pissed off.

Like a drunkard who drank only alcohol all day, he poured dazzling divine spells without stopping, as if peeing everywhere.

Laughing like a crazy person.

[He was under stress in the dark dungeon, but when he saw the light, I guess his head had finally turned crazy. He was so engrossed that he burned the monsters to death. He tried to burn everything in sight, so I ran away too.]

“Ummm...”

[Anyway, that wasn't the ability a single priest could use. There is a limit to human magic. It must have been that god who gave power to the priest. And if it was a god who would give so much power to a single plain priest going crazy and setting fire to a dungeon, then of course the god would be incredibly powerful. It's so powerful that it doesn't matter if they just consume it.]

Only then did the boy understand.

The god has great powers, but it was a little strange.

Very strange believers who worship a slightly strange god.

The boy defined the Church of the God of Light as such.

The next morning, the priestess who worships the God of Light came to visit the boy again.

She screamed and begged him to show her the shining sword, but the boy just ran away from the priestess.

Around the time when his stomach, which was filled with breakfast, finished digesting and began to feel hungry.

The goblins that attacked the city yesterday are back.

With a greater number of kin.

Unlike yesterday, there was the boy in the city, and the city walls were stronger than yesterday.

Eventually, by the time the sun began to set, the goblins stopped attacking the city and retreated.

But it wasn't without damage.

The soldiers who had not recovered from yesterday's battle were vulnerable to the unexpected claws and stone axes.

A new cemetery was built.

The cemetery was full.

If the goblins' attack continues tomorrow, another cemetery will have to be built tomorrow.

There was a woman approaching the boy who was bowing his head in helplessness and self-blame.

She was a priestess of the god of light.

“It was great today! Bang! Flash! How do you get that light from the sword? Can you show me one more time?”

The boy didn't say no.

Instead, he asked a question.

“Why didn't you come forward?”

It was a battle.

If one priest with outstanding abilities had been added, far fewer people would have died.

But the priestess did not take part in the battle.

She sat on the roof of the village building, watching the boy wielding his sword.

“If I step out, the chance to see the shining sword decreases even more!”

The priestess said as if it was natural.

Crazy bitch.

The boy cursed in his mind.

“Would you like to become the paladin of our church? If it were you, all of our members would like you. The God of Light will also welcome you! Surely!”

“That's enough.”

After saying that, the boy walked away from the priestess.

The priestess kept shouting at the boy's back.

“Please think about it! Absolutely!”

* * *

The battle continued.

Day after day.

The goblins’ attack continued for a full week.

The soldiers were exhausted.

Unlike the goblins, the soldiers who had no reinforcements had to stand on top of the wall while still being wounded.

The priestess of the god of light came to the boy.

She offered to heal people free of charge if he regularly showed her the shining sword.

It was truly a pure suggestion.

It was like a child’s offer to help if given candy.

The problem was that the object to whom the offer was offered was on the verge of drowning and dying.

The priests of that damned church had no idea of morality.

The boy demonstrated the shining sword the priestess had longed for.

Fortunately, the priestess kept her promise.

One thing that was encouraging was that the priests who believed in the God of Light were flocking to the city one after another, perhaps the priestess was spreading rumors.

When the number of priests was sufficient, all the wounded could be meticulously healed.

But it wasn't possible to bring the dead back to life.

It was possible to maintain a miraculous exchange rate due to the struggle between the boy and the priestess.

When a soldier on the wall dies, over twenty goblins die.

But there were more goblins than that.

When the number of young people and elderly people who can't straighten their backs properly among the soldiers was much higher than that of strong adult men.

The boy thought.

This city has collapsed.

[Are you planning to run away now?]

The sword asked.

The boy had no intention of doing that.

"Why? It's been a month since I sent out a request for help. By now, it's time for help to come from the neighboring cities."

However, the fields outside the city were dense with only goblins.

There was no help to be found.

[I don't know. Maybe saving this city wasn't worth it. Maybe they preferred it to collapse.]

It was a terrible thing.

Not acting when you have the ability to help and save others.

The boy thought so.

No matter how much people pointed fingers and be sarcastic around him.

Even though he was betrayed and rejected, the boy wanted to help people.

He could not bring perfect peace and happiness to everyone.

It would be impossible, no matter how great a god.

He just wanted to give to people, as much as he could move and act on.

The boy grew himself up.

To save more people, to solve more dangerous situations.

He was acclaimed as the continent's greatest warrior, but his limits remained.

The problems that could be solved by an individual's ability were limited.

[Do you know what you lack?]

The boy asked what the hell was that.

The sword answered.

[Justification. Fame. Influence. capital. These things. Do you know what you need this for?]

“...what is that?”

[It is necessary to lead people.]

How many dreamy people want to become heroes on this continent?

How many other people in the armed forces would like to fly a nice flag?

When it comes to money, there are many crazy people who jump into battlefields and dungeons.

And there are those who intervene to gain an advantage in that flow.

[If you had led such people together, there would have been no reason to be sad waiting for the reinforcements that would never come.]

The boy was confused.

He never thought of leading anyone.

He was alone from the beginning, and he has been alone ever since.

He just moved alone and saved people by himself.

The sword saying that he must now gather people and lead them, did not make sense to him.

But he could understand.

That there are limits to one's ability to some extent.

As the boy grew up and more things started to intervene, more power was needed.

The power of a united group.

“What should I do?”

[What you need is a reason. If you go around saving people, people can praise you for being a really good young man, but they don't really understand why you're saving people. So no one agrees with your actions, no one is willing to help.]

[Justify your actions.]

The boy went to the priests of the God of Light.

The boy became a paladin.

Side Story 29

The Boy and The Sword (3)

The boy accepted the priestess' offer.

Surprisingly, the priestess, who annoyed the boy, presided over the oath of the paladin as a bishop.

The ceremony was held in the presence of several priests of the God of Light who came to hear the rumor of a boy wielding a shining sword.

It was a bizarre vow ceremony in which strange firecrackers were fired at the night sky.

At the end of the ceremony, the boy stepped forward.

The final procedure remained.

[Are you really going to do it?]

The sword asked.

It was a worried voice.

“Yes.I’ve never been educated anyway, so I don’t know what the nobles say. I’ll just say what I want to say.”

[No.....]

the sword wanted to say that it wasn’t the problem.

It wasn’t a matter of speech and formality.

But before the sword could stop the boy, he fell to his knees and put his hands together.

The boy prayed to God.

“Strength must be wielded.”

It was more of a declaration than a prayer.

“That’s the only way to shine with value.”

The power of the God of Light was enormous.

The boy taking the vows thought so.

But the God of Light did not move.

It wasn’t swung.

When used correctly, a mighty power that could save countless people, perhaps even all of the continent, was silently asleep.

“If God doesn’t want to wield that power, I will wield it. In a way, that benefits people.”

It was an extraordinary prayer.

If it were any other popular religion, there would be nothing to say even if the boy had his wrists and ankles cut off and tied to a pole and burned at the stake.

However, the priests who worshiped the God of Light did not care at all.

On the contrary, they were very happy with the words the boy had mentioned several times, ‘I will wield it’.

It seems that the boy was trying to wield the shining sword and they liked it.

Feeling like a student waiting for his turn to be beaten, the sword looked at the night sky.

It thought that lightning might fall on the boy's head at any moment.

But the lightning did not fall.

God heard the boy's prayer and did not respond.

* * *

The boy became a paladin after that.

The next day, the boy went out of the city walls.

On a dark and gloomy day with rain clouds, the boy ran towards the goblins alone.

The battle has begun.

A showdown between thousands of goblins and one boy.

The difference in power was overwhelming, but the battle composition was the exact opposite.

Each time the boy's sword was swung, it flashed and exploded.

Up to this point, most of the people defending the city had seen it once or twice.

The rain clouds cleared

Just a little.

The bright sunlight fell through the rain clouds.

The sun was shining right on the boy.

As the boy moved, the sunlight followed the boy.

In a dark world, the boy shines alone

He moved alone and seemed to exist alone.

The people on the wall were thrilled, feeling the presence of a god at the surreal sight.

The goblins fled from the mysterious dazzling light and the occasional exploding sword.

The boy's story quickly spread through the songs of the minstrels.

Soon, the story of the boy paladin covered the continent.

A righteous and glorious knight of light.

A hero who wears flashing swords and flashing armor to save people and defeat villains and monsters.

The boy roamed the continent without a single day off to help people.

As a result, his heroic stories began to pile up.

His heroic stories, which were handed down in the form of short stories, piled up and piled up to become a thick book.

People could always smile when talking about the Knight of Light.

The impeccable hero jumped into any danger without hesitation.

The songs made with the deep favor of the minstrels were all mysterious and exciting.

At every tavern, a song was heard praising the boy's heroic story.

In the town square, a troupe playing a heroic story of the boy entertained people by performing a different heroic story every day.

It became a daily routine for the children to gather in front of the plaza every day to watch the performance of the troupe.

“Wow!”

The children cheered as they saw the host on stage.

Occasionally, there were even adults who screamed like children.

The host smiled contentedly at the enthusiastic response and explained about today’s play.

People’s cheers grew louder.

Numerous stories of the Knights of Light.

Among them, the greatest and most dramatic story, the story of finding out the doppelganger that engulfed the subterranean city, and slaying even the Great Demon who was behind it, was the play prepared by the theater company today.

* * *

“Is it over?”

[Yes.]

The sword answered.

Hearing the answer, the boy knelt down on the floor as if torn apart.

The wobbly legs could no longer support the boy.

His pants caught on fire and began to burn.

There was a sea of fire all around.

Engulfing the boy's surroundings and even the entire city.

[That is amazing. It is doubtful whether this is a phenomenon that only one human can create. It would be impossible for even the greatest wizard to do this.]

The technique the boy named the Sword of Light swept the surroundings with light and heat.

No matter how mighty the Great Demon was, it could not stand this light.

It was a light with divine power.

The Great Demon has disappeared without leaving a trace.

Only the pattern of the huge magic circle that summoned the Great Devil remained.

It is a pattern that symbolizes the God of Harvest.

The boy remembered the divine name.

It was a god who wanted to intervene directly beyond spreading its ideals in the human world.

Divine intervention in itself could not be a problem.

But it was a different story if the god incited demons to slaughter people.

The boy's eyes were full of the burning mess of the city.

Due to the dwarves' building skills and abundant mineral resources, the city that once boasted the best fortress on the continent has now been completely ruined.

This city will soon collapse and crumble.

[You saved the people. If the Great Demon had gone out, one or two kingdoms would have just been wiped out.]

The sword comforted the boy.

What the sword said was true.

But it was also true that the boy who destroyed this beautiful city.

It was also true that he burned the survivors hiding in the city with his own hands.

[There is always an unavoidable sacrifice.]

said the sword.

The boy did not affirm the sword's words.

"There is no such thing."

The boy thinks all this devastation is because he was lacking.

People would not have died if the Great Demon could have been killed with a single slash.

[Impossible. Humans have limits. No matter how great you are, you can't save everyone.]

said the sword.

The boy noticed that the sword's words overlapped with those of others.

That's a word he's heard a lot.

A lot of times.

"I'll make it. Someday."

The boy has now become a continental celebrity.

A force has emerged to harm the boy.

The forces collided with the boy's support base.

The boy's support base was the people themselves.

People started to collide.

A new line was drawn between people.

Those who support the boy and those who slander him.

Those with vested interest and none.

The rich and the poor.

The nobles and lowly.

There were people who supported and loved the boy although they were aristocrats, wealthy and had vested interests.

Conversely, there were people who were jealous of the boy even though they had nothing.

But the line was drawn.

People split up and started fighting.

They made their position clear to survive and win.

In the face of the great harbinger of war, the boy had to go out on his own to prevent a great sacrifice.

The war didn't happen.

Kings and nobles hated the boy, but their men loved him.

Enough to throw away the existing system they belonged to.

In the complex flow, the people surrounding the boy were reborn as a new class.

They became the cornerstones of a new kingdom.

The boy became a kingdom.

* * *

The king stroked his long beard.

He left it for the solemn look, but now he'll have to cut his beard short.

It was just like when he was a boy.

The kingdom barely escaped a long period of chaos.

It was a new kingdom that reorganized the class hierarchy and existing laws and order.

There could be no confusion.

There are too many rats in the world who want to take advantage of the law, no matter how noble the will, to increase their belly.

The king realized.

That no one can be perfect.

No matter how sympathetic you are and dedicated to peace they are.

Although he had brilliant visions in his past, he wasn't sure what his future would be.

Laws and systems will not be perfect before time either.

It is humans who maintain and repair it after all.

Since it is man-made, man will find a gap.

No matter how perfect a law, with a little modification It becomes an evil method to harasses people.

“Haa.”

The king felt his limits.

He studied and researched a lot.

He tried to care for the kingdom, end chaos, and usher in an era of peace.

The king still had great power and symbolism.

The people's support was strong, and the officials still did not forget their respect for the king.

But there were still limitations.

The king recognized that he had become the cog of a gigantic sculpture called a kingdom.

Although he was a much larger and more important cog than other cogs, it was no different than an accessory belonging to the sculpture in the end.

There was bound to be a limit to what the cog could do.

The question of whether it was the best for the king to be loved and praised had tormented the king for a long time.

The king, who finally ended the chaos and brought stability to the kingdom, could only decide today.

The king arranged for his succession.

His heir did not have his own blood, but he was the most reliable person.

He was a wise man, a brilliant manager, and one who knew that the king could return at any time.

After making all his preparations, the king found his friend whom he had not sought for a long time.

His own friend had been waiting for him for a long time, stuck in the scabbard.

[Long time no see, little boy.]

“If you still call me a little boy, you might be thrown into the furnace for insults.”

The sword laughed.

The old king also smiled after a long time.

[Yeah, what’s going on?]

The sword asked as if insignificant.

It’s like asking a friend you separated with just yesterday.

“I’m thinking of wandering again.”

[What about the throne?]

“I left it to someone who was better than me.”

Although he will not be a king who will receive a lot of love and support from the people, he will become a capable king.

He may even be able to lead the kingdom better than the king himself.

On the other hand, the king himself.

He could have saved far more people by walking around the continent with a sword than sitting on a throne and doing government affairs.

To say that an individual's wanderings are more beneficial to the peace of the continent than the government affairs of the kingdom sounds like nonsense at first glance, but it is a different story if the individual's force exceeds the human category.

[Ehyo, if you're tired of being king, just retire and enjoy wealth and glory. Why are you trying so hard again?]

The sword clicked its tongue and said.

But its voice was very bright and light, unlike the words.

"So, would you like to join me? Just like back then when I was still young."

The sword paused for a moment before answering.

[of course.]

The king, no, the boy, now an old man, smiled brightly and put the sword around his waist.

[So, have you decided where to go first?]

The old man answered the sword's question.

"I want to go to the highlands of the Blue Mountains."

[Why there? Did the God of Light give you an oracle?]

"No, that's not it."

The oracle of the God of Light does not come down easily.

Even an old man who had been active as a paladin of the god for a long time had never experienced it a few times.

[Then why do you want to go there, it's just so damn far away.]

“Well, it's just my intuition pointing to it.”

The old man said it was his intuition, and he gave a somewhat absurd answer.

The sword spoke as if he was terrified.

[Intuition? Do you do prophecy now? Do you, by any chance, have some kind of supernatural power?]

“Well, maybe.”

The old man smiled and passed.

He feels that way these days.

He could guess the future.

He sees a place farther than his field of vision.

He can see a person's honest heart.

It was strange, but the old man decided not to care.

He had abilities that might help save people.

“Do you know what lies on the summit plateau of the Blue Mountains?”

asked the old man.

The sword thought it was very fortunate to be able to answer this question.

The eastern end of the continent.

The highlands of the Blue Mountains where human footsteps have been cut off because of their high and rugged nature.

There are races that are separated from the world and live peaceful lives in their own world.

[If the rabbits aren't extinct, it'll be exactly what I remember.]

Side Story 30

The Boy and The Sword (4)

“Ahbooboo.”

[Yes, warrior.]

Ahbooboo replied.

It was a very bright voice.

Maybe it was because he had been chatting for a long time, so I could even feel the freshness in his voice.

“Isn’t the story a bit long?”

[Oh.....]

I thought that he was telling an anecdote about when the God of the Sky was a human.

It was a mistake.

This chatterbox Ahbooboo was recounting the life story of the God of Sky as a human being.

[Should I stop?...?]

Ahbooboo asked.

He wouldn’t be the first to say he’d stop chatting.

He seems to know that the story was too long.

“No, just a little more.”

In my mind, I decided to just rest here today.

I’ve already wasted enough time.

It wasn’t bad to take a day off at all.

More than anything.....

[Haha, are you curious about the next story?]

Yeah, I was curious.

So I wondered what would happen to the old man who had quit being the king.

I kept telling him to cut off the conversation in moderation, but I thought it would be a bit disappointing if it ended here.

“Just tell me he found the rabbits.”

Because I’ll have to listen there.

If I didn’t hear that story, I thought I’d keep wondering and remembering it.

[Yes, he did. Hoho.]

Ahbooboo replied with a low smile.

It was an oddly arrogant laugh.

I felt bad.

[Okay, let’s start the story again.]

I thought as I listened to Ahbooboo’s voice.

It was the idea of the God of Sky and Ahbooboo.

I thought that there was a separate Ahbooboo who was trapped in the tutorial, and the genuine Abutz that the God of the Sky had as his divine object.

But listening to Ahbooboo's story, I changed my mind a bit.

Their relationship was very deep.

To put him in the tutorial, retrieve it, merge it, and treat him as an object.

I continued to be bothered about the strong affection Ahbooboo showed whenever he spoke of the god of the sky.

The two were so close.

But Ahbooboo was in the tutorial.

I came up with a hypothesis.

Maybe the genuine Abutz does not exist.

* * *

"How do you read it?"

The coachman, who had received the nameplate, asked.

"High seeker."

The coachman nodded his head.

The coachman, who returned the nameplate and told him to sit in the back, asked the old man one more thing.

"Are you an adventurer?"

The old man asked why he thought so.

“Because it’s a weird name.”

The old man had nothing to say.

The sword giggled and laughed.

“Why are you having so much fun?”

The old man under the pseudonym High Seeker asked the sword.

[I told you so. Because such a name is tacky. It’s old-fashioned.]

The high seeker wondered whether his pseudonym was tacky.

It didn’t feel that way at all.

Had he spent too much time in the royal palace?

So, did he become an old man who couldn’t get the sympathy of his younger friends?

He tried to question it, but quickly brushed it off.

The mental age of the sword making fun of him was over 100 years old.

It’s not an age issue.

The high seeker looked at his own shortened beard.

It was rough.

The effect of cutting his beard was amazing.

He had been growing his beard for decades, so people didn’t recognize him even though he had only cut his beard short.

Maybe it's because he's wearing travel clothes, not fancy clothes.

The High Seeker, who changed his appearance and prepared his fake nameplate, was heading east of the continent.

As a child, he always walked around saying he would save money, but as an old man, the high seeker decided to compromise very little.

Instead of walking on his two feet, he paid for the carriage and rode it.

It was comfortable.

The coachman who had an extra income was also happy.

[You would have died if you had gone west instead of east.]

“The West?”

The high seeker chatted with his sword while sitting in the carriage.

There was no one other than the high seeker in the car behind the carriage, so he could talk comfortably.

[I wish I had gone to the hall at the western end of the continent.]

Hall at the western end.

The high seeker knew well which place the sword was talking about.

“Are you talking about the temple of goblins?”

The sword once told the high seeker about the place where he studied while he was a human.

[Hmm. If you go there, you will learn a lot.]

said the sword.

It was difficult for the high seeker to agree frankly.

Of course, the temple of goblins, the Shaman Hall is an honorable place that many warriors consider a holy place.

But the high seeker didn't think he could be taught by anyone else.

If it's about shamanism.

[Don't be conceited. You're a superhuman, that's the story of the human world.]

The boy who got old gave the sword a scolding for making a fuss.

* * *

It was a beautiful valley.

It would have been even more so if the valley water had not been stained with dark red blood.

The high seeker pulled the Imoogi's(*) head out of the water, trembling.

The Imoogi inhabiting this valley was famous.

Even as the High Seeker wandered the continent in his childhood, he had never heard a tale of this giant serpent before.

It protected the humans who came to the valley and protected the surrounding villages from landslides and floodings of the valley.

Instead, it was praised as a spirit that protects the mountain, and it was offered human gratitude and various meats through the annual thanksgiving festival.

It was a symbiosis between creatures and humans.

It was a fairy tale and a beautiful story.

That was until the news came that the Imoogi was going crazy with blood and devouring all living things near the mountain.

While heading to the east of the continent, the high seeker heard the rumor and came to the mountain.

As rumored, there was not a single creature larger than a human finger on the mountain.

Humans, wild animals, and even small-sized bugs were completely devoured.

The high seeker, who cut off the body of the blood-crazed giant serpent and pulled his head ashore, asked before killing the Imoogi.

“Why?”

The Imoogi’s eyes turned to the high seeker.

The giant serpent that had its body separated and exhausted all its magical powers and stamina, but still had life attached to it.

The whole reason

“You don’t understand.”

The Imoogi spoke human words.

The humanity felt in that voice made the high seeker even more unpleasant.

“What.”

“I had to eat. I had to. You don’t understand.”

After all, is it a tragedy that the monster’s appetite has created?

Couldn’t the wolf and the sheep be friends forever?

Although coexistence was possible

“It’s not like that, stupid human. I had to become a god.”

“...God?”

The giant serpent uttered words that were not expected at all.

“The world is awakening. We must be gods in case everything returns to the arms of the Great Mother. So I ate it up. More power, higher rank.”

“What...”

Are you talking nonsense, the high seeker who was about to speak hastily stopped.

The giant serpent’s eccentricity is not over yet.

“There is a cause, but no effect, there is emotion, but no affliction. A world is coming where there is no death but no life. In preparation for that, I must ascend to the throne.”

They were completely incomprehensible words.

“What the heck is it that you have to become a god?”

“Things that shine as the only value because they have no value. To be accepted into the world as one, you have to become a god. Because only gods can perceive it.”

After finishing his words, the giant serpent opened its mouth and ran towards the high seeker.

The giant serpent’s head was cut in two and it died.

Now, in the deep mountain valley, there was only the high seeker alive.

“...what did it mean?”

[Well, maybe the apocalypse.]

The sword answered.

The end of the world.

Did the giant serpent want to become a god in order to survive it?

He couldn't figure it out

[Let's just say that the strange snake went crazy and died.]

said the sword.

But the high seeker couldn't get past it.

While he was sitting on the throne, he had heard and heard a lot of news.

There have been a number of anomalies that have increased significantly over the recent decades.

The first was that many divine beings were being born.

As far as the high seeker knows, three objects have already attained the level of a demigod.

It was a surprise.

The birth of a demigod was a miraculous event that only happened once in a thousand years, not ten years.

The second was that such divine beings wanted fear, not respect, and carried out slaughter.

[Did that happen?]

“Yes. Right now, I believe it was similar to when the Great Demon was summoned from the Underworld that we defeated in the past.”

There were an increasing number of beings who wanted to gain greater power and dignity through massacres, human sacrifices, and biological experiments.

It was a chaotic world.

The High Seeker also said that it was the right choice to abandon the throne and leave the palace.

He still had a lot of work to do in the world.

* * *

“What is the plateau like in the Blue Mountains?”

The high seeker asked.

[It’s an amazing place. You can’t go up there by just walking.]

“Is it too high?”

The sword said no.

[Of course, it’s high, but you can’t go up there without a guide. It is forbidden to enter unless you’re rabbits.]

As the high seeker listened to the sword’s explanation, he thought he could just climb up.

It made him curious.

The old man, out of his palace, was slowly regaining the spirit and challenge of his youth.

[If there is sugar on the way, let’s go buy some.]

“Why do you need sugar?”

[Because the rabbits there like sugar]

They were unusual rabbits.

As the sword said, the high seeker bought sugar little by little every time he stopped by the village while heading east.

After traveling, heI was able to arrive at the front of the blue mountain range.

There was a small village at the start of the Blue Mountains.

The high seeker went straight to the mountain range without stopping by the village.

As he followed the sword's guidance as he climbed the mountain, he found a strange stone staircase.

[If you climb these stairs, you can go up to the plateau. Now, let's wait here for a few days and wait for the guide to meet us.]

“Do I have to wait?”

[Hm. The rabbit will come to meet you. Because humans cannot climb alone.]

The high seeker started climbing the stairs without waiting for the rabbit to meet him.

The sword laughed at that sight, but did not stop him.

The high seeker had confidence.

He was able to jump even the highest wall of the continent with one step.

Even in the great desert of the West, if there was enough water, he had the stamina to cross without a break.

He was no ordinary human.

So the high seeker went up the stairs.

He climbed the stairs, climbed, climbed and rested a bit.

After a short break, the high seeker climbed the stairs again, climbed again, and climbed again.....

“I can’t do it.”

[Right?]

The sword scoffed hard at the high seeker.

Hearing the giggles of laughter, the sword seemed genuinely happy to see the foolishness of the high seeker.

It has been a week since the high seeker started climbing the stairs.

Considering his pace, he should have reached the end of the sky, not the top of the mountain.

The high seeker turned back and started going down the stairs.

In just two hours he was able to get back to where the stairs started.

“...it was a real waste of effort.”

[See, listen to me.]

The high seeker waited for the rabbit guide at the end of the stairs.

But the guide did not come.

As advised by the sword, he sprinkled some sugar in front of the stairs and waited, but the guide did not come.

[...What is this? I sprinkled sugar. But why doesn't anyone come out?
This can't be happening.]

The bewildered sword murmured.

Editor Note:

(*) Imoogis can be interpreted as lesser dragons or essentially large serpents.

Side Story 31

The Boy and The Sword (5)

[This can't be happening...?!"]

The sword murmured.

Apparently, it was quite a shock.

[No, you mean the rabbits don't come even when they smell the burning sugar? This doesn't make sense!]

The high seeker sighed.

He lifted his head and looked up above him.

He was already on the hillside, but the location of the plateau was obscured by clouds.

It's a really, really high place.

Can the rabbits living there come down with the smell of burning sugar?

It was unlikely.

Even if you burn a corpse instead of sugar here, the smell wouldn't reach there.

[No, the rabbits' obsession with sugar goes beyond common sense, how did this happen.....]

It wasn't that the sword had no idea.

The time when the sword was active as a human is a distant past.

Maybe there was a change here too during that time.

It takes less than a decade for a region to flourish and fall.

In extreme cases, the rise and fall could be different within a year.

Considering the passage of time, it was not difficult to guess that something had changed here.

For whatever reason, the rabbits that live here have become more closed off.

Whether their preference for sugar has declined.

It wasn't strange.

"I don't know what's going on. Let's go back to the village first."

He wasted too much time trying to climb the mountain alone.

He thought he should go back to the village and wash up and rest.

He had to find more food, and he had to ask the villagers how to get to the plateau.

The high seeker returned to the village at the beginning of the Blue Mountains.

It was a small town, but there was one inn.

It was a one-floor inn with a kitchen and a hall, and two small rooms in the corner.

The innkeeper prepared a meal for the high seeker and began to ask questions.

Rather than asking questions for interrogation, it was the peculiar curiosity of rural people.

The high seeker knew it well, too, because he had a lot of experience in the countryside when he was a boy.

Most of the people in the area isolated from the outside by the street were either very indifferent to the outside world, or, conversely, very curious.

The owner of this inn seemed more curious than indifferent.

Fortunately, the high seeker was a person who knew very well about the situation on the continent.

He was able to satisfy the innkeeper's curiosity.

The two quickly became friends.

Maybe it's because they're the same age.

Drinking wine that tastes like vinegar, with the innkeeper, the high seeker inquired about the plateau of the Blue mountains.

"Hahaha, you went up there for a week? In fact, if you live in this town, you must have climbed those stairs at least once. A stubborn person climbs the stairs for two or three days and eventually gives up. It's the first time I've ever seen a person!"

The innkeeper chuckled.

"Somehow, I felt like I could go up."

"Huh, everyone is like that. It's like a world in a mysterious fairy tale. Maybe I could climb it. Everyone must have tried climbing with that idea."

The innkeeper seemed to understand the high seeker's thoughts.

The high seeker asked what he had to do to get to the plateau without the help of the rabbits.

“Well, I’m not sure about that either. There’s no way to get up there without the help of the rabbits.”

The innkeeper affirmed.

The problem was that the rabbits didn’t come down after smelling the sugar.

[Since it’s like this, let’s just go somewhere else. There is no reason to go up to the plateau.]

The sword asked.

It was the sword’s intuition that the High Seeker came to the plateau of the Blue Mountains.

The only reason was that his intuition was stuck to the plateau of the blue mountains marked on the map.

[My intuition has frozen to death. Didn’t you just want to travel to the edge of the continent? If that’s the case, let’s go west again. from the east end to the west end. It’s going to be a pretty good trip. Let’s go to the Shaman Hall at the western end together.]

The sword tried to convince the high seeker.

The high seeker was worried.

About that intuition.

Anomalies were occurring all over the continent.

The Imoogi he met in the valley was one of them.

Recently, there have been many strangely related incidents related to ‘the Godhood’.

There were more and more incidents in which people were reborn as divine beings through training, or commotions were taking place to be reborn as divine beings.

The problem was that in some of these events there were truly divine beings mixed in amongst the absurdities.

The Fairy Queen, the queen of the fairies, has become the lake's guardian deity, and she's been moving the weather of the vicinity as she pleases.

There is also a rumor that the most outstanding one among the goblins of the west became a fighter.

He even confirmed with his own eyes the rumor that the Imoogi of the valley ate people and animals in the forest, then sprouted wings and started flying in the sky.

It was surprising that mere mortals wanted to become gods, even more surprising that they had tangible results.

Three already in one era.

It happened in less than a decade.

Even if it happens once in a thousand years, amazing things are happening in succession in a very short period of time.

The high seeker was concerned.

If more of this is happening.

The most worrisome thing was that the same thing happened to the high seeker himself.

One day, mysterious things were happening to him.

He was experiencing abilities that would not be possible unless he was a truly divine being, rather than simply being a strong superhuman.

He heard people's thoughts.

He predicted the next day's weather.

Once or twice, he dismissed it as just his mood or luck.

It was a phenomenon that could not be explained in words, simply because he was strong or because he was a superhuman.

As soon as the high seeker stepped down from his throne, he went to where his intuition pointed.

He wants to learn more about the mysterious phenomenon that is happening to him.

[Let's go west.]

said the sword.

The high seeker shook his head.

[Why, you can't go up anyway.]

He will be able to climb.

The high seeker thought so.

His own intuition was still pointing to the plateau of the Blue Mountains.

He could feel it.

He knew that someone would be coming to lead him up the plateau.

[It's because I'm getting too old... I'm senile, senile. Or is it dementia?]

The sword was pouring out curse words.

However, the inn's door swung open in spite of the swearing.

The identity of the visitor standing with his back to the sunlight.

it was a rabbit

Long bunny ears hung above the head.

But, except for those ears, it looked no different like a normal person.

Plain travel clothes.

Not only the clothes, but also the eyes, nose, and mouth on the face were nothing different from those of a human being.

It was just the ears.

It was strange that she was carrying a large backpack that looked like it had to be pulled by a cow or a horse rather than a person.

The bunny-eared girl gave the high-seeker look when their eyes met.

“Hng!”

It was a feisty rabbit.

The rabbit, who had snorted, raised its head and strode into the inn.

It would have been if it had not been for the fact that she was carrying a backpack that was three times the width of the inn door.

“Kyang!”

The rabbit, who was walking around without expecting the backpack to get caught on the door of the inn, fell over with a strange sound.

The backpack ruptured and the items inside spilled out.

The high seeker got up to help the rabbit who had fallen, even though he was embarrassed by what had happened because of their eye contact.

Fortunately, the high seeker was able to quickly make friends with the rabbit.

There wasn't any particular reason.

He gave her sugar as the sword had advised, and the rabbit liked it.

The high seeker asked her if she could take him over the plateau after she left.

The rabbit flatly refused.

It was such a firm refusal that he did not even think about asking again.

Instead, the rabbit asked for help on her journey.

The rabbit said she had come down from the plateau and went to the cities of the human continent to get the supplies she needed.

She said she could take him to the plateau if he could guide her to the city.

It wasn't a bad deal.

The high seeker accepted the offer.

The rabbit was also very happy.

It seems that she was feeling anxious about visiting a human city.

The rabbit introduced herself as Kirikiri.

“Ummm...”

Does the story continue this far?

I was listening to it just in case, but in the end, even Kirikiri appeared.

After this, all the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple will come out in attendance.

“What the hell is that planet? All the gods I know are gathered there. It’s a completely stagnant planet.”

It’s not just one or two.

Most of the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple were being talked about as if they were from that planet.

[Many people from there survived.]

Survived, he said.

That was an interesting word.

It’s not just that the planet has produced many gods.

It’s just that many gods from that planet have survived.

I thought that maybe the story of Ahbooboo would go beyond the human days of the God of the Sky and lead to the war of the gods that followed.

[Haha, well, it is true that there were many gods. My hometown is pretty amazing.]

Haha, what do you mean ‘haha’?

Ahbooboo seems to have taken my words of ‘why there are so many gods there’ as a compliment to his hometown.

It was never one.

A neighborhood with a lot of gods can never be a good neighborhood.

Moreover, the times were serious.

It's like a world full of crazy people who are willing to do anything to become a god or a higher deity.

Even before the birth of the Hundred Gods Temple, there will be no system or rule to control the gods.

The high seeker in the story was worried about the arrival of the gods.

But, in my opinion, it's already too late.

Those close to God must have tried to eat mortals on sight to become gods somehow.

Even the vague deity must have been struggling to be reborn as a more powerful deity.

Strong gods eat each other, weak gods eat mortals.

There will be nothing other than hell.

[Yeah, it wasn't like that back then, though. When a little more time passed there, that was a real problem.]

It seemed so.

I got up.

[Are you leaving?]

“Yes.”

Now it was time to move again.

Ahbooboo's story was interesting enough that I was curious about it, but now I really had to move.

[Hey, listen a little more. It's fun. You'll be curious.]

Ahbooboo persuaded me.

Surely, Ahbooboo's story was certainly interesting.

It was very exciting and it did stimulate my curiosity.

But now I have a reason to move quickly.

"I have to settle it as soon as possible."

[Is there really a need to do that?]

There is.

Exactly, it just happened.

"Hochi is here."

I felt Hochi's existence.

I don't know what the hell he was thinking of coming here.

Hochi won't last long here.

Even if Yongyong or Grandma came along.

Even if he no longer comes in from the beginning.

There was a limit to how long he could last.

A week, no matter what.

Now, I couldn't turn back and go save Hochi.

I've come too far for that.

To save Hochi, I had to face forward, not backward.

The God of Order had to be slain before the damn Hochi died here.

“Shit”

I was struggling to death because it was already hard, but I suddenly got a time attack.

Side Story 32

Hochi (5)

A narrow and dark passage.

I felt like I knew where this was.

1st floor of the tutorial.

It looked similar there.

[You have entered the Trial Hall.]

According to Lee Ho-jae's memory, I remember a message saying 'Welcome to the Entry Hall' appearing here.

Again, it didn't look exactly the same as the tutorial.

He entered this space that was created to limit the God of Order so he could approach the God of Order.

Safely.

Although the Old Man was breathing hard and our Yong-yong was crying, no one was hurt in any way.

"Hoo."

A deep sigh came out.

The theme of the first floor of the tutorial was an arrow trap.

Arrows will not fly in the same way from here in the trial hall.

Perhaps much more awaits.

However, the outline structure was the same.

‘For example, there is no danger at the beginning.’

I remembered the information Kirikiri had put in my head.

Looking back at the memories, I shuddered again.

Kirikiri handed over the information about this place.

It was not communicated verbally, nor was I given a handwritten note.

She just put the memory of ‘information’ into my head.

Thanks to this, I was able to recall information about this place in my head as if I knew it originally.

That’s why I remembered the deadliest warning that Kirikiri had ever given.

‘That’s what I designed. But the God of Order must have remodeled it after it got out of my control. Much more deadly’

I felt suffocated.

Judging from the information on the ‘Trial Chapter’ that Kirikiri gave to me, the difficulty level was so extreme that it could literally dismiss the Hell difficulty of the tutorial as a ‘tutorial’.

There must have been a modification from the God of Order added to that.

The purpose of this ordeal was ultimately to subdue the God of Order.

If the God of Order, the target of suppression, touched the difficulty of this place.....

It's obvious.

It must have been made so that it would never be cleared.

Perhaps we may not be able to feel safe even in the beginning.

With that thought in mind, I looked at myself.

My physical condition and magical powers remained the same.

[Eye of the Sky]

[Not available.]

The power could not be used.

The power to borrow the power of another god.

It's not my own divine power, so I thought I might be able to use it.

It wasn't.

[All kinds of divine powers are sealed.]

The message confirmed it.

'All kinds of divinity and divine powers are excluded. The same goes for power. Even if it is not one's own divine power, the power itself is the ability to represent the identity of a certain god.'

Kirikiri's advice that I remembered in my head said the same thing.

Does that mean I have to get through this place without divinity?

I sighed again.

"Old Man."

The old man lifted his head and looked at me.

“Are you okay? How are you?”

“It’s okay.”

The Old Man said so with a face that didn’t look all right.

“It’s just that I consumed too much power. If I rest a little, I’ll be fine.”

Surely Old Man has consumed a lot of energy.

In the days of being a god, no matter how much power was consumed, it could have been restored casually, but now the Old Man that has lost godhood will be fatally exhausted.

“Yong-yong...”

I was going to ask if he was okay.

I didn’t think there was any need to ask the crying child with his face in my chest if he was okay.

Yong-yong wasn’t okay.

I barely managed to stop sighing again.

Kirikiri didn’t let us go well.

Kirikiri, who was talking with Yong-Yong, said she would check something and suddenly tried to attack me.

I couldn’t even respond and stood dumbfounded, but Old Man and Yongyong were different.

They immediately blocked Kirikiri and counterattacked.

It was a gruesome sight.

A battle that was difficult for me to understand continued.

Kirikiri defeated all obstacles and eventually succeeded in attacking me.

Twice.

Kirikiri's golden blade, which cut the lava giant sword of Old Man in two and annihilated all the illusions summoned by Yong-yong, did no harm to me.

The second time she swung the golden blade at me, the golden blade broke instead of ripping through my body.

‘Undying mortals.....’

Kirikiri muttered like that.

And she sent us here.

What did it mean

Is it the same as the story that Yong-yong kept telling me that I have no causality?

I couldn't figure it out

What is certain is that none of our party was injured.

But the Old Man was very tired, and Yong-yong was upset.

“Yong-yong, it's okay. Stop crying.”

I patted Yongyong on the back.

Yong-yong couldn't stop crying.

Like a little child, he was sobbing quietly, exhausted from crying.

He mumbled sometimes.

“...Kirikiri is naughty.”

Yes, she is naughty.

Who knew she would attack so suddenly.

“I’ll scold her...”

Yong-yong, I think that would be a bit difficult.

She was a lot stronger than I thought.

She wasn’t just a rabbit who likes cakes.

The battle between Yong-yong, Old Man, and Kirikiri was immense.

It’s hard enough for me to understand properly.

But I could see who took the initiative in the battle and who had the upper hand.

In the end, Kirikiri overcame Yong-yong and Old Man’s interference and succeeded in attacking me.

I still have the feeling of the golden blade hitting my neck.

I was appalled.

Yong-yong continued to pour out his resentment towards Kirikiri.

They weren’t bloody words, they were just the kind of stories a child who had been taken away would whine about.

“Yong-yong liked Kirikiri though.”

“No.”

No? What is it?

Every time they met, they held hands and went round and round and liked each other.

“No, I hated her from the start!”

So, that must have been the case.

“It’s true. Sniff.”

As Yong-yong was talking, he raised his cries again, probably because of his sorrow.

As soon as he got his energy back, he started crying again.

A very loud wailing.

“Dad hates Kirikiri too!”

Yong-yong shouted loudly.

I don’t think so.

I hugged Yong-yong tightly.

I knew why Yong-yong was crying so sadly.

It wasn’t that he was suddenly attacked.

It wasn’t even because he was betrayed by Kirikiri, whom he was close with.

In order to prevent Kirikiri’s attack, Yongyong was forced to reveal his true self.

Not the appearance of a small child, but the appearance of a dragon that has matured.

Yong-yong hates showing his true self.

From a young age, he thought he was strictly a child, but as time passed, that aspect became more prominent.

He hadn't been a hatchling since he learned polymorphing and took human form.

However, by blocking Kirikiri, Yong-yong had to reveal himself.

In the end, Yong-yong, who revealed his true self during the battle, continued to look at me.

Thanks to that, there was a gap.

A gap that was clear enough for me to notice.

Kirikiri dug into that gap and stabbed me with the blade she swung.

Maybe that's why.

Why is Yong-yong crying?

"Uncle, I'm sorry..."

As expected.

It was a kind of guilt.

I was going to tell him that I'm fine.

"I'm not cute..."

"Uh.....?"

"I'm not cute. I'm sorry, Uncle..."

Yong-yong said that, and he started crying again.

This time he bawled his eyes out.

I'm sorry I'm not cute.

Then, who is this cute child who is cuddling and crying in my arms?

I stopped trying to tell Yong-yong, 'No, Yong-yong is cute'.

We, Ho-jae and I always told Yong-yong that he was cute.

Because he was actually cute.

However, the compliments we gave to Yong-Yong at that time were not just compliments.

Yong-yong's existence at that time was hope, salvation, and rest for us.

It was more desperate than warmth.

We hoped that this little one could guide us.

Perhaps the word cute for Yong-yong was not just a compliment, but more like a compulsion that he should be like this.

Each time, I thought of the burden this child must have felt, even if it was late.

I have felt the same pressure.

At that time, I hated the burden and ran away.

I felt guilty and sorry.

I hugged Yong-yong even tighter.

"Yong-yong, you don't have to worry. Dad and Uncle love Yong-yong. It's not because you're cute, but because you're Yong-yong."

I don't know.

How will my heart be conveyed?

I hugged Yong-yong and comforted him.

Yong-yong was a blessing to us by his very existence.

I also wanted to remain that kind of person to Yong-yong.

He will always be by my side, a good family I can trust.

“So don't worry.”

Yong-yong's breathing slowly calmed down.

“...and Yong-yong is cute.”

This was the eternal truth.

It will be the same even if our Yong-yong becomes a giant dragon bigger than Mount Tai.

Yong-yong fell asleep.

I shook him slightly, but there was no sign of getting up.

“Is he asleep?”

Old Man asked.

I nodded.

“Hmm...”

The Old Man, who had been silently watching from the side, raised his hand and patted Yong-yong on the back once or twice.

Then he lifted his hand again and leaned against the wall as if nothing had happened.

When I looked at the Old Man, he coughed and avoided my gaze.

As Yong-yong fell asleep, the atmosphere suddenly became quiet.

There were uninvited guests who seemed to not like the atmosphere.

It was a spider.

Of course, spiders aren't a threat in themselves, but those spiders are a little different.

First of all, it is the size of a human being, and it fills the walls and ceilings with their large numbers.

The problem was that the spiders had golden blades of familiar colors attached to the tips of their paws.

Isn't that what Kirikiri was wielding?

Last problem.

Kwakwakwakwang!

A shock wave hit my body.

I had to roll myself and Old Man on the floor.

Protecting the sleeping Yong-yong, I quickly got up from my spot.

Shit.

The peaceful hallway suddenly turned into hell.

The terrible magic felt from the spiders made us realize what kind of disaster they were.

There are a lot of people who can destroy the world with just one attack.

‘A dimensional species of spider that inhabit the dimensional rift. There is no threat of a surprise attack because a shock wave is generated when they tear through the dimension, but because they are monsters that survive the pressure of the dimension gap... It’s just very risky.’

Kirikiri’s information replayed in my head.

Among Kirikiri’s information, there was no mention of the golden blades on the front paws of those spiders.

This means that it is a setting added by the God of Order.

“How long does it take for the child to wake up!”

Old Man asked.

“I don’t know!”

I really don’t know.

Yong-yong was still a hatchling’s age.

Hatchlings can’t control their sleep.

Ho-jae reduced the sleep time as much as possible with a magical treatment, but it did not completely eliminate the sleep time.

Of course, if I force him to wake up, I can wake him up.

Because Yong-yong wasn’t the usual hatchling.

However.

I didn’t want to push the child who still wanted to remain a child.

I handed Yong-yong to the Old Man.

Old Man hugged Yong-Yong in an awkward way.

Old Man has not yet regained his power.

Yong-yong is asleep.

“What are you going to do!”

Ignoring the Old Man’s cry, I moved forward.

Undying mortal.

Those who do not belong to the causal category.

What those words meant, I understood.

One day Ho-jae said

‘You are me. At the same time, you are not, I don’t know how this happened, but you’re important anyway.’

The spiders began to approach me, releasing hostile magical energy as I approached them.

I had no powers, and the magical powers that I had were not particularly special here.

It was self-explanatory what I had to do to fight those monsters.

I didn’t want it to look like this.

But now that Yong-yong is upset for the same reason, I can’t just keep holding on to my weakness.

‘I’m sorry, but you are nothing. Fortunately, you can be anything.’

Ho-jae said.

‘But why do you keep imitating me? Do you feel bad? Do you want to die?’

Well, you damn bastard.

I once again cursed Ho-jae in my memory.

Okay, it’s time to put this down for a while.

Ho-jae’s face, Ho-jae’s body shape, everything started moving with him and my body.

Soon my body was out of human form.

To defeat the enemy, I had to become the most powerful being I knew.

It wasn’t hard to remember.

The Old Man said, Kirikiri’s golden blade is the same as that of the God of Order.

In appearance and performance.

The God of Order was said to be a machine god with numerous blades and mechanical legs with blades attached to them.

I had never seen it with my own eyes, but it was enough information to imitate.

[Kieek-]

The cries of spiders.

Even those little creatures were perplexed.

I imitated the golden mechanical god, said to have transcended all gods.

Side Story 33

Kirikiri (1)

Kirikiri was squatting.

She was about to jump, but then she shook her head.

The ground around her had been dug out too much for her to run around.

“Oh dear.”

The uprooted flower by her side as she sat in a squat was pushed by the wind and rolled over.

Kirikiri picked up the flowers and buried them well in the ground.

She patted the ground so that the wind wouldn't blow it away again.

Kirikiri looked around.

It was a gruesome sight.

The soil was dug up, the grass was uprooted and swept away by the wind.

The hill disappeared, and a huge pit was dug in its place.

It was unknown how long it would take the fields to regain their original shape.

Kirikiri was upset.

A field like this reminds her of her bad past.

It's been a long time since she became a god.

But the painful memories of the past are still not erased.

She may not be able to forget the memories because she has become a god.

Also, perhaps because it is her memory of the day she was reborn as a god, it may not be forgotten even more deeply.

Kirikiri picked up the soil around her and patted it to fill the dug up ground.

She did not know how long it would take for the fields to return to their original peaceful appearance.

Kirikiri let out a sigh.

The resistance from Yong-yong and the lava giant was fierce.

The lava giant on the 61st floor showed the ability to far exceed the power on the 61st floor, even though he lost his divinity.

In Yong-yong's case.....

She could understand why Lee Ho-jae showed strange confidence every time he talked about Yong-yong.

That wasn't the ability of a hatchling under 100 years old.

Kirikiri shuddered slightly.

Her ears fluttered.

[God.]

someone has called

Kirikiri soon noticed who the owner of the voice was.

There weren't many beings who called her a god.

[I'm here after being called.]

Kisearin.

A dragon who acts as an advisor to challengers in the second half of the 50th floor.

The 50th floor section is a section where the challenger recognizes the apostles, the godhood, and the origin.

It can be said that it is one of the most important sections, so she placed Kisearin as an advisor there.

The identity of that dragon was a challenger who had cleared the previous tutorial Hell difficulty and was chosen by Kirikiri.

A challenger from Hell difficulty who was cultivated to clear the Trial Hall, but couldn't be put into the Trial Hall because the Trial Hall was too dangerous.

Kirikiri's original plan was to gather several challengers like Kisearin and bring them together to challenge the Trial Hall.

It was a plan with a slim chance of success as the ordeal was changed dangerously by the God of Order.

It was a plan that became useless as the irregular Lee Ho-jae came out.

"I'm sorry."

Kirikiri apologized to the dragon.

When Hochi and Yong-yong insisted that they enter the ordeal without breaking their stubbornness.

Kirikiri was going to accompany Kisearin.

That dragon was well aware of the trial hall.

Because it was raised for that.

She believed he could play a great guide.

“They went in first.”

Hochi, Yongyong, and the lava giant on the 61st floor went in without even waiting for a guide.

Perhaps they are too powerful to be guided by the dragon.

The two are gods or beings who were gods.

One was a mysterious existence that escaped causality.

No, the reason they didn't wait for the guide was not because of their strength.

It was because of Kirikiri.

Because she attacked their party, the guide she prepared was also uncomfortable, so they went in on their own.

After hearing that Hochi was out of causality, Kirikiri tried to check it out herself.

Somehow, she tried to attack Hochi herself.

Immediately, the dragon and the lava giant stopped them, and there was a battle.

A battle to the extent that her holy land was devastated.

At the end of the battle, Kirikiri was finally able to reach Hochi.

The result was this.

Golden metal shards were scattered around.

A golden blade that destroys all ideals and enforces only established principles.

The golden blade, feared by all gods in the world, shattered as soon as it touched Hochi's neck.

Yong-yong's words were true.

Hochi had no causality.

If someone is stabbed by the golden blade, they're just stabbed.

No god could escape from that truth.

He does not twist causality, but stands outside the boundaries of causality.

A body that exists as a separate entity.

It was a strange being.

[Then I.....]

The dragon, who was quietly waiting for an answer, said.

“Go back.”

[All right.]

The dragon quietly retreated.

He seemed rather relieved.

He has been preparing for the trial hall for a long time, but he probably won't want to go into it.

Those who went there on their own feet are strange.

Lee Ho-jae, who went in alone to save the world, and Hochi and Yong-yong, who just went to see their family.

Kirikiri thought she was a little jealous.

She was a little envious.

Even though there is a risk of death, there are family members who come to see him just because they want to see him.

Kirikiri scratched behind her ear.

She also had a family.

Her family were all buried under these fields when her adventures began.

It was childish and lowly jealousy.

Kirikiri shook her head.

What is important now is that a variable that even Kirikiri herself cannot predict has entered the ordeal.

Kirikiri predicted that Hochi, Yong-yong, and the Lava Giant would die with a high probability.

Of course, Hochi is an exception.

However, immortality was not useful in all situations.

When they were subdued by the God of Order,

Hochi may experience more pain than death.

Nevertheless, Kirikiri stood by them.

She warns of the danger, but doesn't dislike the fact that she eventually opened the door.

Because of the variable.

She had to put in variables to twist the fortune-telling.

And now she has put the best variable.

Kirikiri once again prepared fortune-telling.

She prepared a smooth stone rolling on the floor.

The straight pedestal she had previously used was shattered by Yong-yong.

She put a pearl on a stone, and struck it down with another stone.

The remains of the pearl informed Kirikiri of the fortune-telling.

It was a terrible thing.

* * *

The hind legs of rabbits are longer than the forelimbs.

It is rather long compared to the body.

It is normally folded, but when running forward, the legs are straightened, allowing them to leap far.

Kirikiri watched the children run and play through the window.

They were running well.

When they squat, their long legs fold up, and when they run again, it stretches out like a spring.

Her feet were chubby.

Kirikiri looked down at her own feet.

She had short, white feet.

There was no fur.

Just above her feet were her ankles, followed by her calves.

It wasn't long for her to recognize her knee.

The knee was bent like a rabbit, but it was clearly different from the rabbit's leg joints.

Above all, it was too long.

It wasn't a rabbit's leg, it was a human leg.

Kirikiri scratched behind her ear.

She looked out the window, made sure there were no people around the house, and squatted down.

She jumped and jumped.

Like a rabbit.

She unfortunately couldn't do anything as far as the rabbit.

Moreover, after only a few squats, her knees quickly got tired.

She also had a hard time balancing.

Kung kung!

It was a knock on the door.

Kirikiri stood up in surprise.

She opened the door and saw the lady next door.

The lady next door was holding a package of food.

The aunt gave the package to Kirikiri and told her to deliver it to the neighborhood a little bit higher.

Today's food delivery was the lady's job.

When Kirikiri asked about that, the aunt said that the neighbors a little further up said that Kirikiri had to deliver the food today.

It was strange.

Kirikiri took the bag and headed a little further up town.

Her hometown consisted of three villages.

She lives in the downstairs neighborhood.

It was a neighborhood where young rabbits who usually prepare food by gathering fruits and vegetables from the mountains lived together.

Next up is upstairs.

It is a town where a lot of old rabbits live and artisans who make clothes and make wooden furniture live.

Finally, a little bit higher.

This was a town where rabbits who saw divinations and conducted prayers for the tribal gods lived there.

Neither fruits nor herbs can be found in the upper town, which is high in the mountains.

The downstairs neighborhood had to prepare food and send it to them.

Kirikiri was able to get to the neighborhood a little further up.

The priest rabbit was there to meet her.

“Hello, Miss Kirikiri!”

“How are you, Sir Hara.”

Hara, the rabbit in charge of the priesthood, was already over 200 years old.

On the outside, he looked like a child.

Hara pointed to the sack that Kirikiri was holding, and asked what was in it.

Kirikiri knew what kind of answer Hara wanted.

It means what is the sweetest thing in the bag.

“Carrot.”

Carrots are sweet.

Carrots grown in the alpine region were small and unobtrusive, but they were sweet enough.

Hara jumped and asked for one carrot.

“One for me!”

“No. You have to eat together at mealtime.”

Kirikiri refused, raising her arms and placing the sack over her head.

Hara continued to jump and try to get his hands on the bundle, but he couldn't take it from Kirikiri, who was almost twice as tall.

It wasn't that Hara was short.

Kirikiri was exceptionally large.

It was big enough to not look like the same rabbit.

If Kirikiri doesn't have rabbit ears on her head, people would believe she's a human and not a rabbit.

Kirikiri and Hara entered the priest's residence.

She placed the bag of food in the corner and asked.

"You can't eat it by yourself again. Eat it together later."

"Okay. Hehe."

It was a purely sinister laugh.

"Come over here for a moment."

Hara grabbed Kirikiri's hand and led her somewhere.

Still, Kirikiri was curious as to why she had to come today, so she meekly followed Hara's instructions.

The place that Hara took Kirikiri was the innermost part of the priest's residence, where he could see the divinations.

Kirikiri had also been there a few times.

But it had a slightly different impression than the last time she visited.

What was the point?

“Oh my God... what is all this, Sir Hara.”

It was just that the room was too messy.

The floor was littered with white shards.

It looked like white sand.

“Is this... a pearl?”

“That’s right.”

Pearls are gems used by priests for fortune-telling.

Usually about three are used a year, but looking at the rubble on the floor now, it looks like at least hundreds of them are cracked.

“The pearls are all gone, so I guess I’ll have to buy a new one.”

Hara said, looking at Kirikiri.

“I think you should buy it.”

“Yeah... someone has to buy it.”

Pearls were essential gems for rabbits.

And it was a gem that could not be obtained on the mountain.

Someone has to go down the mountain to get the jewels.

It was understandable that that someone would be Kiriki.

It would be better for Kirikiri to go than for other rabbits to go.

Kirikiri herself thought so.

“You have to leave today.”

Kirikiri stopped at those words.

“Tomorrow... is the festival?”

Tomorrow is the day to hear the voice of the tribal god once in ten years.

It was the biggest festival for rabbits, and it was a very meaningful festival.

“You have to leave today.”

Hara said sternly.

* * *

Hara said it was a gift to Kirikiri, who was confused, and looked at the fortune-telling with the last remaining pearl.

A new start.

It was good fortune telling, and he urged her to leave the village immediately while the fortune telling remained.

Kirikiri was upset and burst into tears, but she could not disobey the priest's words.

She returned to her own home in the lower neighborhood to pack up for the trip.

The priest Hara sat down again.

He sighed heavily.

Perhaps the poor Kirikiri thought he was kicking her out of town before the festival to ostracize her.

Hara looked back at the fortune telling he had last seen in the wreckage of the shattered pearl.

Hara said it was a very lucky fortune telling.

It was a lie.

It was a bizarre fortune telling.

The same meaning was repeated over and over.

It was a fortune telling that a new life would begin for Kirikiri.

The fortune-telling in a positive sense was correct.

However, the new direction of life to unfold for Kirikiri did not point to a positive meaning.

The future of Kirikiri, which the fortune teller was talking about.

It was a terrible thing.

Side Story 34

Kirikiri (2)

Kirikiri was an unfortunate rabbit.

She herself thought so.

Perhaps the most unfortunate rabbit in the world,

Throughout the past and the future.

It was a belief that she always had.

Today, on the eve of the festival, she was kicked out of town, and her belief was confirmed.

Kirikiri was an unfortunate rabbit.

Kirikiri was well aware of the use of pearls and their importance.

But the day she has to go on a trip to the human city to get pearls, why does it have to be today, the day before the festival?

She didn't even know why the priest Hara shattered hundreds of pearls in a matter of days, which was normally enough for ten years.

Kirikiri thought that the priest Hara may have deliberately kicked her out of the village.

Because they can't keep an ominous rabbit like her in the town where the festival is held.

It was a baseless suspicion, but she also had no basis to deny the suspicion.

She left the village with a backpack the size of her own body, full of travel items.

As she went down the stairs outside the village in sorrow, her eyes turned bright red several times and she could see a few blurry faces...

She kept sniffing, trying to hold back the tears, but the tears eventually broke out.

As she sat down on the stairs and cried, the sun was setting.

Looking at the sunset, Kirikiri thought,

I want to go home right now.

I'll make some sort of excuse for something.

'It's too late, so I'll leave tomorrow!'

She wanted to find some reason not to go.

Naturally.

Get a good night's sleep and leave tomorrow after the festival is over.

She wished that she could do so.

But Kirikiri could not disobey the priest's orders.

She eventually started going down the stairs again.

She had to go down the mountain until the sun went down completely.

At the entrance to the village, at the end of the stairs, there was a pot.

Kirikiri, who was walking down the stairs in a daze, couldn't find the pot.

Eventually she stepped on the pot and fell.

Fortunately, the pot was not hot.

The pot was half-burnt and full of sugar.

It was precious sugar, but Kirikiri fell on it and overturned everything.

The sugar was mixed with the soil.

Other rabbits would start eating the sugar regardless of the dirt, but Kirikiri didn't.

Instead, she became even more depressed when she recalled her situation while looking at the mixture of dirt and sugar.

Her backpack was falling down the hillside.

It looks like she dropped it when she fell.

Kirikiri sighed as she looked at the backpack that was rolling down in the distance.

Kirikiri went down the hillside to pick up her backpack.

If it had been another rabbit, she would have jumped down, but Kirikiri had to crawl down gently so as not to fall down again and fall down the hillside.

Human limbs were not suitable for climbing mountains.

Fortunately, the backpack was rescued without any problems.

When she got her backpack back, the problem was that the sun had completely disappeared from the sky. It was night.

It became difficult to go down the road.

She had to walk, relying on the moonlight, carefully watching the ground.

After walking like that for a while, her feet hurt so much.

She stopped and looked at the soles of her feet.

It was dirty with dirt and bits of grass.

When she brushed it off, the soles of her feet were swollen.

When she went to the human city, she felt like she had to get shoes first.

There is no need for shoes in the village.

The roads in the village were so well-made that even Kirikiri, who had soft and fragile soles, could walk around with confidence.

Of course, the other rabbits won't need shoes outside of town either.

Their feet were strong enough to hop around on a rocky field.

She made shoes by wrapping the soles of her feet with large leaves and tying them with tree trunks.

She started walking again, stuttering.

As she walked, she arrived at the human village.

After thinking for a while, Kirikiri entered the village.

It was too late to see the way, and she was too tired.

She seemed to prefer to sleep in the village rather than in the camp.

The small town had neither walls nor doors.

The smart Kirikiri remembered the human language she learned from her parents as a child.

She soon found a building that said it was an inn.

As soon as she stood in front of the inn door, Kirikiri became anxious.

In fact, this was the first time Kirikiri had left the village alone.

Because she was so sad that she had been kicked out of town she had forgotten about her other worries, but then they finally came rushing back.

She wasn't even sure if she could safely go to the human city with just one map.

She was also worried that she might meet a scary person.

A long time ago, her father said, "Humans are different on the outside, and there are many lies in their words."

And he proved that to her.

By leaving Kirikiri in the village and disappearing alone.

The village's older rabbits said that a good man impresses even the heavenly gods with his goodness, but an evil man, like a full-bodied bear, deceives and harms those who are weaker than him for no reason.

Kirikiri was determined.

She thought that if she showed strength, the humans would not see her in vain, nor would they dare to deceive or harm her.

Just then, a human voice came from beyond the door.

Kirikiri slammed the door open.

The man inside the inn looked at Kirikiri and the loud sound of the door.

It was the High Seeker who stayed in the hall drinking wine even though the innkeeper had gone to sleep.

Kirikiri, who made eye contact with the high seeker, snorted loudly.

“Hng!”

Then, she moved into the inn with confidence.

It would have been if her backpack hadn’t hung on the inn door, and she hadn’t tripped over.

“Kyang!”

* * *

It was a rather embarrassing encounter.

Kirikiri picked up the items from the high seeker and put them in her backpack, she could feel her face burning red.

Kirikiri adhered to a wary attitude towards the high seeker, but the high seeker accepted it all with a smile.

The two quickly became friends.

The vigilance of the rabbit was too shallow.

Just by listening carefully and giving a little sugar as a gift, the alertness disappeared.

“You’re a really nice person!”

Kirikiri was convinced.

She thought that the high seeker was a good person, and that good people were trustworthy.

She took the sugar the high seeker gave her and ate it without any doubt.

She dipped her fingers in sugar and sucked them up.

It wasn't as much as the other rabbits, but Kirikiri also liked sweets.

Perhaps it is a geographical reason rather than a characteristic of the rabbits.

It is difficult to find sweets on the plateau.

At least a bit of a bitter raspberry.

It was not strange that the rabbits who were used to eating bitter grass liked sweet things.

[It's strange, the rabbits I know didn't look like that.]

The quiet sword whispered to the high seeker.

The sword said, the rabbit on the plateau, is a beast much closer to a rabbit than a human being.

However, the Kirikiri in front of them was a beast that had no difference from a human except for her rabbit ears.

The high seeker thought he'd ask later when he had the chance, so he saved the question posed by the sword for later.

The conversation eventually led to the purpose of the high seeker's trip.

The high seeker said he wanted to climb the plateau, speaking frankly.

Kirikiri clapped her hands and said.

“Sugar!”

“Sugar?”

“The sugar pot in front of the stairs!”

Kirikiri remembered the pot left in front of the stairs.

She tripped herself and fell.

The high seeker burned sugar to summon the rabbits, but they didn't respond, so he left it alone.

“Heheng, that's the old way.”

“Is that so?”

Kirikiri explained.

“In the past, humans could be invited with sugar. Not these days.”

It was just as the sword had told the high seeker.

[Look, I was right. In the past, you could enter only with sugar.]

The High Seeker asked Kirikiri why the rabbits no longer allowed humans.

As the high seeker who had to climb the plateau, he had to know why.

“We don't invite humans anymore.”

Kirikiri said with a suddenly darkened face.

“They make a family in the village and then suddenly leave. Our village is too boring for humans. If they disappear like that, all the remaining rabbits will be sad.”

Kirikiri quickly became pale.

The high seeker looked at the sword unconsciously.

The sword was silent, not saying anything.

The high seeker didn't ask in detail.

He asked why she had left the town instead.

Kirikiri meekly said she had some things to get in the human city, and the high seeker volunteered to guide her.

In return, he said he would like to visit the village for a while.

After thinking for a while, Kirikiri accepted the offer.

Other rabbits wouldn't like to invite humans, but she thought it would be okay if it was just to watch for a while rather than settle down.

Kirikiri was delighted.

She has a good human friend who leads the way to the human city.

Kirikiri gulped and drank the wine that the high seeker poured.

She hated it because it was bitter at first, but when she added a little honey, she got excited and started drinking it.

“Heheng.”

Kirikiri felt better.

Kirikiri, who was drunk for the first time, was excited and began to unpack her story.

Kirikiri, who had confided her words, quickly slammed her forehead onto the table and fell asleep.

The high seeker laid Kirikiri on the bed in the room he had reserved, and then went back to the inn's hall and started drinking the remaining wine.

The high seeker thought about the stories Kirikiri was talking about while drunk.

[As far as I know, the fortune-telling of rabbits has two meanings. The degree and direction of luck.]

Kirikiri says, was given a fortune telling signifying a new beginning.

She didn't tell him the extent of that luck.

[It's obvious when they tell you the direction of your luck, but if they hadn't told you about the extent of it, it'd be obvious, well, you've had a lot of bad luck.]

And Kirikiri was told that the priest had ordered her to go on a trip the day before the festival.

[If bad luck strikes, it's worth sending out on the eve of the festival. How anxious they would be if there was a person with great bad luck in that sacred festival.]

He thought it was too much though.

The high seeker felt sad as he heard Kirikiri drunk.

He could see how heartbroken she was because she had been absent from the festival.

[Because it is an important day. It is to face the god of the race of beasts. Say hello to that god and talk to each other. Talk about what has happened in the past, and discuss what will happen in the future. It is the most important day politically, religiously, and emotionally.]

It's a face to face with God.

The High Seeker wondered what it would be like if there was a festival where he could face the God of Light.

It's going to be a mess.

Some devotees may go crazy and say let's burn the continent to celebrate.

If it were the brothers and sisters of the church that he knew, it would be more than that.

[Anyway, be careful. If she received the fortune-telling of bad luck as she expected, and if she was sent out before the festival, all sorts of dog shit things will happen to that rabbit from tomorrow.]

It seems that what the sword wanted to say was this request.

The high seeker nodded his head saying he knew.

He thought that he might have met the rabbit at the inn, perhaps it was good luck.

Any misfortune can be prevented.

It was an illusion.

The next morning, the greatest misfortune began with the high seeker.

Side Story 35

Kirikiri (3)

“Uhhhhh.....!”

As soon as she opened her eyes in the morning, Kirikiri was tormented by a headache that seemed to crack her head.

The High Seeker was surprised to see that.

He's never seen anyone in the world suffering from a hangover after drinking two glasses of wine.

‘It’s because she’s a rabbit.’

The High Seeker became a little regretful.

Had he known this, he would not have recommended wine.

He poured it little by little for her to taste it.

“Ukukeuk...!”

In the wake of the morning commotion, the innkeeper, who was sleeping in the room, came out alone.

As soon as the innkeeper saw Kirikiri, he was greatly moved.

The owner of the inn, who grew up hearing stories about rabbits from an early age, was amazed that a rabbit stayed overnight in his inn.

He had come late in the morning, so after hearing the High Seeker's explanation that he had given him his room, he nodded his head saying that it was really good.

The innkeeper, who had been searching the kitchen for a while, left to visit the market.

In the inn hall, only Kirikiri and the High Seeker were left.

Kirikiri gripped her fiery hair and suffered, but did not lift her vigilant gaze from the High Seeker.

The High Seeker laughed inwardly.

She was observing himself with an openly suspicious eye, so she looked funny rather than offensive.

To him, it was like seeing a child pretending to be very serious.

The High Seeker was worried.

He thought they had become close enough yesterday morning, but that rabbit's vigilance was quickly restored.

‘What should I do?’

The High Seeker was worried.

Do we have to be friends again from the beginning?

He gave away all his sugar yesterday.

What should he give her this time?

When the High Seeker was struggling with such a thing, he saw the sword calling out.

[Uh-huh, this is why you're single even when you're old.]

He suddenly hit the pit of the High Seeker's stomach.

[Look carefully at what I can do!]

The sword was full of confidence.

The High Seeker handed the sword to Kirikiri as the sword had said.

The High Seeker thought it was a good opportunity anyway.

If she was going to accompany him, she should know the sword as well.

Otherwise, she may see himself talking to the sword from time to time and mistake him for a strange person.

Kirikiri looked at him with puzzled eyes, asking why he suddenly pulled out his sword.

She was very suspicious.

As soon as Kirikiri took the sword, she was startled.

As soon as she grabbed the sword, a voice began to ring in her head.

[Heyyo! I'm Aubutz hing! Nice to meet chuu!]

It was a lively greeting.

Kirikiri was startled and frozen for a moment, then looked at the High Seeker with strange eyes.

To avoid misunderstandings, the High Seeker had to explain that it was not his own ventriloquy

Kirikiri's strange eyes moved towards the sword again.

"Is the person in here a rabbit by any chance?"

Kirikiri asked.

The High Seeker told her that the sword spirit contained within the ego sword was of ordinary human origin.

Kirikiri returned the sword with an uneasy expression.

“Eh... tell him my name is Kirikiri. To that... human sword.”

The High Seeker shrugged and took the sword with embarrassment.

[.....]

The sword was also silent for a long time, as if embarrassed.

* * *

High Seeker and Kirikiri were able to become friends again soon.

It wasn't a big trigger.

While eating the food prepared by the innkeeper, they became friends while he taught her how to use a knife and fork.

The rabbit quickly regained vigilance, but it was easy to get acquainted again.

The two had a conversation.

It was a story about travel.

He looked at the map, checked the route to the city, and calculated the time it took.

For the most part, the High Seeker explained, and Kirikiri nodded her head in agreement.

The High Seeker asked Kirikiri how she was planning to purchase pearls.

Pearls are precious gems.

It was unlikely that a rabbit living on an empty plateau would be able to purchase several pearls.

[Idiot, all rabbits are rich.]

The sword said to the High Seeker.

As if to prove that statement, Kirikiri took out a large stone from her bag.

“I can buy it with this.”

The thing that Kirikiri took out proudly was shining blue.

It was a magic crystal.

“Is this enough?”

“Yes, that will be enough.”

The High Seeker could be sure.

The magic crystal that Kirikiri drew out was very large.

Even the High Seeker had never seen such a large magic crystal.

‘If that is released in the market, the magic towers will be in an uproar.’

To the wizards, magic crystals were like extra lives.

In order to obtain that crystal, wizards would happily sacrifice their disciples’ lives, if not their own.

He’ll have to think carefully about where to sell the magic crystal.

He looked around.

The innkeeper was watching the hall.

Neighborhood children watching Kirikiri while clinging to the outside of the inn window.

They all had eyes to see.

The High Seeker told Kirikiri to put the magic crystal in the bag.

It is said that it is better not to show it outside as much as possible.

It is not good to blindly doubt people you do not know, but it is also bad to believe blindly.

The wisest thing to do is not to give the people around them the opportunity and circumstances to become evil.

Kirikiri said the trip had no deadline, but the High Seeker wanted to get the pearl and return as soon as possible.

His intuition was still on that plateau.

Rejecting the innkeeper's request to make Kirikiri's portrait, the two left the inn.

It would be convenient to ride a horse-drawn carriage like when the High Seeker came here, but there were no horse-drawn carriages in this small town.

The carriage the High Seeker was riding in had already gone back.

So they walked a little out of town.

Kirikiri was depressed as she looked back at the village and the green mountain ranges that were gradually moving away.

Even then, when she saw the sunshine for the first time, she realized that she liked the light.

The High Seeker soon learned that this rabbit was simply very emotional.

“Huhuhu, stop.”

It was a bandit.

A bandit appeared as if it was natural.

‘If you want to live, give up all you have!’ They didn’t say anything like that.

The boss who smiles slyly.

There were a few grunting bastards following the boss.

Some were holding weapons with tense faces.

They knew.

The fact that Kirikiri has expensive jewels.

It was clear that they had been chasing the two of them from the village.

Considering the weapons they had, it wasn’t a big deal.

A long stick attached to a sickle.

An axe whose blade resembles ones that had been diligently cutting down trees until this morning.

There was also a hammer.

The High Seeker sighed.

It is not easy to meet a thief in such a remote place.

A robbery basically requires the presence of a victim to be established.

Even if they want to be a robber in a very deserted place, they couldn't be.

Their occupation could not be robbery.

A woodcutter who lived in a nearby village, a hunter, and a farmer plowing the fields.

They must have impulsively heard about a man and a woman holding a large jewel in the village.

Maybe this isn't the first time.

But it must have been like that in the beginning.

An impulsive crime.

The High Seeker was worried.

He doesn't know how to deal with them

If he was young, he might have subdued them and then given them a whole bunch of lectures.

To live a good life.

It is not right to live by causing harm to others.

But now he knew that such lectures were not very effective.

If he gives them such discipline after suppressing them by force, they will leave only the thought that they failed because they attacked someone with strong power.

If he was young, he would have subdued them all and dragged them to a big city.

Because it was a time when he had a high reputation, all the criminals he had captured went straight to prison.

It was also not a wise move.

When entrusting punishment to an official, a due process must be followed.

Administrative powers should always be minimal and flexible.

Therefore, it would not be correct to take them and arrest them, claiming they were thieves, without any evidence.

There was also no guarantee that the city's prisons would function properly.

Repentance and punishment are not easy things.

Prison facilities were usually among the most underdeveloped facilities in the city, and were an area full of petty corruption and absurdity.

[Isn't it okay to just beat them? You are still frustrated. No, I think you're getting more frustrated as you get older.]

The sword kept talking, but the High Seeker did not stop worrying.

It may be a meaningless worry, but the High Seeker did not give up.

Thinking that one day he might find a 'correct answer' that would satisfy everyone, he pursued the best way to do everything.

As soon as the High Seeker stood still, Kirikiri stepped forward.

She took a step forward, and Kirikiri, who hid the High Seeker behind his back, shouted.

"I'll protect you!"

Very confidently.

The High Seeker felt a strange feeling.

It was somehow touching.

It seemed like it had been a long time since he had heard someone say that they would protect him.

No, he wondered if he had ever heard of it in the first place.

The High Seeker was always on the side of protecting someone.

The High Seeker grabbed Kirikiri's shoulder and tried to stop her.

At that moment, Kirikiri's body disappeared.

The High Seeker's hand, which was holding Kirikiri's shoulder, floated in the air.

The High Seeker and novice thieves were silent for a moment as the person suddenly disappeared.

"Aack!"

One of the bandits grabbed his crotch and fell.

He was the one who kept talking dirtily.

"Some, something hit me!"

Confusion began.

The thieves looked around, but couldn't see anything.

Hit.

"Uh... uh...?"

One of the thieves grabbed his stomach and made a dazed sound.

There's a hole in his stomach and he's bleeding.

The thieves who saw the blood now began to feel fear.

They tried to block the invisible enemy by swinging their arms in all directions, but it was in vain.

One by one, holes began to form in the thieves' bodies.

"It's a curse...! It's a fairy curse!"

Someone screamed and ran away.

When one escaped, all the thieves started to run away in confusion.

The thief, who was the first to be hit between the crotch, had no one to help, so he had to crawl away by himself.

Even the High Seeker was as perplexed as the thieves.

The High Seeker could notice an archmage's invisible magic and a secret assassin's hideout at a glance.

He still didn't understand where Kirikiri was and how she got out of his senses.

After a while, as the bandits fled far out of sight, Kirikiri reappeared.

"Hng!"

A loud snort was heard.

Kirikiri was right next to the High Seeker.

A small sword was in Kirikiri's hand as she stood dignifiedly like a general who defeated the enemy, and looked to the side where the thieves had escaped.

It was a sword shining golden.

Side Story 36

Kirikiri (4)

Seeing Kirikiri smiling and proudly showing off a golden sword, the high seeker had to be a bit perplexed.

So many surprises in such a short amount of time.

He was also amazed at her ability to suddenly disappear, but the sword in Kirikiri's hand was even more amazing.

He became the king of a country, and had many opportunities to explore all kinds of rare and mysterious treasures.

In the palace warehouse from which he left, numerous treasures that were still in his possession were piled up like a mountain.

But this golden sword that Kirikiri is holding.

[Kyaaak! Get it away!]

As the golden sword was pushed closer to him, the sword tied to the high seeker's waist was repulsed by it.

The High seeker felt the same way.

He wanted to tell Kirikiri, showing off her golden sword, to please put it away.

It was a strange feeling.

It's not even a cursed magic sword.

[This is not a curse! That's.....]

The sword said as if screaming.

The high seeker could also guess the history of that sword.

That's probably

‘The Source.’

The power to bring miracles to the world.

The most powerful and greatest particle.

Magical power.

The high seeker had a considerable amount of magical power.

In terms of the amount of his magical power, he may be the best on the continent.

At least, among humans that is.

The high seeker's magical power was being pushed out as the sword pushed in.

It was pushed out and his magic was leaking out of his body.

His magical power, which had gone out of his body outside his will, lost control and was scattered in the air.

It was a permanent loss of magical power.

“It's pretty!”

[Kyaaaak! I'm dying, you bunny!]

it seems that the golden sword was worse for the ego sword than the high seeker.

He screamed like he was going to die.

The high seeker hastily asked her to put her knife away.

Kirikiri rolled her eyes and put her sword in her bag.

“Sorry.”

“No. It’s a really great treasure sword...”

A sword shining with beautiful gold.

However, the fact that it was gilded did not even feel worth it.

It’s a metal that pushes out magical power just by being there.

Who would dare wield such a weapon?

[That rabbit is wielding it, you idiot.....]

Yes, only that rabbit can wield it.

Only that rabbit without a handful of magical power.

The high seeker thought that Kirikiri would be weak.

There was no magic in her body.

Even an ordinary farmer who has been farming all his life has a small amount of magical power.

The magic of nature naturally pools in the body.

Even those who have not accumulated magic through training have a very small amount of magic.

But that rabbit didn’t even have a handful of magical powers.

Naturally, a person without magical power cannot use magic of course.

So it's natural that the rabbit without magical powers looked weak.

But instead of having no magical powers, she was able to wield a truly ridiculous weapon.

The high seeker advised that as much as possible, the golden sword should not be drawn out in front of others, as was the case with the magical crystal.

Kirikiri nodded her head eagerly.

[Dedicate it.]

Suddenly he heard a voice.

The high seeker didn't care.

As usual, he only thought the sword was speaking.

But the voice was different.

[Dedicate it to me.]

'Oh, dear.'

The high seeker was silent for a moment.

Truly, the voice of God he hasn't heard in a long time.

'God of light.'

[My paladin, dedicate it to me.]

The voice was pointing to the golden sword that Kirikiri had just put in her bag.

The high seeker felt uncomfortable.

[Burn that sword and offer it to me.]

‘It’s not possible.’

He abruptly refused.

The high seeker somehow felt guilty.

He may be guilty.

He dared to refuse what God wanted.

‘God, it’s impossible. It’s not even my thing. You cannot take other people’s things and offer them to the gods. That’s not right.’

People would have argued that he was crazy if anyone else saw him, but the high seeker was unstoppable.

[It’s okay, that is right.]

‘No, it’s not right.’

[My words are absolute. My will is the rule of the world, and my words are the law of the world. Follow me, my paladin.]

The high seeker shook his head.

God was particularly insistent today.

‘There’s no such thing as that. What is not right, is not right.’

God was silent.

Did you finally give up?

It was when the high seeker was thinking so.

[Just once! Just once!]

What do you mean only once?

Are you asking me to do the wrong thing just once?

For yourself, God of Light?

If you are a paladin who can't help but love God, it's a request you'll have to accept.

'It's not possible.'

[You are really too much!]

At the sudden word of the God, the high seeker wrapped his arms around his head.

He felt a strong headache that felt like his brain was exploding.

[I will punish you!]

The God of Light put a tantrum.

The High Seeker felt like he wanted to sigh.

Of course, his sigh in this situation was a grave blasphemy, so he had to endure it.

'If you punish me, I will die.'

The high seeker said quietly.

It really was true.

No matter how superhuman the high seeker was, he could not afford to survive the wrath of the god.

‘Are you all right with that?’

The God of Light was silent.

The high seeker knew his own worth.

He knew all too well how much the God of Light loved him.

It was natural

Every time he practiced the sword of light, he was excited to hear the voice of The God of Light chirping and chattering, and he could easily notice how much the god liked him.

[That’s not allowed.]

The God of Light said sullenly.

The high seeker thought he was lucky.

God’s punishment was terrible.

It was enough to inflict more pain and despair than death without having to kill anyone.

However, the punishment of this God of Light he worshiped was simple and powerful, but not insidious.

Probably, it would be about as much as a huge thunderbolt fell when the punishment was given.

Of course, being struck by lightning will kill the high seeker, but that’s not what the God of Light wants.

[Disappointed.]

The God of Light, who confided his own feelings, disconnected from him.

Then the high seeker sighed.

Conversations with gods were always burdensome.

[I think it was a really good choice for you not to be baptized every time like this.]

The sword said teasingly.

It was mean.

* * *

A brief commotion passed, and the journey continued again.

Kirikiri still looked bright.

Her appearance came as a bit of a shock to the high seeker.

He knew a lot of children who had a sudden accident after spending their whole life in a peaceful village.

She had only been looking at places like that in the first place, so it must have been natural.

The thieves she met suddenly.

The ensuing battle.

There were no casualties, but it was a battle that was obviously bloody and noisy with screams.

Kirikiri, who had driven out the thieves, did not seem to have any appreciation for the thieves and battles.

Rather, she seemed relieved and in a good mood.

[It's a rabbit.]

Could the lack of fear of blood and killing be explained by being a rabbit?

The high seeker was questioning it.

[Their race is basically a demigod. It's not like the innkeeper was making a fuss for nothing. It would be better not to treat her like a child just because she looks like a child.]

The Sword pretended to know again.

The High Seeker then asked if he was aware of the ability used when Kirikiri suddenly disappeared earlier.

[I know of it.]

'Is that so?'

[Sure. One of rabbits' two most famous abilities is crossing dimensions. The reason I went to the rabbits in the first place was that my colleague, a summoner, wanted to learn dimension magic from the rabbits, and her ability from earlier is probably the half-dimension.]

There were signs that the old story of the sword had begun.

The High Seeker was not interested in the Summoner's story, so he asked The Sword to explain the abilities of the rabbits in detail.

The sword was a little uncomfortable, but he explained it well.

[As the rabbits explained, there is a small gap between the dimensions. The gap between that dimension is called a half-dimension. It's not a dimension divided by perfect boundaries, and it's not even the same dimension.]

Hearing the sword's explanation, the high seeker could understand a little.

He was told that the Fairy Queen of the Lake of Silence had similar abilities.

[Probably the same ability.]

It was an embarrassing remark.

Each member of the race has the power of being a fairy queen.

[So she is also treated as a fantasy existence in a fairy tale.]

The sword said sternly.

[The one at the entrance to the village is also a dimensional barrier.]

What the sword was talking about was the stairs leading up to the plateau where the rabbits lived.

The high seeker went up and down the stairs for nearly a week, and eventually gave up and came down.

‘Is that a dimensional barrier...?’

[Hmm.]

The sword answered so clearly.

‘Why didn’t you tell me earlier?’

Thanks to him, the High Seeker had a week of hard work.

[I told you. You can’t go up with your ability.]

‘No..... ’

The high seeker didn’t understand.

He would have given up sooner if the sword had said, ‘you can’t climb on your own because there is a dimensional barrier’ instead of ‘you just can't go up!'

Instead of going through it for a week.

[What do you mean by saying this? Are you upset, you narrow-minded boy?]

'I don't want to be upset. And narrow-mindedness is your nasty sign.'

[Little boy, that's ugly. If you're old, be somewhat like your age!]

The sword was sharp.

'You are three times older than me.'

The high seeker did not lose.

The Human and the sword approaching the ages of one hundred and three hundred, respectively, began to fight childishly.

* * *

A day passed.

The two of them had to camp because they couldn't get to the village before nightfall due to some commotion.

Kirikiri's huge bag also contained a prefabricated tent.

The two were able to sleep comfortably

The problem was the next morning.

Apparently she slept peacefully until last night, but Kirikiri woke up in the morning and started to be wary of the high seeker again.

The high seeker was perplexed.

Fortunately, Kirikiri's mood quickly dissipated.

It was because of the hive that the high seeker had brought.

A simple biscuit coated with honey to eat, Kirikiri was happy.

The high seeker could immediately see that Kirikiri's vigilance was quickly dispelled.

'Is this because it's a rabbit?'

It's a rabbit

For a simple reason, many questions have been answered with that answer.

The sword solved the high seeker's doubts.

[Other rabbits are worse. They have no boundaries at all.]

He told the High Seeker some anecdotes about the black rabbits.

It seemed like it could be possible.

It is said that rabbits are good and innocent, and always lead a peaceful and quiet life.

In addition, their ability is so great that there is no need to worry about external threats.

Where in the world could an enemy invade them beyond their dimensional stairs?

Naturally, their vigilance will disappear.

[That kid named Kirikiri is particularly wary. For a rabbit]

The high seeker gradually developed an understanding of Kirikiri and the rabbit race.

Every morning when she woke up, even though Kirikiri showed a vigilant figure, she waited for him without being surprised.

After a few days, Kirikiri went to sleep and woke up, but she was no longer wary of the high seeker.

The two became steadily closer over time.

It made the conversation easier.

The High Seeker sometimes wondered if he would have a granddaughter of her age if he had settled down and started a family.

The trip was enjoyable.

Contrary to what the sword had warned of bad luck, a peaceful, monotonous, and even enjoyable journey continued.

So the two arrived in the human city.

Side Story 37

Kirikiri (5)

Kirikiri stomped on the floor and walked.

A hum came out of nowhere.

Her new shoes, which she bought in the village she had recently stopped by, were fluffy.

Even when she walked on an uneven dirt road, the floor felt as comfortable as in the rabbit village.

It was also nice to see a pretty butterfly fluttering and flying while she was walking down the street.

The rabbit village was a good place, but it was too high up.

The creatures that could live there were limited.

Everything she had seen when she left the village was new.

The sadness of being kicked out of the village on the eve of the festival was soon forgotten, and she was fully enjoying this trip.

It was not that there was no anxiety in her journey.

The old man with the eccentric name of High Seeker with her was a good man.

But her father was also a good person.

Enough for the rabbits to welcome him into their family and provide a house on the other side of the village.

Her father betrayed everyone and left without any warning one day.

She cleared the ground for the camp and pitched a tent.

Kirikiri's large backpack was full of all kinds of camping gear.

Rabbits thought they should always have no shortage of sleeping and eating.

Kirikiri was the same.

She had that thought as she lay down in the tent and fell asleep.

She felt like she was getting closer to her father who abandoned her when she was young.

It wouldn't be wrong to say that he left the rabbit village and came into the human world.

Perhaps it was because of that feeling, Kirikiri was often disturbed in her sleep.

It was a hazy dream that she couldn't even remember properly when she woke up, but it strangely felt bad for her.

Every time she had such a bad dream, Kirikiri thought that it's not good for her to be so relaxed.

She also didn't want to be betrayed, as she knew nothing.

She gave strength to her eyes and opened them.

Like a seasoned hunter, she cleverly searches for clues and traces of her prey.

The high seeker smiled awkwardly.

What is that face?

Yes, he must have been flustered by her own cleverness.

Kirikiri continued her observation.

“Do you like meat too?”

The high seeker asked.

She thinks she will eat meat for breakfast.

Kirikiri was excited and she answered ‘yes!’.

She can’t eat if she doesn’t have meat.

The high seeker smiled and walked away saying that he was going to go hunting.

Kirikiri even waved her hand and said to go and come back quickly.

After the high seeker’s figure disappeared through the trees, Kirikiri belatedly noticed her own mistake.

‘This isn’t it!’

Kirikiri’s picture of herself as she imagined was a bright, intelligent, and shrewd rabbit.

So she shouldn’t have easily relaxed!

The high seeker returned quickly.

Kirikiri, contrary to what she had promised, was delighted to be able to eat meat.

She was sad to see the dead deer.

The piece of meat that has been slaughtered and roasted made her rejoice again.

“It’s good to see you eating well.”

The high seeker said.

After she took a bite full of meat and was happy, Kirikiri was shocked again.

‘Oh! This isn’t it! It’s really not it!’

Why can’t she be serious?

It was deplorable.

The same scenery continued the next morning.

“Kirikiri.”

“Hng!”

The high seeker wasn’t even surprised by Kirikiri, who was now on the verge of limitless vigilance.

“We ran out of honey.”

.....!?

Kirikiri widened his eyes as if how in the world could that be.

It was the most shocking news.

“Fortunately, there is a beehive I saw yesterday.”

The high seeker asked if she would like to go and pick a beehive.

Kirikiri was excited today as well and followed the high seeker.

‘Oh, not this again!’

The two finally reached their destination, the city.

Kirikiri raised her head and looked up at the wall.

She's been to human villages and small towns a few times, but it's the first time she's seen a city with such high walls.

The high seeker said she could get enough pearls here.

Kirikiri also looked at the wall and agreed.

The high seeker took out the large robe he had prepared in advance.

It was to cover Kirikiri's ears.

The legend about the mysterious rabbits living on the plateau of the Blue Mountains is not widely known here.

Even if they know someone, they wouldn't think of the rabbits in the fairy tale when they see Kirikiri.

She will probably only look like an ordinary and pretty rabbit magical beast.

They had to be careful.

Kirikiri is a naive beast who is easy to deceive, and she also possesses a magical crystal large enough to shake the continent.

Even in the village at the beginning of the Blue Mountains, where rabbits were sacred, thieves chased after seeing Kirikiri's magical crystals.

In big cities, they have to be extra careful.

It was better not to be seen by people as much as possible.

Fortunately, Kirikiri did not show any characteristics of a beast except for the ears.

The problem was this.

Pop!

“Wow!”

Kirikiri looked at the city’s market street and shouted.

She was so surprised, her ears popped, and it stood up.

The hood of the robe was removed as the long, droopy ears pointed towards the sky.

The high seeker hurriedly put the hood back on, but it was still in a state where the ears were standing still.

Only after the high seeker warned did Kirikiri’s ears falter again.

“Whoa!”

Kirikiri shouted again.

A man was walking with a bag of bread in his arms.

The bread had a sweet aroma.

Kirikiri’s ears soared with a force to pierce the sky again.

This was repeated over and over again before entering the inn.

Afterwards, the high seeker felt like a bit of an idiot continuing to put the hood on Kirikiri.

Kirikiri liked the inn.

It looked very different from the inn at the beginning of the Blue Mountains.

The hall used as a restaurant was also really big.

The rooms were on the 2nd and 3rd floors.

Kirikiri was led by the high seeker to the third floor while still glancing at the hall and dragging her feet.

He always thought she was fed enough, but the rabbit's appetite was more than he thought.

The high seeker was relieved only after bringing Kirikiri to the room.

The High Seeker once again reminded Kirikiri to be cautious in the city.

There are many people in the city.

There were good people, and there were bad people.

There were many people who were very clever in speech and words.

Slaughtering one of the seemingly inexperienced beasts was not even a matter.

Kirikiri widened her eyes as if she wasn't a seemingly inexperienced beast.

The high seeker was still anxious.

He gave the warning again and stood up.

The high seeker thought it would be better for him to decide where to buy the pearls alone, rather than go out to search for pearls with Kirikiri.

Just before leaving the room, the high seeker looked back at Kirikiri one last time.

Kirikiri opened her eyes as if not to worry.

‘..... Let’s go as soon as possible.’

With that promise, he left the inn.

The high seeker soon regretted it.

After only two hours, the inn’s room was empty.

It wasn’t very empty.

There was also Kirikiri’s large backpack, and an unidentified letter on the bed.

But, most importantly, Kirikiri herself was not seen.

The high seeker hastily read her letter.

The letter was written in a crooked font.

[Hello, Mister High Seeker.]

From here on, the high seeker became anxious.

Why am I called ‘Mister High Seeker’?

She calls him uncle comfortably these days.

Is it because it was in writing?

He then continued to read the letter.

[I went down to the dining hall.]

‘...Don’t go down.’

Apparently he had made such a request several times, but Kirikiri seemed to have gone down alone as if it was natural.

[It smelled very delicious.]

Do you think that's a good enough reason?

That must have smelled delicious.

It's late in the evening.

It's fine if she went down to the hall.

If only she hadn't left the inn.

However, the high seeker did not see Kirikiri even in the inn hall.

[I went down to the restaurant and met good people.]

The high seeker at this point had to feel a strong urge to stop reading the letter.

[Good people introduced delicious food.]

Yes it would be.

He doesn't know who they are, but they chose the best way.

If they had tried to scare her in moderation or entice her with something else, Kirikiri would have been wary of those people.

At least they're trying to trick her with something to eat.

[It was said that there is more delicious food in the houses of humans. I'll go to the human's houses.]

At the end of the letter were these words:

[I'll bring you something to eat!]

The letter ended like that.

Unfortunately.

The high seeker understood the situation.

Kirikiri, who smelled the food, went down alone, met humans there, and got fished on the pretext of delicious food.

[...I think she will get caught.]

said the sword.

The high seeker couldn't deny it.

"I'll try to track her down first."

If she was really lucky, the people who took Kirikiri might serve food with really good intentions.

Rather, they were more likely to have approached her with ill intent.

Of course, considering Kirikiri's physical abilities and her many mystical powers, which he discovered during the travels, she won't be easily overpowered.

But when she was obsessed with food, he couldn't be sure of anything.

"Please take care of me."

[Ha, is it this body's turn to go out again?]

The sword exclaimed so and performed tracking magic.

It's been a while since he's been doing magic, so he struggled a bit, but the sword was able to catch the traces of Kirikiri soon.

The traces of Kirikiri continued uninterrupted.

Even the high seeker who did not use tracking magic could see the traces with the naked eye.

He was so excited that the footprints of running around were very clearly visible.

[It's getting a little serious.]

said the sword.

The road was blocked, by soldiers with spears.

The traces of Kirikiri continued.

It was leading into the lord's castle where the lord who ruled this city resided.

It was already evening and the sun had gone down, so the gates of the castle were tightly shut.

Soldiers were stationed in front of the closed door.

[What should I do?]

There were two ways.

The high seeker reveals his identity and enters the residence legally and proudly.

Or, he enters the castle illegally and proudly without revealing his identity.

[Isn't it enough to sneak in and find just the rabbit?]

That wasn't the High Seeker's style.

He could have been caught and pursued for nothing.

He had enough reasons and justifications to break through the lord's castle.

He just boldly went in and secured Kirikiri.

It was neater for him to negotiate with the lord.

Of course, if caught, he will be arrested immediately and rot in the cell for the rest of his life or receive harsh punishment.

If he had transcendental powers, it would have been better if this side wasn't complicated.

and

[Hmnhmm.]

His god also favors this side.

The God of Light was already happy because he expected to see the sword of light after a long time.

Unfortunately, the high seeker had no intention of using the Sword of Light.

He did not intend to hide his power, but he did not intend to expose his identity as the king of a country.

The high seeker drew his sword and stepped forward.

The soldiers who were guarding the gates approached due to the suspicious behavior.

[Hey, why is this body so good?]

The sword trembled.

Unlike usual, the high seeker simply listened to the sword's self-compliment.

“Stop! This is the lord's castle! Those who are not permitted to enter...!”

There was no intention of convincing the soldiers from the beginning.

It was of no use stating that he had come to visit his abducted colleague here.

It was questionable whether he would even be taken to the upper level after talking to the soldiers.

“If you come any closer...!”

The soldiers repeated their warnings, but when the high seeker got too close, they stopped him and raised their spears.

The composition of the soldiers' weapons was simple.

A small shield and a spear in light armor.

It was the most basic and most powerful configuration.

The high seeker was also a former soldier who used to run around the battlefield wearing that kind of outfit.

The spear was smashed.

The spear blade did not reach the high seeker.

The moment the soldier wielded the spear, the blade part was cut into pieces and fell to the floor.

Thud.

The soldier swung his shield, blaming the old spear and the lord who always budgeted only a small budget for the guards.

The high seeker lightly blocked the shield with his hand.

There was a noise of scraping steel in the air, and the shield the soldier was holding shattered into pieces in a checkered pattern.

Looking at the remnants of the sharply cut and falling shield, the soldier could tell that the spear had been cut off by something rather than a worn-out tip.

The soldier was startled and stepped back.

The high seeker approached the gates of the lord's castle instead of dealing with the soldiers pointlessly.

It was a strong gate.

A thick gate that seems difficult for an adult male to open alone.

The high seeker beckoned.

Accordingly, the sword unfolded his skills.

[Space Rift Mind Slash.]

The gates and the walls began to crumble into small pieces.

The wall that collapses at the touch of a single person.

At the transcendent sight, the soldiers felt fear and froze.

Now, the wall that stood in front of the high seeker has collapsed.

The high seeker entered the lord's castle over the remains of the castle wall.

Side Story 38

Kirikiri (6)

Groooowl.

The sky murmured.

It looked like he was going to be struck by lightning.

Bang!

It actually went down.

The high seeker had to dodge the shards of stones that were thrown by lightning.

It was the will of the God of Light.

Every day, he says, 'Wonderful punishment, wrathful punishment,' and he suddenly drops lightning.

The high seeker was freaked out.

The reason was that he did not wield the sword of light.

After becoming king, he sat on the throne for a long time and devoted himself to government affairs, so he did not wield the sword properly, let alone the sword of light.

The God of Light, who had been watching with excitement because he had a chance to fight after a long time, was greatly disappointed when the High Seeker depended on the ability of the Ego Sword.

It looked like so.

Bang! Bang!

Lightning kept falling.

The high seeker had to dodge the shards as he shuffled his feet.

It was threatening, but the high seeker decided to ignore it.

The sword of light is a famous technique that proves itself.

If his identity is exposed, and if he wields it recklessly, most of the territory will be swept away.

It was an unnecessary killing.

The high seeker hurriedly went inside the lord's castle.

The guards didn't even try to stop him.

With only his gestures, he breaks down walls, and when he approaches, their armor and spear are cut off by an invisible sword.

There was even a thunderbolt falling one after another, protecting him (or that was what the soldiers saw it as).

The traces of Kirikiri led to the interior of the lord's castle.

After subduing a few more guards, the high seeker was soon able to arrive in front of a door with traces of Kirikiri.

Without hesitation he opened the door and swung it open.

A large table was spread out, and Kirikiri was sitting in the center of it.

It was exactly opposite the door, so as soon as the door opened, Kirikiri and High Seeker met each other's eyes.

Kirikiri, who made eye contact with the high seeker, stopped her mouth that was murmuring hard.

“Honey!”

It was a weird exclamation.

Kirikiri, whose eyes widened in surprise, perhaps not expecting the high seeker to come, swallowed what was in her mouth.

“Delicious!”

“...that’s what you have to say to me.”

The high seeker murmured as if it were nonsense.

He had to feel embarrassed as he listened to Kirikiri telling him to eat quickly because it was delicious.

* * *

Fortunately, Kirikiri was eating well and playing well.

Of course she thought so.

The lord ordered the soldiers to bring Kirikiri.

Buying her something to eat, enticing her by saying that there is more food.

This act of bringing in a child while there was no protector was clearly a kidnapping.

No matter how well he treated the kidnapped child or was feeding her delicious food as promised.

Of course, the question remained as to whether the high seeker was Kirikiri’s guardian.

The high seeker thought he was the protector of that innocent rabbit.

Whatever Kirikiri thought or not, the lord was kneeling in front of the high seeker.

“Forgive me!”

The Lord immediately fell flat on his face.

It was a strange attitude.

The high seeker was embarrassed as he had seen many nobles who died while holding a useless vain pride, even in a situation where their head was going to be cut off right away.

He decided to listen to the lord’s excuses.

“Divination?”

“Yes, my son hasn’t gotten out of bed for four years.”

It is said that the son of the Lord was weak from an early age.

However, since he became seriously ill four years ago, he has been living in bed.

Neither the doctors nor the priests could reveal the name of his disease.

He continued to be cared for, not knowing when he would get better or when he would die.

“Rabbits can foretell the future. So...”

The lord seems to know about the rabbits that live in the highlands of the Blue Mountains.

So, as soon as he heard a report that a rabbit beast had entered the estate, he had the soldiers bring her in.

If the purpose was to ask for fortune-telling, it made sense to bring Kirikiri and feed her well.

But if that's the reason, he could probably invite them properly, why did he entice her with something to eat?

"Yes... because it's a rabbit..."

[Right. It's best to just offer the rabbit something to eat. Hey, that friend, he seems to know a lot about rabbits.]

The sword said.

It was noisy.

The high seeker decided to understand the lord's action. It was wrong, but still understandable.

And even if there was an impure intention, it was true that he was treating Kirikiri well until the high seeker came.

The High Seeker decided to compensate for the cost of the collapsed wall.

The high seeker had a lot of money.

The emergency fund he carried was enough to compensate for the collapsed wall.

The High Seeker gave Kirikiri a brief explanation of what had happened to her.

"What?"

Kirikiri's eyes widened.

"You deceived me! You were bad people!"

Then she jumped up from her seat.

She puffed her nostrils as if she was going to scold them.

The high seeker had already told her that he had already done a good job of scolding them.

“Aha.”

Kirikiri sat back down and continued her meal.

She was spontaneous, as if nothing had happened.

‘So gullible by food.....’

It seems that all the words that he told her to be careful when entering the city were to no avail.

* * *

The High Seeker and Kirikiri did not return to the inn, but stayed in the lord’s castle.

It wasn’t good for the high seeker and Kirikiri to go out while the lord comforted the citizens and the soldiers who were startled by the collapse of the walls.

The lord announced that the wall collapse was an accident caused by lightning.

After the accident was over, the lord made a formal request to Kirikiri.

To predict the future of his son who can’t get up from his sick bed.

“I’m not good at it. I’ll try.”

Kirikiri accepted it as if it was nothing.

The lord was delighted and he said that he would arrange the pearls she needed for the divination.

The high seeker thought that things were going well.

And the next day, he got bad news.

“The pearl cannot be obtained.”

The Lord said with a sad expression on his face.

“I found out through the precious metal merchants that it’s been a long time since they’ve seen a pearl recently. It seems the mermaids are having a problem.”

Pearls are produced by mermaids that inhabit the shores.

There were also pearls that were naturally generated, but they were few in number compared to pearls that were created through the care of mermaids, and their luster and size were incomparable.

Therefore, pearls were considered to be gems made by mermaids.

If the distribution of pearls is suddenly cut off, there is a very high probability that the problem is related to the mermaids.

“I’ll send people to see what’s going on.”

Pearls were the main distribution product of this estate.

Pearls produced on the East Coast were precious metals that were hard to come by.

It had to be traded in big cities, not on the coast.

This estate was the link between the wealthy aristocrats in the center and the producers on the coast.

Since pearl trading was one of the main sources of income for the estate, the lord took this matter seriously.

The High Seeker and Kirikiri decided to go directly to the beach and check the problem.

The people sent by the lord may investigate the problem, but they will not be able to solve it right away.

It was not the style of the high seeker to spend time sitting down in the castle of the lord because of an unknown issue.

Kirikiri also agreed to go see it in person.

Apparently, she thought of all of this as an exciting and fun trip.

“The trip will be longer than I thought, will it be okay?”

To the high seeker’s question, Kirikiri replied that it was okay.

It was a deadline-less trip.

All she had to do was get a bunch of pearls at any time and return safely to the village.

It was a very peaceful tribe.

The High Seeker and Kirikiri headed to the coastal town.

* * *

A lot has happened.

Solving the problems of the mermaid village.

Scolding the evil lord.

The power of the gods descending to save the city from disaster.

Crossing the Lake of Silence.

Overcoming imperfection, becoming a god, and defeating the monster that was trying to burn the continent.

Saving the village from dragons.

The two were caught up in all sorts of surprising events.

It may not be correct to say that you are caught up in it.

When the high seeker was told there was some problem nearby, he could never ignore it.

He was mesmerized in everything and every case, trying to help with the problem.

Kirikiri didn't complain about the long journey caused by the high seeker.

There were hard and difficult times, but the trip was generally enjoyable, and Kirikiri did not hesitate to take the opportunity to help people.

When the two returned to the estate, the atmosphere had already changed.

They returned with many pearls, but the lord did not welcome them.

The lord's son was already dead.

There was no reason left for a divination.

The day the lord's son died was the day the two of them left the estate.

At that time, the lord may have expected to some extent.

That his son, who had been bedridden for a long time, had little time left.

So it would have been even more difficult.

The High Seeker and Kirikiri set off towards the Blue Mountains.

They went through many events together.

Kirikiri has become more mature.

The relationship between the two grew closer.

What used to be a relationship between an immature child and a guardian, but now they have become really close friends.

“It’s difficult.”

Kirikiri said.

The high seeker didn’t respond.

“There is no perfect world. There is no perfect order, no perfect rule and no rules.”

That was the conclusion Kirikiri came to while traveling with the high seeker.

It might be some kind of meddling.

A high seeker is an old man who has lived his entire life for one thought.

It will be difficult for him to change and let go now.

But now that their journey is coming to an end, Kirikiri wanted to say something.

“Because value is subjective and relative.”

Can a perfect and inflexible law really be justice?

Should the lord who kidnapped a rabbit to know his son’s future be punished or understood?

Should the uncle go to jail for stealing bread for his starving nephew?

Is it right to eat someone else's baby to save my own baby?

No such answer existed.

"You can't save everything, Mister."

The high seeker did not respond this time either.

It was a word he had heard many times over a long period of time.

From people, colleagues, and subordinates.

[That's right.]

Even his own sword said so.

What the high seeker wanted was simple.

He wanted to help everyone.

It was a very rustic and simple wish.

But it was not an easy wish.

By saving one, he gave up the other.

Both could not be saved.

In order to kill a demon stronger than himself, he had to burn the city.

If the killer is drowning in the river, and the victim's family is watching the killer drown across the river.

Just saving the killer will hurt the victim's family.

The high seeker found the law as a way to resolve the contradiction.

Judgment by law, punishment by law.

But there were inconsistencies in the law.

“I can do it.”

The high seeker said.

It was an issue he had been thinking about for a long time.

He was not expecting that he will have an answer himself, but he leaned on the hope that one day he will be able to find an answer.

“How?”

And after a long thought.

The high seeker found a way.

He answered Kirikiri.

“I will become a god.”

Side Story 39

Kirikiri (7)

Becoming a god.

The High Seeker believed it was possible.

He was convinced by the journey this past year, while meeting the spirit creatures who claim to be gods from all over the continent and those who have been reborn as truly divine beings.

There were two conditions for becoming a god.

Transcendent power.

The reverence and worship of all peoples.

The High Seeker was confident that both conditions could be met.

[It doesn't matter what kind of god you become.]

Can you achieve your ideals by becoming a god?

Think of the most familiar God of Light.

No matter how powerful the God of Light may be, he will not be able to achieve the ideal of the High Seeker.

[Can you?]

The sword asked.

The High Seeker didn't know either.

But he could try.

It was well worth the challenge.

[You can save a lot of people.]

There are many times when he was faced with the limits of being human.

He solves a problem at the eastern end of the continent, but cannot solve the problem at the western end of that continent.

Even if he found a wizard who could travel through space, he could not go back and forth constantly between the continent's ends.

There was a limit to magical power.

If he becomes a god, those limitations themselves will disappear.

[But if that's the end, it's no different from being an incredibly strong superhuman.]

It does not stop at solving problems.

During his decades of ruling the kingdom, he learned a lot about governance and sociology.

The majority of human motives stem from a lack of fulfillment.

But if a great god pours out all his power to support the world, there will be no shortage.

No one will be hungry.

If only he could create enough food for everyone to be satisfied.

Envy will disappear.

If everyone could have all the jewelry they want.

There will be no fights and no wars.

They have no enemies.

There will be only reconciliation.

In their monotonous life, the only stimulus that will remain is the relationship with people.

Elevated consciousness and morality will lead them to higher places.

They will explore the power of creation and contemplate a world smaller than them.

That was the world the High Seeker dreamed of.

[It may not be the world I like.]

said the sword.

He was a weapon.

He was like that even when he was a human.

He was still like that even when he became a swordsman.

He was there to kill someone.

His purpose is to protect and save someone.

What has not changed is that it is essentially a tool for reinforcement of armed forces.

[If the world were like that, I wouldn't be needed in it.]

It will be.

[And you won't be needed either.]

A perfect world.

Perfection was such a law.

If the High Seeker becomes a god, he will be able to lead such a world.

But in a world that has attained perfection, there will no longer be a need for the High Seeker.

“What's the big deal?”

There is no regret in becoming useless after achieving your ideal.

Rather, you should be rejoicing.

“I want to be that kind of god.”

It was the answer to the sword's question.

Kirikiri was quietly listening to their conversation.

* * *

The High Seeker and Kirikigiri soon arrived at the beginning of the Blue Mountains.

It was exactly the first time in a year.

Just one year had passed since the day Kirikiri met the High Seeker at the inn and, they went on a trip together.

Kirikiri was excited.

The big rucksack was now filled with dried fruit and sugar she had prepared for the other rabbits rather than camping gear.

She also got a lot of pearls, which was the purpose of the trip.

Kirikiri was proud.

Her steps up the mountain were full of strength.

When she arrived at the front of the stairs leading up to the plateau, Kirikiri was so excited that she unknowingly made a scream.

She hummed as she circled the High Seeker.

It was really crazy, but the High Seeker didn't stop Kirikiri and laughed.

The High Seeker was also happy to see the stairs.

In the beginning, he couldn't go any further up the stairs, so he went back to the village, where he met Kirikiri and traveled for a year.

Finally, he was able to climb the plateau he had been aiming for.

When the High Seeker and Kirikiri were rejoicing in their own way, there were people coming down the stairs.

It was the rabbits.

"What? Kirikiri!"

"Really Kirikiri!"

"There is a human too!"

The rabbits that were going down the stairs found Kirikiri and ran towards them.

"What? Huh?"

When Kirikiri met the rabbits under the stairs, she was both puzzled and happy.

The rabbits called with joy at the reunion after a long absence, the High Seeker was a little perplexed.

“Are they really that small?”

The rabbits that suddenly appeared were really small.

Most of them were small in stature, not even reaching Kirikiri’s waist.

Although they were in the form of a human, the legs and hair on the face and body looked more like a rabbit than a human.

There’s a reason people call them a rabbit, not a rabbit humanoid beast.

[Those are kids. Adult rabbits are a little bigger. Yes, still smaller than Kirikiri.]

He already knew that Kirikiri was beyond a human-rabbit beast

But looking at it this way, there was a really big difference between the rabbit and the Kirikiri.

Only their ears were the same.

“What’s going on here?”

Kirikiri asked.

Rabbits don’t come down stairs very well.

Rarely does it happen that these young rabbits come down with each other.

“The adults asked for it!”

“They asked us for it!”

There is a place where apple trees are in full bloom!”

“They told us to pick apples from there! This much! This much!”

One of the little rabbits said, showing a basket.

Kirikiri tilted his head.

Procurement of food is the job of the village below.

It’s something the villagers do together.

It is, of course, the job of adults to go to places far away from the village to gather food.

She couldn’t figure out why they had to send the children alone.

But it was soon ignored.

She thought that some of the children had begged them to go down to the bottom of the mountain.

“Then we’ll take care of you.”

They took the children to the place where there is an apple tree and decided to go back to the village together.

Even the High Seeker thought it would be better to help the children and enter the village together.

The High Seeker, who had visited many remote villages, knew that in order for foreigners to be welcomed, he had to put in a lot of effort.

He started walking towards the apple tree with the rabbits who had been making a lot of noise for a while.

As soon as they left, the rabbits became quiet.

The rabbit's impression he heard from Kirikiri was very loud and very distracting.

The High Seeker told Kirikiri that the rabbits were more docile than they thought.

Kirikiri smiled awkwardly.

"They must be trying hard."

The little rabbits who went out on a picnic outside the village couldn't be quiet.

They were chattering through telepathy.

"Before, I was just talking with you."

It is said that all rabbits have a mental connection, and through it they can communicate.

As long as they are in the village, they can talk as if you were right next to you, no matter how far away you are.

She said that it is not only possible to convey words, but also to understand the feelings and emotional intentions of the person you are talking to.

It was no different than having a face-to-face conversation.

It was amazing.

He wondered if that was possible.

They don't use magic, they just connect their minds as soon as they are born, and telepathy is possible.

Even the telepathy used by wizards has a higher level of telepathy that is difficult to compare with.

[Because they are basically demigods. It is not a race that developed through evolution from the beginning, but a race that was born by being derived from a god. Maybe the whole race is one individual.]

Said the sword.

[Perhaps that's why their minds are connected. Oh, this is not my opinion. That's what my colleague, the summoning wizard, said during my lifetime.]

It's a race that was born out of a god.

The High Seeker looked at Kirikiri involuntarily.

“...I can't.”

Kirikiri said as if embarrassed.

Unlike other rabbits, this means that she couldn't use telepathy...

The High Seeker thought as he walked.

Contrary to what he thought, the Rabbit Village seems to be quite quiet.

Of course, the rabbits might be chatting with excitement.

It would be a very quiet world for those who do not have telepathic abilities.

Probably the same for Kirikiri.

He looked at Kirikir's back in front of him.

He started walking again.

There really was an apple tree in the place the little rabbits were talking about.

A bunch of ripe apples were hanging.

The small baskets brought by the children quickly filled up.

They couldn't even fit all the apples from one tree.

In the end, they had to crumple the apples into the space left in Kirikiri's bag.

After diligently picking apples, they headed back to the village.

The young rabbits were walking well, then suddenly turned back.

"Let me eat one of our apples."

"No."

Kirikiri was adamant.

The young rabbits opened their eyes and looked at each other, but Kirikiri didn't even nod.

Ignoring all requests, persuasion and pleas, the rabbits jumped up and tried to steal the basket Kirikiri was holding.

Kirikiri lifted the basket over her head, and no matter how much the little rabbits jumped, they couldn't get their hands on it.

Eventually, the rabbits whined and hurried their steps again.

The High Seeker, who felt sorry for their pitiful appearance, said.

"Let's go eat a few."

It was an apple that he was only going to take away in a basket anyway.

With more apples in Kirikiri's bag, He thought it would be okay to eat a few apples in the basket.

“Good human!”

“A gentle human!”

The little rabbits cheered.

Kirikiri quickly threw herself away and sighed as she watched the rabbits clinging to the High Seeker they had never seen before.

“Yes. Then.”

There was a flat, large rock around it.

She gathered there and began to share an apple.

Kirikiri also grabbed half of the apple and ate it.

It was sweet and delicious.

Kirikiri, who left her hometown and returned after eating all kinds of sweet and delicious food in a foreign country, was really happy about the sweet and delicious apple.

The little rabbits who lived in the rabbit village, where fruits are scarce, loved it as could be seen from their wide eyes.

The High Seeker looked at her and had a question.

Why did the adult rabbits give only one small basket to the children?

There were only about a dozen apples in one basket.

If close to ten children ate them one by one, they would soon run out.

Did they think that the children would not eat the apples on the way to the village?

The rabbit that the High Seeker knows is a race that eats when hungry and sleeps when sleepy.

And they even consider that to be the right reason.

After eating half of the apple, he decided to ask Kirkiri something he had been curious about for a while.

Why did they tell the children to pick apples with each other?

The place where the apple tree was hidden was quite far from the village.

No matter how the children wanted to go outside the village, it was a street that adults had to accompany.

“Adults are busy. Hing.”

One little rabbit answered Kirikiri’s question.

“Are you very busy?”

“Yes. Today is a festival day.”

Kirikiri tilted her head.

“The festival day was last year.”

“Yes. Last year was a festival, this year it’s like a festival.”

The village festival is an event held once every ten years.

The festival held last year will not be held again this year.

However, according to the little rabbits, it seemed that the festival was held one after another this year.

It suddenly became an annual event.

It was hard to understand, but it was good news for Kirikiri.

It was a festival that she couldn't participate in to buy the pearl.

If the festival is held again this year, she will be able to participate right away without having to wait ten years.

Kirikiri was excited and moved on with her steps.

She got excited and went ahead, enough for the little bunnies to whistle not to go too fast.

Kirikiri's reckless steps were blocked in front of the stairs.

“...what.”

The entrance to the village was blocked by a transparent barrier.

Side Story 40

Kirikiri (8)

“It’s blocked!”

cried the little rabbit.

The rabbits were just as curious.

“Amazing!”

What an innocent race.

The High Seeker thought so.

The way back home was blocked, but instead of being anxious, they were curious and amazed.

The entrance to the stairs was blocked by a wall.

It was an empty space where nothing could be seen, but when they put their hand on it, they could feel the transparent and hard wall.

The High Seeker looked at Kirikiri, but Kirikiri didn’t seem to know anything about the wall either.

So did the little rabbits.

[They say they are in the middle of a festival, so maybe it’s preventing outsiders from coming in.]

said the sword.

“No.”

The High Seeker answered.

There is no way the rabbit village will install a transparent wall just because it wants to block outsiders.

Outsiders cannot climb the stairs without the rabbit's help.

Even the High Seeker tried to climb the stairs alone but gave up and came down.

It was unlikely that other humans would be able to climb the stairs on their own.

Moreover, it did not make sense to leave the young rabbits outside the village and block the entrance.

If it were a human, it would be considered an error that occurred during communication, but it was not a mistake that rabbits could make because they were connected with their minds and could communicate at all times.

[What are you going to do?]

The sword asked.

The High Seeker didn't answer right away.

He thought he should have climbed straight up when he met the little rabbits earlier.

The High Seeker looked at the little rabbits.

The little rabbits were looking at the stairs blankly, then looking at each other's faces over and over again.

And having conversations among themselves.

As they talk, they will come to a conclusion.

The High Seeker thought about it.

That wall is not a wall to block out ordinary outsiders.

It would make sense to think this way.

That wall was built to prevent anyone from going up the stairs at will.

The young rabbits were sent out by the adult rabbits.

What should he do?

Is it right to take the little rabbits and wait for the wall to disappear?

Of course, that's normal behavior.

However, the High Seeker could not stop his desire to climb the stairs and head to that plateau.

From the moment he descended from the throne, his heart was there.

He didn't even know why.

His own sense pointed to the rabbit village above the plateau.

It's been like this since he learned that a mysterious rabbit race lived on that plateau.

Now that he was blocked in front of the stairs, that feeling was stronger than ever.

It was whispering that he should go up right away.

The High Seeker met Kirikiri a year ago and on the day he went on a trip, he was blocked in front of these stairs.

It was the same situation now.

But it felt different.

At the time, it was a pity that he couldn't go up, and it was hard not to know how to do it, but he wasn't impatient.

But right now, he couldn't climb right away, so he was impatient and anxious.

"This doesn't feel good..."

The High Seeker mumbled unconsciously.

Maybe it's just a matter of feeling.

But lately, the High Seeker has been experiencing a strange phenomenon.

Whenever he felt like something good was going to happen, he was reunited with a friend he had met in his youth when he was wandering the continent.

When he thought something bad was going to happen, he got caught up in an unexpected accident.

[Let's break it down and go up. That's not a dimensional distortion barrier of the stairs. It's just a transparent magic wall. If you want to break it, you can break it.]

said the sword.

"...what do you mean break?"

The High Seeker really had the idea to say yes to the sword, but he refused for a moment.

He can't break down someone else's house just because it has a door on it.

Hearing that, the rabbits responded.

“What!?”

“What!?”

They seemed surprised at the radical idea of suddenly breaking the wall.

The High Seeker really tried to explain that he wasn't talking about breaking down the wall, he was just answering the sword's words.

But the rabbits shouted with their eyes shining brightly.

“Let's break it!”

“Can you break it?”

It was a surprisingly enthusiastic response.

The High Seeker was perplexed.

“Break it!”

The young rabbits were violent.

The High Seeker looked at Kirikiri.

Kirikiri did something really unexpected.

She just turned her head and pretended not to notice.

It was a simple idea.

Kirikiri wanted to participate in the festival.

She was blocked by a mysterious and bizarre wall and she didn't want to blow away her chance to attend the festival.

That doesn't mean she can agree with breaking the wall, though, so she just pretended not to know.

“Break it!”

“Break it!”

The rabbits were shouting to destroy the wall.

[Break it!]

[Break it!]

A certain god, who likes extremeness as much as rabbits, took part in it.

As a paladin and follower of the faithful god of light, the High Seeker decided to pretend he didn't hear the truth.

He asked instead, holding Kirikiri as he turned around and watched the scenery of the Blue Mountains.

“How about using the golden sword?”

If he was really going to break through the wall, it is better to use the golden sword that Kirikiri has than to use the power of the High Seeker.

It was much cleaner and quieter.

The golden sword that Kirikiri had pushed away all kinds of magical power.

He was able to test its performance several times during his travels.

The barriers and magic walls the warlock made were also torn apart like tofu.

Neither the priest's holy magic nor the warlock's curse was affected.

If they use that sword, they will be able to cut through that transparent wall cleanly.

On the other hand, if the High Seeker tries to break the wall, it will make a very loud roar.

Kirikiri had an unwilling expression.

She secretly wanted the High Seeker to break the door, but she seemed reluctant to go ahead and break the wall herself.

“Ugh. This wall must have been made by adults...”

Kirikiri kept hoping that the High Seeker would break the wall, but the High Seeker did not.

In the end, Kirikiri pulled out the golden sword.

“Hara’s sword!”

“Kirikiri seems to be friendly with the priest.”

“Amazing!”

Seeing the golden sword, the young rabbits made a commotion again.

They were consistent rabbits.

The rabbits liked the golden sword because it was pretty.

Only the God of Light complained that he didn’t like it.

Kirikiri fumbled through the air, looking for the transparent wall.

She thrust the golden sword into the transparent wall and swung it around.

As expected, the transparent wall was cut through without any resistance.

Kirikiri cut the transparent wall and made a hole.

When the transparent wall had been cut, there was no difference on the surface.

But she knew for sure that there was a hole in the wall.

As soon as there was a hole in the wall, a strong energy was pouring out.

It was an ominous and terrible energy.

It was coming up from the rabbit village on the high plateau through the stairs that followed.

“...let’s go up quickly.”

The High Seeker could only say that.

The little rabbits ran up the stairs eagerly on their own.

The High Seeker went up holding hands with Kirikiri.

Unlike when he went up alone, as he went up the stairs, the surrounding landscape changed.

And the ominous energy emanating from the village grew stronger.

[This is bad.]

said the sword.

Yes this was bad.

The High Seeker has experienced all kinds of hell.

He also experienced the underground city that summoned the Great Demon through personal exaltation.

He once invaded the stronghold of the warlocks who created all kinds of plagues.

There were times when tens of thousands of people were killed on the battlefield.

However, the ominousness flowing down from that rabbit village was not like that.

It was beyond the level of ominousness that could be evoked through human corpses and death.

It is the power of a god, not a mortal.

It also has an ominous energy that makes you shiver.

The High Seeker grabbed Kirikiri's hand and ran forward.

He intercepted the rabbits that were going ahead.

“Guys.....”

The High Seeker thought he shouldn't send the little rabbits up there.

Never.

He would send the kids down the stairs, and he thinks that only himself and Kirikiri should go up and solve the problem.

He was going to say that.

Before the High Seeker could say anything, the rabbits made eye contact with each other and then suddenly disappeared.

They have crossed the border of the dimension used by rabbits.

“...I can't catch them either.”

Kirikiri said.

The High Seeker clenched his teeth.

The two started running up the stairs again.

At the end of the stairs, the village began to appear.

They arrived at the lower village where Kirikiri lived.

The village was empty.

They passed the lower village and headed towards the upper village.

A strong smell of blood.

It was full of the smell of blood that had not yet decayed.

It was wet.

The High Seeker soon noticed that the moisture in the air was soaked with blood.

After a long, long uphill road, they finally arrived at the upper village.

At the entrance to the village stood the young rabbits who had gone ahead.

Whatever they saw, sharp claws flew out and grabbed the young rabbits that had been standing idly and carried them away.

The High Seeker, who was still going uphill, tried to stop it somehow.

He was unable to catch the young rabbits in a few moments.

The village the rabbits call the upper village was spread out on a wide plateau.

The plateau that should have been originally green was dyed red.

A monster.

There were no words to express it other than that.

A pair of gigantic eyes gleamed in the haze of blood.

Beast eyes.

Hundreds of long and gigantic arms.

At the end of such an arm, there was a hand that looked strong and plump.

The rabbits were held in each hand.

A strong, gigantic hand was squeezing the rabbits.

Blood was leaking out of the skin.

Unable to withstand the pressure, the body bursts.

Blood gushed out through the ruptured hole.

The rabbit did not die easily.

In a situation where a human should have died suddenly, the children continued to bleed and suffer.

They didn't even scream.

Even the High Seeker couldn't help but be taken aback by the silent hell.

He soon remembered that the rabbits were screaming through their minds, not their voices.

Among them, there was only one rabbit that was spewing out words.

Kirikiri recognized the rabbit.

It was the priest Hara, who had sent her out of town.

To the pain that squeezed his body.

He couldn't speak properly because of the suffocation.

Kirikiri could understand what he was trying to convey.

Why are you back

Run away

A huge hand flew through the mist of blood.

Kirikiri, who had been white, couldn't even think of avoiding that hand.

The High Seeker hurriedly tried to block it, but a huge hand blew the High Seeker away and grabbed Kirikiri.

It wasn't the hand.

It was the will of the Tribal God.

The will of a god that held Kirikiri pulled Kirikiri.

Kirikiri met the big eyes of the Tribal God right in front.

The god's eyes looked at Kirikiri silently.

Yellow eyes.

Black and red pupils.

[Be in more pain.]

God's will flowed into her mind.

That was the will of the Tribal God.

I gave birth to you.

Now be a part of me again.

Be my food.

The Tribal God, who was looking at Kirikiri like that, then said.

[You are not a rabbit.]

Side Story 41

Kirikiri (9)

[You are not a rabbit.]

Said the yellow eyes.

The Tribal God she encountered for the first time in her life denied her identity.

In fear, Kirikiri understood and accepted.

If anyone else had said that, Kirikiri would have refuted it.

She could have shouted that she was a rabbit.

But she could not even dare to question the Tribal God, the birthplace of all rabbits.

[Your blood is mixed.]

All the rabbits that were born from the Tribal God were part of the Tribal God.

Although the number has increased through breeding over the generations, all members of the tribe share the same source of the Tribal God.

The only exception was Kirikiri.

[Hmm.]

The Tribal God looked at Kirikiri and agonized.

In front of the giant Tribal God's eyes that looked around her, poor Kirikiri could do nothing but tremble.

[It doesn't matter.]

The Tribal God has decided.

Now, even a speck of strength was a pity.

The human blood is low.

Numerous spirit creatures and demons are trying to gain rank using humans.

It would be fine to eat at least one half human.

[Let's connect first.]

The Tribal God was a different being from the insignificant monsters who gathered power while using human bodies.

It was a being that was truly classified as a god.

He was a being who knew how to use his power as a god.

He was also cruel and cunning.

To the extent that he gave up a part of himself to create a beast race, and re-absorbed the beast race that had increased in number through breeding. This was the method he came up with to increase his power.

Because he was such a Tribal God, he did not cut off Kirikiri's head and immediately chew her corpse like a wild beast.

Instead, he took a slightly nobler method.

The Tribal God's hair grew long.

The tip of his hair, which moved like a giant snake, was as sharp as a spear.

The hair turned behind Kirikiri and stabbed the back of her neck.

Kirikiri's body dropped.

* * *

[You are not a rabbit.]

Said the Tribal God.

Said the priest Hara.

Said the rabbits.

Said the rabbits from the upper village and a little higher village.

Said the rabbits of the same age.

[Kirikiri doesn't understand what you're saying.]

[Suffocating.]

[Kirikiri looks different from us.]

[Strange.]

[Kirikiri is not a rabbit.]

Said her mother, who she had never seen her face in her life.

[Kirikiri is not a rabbit.]

Said her father, who had suddenly left one day, leaving Kirikiri alone.

[We are not rabbits.]

She couldn't remember the face.

It was obvious.

No one had ever said anything like that to Kirikiri.

The kind and gentle rabbits knew Kirikiri's troubles.

No matter how young and immature the rabbit was, they did not speak words that would hurt Kirikiri.

Neither her mother, whom she had never seen, nor her father, who she could not remember the face, said so.

[I am not a rabbit.]

Kirikiri was talking to herself.

It was her anxiety, her sense of inferiority.

The memories passed quickly.

As she recalled each of the troubled and agonizing moments, her consciousness sunk deeper.

Kirikiri, who pulled out the memories sleeping unconsciously, soon reached what had been sleeping at the end.

Kirikiri's consciousness, who reached the source, was connected with it.

[Kirikiri? It's a pretty name.]

[Kirikiri.]

[Kirikiri.]

[Can you hear me?]

[She can't seem to hear it.]

[I think we should call her out with our voices.]

[Wow. It's been six years since I spoke with my voice.]

[Excited!]

[What should I say?]

[How about this. Welcome back to your hometown]

“Kirikiri. Welcome back to your hometown!”

Said the priest Hara.

Kirikiri realized.

She knows that the memories of seeing herself are the memories of when she first came to the Rabbit Village, ten years ago.

Priest Hara stared at her for a long time, and then he shouted welcome.

The young Kirikiri was terrified.

[Kirikiri!]

[I picked up raspberries!]

[Come and eat quickly too! They'll all be gone by the evening.]

[You idiot. Kirikiri can't hear you. You have to go and tell her.]

[What do we do? Kirikiri lives in the village below. She'll run out of raspberries before I bring them in.]

[I have to hide a few.]

One day, adult rabbits picked up a basket of raspberries.

Kirikiri only found out about it in the evening.

In the evening, all the raspberries were gone.

Kirikiri was disappointed.

She was so upset that she felt shocked.

While she was the only one unaware, she was so saddened that the rabbits from all over the town were eating raspberries.

When she returned home with some raspberries hidden in her hands that Hara the priest had brought her, she wept alone and ate the raspberries.

[Will Kirikiri be annoyed with us?]

[I do not know.]

[Because she can't hear my heart.]

The rabbits were also worried about communication.

Kirikiri was the only one who couldn't read the heart in Rabbit Village.

In front of an emotional stranger they encountered for the first time, the rabbits were shy and anxious.

The conversations of the rabbits continued to be heard.

It was like reading old letters in a mailbox.

They were conversations stored in a spirit world.

Even the thoughts and emotions that the rabbits felt at that time remained the same.

She recalled conversations that had been so long ago, but Kirikiri had not heard yet.

Among the conversations of the rabbits, there was also a story about Kirikiri's parents.

[In the end, even a human doctor could not save her.]

[It was a very dangerous birth.]

[How pitiful.]

[How old is she?]

[Five years old.]

[He wants to live in the village with her daughter.]

[Good. We should be family to both of them.]

[I like it too.]

[Me too.]

These were the stories the rabbits did not tell.

Kirikiri's father didn't even tell her.

[Humans die too easily]

[Is she ill?]

[He shouldn't be allowed to stay in our village. This place is too high for humans to live.]

[...How do I explain it to Kirikiri?]

[Huh.....]

It was a story Kirikiri had never heard of.

Her dad actually suffered from altitude sickness.

[I can't speak.]

[The child lost both her parents. She may not be able to endure.]

[We.....]

That he didn't abandon her and left.

The conversation continued.

[God is back.]

[We can't refuse.]

[Let's run away.]

[Where. How.]

[Let's hide the children. If we have a few children, even God will not notice.]

[Not everyone can hide. God will find out.]

[What about Kirikiri?]

[I have to get her out of town.]

[Kirikiri can run away.]

The conversation in the spirit world shared by the rabbits continued.

Continued and continued.

From the past to the present.

She was able to read not only the conversation but also the memories the rabbits had experienced.

The closer she got to the present, the clearer the memory.

Kirikiri saw the memory of the next door aunt Rabbit knocking on her door.

She saw the fortune-telling that Hara the priest saw as he broke hundreds of pearls.

She looked at Hara's memories as he watched Kirikiri weeping as she sat down on the steps in embarrassment.

Kirikiri felt a chill as she turned the memories of the rabbits in reverse chronological order.

Left behind was an ominous feeling, followed by horror.

The festival was held.

A year later, the festival was held again.

The Tribal God appeared on the plateau.

Priest Hara could not contain his agitation.

Every rabbit in town read his thoughts.

He soon foresaw that death was approaching them.

His prediction was only half right.

Their god had no intention of killing the rabbits right away.

Hundreds of gigantic, strong hands spouted out and grabbed the rabbits and shook them.

As if extinguishing a torch by rubbing it on the ground, the rabbits were pressed against the ground.

Tossed, hit, and rolled to the ground like a ball.

He ripped their arm with his fingers and pressed their stomach to make them vomit blood.

The rabbits screamed in pain.

Kirikiri could feel all the things as if they were her own senses.

Kirikiri couldn't do anything because of the pain that was transmitted through her mentally.

She was tired of the cruelty.

There were other emotions hidden in the pain.

There was satisfaction.

She felt a sense of proudness and fullness.

Only then did Kirikiri understand.

Kirikiri was not connected with the minds of the rabbits.

She was connected to the Tribal God.

The Tribal God was satisfied with the suffering of the rabbits.

Kirikiri couldn't comprehend it.

In her own suffering, the suffering is enough to lead to death.

She feels the pain of all the rabbits in the village who are like her family.

She had a foreboding of her own death, and she also foresaw the death of other rabbits.

It was beyond cruel.

The rabbits felt betrayal, fear and despair towards the Tribal God, who is the parent of all rabbits.

She felt a mixture of so many evil emotions that she couldn't even comprehend.

Is it possible to feel and be satisfied with all of this?

Just as the Tribal God was like parents to rabbits.

To the Tribal God, rabbits are children, and they are no different from his own limbs.

This was beyond arrogance.

'How... Seeing, hearing and feeling all these things, to be satisfied with that.'

Kirikiri's doubts reached the Tribal God.

Like all other rabbits, it was also possible for Kirkiri because she was connected with the Tribal God.

The Tribal God answered Kirikiri's question.

[That is the most powerful force. Mixed breed.]

The Tribal God moved the hand holding Kirikiri so she can look better at the suffering of the rabbit.

It was different from feeling through the mind and seeing it with your own eyes.

The wide plateau has always been the pride of rabbits.

The rabbits used to say that they live in the most beautiful place in the world.

When they looked at the end of the wide plateau, it seemed as if it was the end of the world.

There was no mountain on the continent as high as the Blue Mountains, and the only place higher than the plateau where the rabbits lived was the top of the Blue Mountains.

Turning around once in place, it seemed as if this plateau was the whole of the world.

The green field and the blue sky were close to each other like a blanket.

Although it was an alpine area where no mountain animals could walk and no delicious fruit was produced, this was the reason the rabbits did not abandon the plateau in the end.

It was such a beautiful place.

It was a special land that the rabbits considered sacred.

The blue world was dyed red.

Pieces of flesh rolled on the floor.

The rabbits with strong vitality spewed out a surprisingly large amount of blood.

The blood that flowed out was so wet that the ground was wet.

Their homeland was no longer beautiful, warm, or comfortable.

[Suffer more. Be more angry and frustrated. That resentment is the most valuable thing you can throw out.]

Kirikiri felt as if the world was falling apart.

In fact, it was the end of the world for her.

In her despair, Kirikiri saw a light.

It was too big and intense to turn away.

According to Kirikiri's awareness, the Tribal God also noticed the light's existence.

The human he thought he had killed a while ago was still alive and awake.

He sure must have exploded and died.

What the man had in his hands was a power so great that it was hard to believe that he was a human.

The Tribal God had no choice but to panic.

[Human... how.....]

The high seeker, who had blood all over his body, had a face more like a demon than anyone else in the world.

He was holding a sword shining like the sun.

Side Story 42

Kirikiri (10)

‘Am I too old?’

The High Seeker opened his eyes.

He sensed aging.

It was a monotonous and direct attack.

When the Tribal God of rabbits tried to snatch Kirikiri, the High Seeker blocked it.

The hand of the Tribal God blew away the High Seeker as if he was a fly.

There was no finesse or complicated form in that movement.

So the High Seeker thought.

While he wasted time sitting on the throne, did his superhuman body eventually grow old?

It wasn't.

The High Seeker got up and thought.

The Tribal God's finger stroke was simple, but it was more powerful than that.

The High Seeker always had confidence.

He had even cut the head of a mad giant who said it would kill people who broke their promise.

He had even hunted the creatures who were rioting and wanted to become a god.

But that Tribal God was different.

It wasn't a monster who wanted to become a god, it was a real god.

It was different from the enemies he had encountered before.

It was powerful enough to turn the High Seeker nervous with a single stroke of a finger.

His vision was dark.

He could see the surrounding landscape beyond his incomplete field of vision.

The surrounding land was all dug up.

Even if an Archmage used explosion magic with all his power, such a huge crater would not occur.

The madness of the Tribal God was heard from afar.

His body's magical power fluttered.

The magical power oscillated as if it wanted to follow that voice, trying to escape from his body.

It took concentration to regain control.

The High Seeker grabbed his sword with his slightly trembling hands.

The sword roared.

The familiar swords reassured the High Seeker.

[Are you okay? You are absolutely bloody.]

“...it’s not okay. I can’t see well, and it’s difficult to breathe. It seems that all my internal organs in my body have burst out.”

[Yes, I see. But I’m glad your head did not explode.]

The sword said calmly.

He wondered if he had forgotten about the pain the human body could feel because he had lived as a sword spirit for so long.

[I should have been baptized.]

said the sword.

It refers to the baptism of the God of Light.

It’s an old story.

It was the story of when the High Seeker was still a boy.

The priests who believed in the God of Light liked the High Seeker’s sword.

He had been offered to be baptized by the God of Light to make it the holy sword of the church.

If the sword obtained a divine spell using divine power along with vast magical power, the sword could become an unprecedentedly powerful ego sword.

The sword refused.

Since he already had a master, he could not serve God.

“Don’t regret it.”

There was nothing to regret.

It was the pride and support of the High Seeker.

He had no intention of denying or blaming his choice.

The High Seeker did not intend to die so easily.

The magic that had been fluctuating like crazy was put under the High Seeker's control.

Although his eyes and ears were not normal, the use of his magical power could replace the human senses.

The devastation of the field was seen again.

He could see the rabbits suffering from all over the field in the red blood mist.

The rabbits did not die in torture.

There was also the rabbits' excellent vitality, but in reality, it was because of the will of the Tribal God who was torturing them.

The power of the Tribal God was constantly reviving the rabbits even while torturing them.

It was a brutal sight.

Even the High Seeker who had been accustomed to blood for a long time thought so.

The yellow eyes of the Tribal God flashed in the red mist.

Why?

How could a god with so much power be so savage and cruel?

It wasn't just a monster with powerful abilities.

He was a god who manipulated the world and projected his will through the gaps.

If he wanted to, it was a miraculous existence capable of spreading out a better world.

It was selfish.

Why doesn't he care for others?

With that ability, it is possible to bring overwhelming happiness and peace to tens of millions of others that cannot achieve these things on their own.

Why is god not unselfish?

The rabbits sincerely followed and loved their Tribal God.

Traveling with Kirikiri, he was able to hear how much their god meant to her.

The High Seeker thought that if he were to become a god, he would like to be like the god of rabbits.

Taking care of tens of millions of humans would be different from governing dozens of rabbit villages.

But ultimately, he wanted to create a world like a rabbit village where everyone lives peacefully and happily without any worries.

The appearance of the rabbit village I heard from Kirikiri was the utopia that High Seekers dreamed of.

The utopia was being destroyed by its creator.

[There is a way to escape.]

said the sword.

The High Seeker shook his head.

[You idiot. It's you, not me, who dies. I died three hundred years ago, and I'm just a soul clinging to the sword.]

The sword did not stop his persuasion.

[Look at the story in the legend. There is no story of a human being who cut down the gods anywhere. It's impossible in the first place. Even in human imagination. There are stories of knights who tamed dragons, stories of warriors who killed giants and sea monsters, and stories of paladins who defeated demons, but there are no stories of humans who killed gods.]

The High Seeker laughed.

From dragons to giants and sea monsters to demons.

“They're all things I've killed once.”

If so, isn't it time to cut down on God?

If it's unprecedented, then I'll be the first.

[...I hope you don't die here. You have some ideals that you haven't achieved yet. When you die, that will become nothing.]

“Yes. You can't achieve your ideals when you die.”

[Of course.]

“But I think it is an ideal that cannot be achieved by compromise.”

He didn't want to scale it.

He didn't want to pick one and throw the other away.

[...fucking little boy. You never let me win once in my life.]

The air began to boil.

His vision was distorted by the excessive heat concentrated on the sword.

A strong light emanated from the tip of the sword.

[Is this the third time?]

This is the third use of the light sword.

He's been training all the time, but he seldom uses it in practice.

It was a technique that was unavoidably brought out in a desperate situation that could not be overcome by ordinary methods.

It is a skill that was discovered by chance while practicing the skill that the sword had handed down.

At first, it was used only as a shining sword.

Monsters accustomed to darkness suffered whenever the flashing sword was swung.

It was also good to get people's attention.

However, as the development progressed, it became a difficult technology to use easily.

The power was too much

The High Seeker, who often fought to protect someone, could not use the light sword that burned all over the place.

He also had a problem with hurting people around him, but his own body could not withstand the heat of the light sword.

He needed a few months of recuperation after one use.

Despite the care of the priests, the High Seeker's body was full of dark burn marks.

The light sword was too heavy for his sword as well.

[I'm sure I will melt this time.]

The sword sensed his own end.

When it was used before, the sword had barely withstood the heat.

If it hadn't been for the ego sword that could use magic to protect itself, it would have melted away earlier.

That Tribal God was the worst opponent in comparison to the enemies they had encountered before.

They had to get the maximum output.

Still, they weren't sure they could win.

"It's fine. You won't melt."

The High Seeker said.

"Even if I sat on the throne, I did not neglect my training."

The High Seeker was clearly aware of the problems with his own technique.

He was always looking for a solution.

[Can I help you?]

A voice whispered.

There is only one person who would give a helping hand to the High Seeker.

The God of Light.

‘Thank you. God. But that’s fine.’

The High Seeker declined that help.

Instead, he focused on the light on the tip of the sword.

That light is his.

Shining solely towards his enemies according to his will.

It’s his light.

The Tribal God noticed the High Seeker in the light and heat.

The High Seeker swung his sword without delay.

As the sword was swung, the light on the sword was radiated forward.

Kwaaaang!

The world rang.

The loud noise resounding from the plateau located in the highest mountain range on the continent spread all over the place.

The grass, which had been soaked in the blood of rabbits, burned up.

A mist of blood burned.

The light sword struck directly at the bright yellow eyes of the Tribal God.

[Kaaak!]

The god screamed.

The blood mist disappeared, revealing the face of the Tribal God.

The Tribal God looked like a giant wolf.

It was a monstrous figure with a wolf's face, odd, ragged nails, and hundreds of hands.

[How can a human.....! How can this kind of fire burn my body!]

The whole area was a sea of fire.

In the midst of the craze, the High Seeker stood upright.

He didn't even fall down in the aftermath of the light sword.

His skin didn't burn.

The sword he was holding didn't even melt.

Even the rabbits caught by the Tribal God were not affected by the heat.

The fire that burned even the body of a god followed the will of the High Seeker and burned only his enemies.

[I might be the first sword in history to kill a god.]

said the sword.

Although the consumption of magical power is enormous, a light sword that can be used without any recoil.

He thought there might be a chance.

“Concentrate. Let's go again.”

[Okay.]

The two of them joined forces once again and began to wield the sword of light.

* * *

[Kaaak!]

The Tribal God screamed.

It was a terrible pain.

It was a terrible feeling.

It was the first pain he felt since being a creature with reason that appeared on the continent and became a god after receiving the envy of countless life and death.

The agony he had forgotten for tens of thousands of years awakened his mortal fear of death.

[This little bug!]

Discomfort, embarrassment, and fear were mixed.

This is how humans feel when they see a killer wasp entering a house.

The survival instinct takes away composure, but inspires activeness.

The Tribal God did the best he could at that moment.

He was hit directly by a huge light and his face caught fire.

As soon as he saw the mysterious human wielding his sword once more, the Tribal God ate the rabbits.

He didn't eat them all with his mouth.

They were creatures under the will of a Tribal God.

When the will was manifested, the rabbits' bodies disappeared as they were.

Only their souls were drawn and absorbed by the Tribal God.

[Be my strength.]

[Be absorbed.]

Rabbits were part of the Tribal God and were the seeds sown for harvest.

Faced with an unknown enemy, the Tribal God, who was urgently in need of strength, tried to recover those forces.

[Be me again.]

The souls of the rabbits that had been sucked into his body melted one by one and began to become one with god.

In it, there was a rabbit who resisted becoming one with god.

Kirikiri said to her god.

'No.'

Side Story 43

Kirikiri (11)

‘No.’

What Kirikiri spat out was a clear refusal.

The price came quickly.

Kirikiri’s ego, which had already become a soul and was being absorbed by the Tribal God, was feeling excruciating pain.

Having lost her body, she lost her sense of physical pain.

So instead, the Tribal God reassembled Kirikiri’s memories during her lifetime, allowing her to experience mental pain.

Kirikiri felt the feelings of the Tribal God in her pain.

Unacceptance.

Bother.

Petulance.

Hassle.

That was the feeling the Tribal God was feeling.

To the Tribal God, Kirikiri was a worm that had to die when she was crushed.

He was doing the same when watching Kirikiri trying to maintain her ego to survive.

In the pain, Kirikiri endured a mixture of all her painful memories and experiences without breaking down.

She didn't want to just disappear, as the Tribal God intended.

But she was fleeting.

She would only prolong her time of suffering pointlessly, but Kirikiri was holding out.

[You're bothering me.]

The Tribal God was annoyed.

He was annoyed, and at the same time impatient.

One mixed breed, who has already been eaten and may have her ego clouded, is interfering with the absorption.

It would have been better if she was human, but she apparently also had rabbit blood.

It was really annoying.

Normally, it would have been rather interesting to torment that stupid soul.

But not now.

The Tribal God shook his head.

The bright yellow eyes turned forward again.

There was a man who set the world on fire.

The fire that burns the plateau makes even the sky dyed red.

It couldn't even be called a plateau anymore.

The blue mountains were burning like a burning wreath.

The fire flew like waves.

Flames wriggling unnaturally like a living snake surrounded the man.

It was a sight that clearly showed that the flames and heat filled here were moving according to the will of that person.

It was truly a marvelous sight.

Is that a human or the one who rules the spirits of the world?

He couldn't tell if it was the Spirit King or not.

But that wasn't the problem.

Humans who freely handle flames and heat, and their destructive power, were not a problem.

The real problem is that the Tribal God is being damaged by that fire.

The Tribal God swept and touched his face.

He forcibly ripped off his beard and fur that had been burned by the fire.

The body of the god was burned with firepower.

It's impossible.

Divine power exists above all powers.

No physical force can exceed the position of divine power.

In front of divine power, it was no different than a pebble thrown by a child towards either a stream or a meteorite falling from the sky.

Only the same divine power could harm divine power.

Does that man have a god on his back?

If not,

Was he stepping into the realm of God himself?

He didn't know. It could be both.

Given that crazy sight, it was most likely both.

He was taken aback by the sudden attack.

He was startled by the pain that he had forgotten even existed.

However, once the embarrassment passed, the Tribal God was able to examine the situation calmly.

Greed aroused within him.

That's it.

He has to eat that.

That human was a different kind of food from raising rabbits and eating them.

A human with divine powers.

It wasn't an easy match.

In order to eat it, the chaos that existed within the Tribal God himself had to be put to rest.

'I'm Kirikiri!'

Kirikiri, who persisted in asserting herself, was like a thorn in his mouth.

How could it be that he couldn't absorb that tiny being?

If that little being is part of god, the story is different.

All rabbits were part of the Tribal God.

That hybrid rabbit was also part of the Tribal God.

It was not good for a part of the Tribal God, no matter how small it might be, to keep saying things that denied his will.

His divinity responds sensitively.

[You are not a rabbit!]

The Tribal God made a quick rebuttal.

He denied her identity as a rabbit in Kirikiri.

If only the human, not rabbit, were left, then Kirikiri could not do anything but argue within the Tribal God.

[I am a rabbit!]

However, Kirikiri did not give in despite the constant pain.

She did not abandon her identity even before the god who created the race.

The impatient Tribal God summoned all the memories he knew.

In the memory of the Tribal God, which had been built up for aeons of time, the times of suffering that were like all kinds of disaster were recorded.

[You are not me!]

Kirikiri persevered.

The Tribal God, whose eyes had turned to the High Seeker in front of him, came up with a special measure.

He completely gave up on absorbing Kirikiri.

He denied part of himself.

Immediately after the Tribal God's declaration, a small piece of flesh fell from the Tribal God's body.

It was as if an eyeball had been pulled out of the eye.

The flesh was connected by a thin thread and hung on the body of the Tribal God.

The Tribal God exclaimed as if he was relieved.

[Finally dropped!]

The High Seeker, who was swinging his sword towards the Tribal God, while raging in flames, stopped.

That bizarre piece of flesh that suddenly appeared was in the shape of a rabbit.

And the shape looked like the Kirikiri the High Seeker had seen every day for the past year.

[Haha.]

The Tribal God looked at it and laughed.

He remembered that the hybrid rabbit and that man had climbed the plateau together.

It was not difficult to guess the relationship between the two.

The Tribal God threatened the High Seeker by putting forward the flesh on which Kirikiri was hung.

The High Seeker took a step back.

[You are a man of great skill in handling fire. I'll show you I can do that too!]

The Tribal God shouted.

The High Seeker was controlling the fire everywhere.

However, the Tribal Gods knew.

That man is not resistant to fire.

He actually knew that if he was set on fire, he would die as shabby as a fly in a campfire.

The transcendent divine power that that man was showing was only because he was surrounded by flames he had created himself.

A strong vibration was felt from the ground.

There was a sound like thunder.

It was all coming out of the ground on which he was standing.

The Tribal God that existed since ancient times remembered that the mountain they were standing on was originally a volcano that spews out lava.

The Tribal God laughed with satisfaction.

He wanted to see if that human would be able to stand aloof even if the blue mountain range was submerged in lava.

[Let's see where you can withstand lava.]

[You are not a rabbit.]

[You are not me]

The Tribal God said

In the past, she might have agreed.

She was immersed in a feeling of inferiority and was always anxious and passive in everything.

If she hadn't ventured with the High Seeker for a year, she probably would have stayed the way she was.

It was an eventful journey for her.

It was not that there was a moment of great change within her in that adventure.

But she gained experience.

She went around with the High Seeker and she got to know the world.

The vague appearance of the world became concrete.

She came to understand society.

She learned about people's relationships and communication again.

The more she broadened her knowledge, the more she came to know herself in front of the world.

In a huge and mysterious world, Kirikiri was a very small existence.

Just like all other beings.

She became aware of her own smallness.

She was able to correct her self-consciousness that way.

She wasn't perfect.

But she was her.

In front of the Tribal God's will, which is the answer to her world, Kirikiri was able to speak of her own existence.

'I'm a rabbit.'

'I'm Kirikiri.'

It was a rebuttal of the divine will that created her race, that was her source, and that was the answer.

God said she was not a rabbit.

God said she wasn't 'her'.

Kirikiri returned her own answer to the Tribal God.

'You are not my god.'

Kirikiri, who existed as part of a Tribal God, denied the Tribal God himself.

The Tribal God couldn't handle it.

* * *

The vibration of the earth, which seemed to split a huge mountain range in two, subsided.

Instead, the body of the Tribal God was collapsing.

As if there had been an earthquake, the skin was cracking and falling to the ground.

[This crazy thing...]

The Tribal God looked at the flesh that had fallen from him with hateful eyes.

The flesh, whose shape was somewhat unclear, had the appearance of a complete Kirikiri.

‘You are not my god.’

Ungrateful thing.

You wouldn’t be able to repay the kindness I’ve created for you, but how dare you say that.

He was offended.

But it was even more disconcerting.

The Tribal God never imagined that a single word from Kirikiri would shake up his divinity.

To him, rabbits have always been subject to his will, so he never thought about what would happen if they didn’t.

[You are not my God.]

The problem was getting even worse.

Things that had been sleeping inside were awakening.

The shape of Kirikiri, connected with the Tribal God by a thread, was distorted.

Kirikiri’s neck split in two, and a new head appeared.

It was the face of another rabbit.

The rabbit's face said.

[You are not my god.]

The Tribal God felt terrified.

The faces of rabbits appeared from Kirikiri's back, neck, stomach, and arms.

[You are not my god.]

These little things.

They were leaving him and moving to that mixed breed rabbit.

Each of those souls was his own strength, and they were a part of it.

It had nothing to do with the rabbits' souls leaving.

Each time, his power disappeared in a mass.

His divinity was shaking precariously.

The Tribal God hastily found a way.

The last strand that connects him and Kirikiri.

A thin thread caught his eye

The Tribal God tried to cut it off.

He grabbed it with his hand and bit it with his teeth.

There was no divine dignity to be found in that action.

It was nothing more than a dog devouring tough meat.

[No... No!]

In the meantime, all the souls of the countless rabbits that have existed have gone out.

The huge body of the Tribal God began to collapse.

Abandoned by his worshipers, the god gradually turned into a shabby and small figure.

The appearance of the rabbits, which had been divided into hundreds or thousands, was soon arranged into a single individual.

In the place where the flesh had been, all that was left was Kirikiri's figure again.

Representing all the rabbits, Kirikiri said.

[You are not our God.]

At the same time as her words, the thread that connected the Tribal God and Kirikiri was cut.

No matter how hard the Tribal God tried, the thread that could not be cut was cut too easily in front of the will of the rabbits.

[No! This can't be!]

The Tribal God screamed, but no one listened to it.

His divinity chose the rabbits.

[What are you doing? Smash it now!]

Cried the sword.

The High Seeker was hesitant.

The sword looked at the High Seeker and shouted.

[This crazy bastard. Are you going to leave him alone until he dies because you don't want to kill her with your own hands?]

The sword was strongly criticizing him, but the High Seeker did not move.

Eventually, the thread that connected the Tribal God and Kirikiri was cut.

As soon as he saw that, the High Seeker did not hesitate any longer and swung his sword.

* * *

What happened that day became a myth.

As a result, the two who survived there became gods, so it could be said that the myth was correct.

The rabbits freed from the Tribal God became gods themselves.

Kirikiri, who contained all the rabbits in one body, and at the same time was also Kirikiri.

The High Seeker also became a god.

All the people of the eastern continent watched the gigantic blue mountain range on fire.

That achievement was added to the phenomenal feat.

The High Seeker, who was already a superhuman close to God, began to show off his truly divine abilities.

People worshiped him as an apostle of the god of light.

The people of the kingdom where he was king began to worship him most fervently.

He was worshiped by all people and became a god.

A long time has passed.

Many things happened.

The relationship between High Seeker and Kirikiri continued even after becoming a god.

They shared the same purpose.

They followed a similar path and continued the conversation.

Kirikiri remembered all the many conversations she had with the High Seeker.

“You have to stop the gods.”

The power of God was the power of miracles, but it was also the power of disaster.

As gods, they wanted to stop the evils of other gods.

Humans had morals and laws.

But there was no such thing with the gods, and they were committed regardless of merciless slaughter or cruel play.

The High Seeker and Kirikiri agreed that even the gods needed a minimum of rules and order.

“Have you heard of the God of Origins?”

They found out about something.

About a certain god that was born at the same time as the beginning of all universes.

One day there was a rumor that the god would come to the world and everything would go back to him.

It wasn't a rumor.

It was a story circulating among the gods.

The gods were repeating the saying that before the world came, they had to obtain even a little more divinity so that they could be together with their father who was to return.

It was as if the size of their divinity would guarantee that they would maintain their egos when everything was devoured by the Primordial God.

This was the reason why spirit creatures struggle to become gods, and why the gods riot to gain greater power.

“Come with us.”

Since it was impossible to face all the gods alone, the High Seeker and Kirikiri set out to find beings with whom they would share their will.

‘Get lost, you newcomers. I am training to become an apostle of the God of Devotion.’

‘It’s impossible. If that really comes to an end, all I have to do is prove myself.’

There were times when they succeeded and times when they failed.

A long time passed again.

The gods started a war.

To prevent greater power, to prevent more sacrifices.

The wars of the gods were huge and cruel.

The gods, who seemed to be immortal, disappeared one by one.

There was no sacrifice in that war.

“...the sword is broken. Can you fix it?”

The High Seeker didn't answer.

“Let's find another sword.”

“I'll use the spear.”

“Spear?”

“I have only ever used one sword in my life. Rather than finding another sword, I will use a spear.”

The High Seeker said.

“I was originally from a who used to hold a spear. If become a god and hold a spear again, it will fit my ideology.”

There was a god who talked about himself before becoming a god.

Even in his most humble time.

The High Seeker forgot his sword and again he concentrated on what he had to do.

It was unfortunate.

The High Seeker has set his own justice to the absolute banner.

In front of that banner, the personal loss of each individual had no value.

The same was true in the face of his own loss.

It wasn't that he didn't express his sadness.

He could no longer feel sorrow.

Time has passed again.

The war was running towards its end.

The appearance of the God of Origins who was said to be the origin of the universe, which everyone had only guessed about its existence, began to appear.

The end was soon.

“Kirikiri. What are you doing!”

The God of Sky shouted.

There were two options.

The world is preyed upon, and everything stops forever.

Or, to destroy the world first.

After that, sealing the God of Origins and restoring the world again.

Looking at the spear thrown at her, Kirikiri thought.

The God of Sky is a god who can't choose either of the two options.

But Kirikiri had a choice.

Kirikiri acted again.

Kirikiri lay flat on the floor.

The fields that Yong-yong had dug up could not be restored.

Maybe she won't be able to tell if she tries hard alone.

It will take time.

A new sprout grows in the place where the grass had been pulled.

Time to fill in the dugs of wind-swept soil.

If she uses her divine power, it will be restored in an instant.

Kirikiri didn't want to do that.

Her time was a time of continuous choices.

At the crossroads of her choices, Kirikiri always pushed her own choices without hesitation.

But she's always wondered what she would be like if she had made a different choice.

She even had regrets.

As the years passed, she even thought that the choice she regretted was actually the right one.

There were many adventures.

There have been many successes and failures.

Is it good?

Is it wrong?

She couldn't figure it out.

It was a pointless question.

Until now.

The result of her choice can only be known at the end of every fork in the road, only when the adventure is over.

Because her adventure is not over yet.

She could not yet decide whether the choices she had made were right or wrong.

She turned her head.

The remnants of the pearls reflected in the corners of her eyes.

She remembered the day when she was called by Hara the priest and went to the village above.

She thought that maybe it wasn't about Lee Ho-jae's victory or defeat.

Kirikiri had a gut feeling that the end was coming.

Side Story 44

101st Floor (2)

“Hey, you talk too much. Really.”

As an act of anger, I stabbed Ahbooboo into the dragon’s corpse.

Oh, he likes blood.

I pulled him out again

Ahbooboo was very talkative.

This damn talkative sword should be a bit moderate.

How can he chat without taking a break the whole time we fight?

It wasn’t an easy fight either.

The difference between victory and defeat was a very narrow margin.

The enemy that appeared this time was a dragon.

Wearing golden armor that neither magic nor divine power works, it wields the power of the God of Order.

There was no enemy I could deal with without my divinity.

Again, I had to fight while creating divinity in the short term.

Even so, it was a battle with no guarantee of victory.

Listening to the chatter of Ahbooboo who was fluttering in the middle of the battle was a nuisance.

It felt like I was studying intensively for the entrance exam, and someone was playing a song that was banned next to me.

It would have been better to ignore it altogether.

The story was unnecessarily interesting, and I couldn't ignore it because it was such important information.

As soon as the battle was over and concentration was released, the divinity disappeared.

Damn it.

What the hell would they create an environment that would destroy your divinity?

After the weakness came the pain.

The body that had embraced the divine was screaming.

I pinched my forearm strongly.

I felt nothing.

I became insensitive to external pain and excessive pain felt inside the body.

This was the problem.

The pain is familiar, but the senses could not be paralyzed.

No matter how much I lost my powers, my sensory skills, including pain tolerance, would still be there.

The pain I had while gaining divine power was enough to ignore all those skills.

[Still, it was fun. Yes?]

Yes. Ahbooboo's story was interesting.

It was very interesting.

If it hadn't been for that, I would have given Ahbooboo a silencing spell right away.

In the past, Ahbooboo's magic skills were superior, so to stop Ahbooboo's mouth, I had no choice but to throw Ahbooboo into the inventory.

But now that wasn't the case either.

A very simple measure could be used to silence Ahbooboo.

[This story is from my point of view, so it may be different from the truth, but it is almost correct. Where would you go to take another history class like this? This is history before the world was destroyed once. No one knows it.]

That was it.

This is the story before the world is destroyed.

Of course, there were no records left.

Few would know.

It must be a story that even the God of Hope doesn't not know.

The God of Hope said that he was born at the end of the cataclysm, at the end of the world.

He didn't even know about the stories that had been going on before that.

There must be a reason why there was always a gap in the description of the God of Hope.

[Haha.]

Haha what is haha.

“By the way.”

[Yes?]

I stole Ahbooboo from the God of Sky.

I thought that the fact that Ahbooboo existed in the tutorial was proof that he had been abandoned by the God of Sky.

And as soon as he was recovered, I saw that he was divided into several pieces, put back together, and was used as a test object, so I decided that I should bring him back.

However, the relationship between Ahbooboo and the God of Sky was very different from what I had expected.

“Well, I can return you later.”

[If possible, I would like you to pay a little rent.]

It was a funny joke.

[I'm not joking.]

I started walking forward again.

The feeling returned.

I still had numbness and intermittent convulsions, but I was able to move.

It would be good to start off in good condition with plenty of rest, but thanks to Hochi coming in with me, I couldn't do that.

There wasn't much time.

The door appeared.

Since someday, this door has been appearing over and over again.

When you open the door, certain situations and enemies appear.

After defeating everything and walking for a while, a door will appear again.

It reminded me of the 13th floor of the tutorial I went through a long time ago.

A temple of goblins made up of over thirty rooms.

It was also a place that suited the theme of the gateway of trials.

It was probably made after seeing it there.

[The 13th floor. I haven't been there. A very, very long time ago, when I was a human, I went to the temple of goblins. Oh, I didn't tell you then, did I? Can I do it now?]

Again, again.

There were signs that chattering would begin again.

“Concentrate. You break if you don't concentrate like that. Then you die.”

It really was.

It's not like a sword can't be broken.

No matter how holy a sword was, it was not strange to break in battle.

If it wasn't for the sword Ahbooboo knew how to protect himself, he would have been shattered sooner.

As much as I was fighting the battle, Ahbooboo had to concentrate.

[Fine. What is there in life, no, swordsmanship? I have to do what I need to do right now and do what I want to do.]

He suddenly became a liberated sage.

Did he even come as a sage now?

[Because I have already died many times. Do you know that ? Dying isn't as bad as you think. It feels like a light load. If you have a chance, I recommend that you try to die at least once.]

I understood.

When you let go of your attachment to life, many things become easier.

The choices are wider

But it was impossible.

“You idiot, once I lose, I'm done.”

My divinity is extreme.

There is only one chance.

Even if the resurrection is planned, it is impossible to try to die once.

It was unclear how my divinity would interpret death.

If it is judged a defeat, I end there.

[The more extreme the divinity, the more dangerous it is.]

said Ahbooboo.

Who doesn't know that?

After the first sprouting of divinity, you can realize it immediately.

I thought this would hold me and shake me.

It was unavoidable.

My divinity was extreme.

That was because my situation was desperate at the time.

Enough to destroy everything around me, including myself.

[Oh. I'm the one who experienced it, and it wasn't a pleasant experience.]

"Shut up."

If Lee Yeon-hee didn't come into the tutorial.

What if Yong-yong and Hochi had not been my family?

I thought about it sometimes.

I would have probably skipped the tutorial.

It would have taken a lot longer though.

And when I came out like that, I would have gone crazy.

[What still.....]

I decided not to respond.

Instead, I opened the door.

Glittering gold was the first thing that caught my eye.

Damn it.

After leaving this place, it seems like I will hate gold for the rest of my life.

What the hell was the gold containing the power of the God of Order made of?

What is the point of destroying magic and ignoring divine power?

Its performance is so deceptive, it's almost unbelievable from an opponent's point of view.

Ignoring the gold, there was no choice but to harm the wearer directly.

Trying not to rub against that gold somehow.

I saw the enemies with golden armor and golden spears.

Those monsters.....

No, could you call those things monsters?

The identities of the enemies were the little rabbit beasts.

It looked similar to Kirikiri, but it was a little different.

If Kirikiri looked more like a human, those rabbit beasts certainly looked like tall, bipedal rabbits.

They were like the rabbits of the village where Kirikiri lived, the story of which Ahbooboo had been talking about.

They are rabbits.

It was quite meaningful.

The one we killed in the previous room was a dragon.

“Isn’t it a sea monster we killed in the previous room?”

When I opened the door, there was a beach where mermaids appeared.

A huge sea monster was protruding from the shore.

Of course, he was armed with gold containing the power of the God of Order.

Before that, fairies who ridiculed ideals appeared.

A group of human thieves appeared without end.

A long time ago, I even killed the Great Evil.

It was the same order as the enemies in the High Seeker’s journey that Ahbooboo had told of.

At this point, I could be sure.

When Kirikiri made this place.

She seemed to think that if someone challenged this place, they would surely be the God of Sky.

In fact, Ahbooboo said that the God of Sky had prepared to attack this place.

It was interesting.

Knowing the tangled secrets made it even more interesting.

What was more interesting was the behavior of the rabbits.

The rabbits suddenly threw their golden spears to the ground.

I was taken aback by the action.

I thought they were definitely going to throw it at me.

The rabbits stood in a line and folded their arms.

And lay down as it is.

It looks like... It seemed that all of them who went to a protest were lying on their back with their arms folded.

“What are you doing? You guys.”

I asked so without knowing.

The rabbits heard me and cried out in a loud voice.

“You can’t go beyond this! If you want to go, step on us!”

“That’s right. If you’re going to go, you have to step on us!”

I couldn’t help but ask.

“Why can’t I go over there?”

The rabbits explained.

“All powers must have rules. Even the gods must have rules. No matter how insensitive you are, you must not break the rules.”

So that’s it.

These are the words to the challenger who came here to control the God of Order.

At the time when this place was built, did they not think of the possibility that the God of Order would run rampant and destroy the world?

“I’m sorry, but I have to pass.”

“Don’t do it! If you’re going, step on us!”

“I’m sure you won’t be able to step on us with those big feet!”

They were funny rabbits.

The golden spear and the sword are thrown away and they are protesting.

If someone is stepping on it, why can’t they step on it?

I staggered forward.

The rabbits got up from their seats in amazement.

“Really, really, I was going to be stepped on!”

“How could you do that!”

“Barbarian! How mean!

No, you told me to step on you.

The rabbits did not open their arms.

“If you’re going over there, kill us!”

“Don’t go there!”

“Yes, don’t!”

It’s fun, it’s fun.

It was definitely fun.

Even I was curious.

What choice did the God of Sky make when he arrived here after losing his divinity?

[I don't know either.]

Even Ahbooboo wasn't sure.

One thing was certain.

I could kill rabbits, with or without divinity, and pass by.

I drew my sword.

No, I tried to pull it out.

The condition of the rabbits was strange.

Yes. This place was no longer a place of ordeal created by Kirikiri.

It was the realm of the God of Order.

The gold attached to the rabbits' bodies like armor and scales began to hum and resonate.

They slowly opened their arms.

They picked up a weapon that had fallen on the floor.

They started coming towards me with a strange noise.

It was expected.

Because it was like this in the previous room where the beach appeared.

There was no shock or embarrassment because the people of the coastal town, who appeared neutral, had experienced the rush to wield the golden sword.

It was regretful.

Those bunnies must have been born with the fate to be controlled by evil gods.

“I’m sorry... run away...”

The rabbit swung the spear.

The tip of the spear containing the power of the God of Order had the power to create and destroy the universe itself.

Sorry what?

I’m more sorry

I swung my sword at the rabbits.

* * *

I opened the door again.

As soon as I opened the door, someone approached me.

It was my divinity that was asleep.

It is not the divinity that was created and swung temporarily during battle.

It was the one I got myself on the 61st floor,

It was my divinity that I cared for and nurtured until I came here.

As soon as I became aware of the existence of the divine, I became a god again.

I explained it to Ahbooboo, who was bewildered by the sudden change.

“My divinity is back.”

[Yes?]

My divinity, which this place had been holding back, was released.

That fact was confirmed again through other changes.

[I want to eat sweets.]

Seregia, who had lost her divinity and was silent, spoke her first words after a long time.

As soon as she becomes a god again, the words she says are sweet treats.

“It seems that there is no divine restraint from here on.”

It was incomprehensible.

Why did they suddenly return the divinity?

There is one thing I felt when I came here.

The being who created and designed this place really hated divinity.

There was a clear sense of malice.

Somehow they tried to reject and exclude the divine.

It was more than obsessive and persistent.

As I face the ordeal for control of the god of order.

If there is a divine nature, objective and correct judgment cannot be made, so the very idea of having to go through trials and judgments while removing the divinity was like that.

It was a strong disbelief in the divine.

[I want to eat sweets.]

“I heard you, Seregia. I’ll get you some sweets as soon as I get out of here.”

Serezia was quiet at that moment.

Seeing Seregia who had turned into a candy ghost, I also thought that the designer’s thoughts were not so wrong.

Divinity may be a factor that adversely affects intelligence and judgment.

Anyway, it made me wonder why such a designer would now come and return the divinity.

“I know two things.”

[What is it?]

Ahbooboo asked.

“The end is near.”

Not much left.

The existence of the God of Order was felt very close.

It was almost close.

[What about the other one?]

As soon as I became a god, I tried to check Hochi's status, who entered the entrance.

Soon after, I could see Hochi, Yong-yong, and the old man following me.

I know Hochi and Yong-yong, but I didn't know that the old man followed me.

I don't know why he, who was not even strong enough, came all the way here.

They were in danger.

Yong-yong even took out his true self, unusually.

Even the spirits were fighting hard, wielding a greatsword with an ungodly body.

Even Hochi was fighting with a bizarre look I had never seen before.

But it didn't seem like they could last long.

"I don't have much time. I have to finish it as soon as possible and get back to the kids."

Ahbooboo asked me about it.

[Is it very dangerous?]

"Very."

Side Story 45

1400 (1)

‘Can’t we go back to the old house?’

‘Jirji, we’ve already moved. From now on, we have to live here.’

It was an old memory.

After moving to the city, everything was awkward.

He moved from a small town with fewer than two hundred villagers to a city with countless citizens.

It was only natural that a country boy who had to live in the largest city on the planet could not adapt.

There were a lot of differences between life in his hometown and life in the city.

What he wears right now has changed, and what he eats has changed.

The people he met have changed, and the time and places to spend time have also changed.

The boy had to adapt.

‘Jirji Cantabria? It’s tacky, how can a name be so tacky? You must have been born tacky from birth.’

There was also the subtle disregard and bullying of children of the same age.

The boy was embarrassed by many things, but he began to adapt to them one by one.

He had to use public transport to go to school.

He had to go to the academy with his friends to keep up with the class.

As he got older like that, he made new friends, and soon he was able to adjust to the city.

He missed his hometown, but he no longer wanted to go back.

A boy named Jirji Cantabria became used to city life.

Unfortunately, his family did not.

His father often came home smelling like alcohol.

What day was it?

There was a day when Jirji's father came home with a bottle of wine in one hand.

When his father returned home, he screamed and continued to drink.

That day was the starting point.

His father started drinking at home.

That was the beginning

The precariously maintained home began to shake violently.

Jirji watched his father's drunken days over and over again.

No matter how late he went home, he had no choice but to watch because he had to sleep at home.

His father forgot day and night, spending all his time drinking alcohol.

The only time he was quiet was when he fell asleep drunk.

Jirji always started wishing his father was asleep.

“Damn superhuman bastards!”

Jirji’s father often shouted that.

Jirji knew why his father hated superhumans.

Because they were always talking about it in the news.

The superhumans who prevented abnormalities lost their work.

They were respected superhumans, but they could not remain in society without work.

superhumans began to appear in normal society.

Society also encouraged it.

With the exception of superhumans who occasionally become criminals and the superhumans who stop them, superhumans also began to find work for themselves and find employment in companies.

That was the beginning of the misfortune.

Superhumans could do the work of a hundred people alone.

Jirji’s father lost his job just like that.

His mother always said that he could get another job soon because his father was a capable man.

His father couldn’t.

Some companies wanted skilled workers, but none of them wanted alcoholic workers.

It became more and more frequent that his father scolded Jirji.

Beyond the harshness, Jirji was hurt and frightened.

His mother took his sibling and left the house.

All that was left in the house were his father, Jirji, and the bottles.

Then one day,

Jirji became a superhuman.

He acquired superpowers which was an extremely rare event.

It may be that the time he spent with his father affected his awakening.

Jirji was delighted.

Purely.

The boy was very well aware of the status and value of superhumans in this society.

He ran to his father.

He believed that as much as he was pleased with himself, his father would also be pleased with him.

What returned was the alcohol bottle.

The sticky liquor ran down his cheeks.

A sharp piece of glass was felt on his skin.

He wasn't hurt.

There were no injuries either.

His superhuman was the strengthening of his body.

But the bottle made him feel a lot.

The shards of glass in the broken bottle were cold and creepy.

He felt malicious, he felt murderous.

He was bewildered, but he left behind his father who was already so drunk that he couldn't even get up.

Jirji left the house.

His father hated superhumans.

Because superhumans took his job.

Because the superhumans were more powerful.

Jirji thought that his father would welcome his awakening.

Because his father loves him, his son.

It was a stupid idea.

Jirji found out that the premises he had taken for granted were wrong.

Jirji, who had expected that his father would gain strength and shake off the alcohol due to his awakening, just disowned his family.

It was easy.

He became a superhuman and had to be separated from his family when his compulsory education period began.

After a year of training to control his abilities and improve his morals and social skills, Jirji had neither seen nor contacted his family.

When Jirji finished his education and returned to the city.

He hadn't seen his family in a very long time.

It was nice to see the face of his family after a year, even with all the wounds.

It was also nice to see the scattered families gathered in one place.

The family asked him about the cost of living.

They claimed that those who raised him had a stake in the money that Jirji would earn while living as a superhuman.

Jirji left them again.

But his family pursued him tenaciously.

One day, Jirji impulsively called the police.

After receiving the report, the police rushed to the scene and immediately pointed an electric club at Jirji's family.

Jirji's was startled.

As he tested its performance several times during his superhuman training, he knew just how powerful the electric club was.

It was a weapon that could easily take the lives of ordinary people.

He didn't know that the police who was dispatched was such crazy violent policeman.

Jirji stopped the police.

The police looked back as if asking why.

She was smiling so brightly.

“Is there a problem?”

The family ran away.

The police even gave him her number, telling him to call her anytime if necessary.

Jirji knew that she had a crush on him from her smile.

It took less than five minutes for the police to return, and for Jirji to flush the note with her phone number in it down the toilet in a complicated way.

Having returned to society in that way, Jirji learned that his superhuman problems were not confined to his own family.

The whole society was groaning.

The cycle of discrimination continued without end.

The incompetents were demeaned, and the superhumans were despised.

Jirji remembered his hometown.

There was also a superhuman.

He was Jirji's friend.

He was a friend who made ice by hand, and he was so talented that he could make ice in the shape of flowers.

Everyone envied the boy and gathered around him.

Jirji liked the friend.

He's like all the other kids.

There, the superhuman was a mysterious and notable person.

He was not the object of envy.

Even that superhuman child did not ignore nor looked down on others.

He felt that he wanted to return home.

He couldn't.

Everything has already changed for him.

Jirji began acting as a superhuman.

Instead of getting a job at a company, he started working as a civil servant.

His superhuman work was also tough for him.

Jirji, who had physical abilities and acquired abilities, was an object of subtle humiliation and contempt.

His seniors would quarrel with him for no apparent reason.

He didn't do a good job.

"No, what the hell is the problem! How can you miss the bastard you've caught!"

"...Ha, but if I had rushed in there, that person would have been seriously hurt. Besides, I still don't know who the real culprit is."

His senior was very angry.

“Who cares if they get hurt? It doesn’t matter if they get hurt or not. We have immunity during the investigation, immunity. You, aren’t you trained? And you’re not trying to find out when you don’t know if he’s the real culprit.”

There was a difference between Jirji’s common sense and his seniors’ common sense.

“Ugh, that’s why those born with incompetence are like this.”

As he listened to the words that followed, Jirji hoped that the words of his senior would not remain in his mind and pass without being remembered.

Jirji was assigned to the local police support department.

There was only one superhuman from the support department, who was perceived as a chore due to the poor salary.

He adapted slowly but steadily to the work.

When there is an accident.

When a superhuman was urgently needed to intervene.

However, in an ambiguous situation that did not require violent suppression, Jirji was dispatched.

His role was usually to reconcile people and sort things out.

It was hard work.

He rarely used his power.

He did that because he had to keep facing people and keep an eye on their conflicts.

Jirji was getting busier.

No matter how much he tried to solve it, the problem persisted.

Things became more and more dangerous.

The problems of discrimination and inequality that were latent in society created hatred for each other.

That hatred was so evident that it could at any time lead to violence and murder.

He looked at the sky

A huge asteroid was floating in the middle of the blue sky.

An extraterrestrial asteroid that fell to a planet.

The last anomaly solved by superhumans.

The great superhuman sacrificed himself and sealed the asteroid.

It stopped in the sky just like that.

The existence of that great superhuman was treated like a god.

To the hero who saved the world, people prayed and paid tribute to him.

Jirji grew up learning the story of that superhuman.

But now that asteroid was no longer seen as a symbol of honor and sacrifice.

That was a symbol of injustice.

It symbolizes and maintains superhuman supremacy.

It was the end of the year.

It is the period when the general meeting of the superhumans is held.

During this period, superhumans were summoned on a day to hold a meeting, but in fact, only a few top superhumans were able to participate.

The rest are just spectators.

Jirji sat in the front row of the B-class.

In fact, there was nothing strange about his ability being treated as an A-class.

However, he was not able to rise to the A-class as he had the disadvantages of a physical ability.

There was a clear line.

Unsurprisingly, the agenda of the General Assembly was about the great superhuman.

There were only things like to rescue him, who must have already died, to retrieve his remains, and to build a memorial.

The agenda items to be dealt with at this meeting were not that.

How serious is the problem of superhumans in our society?

Only the superhumans themselves could solve those problems.

But they weren't interested in the matter.

Jirji, who took the matter seriously, did not even have a say.

The meeting has ended.

A week later, he received a call asking him to attend the general meeting again.

This is why he hates the end of the year.

Jirji muttered like that and headed to the conference room.

Someone sat down next to Jirji.

It was the first time

In the general meeting seating, seats are always seated in order of rank, so sitting next to Jirji means that he is of the same level as him.

He has an A-grade level of power, but for one reason or another, he is a very vaguely-ranked person with a B-grade ability.

He felt a strange sense of unity.

“1400?”

“Uh, 1400”

It was just as Jirji had thought.

A thousand four hundred.

That was the score.

The man asked how he knew his score.

Jirji was puzzled.

Usually, they probably don't know the meaning of 1,400 points.

He guessed the situation.

He was born with superhuman powers, but if he hides his abilities like an incapable person and later joins the society of superhumans, he may not be so ignorant of common sense.

Jirji quickly finished guessing.

“It seems like it’s the first time you’ve been to the conference room.”

Jirji explained the composition of the conference room.

“Why are you explaining it so hard? It’s just that you’re sitting in order of the strongest.”

As the man said that, he looked at his seat and the seat next to him, Jiji.

“You and I are on the same level.”

“Right.”

It was a useless curiosity, and it was a joke.

Perhaps he was overly excited because of the sense of unity he had felt in a long time.

So Jirji made a little childish joke.

“If we’re the same grade. I’ll be much stronger though.”

“What?”

Jirji made eye contact with the man.

He was about to laugh at him, who was passionate about jokes, but suddenly his body stiffened.

He felt terrified.

He felt a sudden chill, and Jirji had to panic.

Soon it was proved that his embarrassment was not in vain.

The madman sitting next to him hurriedly slammed his fist towards Jirji's side.

For the first time since he became a superhuman.

No, for the first time in his life

Jirji had to feel the pain of dying.

Side Story 46

1400 (2)

The pain in his side, which had been raging for about ten minutes, passed, and Jirji was finally able to come to his senses.

It was painful enough that he thought he was going to die like this, but fortunately, his internal organs were not hurt and his muscles were stiff because of shock.

It was just so terribly painful.

He wiped the tears from his eyes and looked at the madman sitting next to him.

The madman was staring at him.

Surprisingly, there was no malice in his gaze.

“Are you okay? Why are you pretending to be strong like that? It makes people flutter.”

What did you mean by pretending to be strong?

Because of that silly joke?

Is that why he attacked without saying a word?

He wasn't the usual madman.

In the meantime, he doesn't know why the word “fluttered” was attached.

The context behind the words did not match.

The madman with the short name ‘Ho’ patted Jirji on the back.

The words were patted, patted with the palm of his hand, yet Jirji’s back tingled.

“Hey, 1400.”

“...What?”

Jirji instinctively shrugged.

He thought this madman might hit him again.

He had no reason to hit him.

The reason is that he hadn’t even stabbed his side with his elbow a while ago.

“What superpower do you have?”

It was frustrating.

Jirji had the superpower of strengthening his body,

This superpower is always activated independently of his will.

The madman who stabbed him in the side must have felt it too.

Jirji’s side was harder than any other rock.

Is he really asking because he doesn’t know?

There was no more thought in Jirji’s mind.

Too many embarrassments overlapped.

He just answered honestly.

“It’s, it’s body strengthening...”

“Really?”

* * *

Ho revealed his superhuman type.

He doesn’t really care,

As he showed his ID, it seemed that he didn’t know much about his superhuman type.

Surprisingly, Ho’s superpower was the summoner type.

It was frustrating.

A superhuman who summons beasts beats a physically capable person with their bare body.

He can’t believe it hurts so much

He couldn’t understand by common sense.

Did he read the embarrassment on Jirji’s face?

Ho showed his own abilities.

“Kyaaak!”

“Aackk!”

Jirji suddenly screamed like a girl when a screaming monster suddenly appeared behind him.

He was really surprised.

Really.

It was surprising.

The appearance of the summoned monster was surprising.

The head was a frog-like amphibian.

No, the frog was right.

However, the torso and limbs were mammals covered with fluffy fur.

The fluttering tail looked like a real dog.

“What is that?”

“Is that a frog or a dog?”

The other superhumans around them also murmured in surprise.

Ho said with a somewhat proud expression on his face.

“It’s a transparent dog-frog.” (ahahah this is a bit of a wordplay but idk how to make it into english, so 개구리 means frog but just 개 means dog, so in english it’s frdog? XD dfrog?)

* * *

The frog monster was actually a dog-frog.

It was a filthy name.

A frog’s head is combined with a dog’s body to make it a dog-frog.

Ho explained that dog-frogs have invisibility and that it was the dog-frog who attacked Jirji’s side earlier, not himself.

As if that makes sense.

If you’re going to tell a lie, do it in a better way.

Jirji thought to himself.

Jirji was a body-strengthening superhuman.

Even in this field, he can be proud of being one of the best.

He could tell who had hit him.

It was clear that this madman attacked his side.

Not the frog.

It wasn't even a frog with invisibility.

It was just summoned at that moment.

“Come on, take it.”

Ho said there was some misunderstanding, so they should reconcile.

It was a very cool offer of reconciliation for the bastard.

Jirji bought something to eat at the kiosk.

The meeting is long and boring.

He did it because he couldn't participate, and he wasn't interested in the agenda.

So, he usually spends his meeting time eating.

He usually ate alone, but today, for the first time, he has someone sitting next to him to eat with.

He never saw him before.

“Thank you, 1400.”

“Hey, can you stop calling me 1400?”

1400 points is never a good thing.

It was enough strength to be treated as a B-class, but it is an ambiguous score that was inadequate to become an A-class.

And the reason for the disqualification is this.

‘It’s too low to go up to A-class.’ that’s what it meant

The reason was that the higher grades did not suit Jirji, who had the basic ability of strengthening the body in addition to the acquired ability.

Ho ignored Jirji’s words.

He thought that Ho was going to keep calling him 1400.

Jirji thought about it.

About Ho’s ability.

First of all, he seemed to have two abilities: a summoning-type ability that summoned a frog monster and a physical-type ability that struck his side.

Two abilities.

Superhumans with two or more abilities.

He didn’t understand.

Those who are born with multiple superpowers are greatly favored.

They had no choice but to be so, as it was a talent that stood out even among superhumans who were regarded as nobles.

Among the nobles, it could be called a sacred bone*. (based on the Silla nobility rank system. Sacred bone (seonggol, 성골) is on the highest level. Read more here https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bone-rank_system)

What's more, one of those abilities was able to break through Jirji's physical strengthening and inflict a clear blow.

In Jirji's mind, Ho was not a superhuman who would remain in the B rank.

Clearly, he had to be at an A level or higher, that is, among the high-ranking superhumans who were meeting there.

‘Is there something wrong?’

With an attitude as if he didn't know much about superhumans.

Considering his words that he had been here for the first time, he thought that there might be a complicated story behind it.

“Hey, this is delicious.”

He was a very special person.

Ho continued to speak.

He wasn't a talkative person, but at the end of the conversation he threw up new topics one by one.

It's like asking him to tell Ho a little bit more about this.

Jirji told him what he wanted to say.

It wasn't a bad experience.

Jirji, who has rarely had conversations with other people outside of work recently, felt like he was talking to a friend.

As the conversation continued, it was also significant that Ho's attitude changed to be more favorable.

As their conversation continued, the meeting of the superhumans continued.

Finally, their agenda was finalized.

<SSS-class superhuman Akaiden rescue and extraterrestrial asteroid extinction operation>

“Are you really doing that...?”

It was absurd.

It has already been two years since the great superhuman Akaiden was stuffed into the sky with an asteroid.

During that time, the thought that mankind had on the asteroid was, please, let that time bomb never explode again and sleep forever.

It would be a concern even if it carried out an asteroid extinction operation with military weapons.

That included Akaiden’s rescue operation.

It was clear how the operation was going to go.

The superhumans will be put in.

‘I think they’re going to die terribly, what do you think?’

No, it wasn’t a matter of victims, it was questionable whether the operation was possible.

What were the top superhumans thinking in agreeing to that operation?

It is most likely that they are going to die.

Looking at the contents of the operation, the risk was so high that he thought it was a trap of the administrative government to weaken the power of the superhumans.

Conversely, did it start out of optimism that a world of complete superhumans would unfold if only that operation was successful?

He had no idea whether the administration and the Association of Superhumans or the plans they had could resolve the conflict.

Because he was not included in their society.

He just had to guess.

‘If it fails and the monsters of the asteroid fall to the ground.....’

Everything will fall apart

Jirji left the conference room with worry.

“Where are you going?”

Even after getting up from his seat, Ho, who had been walking with him keeping pace, asked.

“I’m going home.”

Work starts early tomorrow morning.

Jirji sighed.

He was busy taking a day or two off a month, but he felt like he had no more free time to be called to meetings like this.

Ho said, who was staring at Jirji from the side.

“Then I’m going to your home.”

“Huh?”

“I’m going to your house.”

Are you deaf or something? He heard the words, but Jirji didn’t understand.

Why are you coming to my house?

* * *

“Come in.”

Said Ho.

The tone of the talk looked like that of a host welcoming guests.

Jirji was embarrassed.

“This is... my home.”

Why is Ho telling himself to come in first as soon as the door to his house opens?

Jirji took off his shoes and went inside.

“Well.....”

He brought that madman to his house.

Should he have left him out in the middle?

That’s what he thought, but there was a reason why Jirji brought him home.

He was anxious.

He wondered what that bastard was going to do outside.

The human named Ho had no knowledge of superhumans and of this society.

He acted as if he had just come out of the world.

Besides, he beats people at will.

Jirji survived because he was hit in the side, but if that was an attack on ordinary people, a corpse would have been made in its place.

Jirji, who was working hard to keep the city safe, didn't want to let that madman out.

He cannot even designate protection.

Of course, if that guy commits a crime, he'll be stopped by the police.

After he committed the crime.

Jirji didn't want that.

That's why it seemed like it would be okay to have that unidentified superhuman by his side and watch.

His own personal life and time to rest are threatened, however, Jirji, a superhuman full of justice, gladly accepted the sacrifice.

"You're living a decent life."

"Because the salary is not bad."

In fact, the salary was rather poor.

For a job that only superhumans can do.

But by the standard of ordinary people's wages, it was definitely not a small amount of money.

“No, you cleaned up well.”

Ho said that he knew it because he lived alone, but it was not easy to live in such a neat way.

“It’s neat and tidy, but it’s like a house where several people live. It feels like. Did you say you live alone? Do you have a lot of lovers?”

Jirji didn’t have a girlfriend.

But he knew what Ho was talking about.

Jirji put a lot of effort into decorating the house.

Like a house where many people live.

Yes, like a house where one family lives.

It was decorated like that.

Putting his father’s study desk in.

He also displayed pretty plates that his mother loved.

His sibling’s favorite game console was also bought at a high price.

As he was collecting things that were not so necessary, it really looked like a house where many people lived.

Of course, there was only one person living in this house.

It was the furniture he had bought to fill his loneliness.

Sometimes the furniture made him feel more lonely.

Jirji shrugged and scratched his head unknowingly.

He was also a little embarrassed.

He didn't know what it was, but his heart felt hot.

“What is that?”

Ho asked.

“game console.”

Ho was intrigued by the word “game console”, so he went closer and looked at it.

In fact, Jirji didn't know much about the game console.

He wasn't even interested.

He tried it a few times after he bought it, but after a few minutes, he gave up.

Maybe it was because he didn't buy it because he wanted to enjoy the game.

It didn't feel fun at all.

It was a game console that he bought with the intention that his brother, who was always envious of the game consoles at his friends' houses, would like to see them.

Although he had cut ties with his family, he knew that maybe it was a small regret that remained in his heart.

Ho reproduced the image of his younger brother that he imagined in his head when he bought the game console.

There was a twinkling in his eyes.

That excitement and redness.

It was pure joy like a child.

“Why, would you like to try it?”

Jirji smiled without realizing it and asked.

Side Story 47

1400 (3)

“Scared?”

Jirji fell for the provocation.

In fact, he’s never really played the game properly.

Whatever confidence he had or what pride he had, he didn’t want to lose it

And he lost

He lost very badly.

He never dreamed that he would feel so miserable after losing the game.

“Hey, this isn’t your first time playing this game. Be honest.”

“It’s true that it’s the first time I’m playing. I’m playing it for the first time today. I saw this game console for the first time today. You’re not very good at it. Why? Are you angry?”

Ho was a crazy guy, but he was also good at nagging.

Even if it looked like the game was close, he always somehow won.

Thinking that the gap was narrowing little by little, Jirji continued to challenge him again over and over but soon, he realized one thing.

Ho was adjusting the game so that Jirji was barely losing.

The difference in skill was too great.

“Next game? One more?”

“Not anymore.”

“Scared?”

“I am not!”

Jirji got angry without realizing it.

“Oho, oh my world. Are you forfeiting? How many days in total is it now?”

Ho bet on the game.

He bet that if he won, he can stay at Jirji’s house for a day, and if Jirji wins, he would grant one thing Jirji wants.

Jirji was defeated in a straight line.

Ho won a five-day stay.

He thought it didn’t matter.

Anyway, he wasn’t thinking of putting that madman outside, so he had to put Ho next to him instead.

He drank a glass of cold water and his head cooled down, Jirji felt uncomfortable for no reason.

It had been a long time since he had yelled and was angry at anyone because of his own feelings.

He was a little apologetic, and he was also worried that the madman would in turn get angry at him for yelling.

Fortunately, Ho didn't show any reaction.

Instead, he giggled as he watched Jirji get angry.

He looked happy.

No, is it fun to watch other people lose at games and feel offended?

Why is that fun?

He couldn't understand.

As expected, the madman was a madman.

It was late, but he prepared dinner.

As he sat down at the table, he had fifty thousand thoughts.

He couldn't believe that he was such an idiot for first sitting down with him at his own table.

While eating, Ho asked questions one by one.

Just like he did at the meeting of the superhumans.

They were usually questions related to common sense in this society.

Jirji's speculation that Ho seems to have just appeared in society for some reason seemed to be correct to some extent.

Seeing Ho who complimented Jirji's meal, Jirji thought about it.

This madman was more normal than he thought.

He did, except for one or two problems.

That he acts as if he doesn't care about the eyes around him.

That he treats himself too comfortably (to the point that Jirji felt a little embarrassed at first seeing him).

He acts unexpectedly.

He lacks common sense.

His eyes actually have good taste.

He attacks people for no reason.

Come to think of it, it wasn't just one or two things.

Anyway, except for the craziness that popped out, he looked like a normal person at first glance.

Jirji only thought of Ho as a madman who had to stay by his side so he could keep a watch on him.

Little by little, he started to wonder about that madman.

Maybe Jirji, who had been lonely for a long time, was just curious about strangers.

"Your house?"

"Don't have any."

Does that make sense?

He could buy his own house by choosing any of the houses that were sold first to superhumans.

A person with that level of superpower would make a lot of money no matter what he did, so there was no need to worry about money.

"What did you do?"

“I’m not working.”

He was jobless and homeless.

Jirji came up with an idea impulsively.

“Would you like to work with me?”

* * *

Work started in the morning.

Jirji had to regret his decision last night.

Having to roam the city center full of citizens with this madman.

It was the worst decision.

His nerves were on the brink.

He was a man who would attack without hesitation if he ever bumped into a passerby on the shoulder.

He was called to solve a problem, and even when he arrived at the place to which he was dispatched, he was not able to concentrate on the problem as he was paying attention to the madman.

Fortunately, Ho did not cause any problems.

All he did was walk around the city center and ask questions whenever he had any questions.

And,

“How did you do it?”

“Transparent Frog.”

“Kyaaak!”

Ho solved the problem easily.

With the excuse of the invisible frog.

“Are these problems common?”

Ho asked.

The problem that was just solved was a fight between students with superpower abilities at school.

It was an odd thing for the police to come forward.

It was too risky for school teachers to solve (and, in fact, for the police too).

When such a problem occurs, Jirji is contacted, and Jirji, who is a class B superhuman, moderates the situation.

“A lot. It seems to be getting more and more common.”

“Then it’s not temporary. What’s wrong?”

Ho asked.

What’s the problem?

Jirji had no choice but to talk about universally known facts.

Fundamental differences in abilities between the superhuman and the non-superhumans, social imbalance, sense of privilege, and hatred towards each other.

About those things.

Ho listened intently to Jirji.

Jirji had to feel a bit silly while explaining.

These things were common sense, so there was no need to explain them out loud.

The work continued.

And the invisible frog continued to be summoned.

“Kyaaak!”

The frog roared.

Nearby citizens also screamed and walked away.

“I didn’t do it. The Invisible Frog did it.”

“...Say something that makes sense. With so many people, how could that big frog chase us?”

“Our transparent frog can fly.”

I’m sure it does.

Is this really an excuse to believe in?

Surprisingly, people believed.

“Wow! It’s a monster frog!”

A child came screaming.

Jirji clicked his tongue inside.

There was a girl who liked seeing that weird frog monster.

She was a very unique child.

“I’m sorry, can my child take a close look?”

The child’s parents asked.

He tried to refuse that she couldn’t

“Yes. Our frog doesn’t bite.”

Ho didn’t really care and allowed it.

The child even touched the frog’s torso as she looked at it up close.

The frog was really docile.

Soon people flocked in.

It was reported in the media.

The appearance of a superpower that summons a flying invisible frog.

It didn’t look strong and scary.

It was reported that the versatile frog is a great help in various rescue and policing operations.

No one seemed to think that Ho was cheating with the frog.

Jirji realized how mysterious and unknown the superpowers are.

If the frog, the pen name, and the superpowers had become the talk of the town first, it might have been quickly discovered that the frog was a trick.

However, it was first reported in the media and then released to the public.

Even the superhumans who came in contact with frogs and Ho through the news were just amazed that there was that kind of ability.

Maybe Jirji is the only person who has seen that invisible frog from an objective standpoint.

Jirji began to doubt Ho's abilities.

People were amazed that it was a frog that was too versatile to be a B-class summoned beast.

But Jirji, who has been watching her every move, thought a little differently.

It was overly perfect and powerful beyond versatility.

Enough to solve any situation without any problems.

It seemed omnipotent.

On the road blocked by soil and sand, a pile of dirt floated up and flew back to its original location, as if using telekinetic power.

When he saw an injured child, he summoned an invisible frog to lick the wounded area with its tongue, and then the wound healed as if it had been washed.

It put people to sleep and also stunned them.

When it was hot, it made ice and even let the wind blow.

Jirji decided to do a little more research on Ho.

Jirji, a B-class person and a member of the police, had the right to read the personal information of other superhumans.

Amazing results came out.

Ho had no records.

No birth record, no record of superhuman registration, no criminal record, no educational process record, no criminal record, no record of superhuman activity.

Jirji checked Ho's superhuman registration certificate.

It was not a fake registration certificate.

However, the record of his registration certificate did not remain as data.

At this point, Gird stopped his investigation.

'S-class hiding his identity... Maybe the superpower he has was more than that, a superpower. Was there such a person among them?'

Those with superhuman powers at that level are treated like royalty by society.

Of course, they were completely open to the public.

From appearance to personality to abilities.

But, as Jirji knew, there was no one like Ho.

* * *

"Oh, today was tiring."

As he entered the house, Ho said.

It wasn't really hard, it was just cliché.

"What's so hard about it? The frog did all the work."

said Jirji.

"No....."

"What?"

“Yeah, the frog did it all.”

Jirji held back his laughter.

Jirji took a seat in the living room and started massaging the lying frog.

Ho went to the refrigerator and took out his drink and drank it.

Then he pours another glass and brings it to Jirji.

“You worked hard too, 1400.”

“Call me by my first name.”

“Dog bone.”

A few days have passed since he started living with Ho.

Although it was a short time, Jirji’s life was much changed

It was the same when he went to work and then got back from work and went to sleep.

But staying with someone and moving together was different.

For Jirji, that was a big difference.

Ho hasn’t had any problems since the day he first met him.

Rather, he acted so diligently that he was told that he was an exemplary superhuman.

Only once, when he met an S-class man, did he seem to attack him as the first day.

But he soon stopped.

Jirji remembered Ho's words very vividly.

‘What, he looks weaker than you.’

Could it be?

There was a huge difference between the two grades, S and B.

But somehow Jirji felt better.

And Jirji learned one thing.

When Ho sees a strong superhuman, he wants to fight them blindly.

However, if the person turns out to be weak, he quickly loses interest in them.

It was an ancient gladiator-like mindset.

Ho's abilities that he's seen for a few days were comparable to those of the superhuman association's top talents.

Rather, he seemed overwhelming.

It seemed that there was no superhuman who could feel Ho's fighting spirit.

Jirji felt even more relieved.

“A game before going to bed?”

“I will not.”

Jirji refused.

If he accepted that, he wouldn't sleep all night and would just play games.

Some of the things he learned over time are:

Ho can't sleep.

He suffered from severe insomnia.

If he wasn't a superhuman, his health would have been in danger.

He seemed to lie in bed a few times trying to sleep, but he soon gave up and grabbed the game console, and stayed up all night until morning.

One time, when Jirji tried to buy him a sleeping pill, he refused, saying, "I'm not in the mood to take drugs."

"Really, let's just play one game and go to bed."

"...Yeah, I'll only play one game and then I'll go to sleep."

Jirji stayed up all night playing the game again that day.

His body was tired, but his mood was not bad.

He was very good.

Jirji was thinking this to himself.

He wondered if this would be the case if he had a brother.

He was anxious at times.

When Ho was talking, he was constantly asking questions.

At some point, the number of those questions was rapidly declining.

There was nothing more to ask of Jirji.

Within a few days, Ho had adapted to this society.

He gained the common sense of society and simple historical knowledge.

Jirji was worried as he looked at the issue where the questions had disappeared.

Worried that one day Ho might suddenly disappear.

“Let’s take a break.”

He went out to the veranda for a while and had a cigarette.

Ho didn’t smoke, but he followed him out onto the veranda.

“That asteroid.”

said Ho, pointing to the asteroid.

The asteroid still in the sky was clearly visible even in the night sky thanks to the bright moonlight.

“How do people feel when they see that?”

It was the first question in a long time.

Jirji felt a strange sense of relief and said his thoughts.

Side Story 48

1400 (3)

“Asteroid?”

“Huh.”

Jirji said.

“Respect and gratitude. Well, maybe that’s it.”

Superhumans stuffed into the sky were great men worthy of respect and gratitude.

At lunchtime, there were still many people who looked up to the sky and commemorated the sacrifice of the superhumans.

Some prayed to the asteroid and worshiped it like a god.

“However.”

Jirji said.

It was something he wouldn’t normally add.

“I don’t know if that’s a good thing or not. It’s forever stuck in the sky like that.”

“Why?”

The great superhuman saved the world through sacrifice.

His sacrifice will go down in history, and people of his future generations will remember him forever.

Of course, that's a good thing.

But there is nothing in the world that works perfectly well.

Whenever there is a positive effect, there is always a negative effect as well.

Superhumans feel a sense of reward when they see that asteroid.

In addition to the inherent sense of superiority and privilege, superhumans have changed the world, so they have the illusion that their actions should be tolerated.

For the powerless, it evokes a sense of inferiority and alienation for what they do not have.

Such a symbol is embedded in the middle of the sky, and you can see it with your eyes at any time of the year by raising your head high.

Jirji wondered if the asteroid could ever remain a good symbol for mankind.

Someday, there will be people who look at that asteroid and swear at it.

The asteroid may become a symbol of insult and injustice.

Forgetting the noble sacrifices of the great man.

"That's right. Looking at the social atmosphere these days, I'm worried."

As Jirji released one thing he had in his heart, he felt that his body had become a little lighter.

It was something he could say because the other person was Ho.

It was a story he couldn't tell anyone else.

Probably, the moment it came out, it was clear that he would be socially dead.

People admired and loved the great man that stopped the asteroid, and they will be outraged by Jirji's slanderous and degrading comments.

"That's what a symbol is. Whether it's negative or positive. That's why... they want to... themselves."

said Ho.

Ho's words were not heard well.

Some words were drowned out by the sound of the wind.

The windows on the veranda were closed.

Jirji didn't feel any discomfort or doubt about the kind words he had not heard.

* * *

"Noisy."

"Oh, show me the invisible frog! Show us!"

It was a kid who returned.

Ho frowned.

If it had been just a few days ago, Jirji would have been startled and worried that Ho might attack the child.

"Look at this little bastard talking."

However, Ho did not hit the child blindly, even though he would swear at the child.

It was difficult to say that he was desirable, but he was not a dangerous fiend to the child.

“If the favor continued, they had a right, didn’t you say so? Hey, did you leave the invisible frog? Huh? Did you leave it to me?”

Of course not hitting the child doesn’t mean that he wasn’t scared.

There is a saying that dogs recognize the dog breeders.

It is a story that no matter how ferocious a dog may be when a dog breeder appears, they instinctively feel fear and become terrified.

Jirji thought that was a very plausible statement.

You can tell by looking at Ho.

Oh, this bastard is crazy.

His screws are loose.

When our eyes meet, he gets that feeling.

It was too harsh an impression for a young child to bear.

The child started crying.

Ho suddenly panicked and tried to appease the child.

From the side view, it looked like a madman who couldn’t hold back his anger at all and grabbed the child and beat him.

Ho eventually gave up and summoned a frog to appease the child.

“Wow! Frog!”

The child immediately stopped crying and ran to the frog.

“This clever little boy. He must have pretended to cry.”

Ho murmured.

“No, you can make him cry a little bit. You’re driving people to the trash with this. Do you think it’s easy to soothe the child?”

“Who are you talking to?”

Ho was muttering to himself into the air.

He was a friend who talked to himself often.

But sometimes he felt like he wasn’t talking to himself.

It was just the same case.

He sounded like he was talking to someone, not to himself.

“Huh?”

“Because who are you talking to?”

Ho seemed a little perplexed.

Then, soon after, he found an excuse.

“Transparent Frog.”

“Keeek!”

The frog that was playing with the child roared.

The child was excited to see it.

“Say something that makes sense.”

Jirji was really curious.

On one occasion, he wondered if Ho was talking to someone through a small earphone, and he even looked into his ear.

Who is Ho really talking to?

Does he have any telepathic abilities?

Ho suddenly turned his head.

As he said earlier, Ho's impression was not very good.

He wasn't ugly, he wasn't rough.

The color of the eyes had a great influence on his impression.

When Ho suddenly changed his face and adjusted his posture, Jirji was also nervous.

"Are you curious about the truth?"

Jirji swallowed his saliva and nodded his head.

"I'm sorry, but I can't just tell you the truth."

"Why?"

"It's too dangerous a truth. Truth comes with a price. You have to choose."

What does that mean?

What kind of novel bullshit is this crazy guy talking about today?

Jirji thought so.

But Ho's expression was even more serious.

"Come on, here's the blue pill, and there's the red pill. If you take the blue pill, the story ends here. You go back to your daily life, and you'll continue to believe in what you believe now. But if you take the red pill, I'll answer your questions. I'll give it to you. I'll reveal the hidden truth."

There was neither the blue pill nor the red pill on Ho's palm. (*a nod to the scene in the Ma*rix)

"What will you do?"

"Alright. If you don't want to tell me, don't. I don't want to ask about something you don't want to say."

Jirji said so.

Inside, he had to feel a somewhat droopy sensation.

If Jirji really wanted the answer to the end, Ho would probably have given the answer.

Jirji knew the answer too.

No, he didn't know exactly, but he was guessing.

However, he had a foreboding feeling that if he heard those words directly, Ho would leave him on that day.

"Hey, are you upset? Should I just tell you?"

"No, that's fine"

"Ah, you bastard. What are you upset about, okay, I'll tell you."

"Because that's fine!"

Jirji raised his voice.

"I'll tell you. Actually, now, look. This is called an ego sword. He knows how to talk, so I talk to him sometimes. He knows how to use magic, and in fact, all the things the invisible frog has ever done were him. So every time you massage the frog, he gets a little jealous. He speaks like an ordinary old man, but he's actually a little offended. He sometimes shows cuteness while acting unpleasant, and he calls himself the holy sword of the gods, but what they do is just a magic sword... Hey, where are you going?"

"F it."

After the invisible frog was the talking magic sword.

Jirji got up from his seat and started walking.

Ho couldn't chase after him because he had to remove the frog from the boy and summon it back.

Jirji had to feel complicated feelings.

He was upset, embarrassed, and a little angry.

He even thought it was a little bit lucky.

"It's really true."

Ho, who was following him, said with a smirk.

* * *

Two weeks have passed.

Another notice came from the association.

It was an official letter to participate in the general meeting of the Superhumans.

Another general meeting in two weeks.

"This is why I hate the end of the year."

This was because meetings were held several times in a row during busy times when there were already a lot of incidents.

Jirji and Ho went to the conference room in simple attire.

Jirji regretted that fact a little.

He should come dressed a little extravagantly.

He came so comfortably.

No matter how much he was only watching the meeting from afar, he was dressed too freely.

Living with Ho, he wondered if he had been tainted by Ho.

“Hey, is that the invisible frog?”

“I heard it also had wings.”

Ho, who calls the invisible frog, has become a celebrity among superhumans.

The rising rookie received surprisingly excessive attention.

Jirji, who was right next to him, had to be exposed to that gaze as well.

Jirji was more shy because of his and Ho’s overly comfortable attire and entered the conference room faster than anyone else.

[Jirji Cantabria]

[Ho]

They were the only B-class superhumans involved in the rescue operation of the great superhuman Akaiden.

Rather than being proud of that fact, Jirji only thought that he had bad luck.

He could be killed if something was wrong.

“Haa, I don’t know.”

He couldn’t deny it either.

Akaiden was a sanctuary.

To be involved in the rescue operation was an honor, but if he refuses?

It was socially suicidal.

“Is that plan possible?”

Ho asked.

“I’m sure it’s possible.”

So, that’s probably why the agenda went so far.

But it will be dangerous.

What’s more, the association’s leadership will not give much importance to the B-class’s lives involved in the mission.

High-ranking superhumans of S-class or higher were also included, and each of them was an important source of national financial resources.

In the meantime, it didn’t seem like they would take special care of Jirji and Ho.

Jirji explained his thoughts to Ho.

Ho thought quietly for a while.

He said this again as if he was muttering.

“Okay, let’s go back now.”

“...what?”

Jirji asked, but Ho didn’t say anything.

The two returned home.

They didn’t feel like working at all.

Returning home, Ho said to Jirji.

I’m leaving now.

Jirji said he knew.

It was a far more lax answer than he had thought.

Somehow, he thought Ho was leaving today.

Maybe it was because he was thinking like that every day.

Jirji asked a few questions before Ho left.

Usually, it was always Ho who was questions and Jirji answering.

Today it was the opposite.

Ho answered all the questions with the utmost sincerity, as Jirji had done before.

Jirji couldn’t understand all the answers.

Unfortunately.

He couldn't hear some words correctly.

He couldn't even ask again about the word that had flowed away.

However, Jirji was able to properly understand what he wanted to know.

“Can I see you again?”

“I hope so, too.”

That was the last question.

With that answer, Ho left Jirji's house.

With no luggage, he just popped out, just like when he first came in.

Jirji was left alone in the living room again.

For just a few dozen seconds, he felt the old loneliness again just by standing in the empty house.

Jirji went out to the veranda as if possessed by something.

He was going to watch Ho leave until the end.

Ho, who he thought was going to leave the housing complex and go to the main road, suddenly began to rise from the ground.

He looked so natural, like a bird or a flying insect.

Ho that floated in the air began to fly somewhere.

He was heading towards the asteroid in the night sky, which was reflected in the moonlight.

It was like a fairy tale scene.

The large moon, the asteroid, and Ho were seen overlapping each other in a row.

Yes, it was a fairy tale time, and he was a fairy tale friend.

One day, he suddenly appeared and joined him.

No one knew who it was, and no one revealed it.

He was a friend who wanted to learn about the world.

Jirji was also able to look around the world once more during that time.

The shape of Ho flying towards the asteroid is now a small dot and is invisible.

Jirji thought that Ho was going to return to where he originally belonged.

Even though he could no longer see Ho, Jirji stared at the asteroid for a long time.

That was then.

A powerful light burst from the asteroid.

Jirji just lost consciousness and collapsed.

* * *

A week has passed.

The rescue operation of the superhuman Akaiden was canceled.

It has been over a month since the asteroid's anomaly occurred, but the cause is still unknown.

The asteroid suddenly radiated light, and everyone on the planet was stunned.

They passed out for at least five hours and then woke up.

It was something everyone on the planet went through.

Some said it was because the superhuman Akaiden was resurrected.

Conversely, some say it was because Akaiden was completely dead and the asteroid monster survived.

Only Jirji had a slightly different view.

The anomaly of that day occurred exactly at the same time that Ho left his home and flew towards the asteroid.

Jirji thought that the phenomenon had something to do with Ho.

Jirji paid a lot of money to buy a telescope.

Whenever he had time, he watched the asteroid through his telescope.

It was his new hobby.

It's been a month since Ho left.

And he's only been with Ho for two weeks.

But that time changed Jirji's life a lot.

When Jirji was peering through the telescope, he didn't feel as lonely, as it was like the two weeks he had spent with Ho.

The large asteroid was a delightful object to watch.

It was so big.

There are many curves and flaws, so even if he looks closely every day, he can find a new place every time.

As usual, looking at the asteroid and seeing a large rock for the first time, Jirji, feeling a sense of small achievement, was startled and had to take his eyes off the telescope.

On that asteroid, where no human could ever survive.

Jirji looked at the man's face.

He even felt like he was making eye contact with himself as he was looking at an asteroid through the telescope.

Considering the distance between Jirji and that asteroid on the planet's surface, it was absurd.

Jirji grabbed his thumping chest and came out.

He had nothing to do with it, and he walked out of the house like he was running away.

Jirji thought back to the human figure he had just seen.

It looked like.

It looked like some kind of girl.

Side Story 49

101st Floor (1)

I stopped walking.

We're almost there.

"Seregia."

[Yes, warrior.]

"Thank you. For following me this far."

Seregia said she was fine.

With her usual tone of voice that doesn't show her emotions.

In fact, I had a lot of regrets.

In the decision to make Seregia a sword and carry her around.

I thought she would be an ego sword with no problems with communication, just like Ahbooboo.

She just loses her body, but she's no different from when she was a human.

There was a vague idea that one day even her body would be recovered.

However, contrary to expectations, Seregia has become a real sword.

I couldn't even communicate properly with her for a while.

When she reached a stable period, she began to think of herself as a sword rather than a person.

Of course, the other Seregia was repeating the tutorial like the repeat sign in sheet music.

But the things she went through were tough enough to think she would have been better off not leaving the tutorial stage.

“And I’m sorry.”

[I said it was okay.]

It was cold.

But there was also an opposite case from her.

[Warrior, for me, for me..... I suffered too. Didn’t you do a lot of bad things to me too? You were rolling me very hard. Put me in your inventory every day.]

Ahbooboo sniffed in.

“Noisy.”

[Wow, you are discriminating against people, no?]

Yes, discrimination is right.

It would have been great if Ahbooboo could cut that chatter in half.

[Hng, it’s because of the lack of cuteness. I know it all. It’s been a while since I’ve done a cute shot. Eh, I... Wow, it’s been a long time since I’ve done this, so it’s not good. Now, let’s try again.]

“Don’t do it. I’m really angry.”

That damn cuteness induces people’s anger whenever they hear it.

Why do I have to listen to you whine in a low male voice?

Ahbooboo chuckled.

[Are there any odds?]

Ahbooboo asked.

I nodded.

“Are you asking something obvious?”

[Oh, you said you became the God of Victory.]

Ahbooboo talked about my divinity.

It was natural.

My divinity was victory itself.

The fact that I was approaching the God of Order while embracing divinity also meant that I had a sufficient chance of winning and believed in my own victory.

[Is that even objectively true?]

Ahbooboo asked again.

It was a stupid question.

In matters involving divinity, if you can distinguish between the object and the subject, you cannot become a god in the first place.

Although he was a being who had been close to the gods for a long time, he did not seem to feel it because he had never become a god himself.

I need to reassure Ahbooboo.

Aside from his belief in me, I'll have to explain the reasons for the victory that Ahbooboo can understand.

“What’s certain is.....”

[Yes?]

“He hasn’t become a transcendental god yet.”

God of Order.

He was not yet a transcendental god.

It certainly seemed close to that, but it certainly didn’t go beyond the scope of a general god.

It was a little different from Kirikiri’s explanation, who said that he was nothing less than a transcendent god.

The reason for the misjudgment was obvious.

It must be because of the powers of the God of Order, including that gold.

The powers of the God of Order were all focused on restraining and attacking divinity.

To put it simply, it was an existence that could be said to be the Supreme Being of Divinity.

It must be because it is a mechanical god created from the beginning to control and restrain the gods.

With such an existence, the God of Order seemed even more powerful to the other gods and seemed closer to the transcendent God.

But I was sure.

The God of Order has not yet transcended everything.

Being so close to its essence that I knew it.

I stood in front of the door.

The huge door had a number written on it.

[101]

In a sense, It's really funny.

It's the 101st room on the 101st floor.

It was a door that had been built up in an empty space.

As I got closer, the door opened.

Only pitch-black darkness could be seen through the cracks in the door.

[...Are you going in that way?]

Of course.

[Should we not think about it again?]

“Noisy.”

Ignoring Ahbooboo's words.

I walked into the door.

The moment I took a step into the darkness that started from the door, the darkness embraced me.

The next moment I felt I was transported to another world.

It was not an unpleasant darkness.

I couldn't see anything, I couldn't feel anything.

Still, it wasn't surprising and it wasn't scary.

Rather than feeling trapped in dark solitary confinement, it felt more like being asleep in a dream.

I have felt this feeling before.

When I went to the temple of the God of Slowness.

Yes, it was then.

As a stage clear reward, I wanted an interview with the God of Slowness.

I had this feeling when I visited the holy land of the God of Slowness.

Is it something common that appears because I am close to the Transcendent God?

Or was the God of Order itself created from the power of the God of Slowness?

I couldn't figure it out

[Challenger.]

A voice echoed in a world where there was nothing.

One eye hung in the air with it.

It was the God of Order.

As the self of the God of Order was revealed, my body, which had been shrouded in darkness, was also revealed.

This was different from the God of Slowness.

The God of Slowness exists in space and has no symbols to express his ego.

The God of Order had the shape of a huge eye.

It was huge, but at first glance, it looked like an ordinary eye.

A huge black pupil in a huge white sclera.

The shape of the black pupil looked identical to the darkness surrounding the pupil, and on the contrary, the ring-shaped white appeared to be contained within the huge pupil.

The pupils themselves did not hide their trust in order.

Having seen the God of Order several times already, I could be sure that it was the God of Order.

“Hoo.”

I took a deep breath.

It was a long, long journey.

And in the end, I came all the way here.

Maybe this is how a climber feels when he is near the top of a mountain.

I said to the God of Order.

“It was like that before. I’ll see you again someday.”

It was something I’ve been waiting to say for a very long time.

For this moment.

“Give me my source, you thief bastard!”

[...Was that what you were talking about?]

Ahbooboo murmured.

This is important.

When I cleared the 59th floor, the God of Order stole the power of the source that I had created at the time.

This bad bastard.

I remember it clearly!

On top of it, that was the first source power I ever made!

[Challenger, you must choose.]

said the God of Order.

Is he not going to talk at all about the thefts he committed in the past?

He was more arrogant than I thought.

[Challenge and abandonment.]

Challenge and give up.

It was just as Kirikiri told me.

The last gateway to seal the God of Order.

This is a question to test the existence of the challenger that entered.

A test to prevent the challenger from bringing more chaos to the world by controlling the God of Order.

It was said to be a gateway to test the sincerity of the challenger.

[You must choose. Can you give up your divinity yourself?]

“What?”

What to give up?

A completely different story from what I had heard from Kirikiri came out.

[Can you keep your will even by giving up your divinity? Please choose.]

The space is distorted.

Beyond the distorted space, Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man were seen.

They were being attacked by monsters armed with gold.

They were fighting hard, but I didn't seem to have any spare time.

My hands were clenched tightly.

[If you enter that space, you lose your divinity. But you might be able to save your friends.]

“What if I refuse?”

[You can fight me without losing your divinity. But can you do that?]

Damn it

It was a completely different test from what Kirikiri had heard.

No matter how far out of Kirikiri's control, his autonomy was not perfect.

The monsters appearing in between were added with a golden weapon with the power of the God of Order.

Of course, that was a serious problem.

There was not much of a difference between the appearance of this place and the one that Kirikiri had described.

But at the end of the day, a gate like this was added.

I watched Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man fighting over the gap in space.

I wondered why they followed me.

Perhaps.

“Did you make them come here?”

[I did not. Challengers come here to be tested whether they can give up their divinity. I needed them to test you. They followed you according to logic. They must believe that they came in by their own will. But you’ve attracted them.]

That sounds crazy

The causal sequence was messed up.

[If not, are you going to refuse the test and fight me? That’s not bad either. Wouldn’t it be more convenient for you?]

The voice of the God of Order was filled with laughter.

F bastard. He’s getting worse and worse.

It is unwise to refuse the test.

The reason that the God of Order is still here and speaking stupidly is that it proves that he has not yet been able to escape from the role that Kirikiri has given him.

However, if I, the challenger, ignore the rules, he can be released freely as well.

What's more, if I refused the exam.

A scream was heard from beyond the space.

The Old Man wielding the lava sword was collapsing.

Will they be able to survive while I fight the God of Order, who has freely wielded all my powers?

[Warrior.]

Ahbooboo whispered.

[...Is it really that easy to lose your divinity? It may be a lie.]

“No.”

If I go beyond that space, I will really lose my divinity.

This is not the power of the God of Order.

The fact that I myself took my own steps to the ‘place where I lose my divinity’ declared by that damn bastard will shift my divinity.

If I go into that place and seek Yongyong, Hochi, and Old Man, I will really lose my divinity.

[Warrior.]

Seregia said.

[What are you worried about?]

Yeah, what was I thinking about?

It was an unbelievable worry.

It was a question with a fixed answer from the beginning.

[Have you made a decision? Challenge or abandonment?]

I made a decision.

* * *

Gold-clad birds flew.

It felt like bees were flying all over the place as they touched the hive.

The whole world was filled with golden birds.

“Waaaaaa!”

Hochi inflated his arms wide.

Bigger than a giant.

His huge arm was swung around, and the birds struck by it fell to pieces.

Hundreds of birds died, but there were so many birds that it was barely noticeable.

Hochi swallowed his saliva.

It was an anxious situation.

That damn gold was the problem.

For some reason, that gold did no harm to Hochi himself.

Just like the golden blade that Kirikiri swung.

However, it was fatal to Old Man and Yongyong.

If a powerful enemy appeared or they were fighting in a narrow space, Hochi could block the enemy and fight while protecting Old Man and Yongyong.

However, Hochi alone could not stop the numerous enemies flying in the open air and open land.

Old Man also vigorously swung his sword, and Yongyong, who woke up from his sleep, was holding out by swinging his tail and wings.

But Hochi didn't seem to be able to hold out for long.

Hochi felt like he was about to cry without knowing it.

He was fighting with his best, but he couldn't stop Yongyong and the Old Man from getting hurt.

“Waaaaaa!”

With a meaningless shout, he waved his arm again, Yongyong stopping the birds flying nearby.

That was then.

The space is open.

A familiar face walked out through the gap in the open space.

With the same face as Hochi himself, he was trying to say something.

– Kaaaaak!

– Kaak kaaak!

But because of the noise made by the flock of birds, the voice was not heard.

He picked up the sword and threw it.

A pounding sound like thunder rang out.

The sword was divided into thousands or tens of thousands, and the divided sword engulfed the air.

More than tens of thousands of golden birds were likewise stabbed by tens of thousands of swords and began to fall to the floor.

Eventually, the surroundings became quiet.

“Well, I told you to wait at home. You don’t listen very well.”

It’s been a few months since Hochi has seen him, but he was with the same tone as always.

With such a grunt, Lee Ho-jae approached.

Hochi wiped the water from his eyes because of the relief, joy, and regret that he was alive.

Side Story 50

101st Floor (2)

It is an unavoidable choice.

There was no way back.

That is what divinity was.

It could be changed according to God's interpretation.

Even if I lose, if I believe that it is a stepping stone for my final victory, it is not a defeat.

But if I choose for myself what has been confirmed as a defeat, there is no way to get it back no matter what I do.

Defeat is confirmed as defeat.

[Is that your choice?]

It was the voice of the God of Order.

Yes, this was my choice.

[I have been watching you for a long time. I knew you wouldn't let them go.]

You did very well.

The time the God of Order was able to watch over me would be before I completed my divinity on the 61st floor.

At the time I would have been willing to abandon someone close in exchange for victory.

I guess he didn't watch me properly.

[No, I saw it right. How much stability and comfort you needed.]

The God of Order kept talking.

It was a couple of times, but whenever I faced the God of Order, the God of Order kept his words to the utmost minimum.

He didn't utter words unless they were necessary.

He never even explained his own thoughts, befitting a selfless machine god.

But now, the God of Order was speaking unrequired words.

[That was your motive. "Desire" was the fuel you needed to move forward. After the desire was met, it was no longer possible to proceed as recklessly as before. That became your new weakness. like now.]

Yes, it was a weakness.

Abandon either family or divinity.

There was only one way to override this option.

It is about defeating the God of Order and saving Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man before they die.

It was the perfect answer.

Except that I'm not sure Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man will hold out until I go.

Except for that, it was the perfect answer.

In the past, I would have challenged this answer without hesitation.

Without relying on probabilities.

Then it could be.

Because the stakes were so low.

My life wasn't worth it.

But now it was different.

I couldn't gamble over my family.

[It was a strange thing.]

The God of Order did not stop his words.

Is the God of Order's chattering evidence that that machine god is being completed toward transcendence?

Or is that something I have to tell you?

[But fulfillment has made you complete. You could become a god only after you got what you so desperately wanted. I watched the process. So it was predictable. Which one will you throw away?]

Yes, it was an easy choice.

Even if I throw away Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man and defeat the God of Order, the result after that will result in my defeat.

The answer was fixed.

[However.]

The God of Order continued his words.

A little hesitantly though.

[I wanted you to transcend.]

“Yes.”

I understood.

What the God of Order wanted me to do.

What was the reason you called me to come in here?

[I wanted you to show me the way.]

“You’re also tied up too.”

Like all other gods.

The God of Order was not free from his divinity either.

Even the God of Order is a machine god created by intention.

To him, divinity would have been nothing but redemption.

[But you also did not transcend.]

[Now there is only one way left. The only answer would be to devour the world and stand outside of all laws, as the God of Origins did in the past.]

The God of Order has declared to me.

[Get lost, you gave up. and don’t come back. When we meet again, you will die.]

[This is the order established by me, the God of Order, and there will be no way to reverse that order.]

“Dad!”

I picked up the running dragon and hugged him.

Our Yong-yong had the appearance of his hatchling days.

It’s been a long time since I’ve seen you.

It was the first time Yong-yong learned polymorph.

Obviously, when looking through space, Yongyong was in the form of an adult dragon.

Did he get smaller again because of me?

“Our Yongyong has turned into a lizard again.”

“You can’t use polymorph here.”

No way.

This place suppressed divinity but did not prevent magic.

“Dad told you to wait at home, so why did you chase after me? That’s dangerous.”

Yongyong smiled and said that he had been chasing him because he wanted to see dad.

He was a pretty kid.

He was a pretty kid no matter where I looked, but he was the prettiest and I am most grateful for him being honest about his feelings.

“Old Man.”

Holding Yongyong in my arms, I called for Old Man.

Old Man was distorted.

“You’re so leaky. Are you okay?”

“It’s okay.”

The body of the giant was leaking lava.

He was holding his shape, but it was unlikely he would ever be able to bring it back together.

“Why did you come here? You’re not even in good shape.”

“I’m going to die soon.”

“What?”

The Old Man said as he touched the flowing lava skin.

“I may die soon. I don’t know when. I lost my divinity and became a mortal, so it is natural to die someday. I don’t know whether it will be tomorrow or a little further away. That’s why I came. I wanted to see you.”

Everything is good, but the last comment was a bit like that.

It was burdensome.

“Grandmother would be jealous.”

The Old Man chuckled and laughed.

I said thank you for coming.

“You.”

And I asked Hochi.

“I followed Yong-yong.”

it would have been.

When Yong-yong came, it was only natural that Hochi followed.

Our Yong-yong was not a child who would sneak from Hochi, and there was no way Hochi would let Yongyong go alone.

“Yong-yong.”

“Huh?”

Yong-yong, who was on the palm of my hand, answered.

Yong-yong, who was in my arms, was small enough to fit on my hand.

Previously, I thought he was returning to the hatchling form from the adult, but I was wrong.

Yong-yong was getting smaller in real-time.

Even now.

Maybe he will get smaller to a cell size.

“Yong-yong, are you going to be this small? Dad can’t see you.”

Yongyong muttered a little.

Perhaps his body became smaller and his voice became smaller, to the point of not being able to hear him properly unless I really listened.

“This look is not very cute.”

“No, you’re cute.”

Yong-yong was cute even when he was a lizard.

Even when Yongyong was an egg, he looked cute in my eyes.

Yong-yong, who still had to be fed each super mealworm by hand, had a good child-like image, but it couldn't be cuter.

“Really?”

When I nodded my head, Yongyong increased his size a little.

* * *

“Go back now.”

The three were very vehemently opposed.

If that was the case, they wouldn't have come in in the first place.

“Anyway, if you fail, we will all die.”

Yes all will die

The world will perish

“Even if I succeed, you can get hurt. You can die. That's why I'm sending you back.”

For the three of you.

It may not be a problem right now.

“You'll be safe. Until you meet the God of Order.”

I've already visited this place once.

Even if they lost their divinity permanently, there was no way they could be stopped in the middle.

Even Hochi, Yongyong, and Old Man joined together, and the group's power increased.

“The problem is only after meeting the God of Order.”

But the three of them did not give up until the very end.

When the Old Man came here, it seemed that he had already given up the thought of going back to life.

Yong-yong, this clever child, came in clearly aware of the dangers of this place.

If he was persuaded by my words to return, he would not have come in in the first place.

“Still... maybe we can help.”

Hochi didn't give up.

Of the three, Hochi was the most stubborn.

Hochi was a very unique creature.

Being someone other than me, he was me at the same time.

Hochi will be able to feel it too.

My condition now.

That's why he doesn't want to leave me behind.

I finally accepted the pressure of the three.

It was a wrong decision.

I came back to save the three, and I'm taking them back to a dangerous place.

Maybe I wanted to pretend I couldn't win and accept the coercion.

Because of the weakness within me that lost my divinity, I raised my head again.

"...Okay, let's go as far as we can."

I said so.

* * *

Old Man and Yong-yong took the lead.

Yong-yong, who looked a little depressed by making his body smaller, quickly regained his courage.

Hochi talked about Yongyong's troubles.

It seems that there was a problem with his appearance.

It was a problem for a teenage child to have.

It was also a concern that would come more seriously if the child had a different appearance from the parent.

"Still, I feel relieved right away when you said it to him. When I comforted him, he kept feeling anxious."

said Hochi.

"Since you and I tell the same story, then he must be relieved."

Hochi laughed at my words.

"You bastard, you're talking nice things. Why are you talking about things that don't suit you?"

We giggled together.

That was then.

Like a fruit hanging from a branch ripens and falls to the ground.

So naturally and unexpectedly, my left arm fell to the ground.

My left arm was cut off from the shoulder.

“.....”

“Let’s go.”

I looked at my arm that fell to the floor and said to Hochi, who was dumbfounded.

Hochi started walking again without saying a word.

Yong-yong and Old Man, who was walking earlier, were the same.

The two didn’t even look back.

It seems everyone knew.

What state am I in now.

Yes, it was before becoming a god.

I didn’t have one arm.

The divinity went beyond being suppressed and completely lost.

The difference appeared here.

My arm, which I had restored after gaining divinity, was cut off again.

Pain raged in my stomach.

It was nothing.

In order to raise the skills that had been stagnant at the time, I abused my body in all sorts of ways.

To increase my pain tolerance, I modified my body to feel pain at every moment.

An extremely sensitive nerve that always felt pain.

It was a pain that was enough to ignore the resistance skill.

Magical power was churning through my body uncontrollably.

If I didn't want my body to explode and die because of my magic, I had to control my magic at every moment.

Occasionally, when emotional agitation became uncontrollable, I would force my magical energy out of my body, but every time, the 61st floor was swept away.

There was a time when I was studying curses and blessing magic for a long time.

All that magic was accumulated in my body.

The magic sometimes collided with each other, and sometimes caused a chain reaction.

Diseases with incubation periods and extreme poisons were also present in my body.

At that time, I deliberately left the poison undetoxified into my body.

It was an amazing body.

It wasn't strange if I had died.

Yes, it was like this back then.

Unexpectedly, I looked back to the past.

It wasn't a very pleasant past.

"Are you okay?"

Hochi asked.

I couldn't open my mouth to answer because I was holding back the pain that just came over me.

I just nodded my head quietly, hoping that I would look calm.

"...It's because of us. It's because of us because you came back from fighting."

It was a word that could not be answered only with a nod of my head.

I opened my mouth and answered.

"No."

Hoch didn't ask anymore.

He just said sorry

After walking like that for a while, Hochi suddenly spoke.

"I have something to say."

Hochi's face was serious.

"When this is over when we all get back to Earth safely, I have something I want to say to you."

He was putting a death flag on his serious face.

Side Story 51

101st Floor (3)

“No! It’s not a death flag!”

What do you mean, no?

It would be a death flag that anyone could see.

It would be complete if only he added the words of who he was going to confess to, and that he prepared a ring.

“It’s really not.”

Hochi looked greatly embarrassed.

He was obsessed with novels and manga, so he seems to have taken the joke of a death flag seriously.

“What were you talking about?”

“No, I won’t talk.”

What are you going to do if I don’t say that?

There are two ways to make a person angry, one is to not finish what they are saying, and the other is not talking at all.

“Just tell me. The flags are all raised anyway. It’s less embarrassing if you say something and die.”

“Because it’s not a flag! And don’t die!”

Yes, yes, I’m not going to die.

I had to soothe Hochi.

“Yeah. So who are you dating? It’s probably not one of our followers.”

The temple in Seoul was supposed to house a number of church members, including clerks.

It must have been completed by now, so there must have been some devotees who met frequently in the temple where Hochi mainly lived.

Hochi said no, and turned his head.

I thought he was going to be arrogant and angry, but his reaction was a little subtle.

It seemed that there was one believer who he was really interested in.

It was a surprise.

“It’s not like that.”

“Then.”

“Why don’t you... look for your family together?”

An unexpected story emerged.

“My family?”

He said it was my family, not my family.

I’m not talking about Hochi and Yong-yong and the giants on the 61st floor.

“Yeah. You haven’t looked for them since you came out of the Tutorial.”

Before going into the tutorial, there were only three people in my family.

My father, my sister and me.

There was no communication with relatives.

In my later documentary, we were portrayed as very close and close relatives, but in reality, we did not see each other even on holidays.

I didn't really want to find them.

Father had long since passed away.

So had my sister.

It was during the time I was in the tutorial, but it was certain that my sister died of an illness.

There was a missing nephew.

When I first heard the news about my nephew, I was a little puzzled.

At some point, I thought he would be able to survive.

He was a brilliant kid.

However, it was not unusual to have an accident at a time when the world had turned upside down and monsters were popping up in the middle of Seoul.

Of course, he is classified as missing, but a disappearance at that time was virtually the same as death.

I had no family to visit.

“Still.....”

Even so, Hochi seems to want me to visit my family.

I knew what the reason was.

What Hochi is worried about me.

“Then, shall we visit the ossuary?”

The government kept the ashes of my father and sister.

The National Ossuary has been in operation since the National Cemetery, including the National Memorial Hall, was completely wiped out.

“Yeah, let’s go together.”

Hochi’s face brightened.

He’s a good guy

Even if I were in that guy’s position, would I be able to care as much as he did?

I must have always been thinking about getting the back of my head and neck hit.

Okay, let’s go to the ossuary.

I will apologize to my father and sister for the long delay.

I will greet them too.

I struggle with guilt and shame.

I will regret it and stuff like that

It was a decision I would never have made if I had not lost my divinity.

It was also an impossible decision.

I thought that losing my divinity was good in this respect.

* * *

“That’s right! Close the front properly!”

As I said, Hochi marked the enemies properly.

It was the responsibility of Yong-Yong and Old Man to inflict critical blows on the enemies.

Enemies here had a law of destruction.

The monsters here are exceptionally powerful.

But that ability was not enough to overwhelm our party.

It was just a matter of the gold containing the power of the God of Order.

The monster’s gold teeth and nails, swords, and spear blades could not be stopped without losing their divinities.

The reason the party was struggling is that they fought desperately while avoiding that gold, which would be very dangerous even if they were hit only once.

However, if Hochi, who is not divine but does not take any damage from gold, tanked properly, and Yong-yong and Old Man were able to safely focus on the attack, they could overcome it.

As the number of monsters decreased, it gradually became smoother.

“Great job.”

Hochi nodded his head.

This guy changed into a bizarre form every time he fought.

Rather than transforming, he seemed to change his appearance like metamorphosing.

Most of the forms that Hochi took were those of other monsters clad in gold.

Probably because he has to think of it right away, he can't think of a more powerful form than that.

"Shall we continue?"

The party started walking again without rest.

"Yes, but."

Hochi spoke again.

He had a lot of questions today.

"What do you mean there is no causality?"

That's what he was curious about.

It was something to be curious about.

In fact, Hochi had been curious about this issue for a long time.

Each time I didn't answer.

"Where do I begin to explain?"

"Is it complicated?"

"It is complicated."

If I tried to talk about it in a complicated way, it was so complicated that there was no limit to it.

We have to talk about the basics of divinity.

I tried to explain it as simply as possible.

“It doesn’t matter if you touch the gold of the God of Order, right?”

“Huh.”

Beyond just touching, being stabbed, or being beaten by a weapon made of gold, you will not be affected in any way.

Normally, that’s not possible.

That gold contains the power of the God of Order.

The God of Order is special among the gods.

Although he is a created machine god and is approaching transcendence, the concept of order itself is special.

God is basically a being who can distort the laws of the world at his own will.

Maybe that’s God’s justice.

However, the divinity of the God of Order lies in maintaining and defending, not distorting, the laws of the world.

Therefore, the God of Order is very powerful against other gods.

Because it inevitably prevents the distortion of the law through divinity.

That doesn’t mean he’s weak against non-god beings.

Weapons that contain the power of the God of Order strongly adhere to the rule of attacking and inflicting damage to the opponent.

Usually, when you get hit by a knife, you get cut, stabbed, injured, and hurt.

That law is expressed stronger than anything else.

There is no way to stop it, and there is no way to mitigate the impact.

It just hurts if you get hit with it.

It was not the power to use the causal variable, but the power to eliminate the causal variable.

“It’s already complicated.”

“Yes. Anyway, you don’t have causality, so it doesn’t harm your ability.”

Because he was standing outside of causality.

Perhaps the final destination that the God of Order so longed for would be like Hochi.

“...you skipped too much. Why do I not have causality in the first place? Because I was born as an alter ego?”

“That can’t be true, wouldn’t it? If it were that easy, everyone would have thrown off causality.”

The God of Order wouldn’t have made that riot to gain freedom.

“Then why?”

That’s what I thought.

This was also a question that I could answer because I lost my divinity.

“It’s not your problem. It was mine.”

“Your problem?”

“What is my divinity? No, what was it?”

Hochi replied that it was a victory.

“Yes. To have the title of victory, at least I have to be bound by victory. I have won countless times before, and I will only continue to win in the future. I need that kind of belief. Whether it is the belief of others or my own.”

“Huh, I know that. That’s how you became the God of Victory.”

It should have been.

Actually, it wasn’t really like that.

“There was only one opponent that I couldn’t win in the end. I don’t think I can win in the future.”

“Is there such a thing?”

There was.

The guy with a blank expression right in front of me right now.

“I’m talking about you, idiot Hochi.”

“Huh?”

“In the end, you didn’t become as strong as I wanted, you didn’t become my accessory, and you ended up maintaining your ego and surviving. That was enough to be recognized as a defeat.”

Hochi was a symbol of defeat.

I didn’t even know it meant my complacency.

Thanks to that, I couldn't have the divinity of victory.

As long as Hochi exists.

The moment I created Hochi, I became a being who could not be a god.

Another self-denying existence was too fatal to the divinity.

I had a choice.

Do I kill and absorb Hochi, who has become a family member, or give up becoming a god?

Yes, if he watched that time.

I could understand what the God of Order had expected from me.

I have transcended causation.

So I became a god.

The proof of that transcendence was Hochi.

Lee Hochi was completely out of the causal relationship of victory.

[Could you do that again?]

Seregia asked.

“No.”

I could say for sure.

It has only been successful once so far.

It was never going to happen in the future.

Artificially transcending causality.

As the God of Order says, it is impossible unless you become a transcendent God that devours the universe and exists outside of the law.

I also can't escape causality.

I don't know how, and I don't understand how Hochi's case came to be.

It will continue to be like that in the future.

* * *

“Ta-da!”

Yong-yong has transformed.

He became a little kid again.

He was wearing a military look I had never seen before.

He seems to have prepared himself to enter a dangerous place.

In fact, it was useless because he couldn't get out of the dragon form after entering.

“Isn't Yong-yong's clothes pretty?”

Yong-yong smiled broadly.

As soon as the divine restraints disappeared, Yong-yong returned to human form.

I said that the hatchling looks cute too, but Yong-yong seems to like the look of a young human child the most.

He looks happy.

By the way, the fact that polymorphing became possible as soon as he regained his divinity means that Yong-yong's divinity is closely related to the child's appearance.

"Now what?"

Hochi asked.

The party had already reached the point where the divinity suppression had disappeared.

I already had my experience of finishing one attack.

As Hochi's abilities grew more and more deceptive, he was able to arrive without serious injuries.

The problem started here.

To be precise, the problem was the God of Order that we would meet soon.

"What are the odds?"

"Low."

Very low

Only the God of Order could know how far the power of the God of Order would go.

I watched the scene where he was subduing the God of Sky, but I wasn't sure if that was all or if there was another power.

Hochi's complexion darkened.

If Hochi had always asked the odds in the past, I would have told him that he would win unconditionally.

Perhaps Hochi wanted such an answer.

“Still, there’s a chance of winning.”

There was definitely a possibility.

“I can give an effective hit.”

It was certain that it would be an effective hit.

However, it was a problem because it was not possible to guarantee how effective the effective hit would be.

“Let’s get ready.”

“Already?”

This is the realm of the God of Order.

There was nothing good to waste time.

There was no need to show the God of Order more information about us and give him time to think about what to do.

If we’re ready, it’s best to jump right in.

“Yong-yong.”

“Okay, I’ll get ready.”

Yong-yong answered boldly.

I stroked Yong-yong’s head.

“I’m sorry for bringing you to such a dangerous place.”

“No, that’s fine.”

As expected, a bold answer came back.

I had no intention of raising this child to become a warrior.

Although I taught him magic, combat, and a battle attitude for dangerous situations.

I never intended to mobilize Yong-yong in battle.

Back then, that was the way of parenting.

I taught the magic of burning the sky and dividing the earth and played with the child.

I was too clumsy

We should've rather played with clay instead.

It was only regrettable.

Yong-yong prepared magic.

I took out Ahboobooand handed it to the Old man.

“You know what to do?”

“Of course.”

Old Man is in better condition than when he first looked.

I don't know how his body is, but his complexion and mood have noticeably improved.

In a voice as loud as thunder, the Old Man said.

“In the end, it turned around and became like this.”

I asked what that meant.

“Even when we promised to destroy the fake world and kill the gods, we weren’t gods. We became gods and came out. Now, with only one step left to our goal, it’s no different than when we first promised.”

When I was on the 61st floor, I was in a physical condition where I couldn’t become a god.

That was correct.

“If we could have come here then, wouldn’t we have challenged it ourselves?”

“I would have done it!”

The air rumbled at that resolute reply.

His voice was still as great as before.

“Aaaah! I don’t want to be held by a giant man with such a loud voice! I don’t want to!”, I handed over the screaming Ahbooboo to the Old Man.

“Come on, let’s get ready.”

“...Me? What, what are you preparing for?”

Hochi was just confused.

Because I didn’t really explain the operation.

In the realm of the God of Order, I could not explain how to fight the God of Order.

“What am I supposed to do?!”

“You’re supposed to take care of everything when the situation arises. Don’t worry too much.”

“Huh?”

That was then.

Complex diagrams and runes were drawn on the floor.

Texts climbed through the air and enveloped us.

It is a space movement developed by Yong-yong.

When Yong-yong regained his divinity, we could immediately attack the God of Order.

I also knew that there was no reason to go there on foot because I had already been there once.

Is it necessary to knock on the door of the enemy's house and enter politely?

Just break the window and go in.

Kukukugung!

The vibration was intense.

Because of my poor physical condition, this vibration alone made my body suffer greatly.

We are breaking into the room of the God of Order without permission.

It couldn't have been comfortable and easy to get in.

But Yong-yong is the child I raised myself.

Even compared to me with magic, he wasn't pushed back.

He was a genius among geniuses who had even attained divine status at such a young age.

The surrounding environment has changed.

It was not a narrow passage.

The giant eyes of the God of Order floating in the black air.

Yong-yong finally managed to break through all obstacles and put us in front of the God of Order.

[Challenger, I must tell you.....]

The voice of the God of Order was buried.

—Whoa, whoa, whoa!

A huge voice filled the surroundings.

It was a voice that sounded like an explosion from afar.

It wasn't a strange expression.

Actually, the voice was heard from far away.

As soon as Old Man confirmed the movement move, his body grew bigger.

From the size of a giant who had a body the size of a house to the size of a building, it was large enough to overlook even a huge mountain range.

Perhaps even more than that, his body was getting bigger and bigger.

Old Man, who had grown his body to the limit, slammed his hand as it was.

Rather than swinging fists, it was a sight that looked like a planet was falling.

The God of Order blocked the appearance with a huge golden shield without any response or appreciation.

The Old Man's fist shattered as soon as it touched the gold.

The lava that made up Old Man's body flowed down one after another on the shield.

The God of Order seemed to have taken no damage.

But that wasn't all the attack he had prepared.

Old Man swung his other arm.

The God of Order calmly raised his shield, but the Old Man's fist split the air.

Ahbooboo was hiding in a fist the size of a mountain.

Ahbooboo, who was thrown by the Old Man, flew towards the God of Order.

It was Abubu who flew at a transcendent speed, but the golden tentacles sent out by the God of Order caught Abubu.

In the end, Abubu could not reach the God of Order.

But his purpose has already been achieved.

Abubu's purpose is to get even a little closer to the God of Order.

That was all.

A sword prepared by the God of Sky who tried to challenge the ordeal created by Kirikiri and neutralize the God of Order.

Just like the entrance to the 101st floor, Abubu had the ability to suppress divinity.

The world, where only the black abyss existed, was brightened with color.

The blue sky spread out.

The floor was littered with a wasteland.

The sun was shining through the sky.

The darkness was lifted.

The appearance of the God of Order was revealed.

The God of Order had the face of a huge beast.

On the face of the beast, a dense mane stretched indefinitely and moved like a tentacle or a finger.

And gold was attached to the tip of the mane.

The gold moved individually, but combined with each other to become a huge shield or a spear.

“Come on, let’s go. It’s our turn.”

“Huh?!”

Everyone did so well.

More than expected, enough.

I grabbed Hochi’s neck and flew forward.

[Thalaria’s Wings]

A rare fraudulent power that increases the challenger’s ability to take on the danger in proportion to the danger of the enemy in front of him.

It's been a while since I've used it, but it was still good.

When I used it against the mighty God of Order, I was able to taste the omnipotence of being a god.

In fact, there will be no place behind God in terms of simple abilities.

The manes of the God of Order recognized us.

In the end, he set up a golden weapon and flew in.

Finally, it was Hochi's turn.

“Are you ready?!”

“What! What preparation! What preparation!!!”

It was Hochi who still hadn't realized.

I pulled my hand holding Hochi back as far as I could and swung him straight forward.

Hochi, who flew forward like an arrow, made eye contact for a moment.

“Hey, this... you bastard!”

Hochi's body began to change along with the swear words.

It was a more rapid change than usual.

Hochi became huge chains and nets.

He attacked the body of the god of order that seemed to cover even the world.

Manes tangled and bumped.

I flew towards the God of Order in the chaos.

Avoiding every mane.

Yes, in the past, we fought while avoiding thousands of magics raining down like this.

It has now become a completely different scale.

But it was no different from back then.

Calmly, sometimes daringly, I walked between the manes.

So I was able to get close to the God of Order.

In the face of an ugly beast.

I put my feet up

There were manes flying at me desperately.

I didn't care.

It's already too late.

I had already pulled out Seregia.

At that time, the sword that I forged with all my tenacity and meticulousness.

It was a weapon prepared solely for the purpose of killing a god.

[Transcendence.....]

Transcendence.

In this world, there is a way for anyone to achieve transcendence.

To stand outside the laws of the world.

In fact, this method can be achieved without having to swallow the universe.

All beings can be freed from the constraints of the world through death.

It was a truth that applied equally to everyone.

“Just die!”

Without hesitation, I thrust the sword deep into the face of the God of Order.

* * *

Kirikiri was just lying on the dirt floor.

Her dress and limbs had become dirty with dirt, but she didn't care.

There was no one to blame in her own space where there was no one in it.

It was a mess.

Kirikiri eventually gave up on restoring the dug land and laid down.

It was only a vague thought that someday time will solve it.

Maybe she's exhausted from all the things she's been through lately.

It may not be a recent issue.

Maybe it's because of all the hardships she faced in the long, long time she's been through since she became a god.

Anyway, Kirikiri was tired now.

So she did nothing and quietly lay down on the dirt floor and stared at the sky.

Unlike the ruined earth, the sky was calm and clear.

There was a crack in the sky

The clouds were pushed away with the sound of something breaking, and black and dark light began to pour out of the blue color.

Kirikiri jumped up from her seat.

The boundary between the God of Order and her own space was broken.

It meant either one of the two.

Whether the God of Order has completely escaped her own constraints.

Or, the God of Order that existed in that space completely collapsed.

Kirikiri clasped her hand.

She couldn't predict anything.

At the end of her long adventure, she had to wait for the result.

Unknowingly, she glanced at the remnants of the pearls that had been scattered on the floor.

The sky was pouring down

The being she had been waiting for walked out of the fully opened space.

In front of the result she finally came across, Kirikiri smiled quietly.

After kicking with her feet the pearl remnants of the floor, Kirikiri ran to welcome those who returned to her garden.

Side Story 52

After (1)

“What’s going on these days?”

Jirji shook his head.

Worried eyes were looking at him.

“No, nothing special.”

Jirji replied that way.

It was actually the same.

Nothing happened.

His work was arduous and demanding both physically and mentally.

It was dangerous at times.

However, it was just an accident that occurred due to his professional nature, so his daily life did not change.

“Take this. Take it and boil it.”

The butcher put some meat in a bag.

Jirji took it without hesitation.

His daily routine has not changed.

But people around him kept asking if there was something wrong with him.

This was mainly the case with the locals where Jirji lived.

Jirji was contributing to the security of the neighborhood,

The impact was not small.

Jirji, a polite and kind superhuman, has always been a good person to those around him.

People were sensitive to such changes in Jirji.

“You look a little gloomy right now.”

“No.”

Jirji himself thought that nothing had changed.

He was originally a quiet person.

Back home, Jirji could feel it all over again.

For him, home was a place of silence.

He didn't open his mouth except to eat or make occasional business calls.

It was a natural fact, and it didn't feel strange and awkward.

It was about 15 days.

One day he had a friend who suddenly came to his house and behaved like a gangster.

During the half month he spent with his friend, his mouth was restless.

Even when he was at home, he had to chat all day.

It was a noisy, hectic full moon.

It was only that full moon.

Ever since becoming independent from his family, maybe even before that.

Jirji's house was quiet.

And it will be so for the rest of his life.

It was such familiar loneliness, but the quiet house felt lonely in contrast to when it had been noisy for only a month.

Jirji looked into the telescope.

There have been recent changes in the asteroid.

It was a very big change.

The asteroid was moving on its own.

It was being disassembled.

The spherical asteroid was not a huge rock mass.

Surprisingly, it was close to a prefabricated spherical structure.

Like a child disassembling a Lego model, the asteroids that were falling apart one by one began to form themselves.

When the asteroid first started moving, people were astonished.

At first, it was thought that the seal of the great superhuman had been broken and the monsters had been resurrected.

The operation to rescue Akaiden was canceled and preparations were made for an airstrike.

But the asteroid didn't crash, and it didn't spawn monsters.

People were now trembling with anxiety, watching how the asteroid changed.

It was strange.

Not long ago, while watching an asteroid through a telescope, Jirji spotted a woman.

He thought the woman had something to do with a mysterious phenomenon taking place on the asteroid.

And with his friend who disappeared at the same time as the announcement of the rescue operation of Akaiden a week ago.

* * *

It's been two weeks since the asteroid started moving.

There have been many changes during that time.

The asteroid was now in the shape of a giant man.

It was like seeing a statue of a saint looking down on the world from the sky with his arms wide open.

A statue honoring Akaiden was usually like that.

It was truly magical.

People believed that Akaiden was resurrected.

They said that their prayers were heard, and Akaiden was awakened, and the asteroid was transformed into a statue to honor him.

It was a ridiculous story.

But people believed.

People would seriously believe in absurd stories.

These are people who have been deceived by the excuse of an invisible frog.

He didn't even know it was normal.

The ritual of a few people who had been silent to pray for Akaiden every afternoon has now become a national event.

After lunch and every afternoon, people prayed and bowed to the asteroid, or even the Akaiden aerial statue.

A religion that believes in Akaiden was born.

Surprisingly, it was a religion led by superhumans.

When the superhumans first returned, they were the ones who took the lead in denying and abolishing existing religions, but now they were claiming to be devoutly religious people.

Afternoon prayer time has become compulsory rather than voluntary.

Doctrines were also created.

Akaiden sacrificed himself to protect the world, and became a god through the reverence of all people.

Akaiden, who became a god, looks down on the world from the sky, and when the believers' faith is sufficient, he will come down to the world again.

It was such a doctrine.

The public and the government cannot even stop it.

The public supported the Akaiden faith.

Although the gap and conflict between superhumans and non-superhumans had deepened, respect and love for the great superhuman Akaiden transcended the class.

The government also failed to stop the religion.

They could not turn both the Association of Superhumans and the people into enemies.

Soon the federal government made the Akaiden faith the state religion.

Jirji was concerned.

The Akaiden faith temporarily closed the conflict between the superhuman and the non-superhumans.

The non-superhumans were no longer able to swear at the superhumans.

As long as the great superhuman is watching the world from the sky.

However, the source of the conflict did not disappear.

The doctrine of the Akaiden faith did not address the gap between the superhuman and the non-superhuman.

As time passed, he thought that a new class system might be established beyond the hierarchies.

* * *

Another strange thing happened.

These days, mysterious things happen once a week.

This incident was also shocking enough not to be missed.

High-ranking superhumans have disappeared in large numbers.

When the superhumans who wielded powerful influence in the government, the Association of Superhumans, and the Church disappeared all at once, a vacuum in the social leadership was created.

The confusion spread even to Jirji, who was at the end.

Perhaps his command system was broken, and no approval came from his superiors.

Payday was approaching right now, and he was wondering if he would get any money.

As usual, when Jirji returned home from work, he felt nervous.

Although he felt lonely and empty, he had never felt the tension and fear at home.

The house looked peaceful.

The furniture was the same.

There were no signs of intrusion.

But his body hardened like a hard stone.

Would this be the case with a frog facing a snake right in front of it?

Jirji's body, terrified of fear, had stiffened enough to fear that he might die of muscle stiffness.

Soon he learned that his fears were no illusions.

"I've heard you're gentle and kind, but you're a wild bear."

It was a small, quiet voice.

It is reminiscent of a quiet, introverted woman that is usually seen walking down the street.

He would have thought she was a really ordinary woman if it wasn't for her bloody glowing eyes.

Her long hair down to her waist looked bushy from poor maintenance.

Her long hair and fluffy outfit made her look smaller.

"I don't know what he's looking at to entrust you with work. I don't think I've ever met such a person on the 57th floor."

She was a woman he had seen at the asteroid through the telescope.

He couldn't forget that unusual attire and ferocious eyes.

"1400, right?"

* * *

He brought his ID to the scanner.

The door to the temple opened.

It was still an awkward sight.

The entrance to the temple was opened by cutting-edge technology.

It was only a few months ago that religion was treated as a product of the old times before supernatural powers were discovered.

Jirji was still not mentally accepting it as a religion.

This was still the case when he became the bishop of the Akaiden faith and took care of the church's affairs.

Akaiden faith was firmly established.

The statues of Akaiden floating in the sky and the apostles of Akaiden faith erased any room for distrust.

Except for probably Jirji, everyone in the world believes in and follows Akaiden as a god.

But except for him.

Although he was able to meet face-to-face and communicate with the god people worshiped, he did not worship this god.

He was walking down the hallway when a kid approached him.

In principle, entry into the temple is prohibited.

Even Jirji, the only exception, is not allowed to enter except on the day of the audience.

Then the identity of the child was obvious.

This is the child that came out from the inside of the temple.

“Can I give you this?”

What the child brought out were a few wild flowers.

The flowers were neatly tied with weeds.

“Is that okay?”

The child nodded.

Jirji took the flower.

When he said thank you, the child was embarrassed and ran somewhere.

It is not strange what happens within this temple, which is said to be connected to several dimensions.

For example, a child running around in the temple, which is an off-limits area.

So was the pair of fox ears on the little child's head.

Jirji had to adapt to all these absurd and mysterious phenomena.

As he walked, the door came out again.

After a light knock, the answer to come in came back.

Jirji opened the door and went inside.

“Oh, are you here, 1400?”

It was, as always, an insincere greeting.

“Croak.”

Beside him, a lizardman over two meters tall waved her hand to greet him.

Seeing the scene, Jirji felt that he had not yet adapted to it.

* * *

1400, whom I had not seen in a long time, was holding a bunch of flowers in his hand.

What is that?

Did you bring it to me?

If that's the case, I think it would be a little creepy.

“What is that, that withered grass?”

“The little kid I met in front gave me a present. The kid with fox ears.”

“It’s a pretty flower.”

It was a pretty flower.

Park Jung-ah, who was next to me, looked at me with strange eyes, but she ignored me.

As soon as 1400 came in, he started talking about work.

It had to do with superhumans.

We controlled the superhumans themselves to close the gap between the superhuman and the non-superhumans.

By studying superpower particles, it became possible to transform them, inject them into humans, or remove them.

Through that, it was possible to remove dangerous superhumans, change the powers to the superpowers they want, or purchase superpowers by paying money.

Of course, the power was weakened.

It can be applied to the daily life of a modern society where there is no need for battle.

It was not an easy task, and Jirji, who was in charge of the task, was busy every day.

Thanks to that, Jirji was only talking about his errands today.

He was a hard-working guy.

He was like that when we first met.

When I said that it had been a long time, he said bluntly, ‘Yes, it’s been three months.’

That guy must have completely forgotten me.

Aside from my disappointment, Jirji was a trustworthy guy.

He was a man who thought deeply about problems between social classes, and knew how to look at the situation objectively.

He didn't have a bad personality, so he could be trusted with the managerial position.

"Later."

Having finished talking about work, Jirji stood up and said.

"Huh?"

"Come over to my house sometime. Let's have a drink after a long time. Then... let's play games."

I said with a smirk.

"Yeah, I'll be there soon."

Jirji walked out shyly.

He's always been a fun friend.

"Croak, the person who works for the captain is cool. He's intelligent and even kind."

Iddy, who was next to me, said.

It was an endless compliment.

Kuang!

Park Jung-ah, who was sitting a little further away, struck the desk.

I am a little worried because she seems to be becoming more and more violent.

Park Jung-ah stared at Iddy with all kinds of expressions, but Iddy laughed and said that it was interesting again.

I was stuck in the middle and it was a strangely uncomfortable situation.

“...Are you going to name your religion as Akaiden?”

Park Jung-ah asked.

Recently, Park Jung-ah was also helping with office work.

Because I have so much work.

“I think so.”

“You know it’s not very effective, right?”

Of course I know.

Because people worship the superhuman Akaiden.

I am actually running the religion and taking care of their lives, but the faith gathered by me is not that great.

This is why the gods run their religion under their own names.

If the object of worship is not clear, the divine power will be dispersed.

“Why don’t you change your religious name even now?”

“Never mind, it didn’t have any effect.”

It was just like the Earth right now.

My religion was still called Lee Ho Jae faith.

People roamed around, saying homen, homen.

Even though I went up to the 9 o'clock news and told them not to do this homen, they continued to say homen, homen, and gossip until the end.

I think it's best to just let people believe what they want to believe.

"After all, the captain is cool and cool. Croak."

This time, a grinding sound was heard.

She's going to lose all her teeth."

"Croak, the human woman become ferocious. She used to be shy when I saw her. Croak, croak."

Iddy had met Park Jung-ah before.

In the past, when we attacked the 12th floor, there was a day for a dialogue agreement, so we went together.

Then she saw Park Jung-ah.

That was ten years ago.

Since it has been over ten years, it's not surprising that things change.

I thought to myself only because I thought Park Jung-ah would get angry again if I said it out loud.

"We should be friendly. Croak. Aren't we in the same situation?"

Iddy said.

Park Jung-ah did not agree with that statement.

"Why are you and I in the same situation? You and I are on different levels. We're in different positions. We did everything we could. You're just a flirty lizard."

Park Jung-ah explained very passionately.

She did everything she had to do, the hand gestures in the part were very rough.

"Croak, the human woman is lying. We all know that because she is weak, she cannot even reproduce with the captain."

Iddy's counterattack was strong.

Park Jung-ah didn't say anything.

At this point, I started to get embarrassed too.

Park Jung-ah, who had been struggling for a while, kicked her desk and got up.

"Where."

"Back to the tutorial!"

Why are you back there again?

How much work is there to do here?

"Inevitably, I must become stronger. To reproduce..."

Oops, I can't hear it.

I can't hear it.

Park Jung-ah, who revealed her bold ambition to gain the upper hand in the relationship with a lizard mate through sexual intercourse, headed out.

“Hey, how is the work?”

“Do it yourself!”

It was Park Jung-ah who screamed and left.

There was a person following Park Jung-ah.

“Why are you following me again!”

“Croak, I’m going to be strong too. So I...”

I quietly covered my ears.

Iddy’s and Park Jung-ah’s abusive language followed.

I didn’t hear it.

I didn’t hear it.

“Haa.”

The two seemed to be on bad terms, but they were friendly.

The reason I don’t stop the fighting despite that is that the two of them just did it that way.

Because they were two people with no friends and no one to lean on, they continued to stick together even though they annoyed and teased each other.

I was the only one in the middle, and I was in an ambiguous situation.

Suddenly, Park Jung-ah and Iddy both left.

If this is the case, who else is doing all the work?

Hochi doesn’t come home without a word.

Lee Yeon-hee... Come to think of it, she must have finished all her assignments, but there is no contact.

Kim Min-hyuk and people of the Earth were already suffering from overwork, so I was sorry to have them do other work.

It was really too much work.

It was good until I brought it into my affiliation after destroying the God of Order and freeing the tutorial world.

The problem was that the world the tutorial stage contained was too vast.

This was the case even when looking at the 57th floor here.

A planet with superhumans.

This was not the end.

In the universe to which this planet belongs, there are other planets that appear in other tutorials.

There was even Earth.

Contrary to what I thought, each stage contained the entire universe, not limited to the background area.

So, about 400 stages of easy, normal, hard, and hell difficulty.

It contained 400 universes.

You could even find the same person if you looked at the universes in the same time zone.

At this point, it was something close to a parallel universe.

In such a universe, all kinds of problems were scattered.

The dangers of the level of the world's destruction were hidden in the place where the stage immediately became the background, and other social problems and disasters did not cease.

At this point, I wondered if I could solve everything.

I'm sighing out of frustration.

The space opened quietly.

It was inside the temple that was forbidden to enter, but I wasn't too surprised.

It was a scheduled visit.

"Hewwo!"

It was Kirikiri who appeared beyond the space.

Kirikiri, who appeared with a characteristic cheerful attitude, asked me.

"Now, are you ready to visit the Hundred God's Temple?"

"Sure."

I stood up with an answer.

Side Story 53

After (2)

[END]

“It’s a fun place.”

Kirikiri said.

A fun place.

This temple is connected to all dimensions.

Although it is a single building, you can go to Earth through the gates of this temple, or to the planet where Jirji is.

The more worlds I manage, and the more temples I own, the more this temple will be connected to various worlds.

Kirikiri asked if I would leave immediately.

I shook my head.

Instead of following Kirikiri right away, I called Myongmyong who was playing in the hallway.

Fortunately, he was doing well.

He also took care of the garden inside the temple and presented flowers to the visitors of the temple.

He occasionally visited his native village.

Since they are a tribe that goes out of the village and engages in housework, they quickly adapted to living in a foreign country.

They're a race that likes to help others, so naturally, they like decorating and cleaning.

No matter how I think about it, they were too perfect a race.

"Is he a fox? How are you?"

Kirikiri, who was next to me, spoke to Myongmyong.

Although she was unfamiliar to Myongmyong, she raised his hand and greeted him.

"That's the kid on the 19th floor. The God of Sacrifice would like him."

"The God of Sacrifice?"

It wasn't a very pleasant story.

The fact that that psychopathic god was interested in Myongmyong was uncomfortable in itself.

"Because that stage contains the past that the God of Sacrifice regretted."

It was a story I didn't really want to know.

Even more so now that everyone is listening.

"Myongmyong, can you tell Grandpa Lava where I'm going? Just tell him that I'm going to the Hundred Gods Temple."

Myongmyong couldn't answer right away.

It wasn't like him to not like to listen to other people's requests.

“Why? don’t you like him?”

“...I hate that guy because he keeps trying to touch me.”

That’s a misleading statement.

To touch here means to stroke his hair.

Old Man likes small and cute things which is a trait that doesn’t fit well with his appearance.

When I first brought Myongmyong, he was just as happy as I was.

He wanted to treat him as his young grandson and play with him as if the Old Man was a grandfather.

Unfortunately, that was impossible.

Although he recovered his divinity and escaped from the dead, the lava Old Man took on a new form.

Not that of a giant with red skin.

He has become a giant with flowing lava skin.

Instead of sweat, his body secreted lava.

With such a body, Old Man’s body was always maintained at a high temperature.

Of course, Old Man could regulate his body temperature.

However, even if he adjusted it, it wouldn’t burn, but it didn’t change that it was too hot to touch.

Of course, I would hate it if he tries to stroke my hair with such hot palms.

“I’ll tell him not to.”

Chances are he won’t listen to me.

Then I have to tell the grandmother.

Myongmyong replied that he understood.

He likes to do favors, and he has a strong sense of responsibility for his work.

He immediately went out of the temple.

He will go straight to the 61st floor.

He’s gone through the portal several times, so he won’t get lost.

“You really adore him.”

“He’s cute.”

Kirikiri stared at me and opened the space.

It was a space for the Gundred Gods Temple.

“You can’t take your weapon. You have to leave it here.”

“I don’t have a weapon.”

Kirikiri widened her eyes as if in surprise.

“You always carried it with you.”

I shrugged.

Ahbooboo went to the God of Sky.

Seregia was in the midst of renovation on the 61st floor.

When the God of Order was defeated, the whole party fought desperately, but Seregia was the one who did the best.

Perhaps she had gained something in the process, as Seregia was remodeling herself.

Even if she was an ego sword, she wouldn't like being remodeled.

I did far too much remodeling.

Now, I was worried that she might enjoy being remodeled itself.

“Let's go.”

I moved my feet across the space with Kirikiri.

Not holding anything, alone.

It was light clothing.

It reminded me of the first time I entered the tutorial.

There was nothing back then.

Not even a coin was in my pocket.

I regretted it so much back then.

If I had brought any tools.

A lighter, a flashlight, or at least a doorknob that has been ripped open.

My chances of survival would be much higher.

But I fell into the tutorial naked without any preparation.

I ended up surviving all the way here.

So far, it's been really long and long.

* * *

“Ta-da!”

Kirikiri shouted, raised her arms.

“This is the Hundred God’s Temple!”

Yes, I saw it.

Even if I was brought here without knowing anything, I would have wondered whether this was the Hundred Gods Temple.

This place looked like a Hundred Gods Temple.

At best, it had the appearance of a typical temple, and at worst, it was cliché.

“Hehe, recognition is important. Even to the gods. How precious is the recognition that you are living in a temple.”

Instead of the perception of being in prison.

It made sense.

I turned around and saw a small door.

It was the door we had just entered through the space.

Is that the entrance and exit of the hundred gods temple?

“There are a few rules about the temple.”

Kirikiri explained, spreading her fingers.

“I’ll explain only a few of them. First of all, you can’t fight here. All disputes are resolved through dialogue and voting!”

This is a demilitarized zone.

It is a place where the gods of the Hundred Gods’ Temple, growling at each other, gather.

If battles were allowed, something might have happened earlier.

“And the gods belonging to the Hundred Gods Temple must always leave their own alter ego here.”

A hostage.

An alter ego of a god has a different meaning from the alter ego created by a wizard.

The alter ego is another self, and if the clone is destroyed or suppressed, it will have an immediate effect on the main body.

In some cases, their divinity may disappear.

“Finally, the use of divine power is limited.”

Kirikiri said while pointing to the gold on the ceiling.

Golden ornaments hung from the ceiling at regular intervals.

It looked similar to the gold used by the God of Order.

Is that what inhibits the use of divine power?

It was a similar ability to the virtual world of the God of Sky and Ahbooboo, who had erased the divinity itself, and the 101st floor.

The difference was that the divinity was not temporarily erased, but only to the extent of making it difficult to use.

In a place like this, no matter how powerful a god with divine power, they have no choice but to spare their body.

Because they don't know what kind of variable their alter ego will be affected by.

It's a dangerous place, but maybe that's why order and law are better maintained.

Human society was like that.

Humans can easily be killed by armed humans.

The person walking next to me can pick up a knife and stab me to death whenever he wants.

Such dangers imposed morality, laws, and sociality on humans.

It seems that the strange sociality that the gods of the hundred gods temple showed came from such a situation.

Rather, they acted more self-righteously and straightforwardly.

"It's an interesting place."

"Yeah, right?"

Of course, there is no way that there will be no problem in this temple.

The gods did not like the regulation, and the gods were beings who had to get rid of the bridle they are on.

Even the God of Order was like that.

There must have been numerous attempts.

To break the constraints.

At that time, Kirikiri must have stopped such attempts.

“The Hundred Gods Temple is made up of a hundred rooms and a common room.”

She explained that the hundred rooms are private spaces where the alter egos of the gods of the hundred gods temple reside.

A commonplace is a place where anyone can come and go.

“Usually, when voting, we tend to gather together. If you don’t leave the room, you abstain. Oh, my room is the same garden that was used in the tutorial.”

It was in the midst of what Kirikiri was explaining.

“Bang!”

Someone screamed and hit me on the back.

I looked back for something, but there was nothing there.

I was bewildered, and something flew in from the other side.

“Baamm!”

It hit me on the back again.

At this point, I was able to guess the identity.

“God of Light. Ignore it.”

Yes, it must be the God of Light.

The God who runs away by hitting others on the back without end.

Anyway, it was incredibly fast.

Even in a space where divinity is suppressed, is it that much?

“Ta-da!”

...This time, it hit Kirikiri’s ear and passed.

“Aaaaah! Really!”

Kirikiri screamed.

It wasn’t of pain, it was a scream that came out of unbearable anger.

“...it’s going to do that about ten more times.”

Kirikiri, who had stopped shouting, said as if resigning.

The God of Light struck us 14 times and ran away after disappearing.

“Is it supposed to be like that?”

“Huh.”

It was a firm answer.

“Probably, Hoojjaaee came and he was a little more excited than usual, but his behavior itself is as usual.”

Yes, in fact, it is normal.

Because God is always the same.

Changing even the smallest things was not easy.

“Would you like to go into the room?”

“Is that okay? It’s a private space.”

Kirikiri said with a smile after a while.

“No. But this room is fine.”

The name tag was marked on the room.

‘The Room of the God of Regret’.

It was like a name tag written in crooked letters by an elementary school kid who had his own room for the first time.

Kirikiri boldly opened the door without knocking.

The room was humid.

To some extent, it was doubtful that it was underwater, not in the atmosphere.

The room was a swampy, forested area.

Like Kirikiri, who used a wide garden as a room, the room of the God of Regret was also quite spacious.

Kirikiri led me into the middle of the swamp.

There was nothing in the swamp.

Of course, there was a buzzing fly and a crackling toad.

Kirikiri approached the toad and talked to him.

“Long time no see. How have you been?”

Naturally, the toad only blinked, but did not move.

It was a very brownish toad.

It didn’t look very pretty.

It was the same in my opinion even with a deep knowledge of amphibians and reptiles.

It's too ugly to be called a toad.

"Come on, say hello. God of Regret."

I had to question for a moment if Kirikiri was talking nonsense.

"The real thing. He is the God of Regret."

Kirikiri said as she pricked the toad's side with her finger.

The toad jumped sideways as if he didn't like the touch.

Yes, it was only about a distance away from the palm of the hand.

Kirikiri grabbed the toad's back and lifted it up.

Long drooping hind legs and relatively short forelimbs fluttered unpretentiously.

However, the toad caught on the back could not get out of Kirikiri's hand.

"In order to maintain the alter ego in the Hundred Gods Temple, you always have to consume your power."

Is it like a seat tax?

"But this god of Regret lacks divine power, so he looks like this. Really, he is the real God of Regret. Now, answer the question. Are you, the God of Regret?"

"Right."

The toad replied.

Surprisingly.

“How much energy does it take for a god to be like that?”

“I don’t listen to it very much. It’s because the God of Regret is a fool. He loses his power every day, so now he doesn’t have much power left.”

If that was true, he was a very humble god.

The image of the God of Regret I had been thinking about inside was shattered.

“The God of Regret is an idiot. He has no friends, so he doesn’t have a god to borrow powers from.”

It was a harsh evaluation.

“No, I have friends.”

Against the evaluation, the toad protested.

Kirikiri opened her eyes and looked at the toad, then said with a big smile.

“Hahaha, he can’t even lie.”

“No, really!”

“Hahahaha.”

Kirikiri laughed out loud enough.

Perhaps the toad was upset, he struggled violently to get out of Kirikiri’s hand.

Then he jumped somewhere.

“He may have at least one real friend.”

“No, no.”

Kirikiri was adamant.

We came out of the room of the God of Regret, who was stupid, had no friends, and was not good at lying.

I saw the room of another god.

There was a sign prohibiting entry to the God of Sky's Room.

I knocked on the god of duel's room, but there was no response.

Kirikiri explained that the personal spaces of the gods could not be entered without permission.

It was a contradictory explanation to the one I had just entered the room of the God of Regret earlier.

“How about the room of the God of Slowness?”

I asked the room of the god that I was most curious about.

Kirikiri made a meaningful expression and then, fufu, she laughed.

“You've already seen the god of slowness.”

“Did I see it?”

“Yes, you saw it first.”

I saw the room of the God of Slowness first.

I have never seen it.

Several possibilities flashed through my mind.

Memory manipulation, cognitive dissonance, and causal distortion over time.

The last one seemed the most probable.

Kirikiri didn't tell me the answer.

“Hehe, guess it. It doesn't mean anything.”

I just shrugged.

She has no intention of telling me, so there was no use in digging around.

That's something I'll have to figure out later.

After walking a little further, a small cavity appeared.

Unlike the large rooms of the gods, the cavity was about the size of a small theater.

There were several gods gathered in the cavity.

God of Sacrifice.

The God of Sacrifice waved her many tails to greet me, I had seen it many times now.

The God of Nature and the God of Harvest.

There were also some gods, such as the God of Will, the God of Despair, and the God of Warriors, who didn't care because they had little weight.

And the God of Balance.

I met him once on Earth.

He even took one of the earth's challengers as an apostle.

I thought she wanted to introduce me to the gods.

But Kirikiri didn't talk to me.

She said to the gathered gods.

"Let's begin."

[Voting begins.]

[Agree: 21]

[Disagree : 7]

[Abstain : 72]

[The agenda has been passed.]

[As of this time, the battle limit between the Gods in the Hundred Gods Temple will be conditionally modified.]

That's an interesting thing.

"May I ask for an explanation?"

"Simple votes. It's not that combat in vaccine warfare is unconditionally banned, but that combat is made possible under certain conditions. It's impossible originally, but it's possible now that the God of Order is weakened."

"Under certain conditions."

Kirikiri responded by taking a step back and moving away from me.

"When dealing with a god who is not affiliated with the Hundred Gods Temple."

Oh my god

I'm a god who doesn't belong to the Hundred Gods Temple.

It's only me in this place.

It was truly an amazing topic.

"Can you tell me why?"

Again I asked Kirikiri.

She nodded her head and answered.

"You are too dangerous."

Kirikiri said so.

The God of Sacrifice who was beside her helped.

"You are an arrow. If the arrow has nowhere to fly, it will only rot in the warehouse. But instead of going back to the warehouse, you will create a new target. Once you pierce that target, you will create another target. You will never be satisfied."

Kirikiri said again.

"I'm worried when you no longer have fights for you. You won't be able to endure a world without a fight. You'll either eat the world or cast off them through transcendence."

This was also a valid argument.

"More than anything else, you have the potential to achieve transcendence. A new god of transcendence may appear, so I couldn't just let it go."

Is it because of the possibility of becoming dangerous in the future?

I understood.

“I’m sorry. We don’t want to do this either.”

Kirikiri said so.

Maybe those words are sincere.

I don’t know.

“I’m not going to kill you. It’ll be over at the point of destroying the divinity.”

It’s fun.

It was a betrayal at an unexpected time.

No, if I think about it, it might not come as a surprise.

Maybe now is the only chance.

I defeated the God of Order and took over the tutorial world.

There was no room for the Gods of the Hundred Gods Temple to intervene in the process.

As the God of Order said, the tutorial world belonged to the God of Order, and I took it away.

My powers will grow bigger and bigger.

Definitively.

Before my power grows.

Now that I have defeated the God of Order and my mind is freed.

In some ways, it seems like a reasonable decision to bring me into the Hundred Gods Temple’s stronghold, and deal with me.

“Don’t be too mad.”

“I’m not mad.”

Mad?

I wasn’t mad.

Betrayal is being betrayed by someone you trust.

If you didn’t trust them in the first place, you wouldn’t be betrayed.

“I’m sorry. It’ll be over as soon as possible...”

Kirikiri stopped what she was saying and bit her mouth.

A space was opening behind me.

Kirikiri is the one who creates and manages this Hundred Gods Temple.

However, the management authority had already passed to the machine god, the God of Order.

Now that the God of Order has disappeared, the only way to ignore the rules of the Hundred Gods Temple is the vote by the gods.

But in fact, there was one more way to bypass the rules of the Hundred Gods Temple.

Only one.

There is a god who was ignoring the rules of the Hundred Gods Temple and was doing business with his own power.

The God of Hope was able to avoid the restrictions of the Hundred Gods Temple by calling himself an apostle of the God of Order.

“...I thought it was gone.”

Kirikiri immediately erased her surprise and asked me.

“Since when?”

Kirikiri asked.

I was happy to answer that question.

“From the beginning.”

I was always prepared for this situation.

“I told you so. It’s been like that over and over again.”

When I just dropped into the tutorial.

At the time when my colleagues I couldn’t even remember died and I tortured myself by cutting off blood vessels and nerves.

I repeated it over and over again.

“If I get out of here, I’m sure you all won’t be left alone.”

It was just human nervousness.

They must have thought that it was a curse that was spat out without knowing the facts.

Maybe they thought it was the talk of a man who had gone mad in fear.

So even after I became a god, I must have been stretching out my feet without any worries.

What appeared beyond the open space were the giants who had finished preparing for battle.

Hundreds of giants, led by Old Man and Grandmother, stepped into the Hundred Gods Temple.

A sword flew through space.

It was Seregia who was waiting on the 61st floor.

Whatever the modification, the blade of the sword was shining golden.

“Finally, the long-awaited moment has come.”

The Giants responded by shouting at my words.

Each one of them was a soldier who was trained for this moment to face the gods.

“...this wasn’t what I expected.”

Kirikiri mumbled so and stepped back.

She wasn’t the only one.

The other gods seemed to sneak out of the cavity and return to their rooms.

At first glance, it seems that the unity between the gods of the Hundred Gods Temple was not very strong.

“Ho-jae, aren’t you my friend? Can we solve the problem with conversation? Are you mad?”

I shook my head.

I’m not mad.

I have a very calm, cool mental state.

“Come on, let’s get started.”

At the end of a long, long adventure.

Finally, I was left with only one last step towards the goal I had been longing for.

There was nothing to be afraid of, nothing to be anxious about.

I rushed towards Kirikiri, summoning the golden blade.

“I Su, surrender!”

“Noisy! Surrender is surrendering to death! Raise your sword!”

She’s talking nonsense.

If she surrenders here, where do I go to release my anger?

Surrender should be done later when all my anger is over.

“As expected, you’re mad!”

[Tutorial is Too Hard END]

PDF by: traitor/1ZEN